“One last point, my friends. Business is business, even between pals. Before you get the money, each of you is going to sign a paper. By it you will bind yourselves to pay both interest and capital under penalty of confiscation of property by me. Oh! This is a mere formality. Your property is of no interest to me. I'm satisfied with money. And I feel sure that I'll get my money, and that you'll keep your property.”

“That makes sense, Mr. Oliver. We're going to work harder than ever in order to pay you back.”

“That's the spirit. And any time you have a problem, you come and see me. Your banker is your best friend. Now here's two hundred dollars for each one of you.”

And our five brave fellows went away, their hands full of dollar bills, their heads swimming with the ecstasy of having money.

9. A problem in arithmetic

And so Oliver's money went into circulation on the island. Trade, simplified by money, doubled. Everybody was happy.

And the banker was always greeted with unfailing respect and gratitude.

But now, let's see... Why does Tom, the prospector, look so grave as he sits busily figuring with a pencil and paper? It is because Tom, like the others, has signed an agreement to repay Oliver, in one year's time, the $200 plus $16 interest. But Tom has only a few dollars in his pocket, and the date of payment is near.

For a long time he had wrestled with this problem from his own personal point of view, without success. Finally, he looked at it from the angle of the little community as a whole.

“Taking into consideration everyone on the island as a whole,” he mused, “are we capable of meeting our obligations? Oliver turned out a total of $1000. He's asking in return $1080. But even if we bring him every dollar bill on the island, we'll still be $80 short. Nobody made the extra $80. We turn out produce, not dollar bills. So Oliver can take over the entire island, since all the inhabitants together can't pay him back the total amount of the capital and the interest.

“Even if a few, without any thought for the others, were able to do so, those others would fall. And the turn of the first spared would come eventually. The banker will have everything. We'd better hold a meeting right away and decide what to do about it.”

Tom, with his figures in his hand, had no difficulty in proving the situation. All agreed that they had been duped by the kindly banker. They decided upon a meeting at Oliver's.

10. The benevolent banker

Oliver guessed what was on their minds, but he put on his best front. While he listened, the impetuous Frank stated the case for the group.

“How can we pay you $1080 when there is only $1000 on the entire island?”

“That's the interest, my friends. Has not your rate of production increased?”

“Sure, but the money hasn't. And it's money you're asking for, not our products. You are the only one who can make money. You've made only $1000, and yet you ask $1080. That's an impossibility!”

“Now listen, fellows. Bankers, for the greater good of the community, always adapt themselves to the conditions of the times. I'm going to require only the interest. Only $80. You will go on holding the capital.”

“Bless you, Mr. Oliver! Are you going to cancel the $200 each of us owes you?”

“Oh no! I'm sorry, but a banker never cancels a debt. You still owe me all the money you borrowed. But you'll pay me, each year, only the interest. If you meet the interest payments faithfully each year, I won't push you for the capital. Maybe some won't be able to repay even the interest because of the money changing hands among you.

Well, organize yourselves like a nation. Set up a system of money contributions, what we call taxes. Those who have more money will be taxed more; the poor will pay less. See to it that you bring me, in one lump sum, the total of the amount of interest, and I'll be satisfied. And your little nation will thrive."

So our boys left, somewhat pacified, but still dubious.

11. Oliver exults

Oliver is alone. He is deep in reflection. His thoughts run thus:

"Business is good. These boys are good workers, but stupid. Their ignorance and naivety is my strength. They ask for money, and I give them the chains of bondage. They give me flowers, and I pick their pockets.

"True enough, they could mutiny and throw me into the sea. But pshaw! I have their signatures. They're honest. They'll honor their pledges. Honest, hardworking people were put into this world to serve the Financiers.

"Oh great Mammon! I feel your banking genius coursing through my entire being! Oh, illustrious master! How right you were when you said: `Give me control of a nation's money, and I won't mind who makes its laws.' I am the master of Salvation Island because I control its money.

"My soul is drunk with enthusiasm and ambition. I feel I could rule the universe. What I, Oliver, have done here, I can do throughout the entire world. Oh! If only I could get off this island! I know how I could govern the world without wearing a crown.

"My supreme delight would be to instill my philosophy in the minds of those who lead society: bankers, industrialists, politicians, reformers, teachers, journalists — all would be my servants. The masses are content to live in slavery when the elite from among them are constituted to be their overseers."

12. The cost of living unbearable

Meanwhile, things went from bad to worse on Salvation Island. Production was up, and bartering had dropped to a minimum. Oliver collected his interest regularly. The others had to think of setting money aside for him. Thus, money tended to clot instead of circulating freely.

Those who paid the most in taxes complained against those who paid less. They raised the prices of their goods to compensate for this loss. The unfortunate poor who paid no taxes lamented the high cost of living, and bought less.

If one took a salaried job with another, he was continually demanding increases in salary in order to meet the mounting cost of living.

Morale was low. The joy went out of living. No one took an interest in his work. Why should he? Produce sold poorly. When they would make a sale, they had to pay taxes to Oliver. They went without things. It was a real crisis. And they accused one another of wanting in charity, and of being the cause of the high cost of living.

One day, Harry, sitting in his orchard, pondered over the situation. He finally arrived at the conclusion that this “progress”, born of a refugee's monetary system, had spoiled everything on the island. Unquestionably, all five had their faults, but Oliver's system seemed to have been specifically designed to bring out the worst in human nature.

Harry decided to demonstrate this to his friends and to unite them for action. He started with Jim, who was not hard to convince. “I'm no genius,” he said, “but for a long time now there's been a bad smell about this banker's system.”

One by one they came to the same conclusion, and they ended up by deciding to have another conference with Oliver.

13. Enslaved by Oliver

A veritable tempest burst about the ears of the banker.

“Money's scarce on the island, fellow, because you take it away from us! We pay you and pay you, and still we owe you as much as at the beginning. We work our heads off! We've the finest land possible, and yet we're worse off than before the day of your arrival. Debts! Debts! Up to our necks in debts!”

“Oh! Now boys, be reasonable! Your affairs are booming, and it's thanks to me. A good banking system is a country's best asset. But if it is to work beneficially, you must have faith in the banker. Come to me as you would to a father... Is it more money that you want? Very well. My barrel of gold is good for many thousands of dollars more. See, I'm going to mortgage your latest acquisitions, and lend you another thousand dollars right now.”

“So! Now our debt goes up to $2000! We are going to have twice as much interest to pay for the rest of our lives!”

“Well, yes — but I'll lend you more whenever the value of your property increases. And you'll never pay anything but the interest. You'll lump all your debts into one — what we call a consolidated debt. And you can add to the debt, year after year.”

“And raise the taxes, year after year?”

“Obviously. But your revenues also increase every year.”

“So then, the more the country develops each year because of our labor, the more the public debt increases!”

“Why, of course! Just as in your country – or in any other part of the civilized world for that matter. The degree of a country's civilization is always gauged by the size of its debt to the bankers.”

14. The wolf devours the lambs

“And that's a healthy monetary system, Mr. Oliver?”

“Gentlemen, all sound money is based on gold, and it comes from the banks in the form of debts. The national debt is a good thing. It keeps men from becoming too satisfied. It subjugates governments to the supreme and ultimate wisdom, that which is incarnate in bankers. As a banker, I am the torch of civilization here on your little island. I will dictate your politics and regulate your standard of living.”

“Mr. Oliver, we're simply uneducated folks, but we don't want that kind of civilization here. We'll not borrow another cent off of you. Sound money or not, we don't want any further transactions with you.”

“Gentlemen, I deeply regret this very ill-advised decision of yours. But if you break with me, remember, I have your signatures. Repay me everything at once — capital and interest.”

“But that's impossible, sir. Even if we give you all the money on the island, we still won't be square with you.”

“I can't help that. Did you or did you not sign? Yes? Very well.

“By virtue of the sanctity of contracts, I hereby seize your mortgaged property which was what you agreed to at the time you were so happy to have my help. If you don't want to serve willingly the supreme authority of money, then you'll obey by force. You'll continue to exploit the island, but in my interests and under my conditions. Now, get out! You'll get your orders from me tomorrow.”

15. Control of the press

Oliver knew that whoever controlled the nation's money, controlled the nation. But he knew also that to maintain that control, it was necessary to keep the people in a state of ignorance, and to distract them by a variety of means.

Oliver had observed that of the five islanders, two were conservatives and three were liberals. That much had evolved from their evening conversations, especially after they had fallen into slavery. And between the conservatives and those who were liberals, there was a constant friction.

On occasions, Harry, the most neutral of the five, considering that all had the same needs and aspirations, had suggested the union of the people to put pressure on the authorities. Such a union, Oliver could not tolerate; it would mean the end of his rule. No dictator, financial or otherwise, could stand before a people united and educated.

Consequently, Oliver set himself to foment, as much as possible, political strife between them.

The refugee put his press to work, turning out two weekly newspapers, “The Sun”, for the Liberals, and “The Star”, for the Conservatives.

The general tenor of “The Sun” was: “If you are no longer master, it is because of those traitorous Conservatives who have sold out to big business.”

That of “The Star”: “The ruinous state of business and the national debt can be traced directly to the political responsibility of those unmentionable Liberals.”

16. A priceless bit of floatsam

One day, Tom, the prospector, found on a small beach, hidden by tall grass at one end of the island, a lifeboat, empty except for a trunk in good condition lying in the bottom of it.

He opened the trunk. Among the articles within, a sort of album caught his eye: “The First Year of Social Credit”. Between the covers he found the first of a Social Credit publication.

Curious, Tom sat down and began to read the volume. His interest grew; his face lit up.

“Well, just look at this!” he cried out loud. “This is something we should have known a long time ago.”

“Money gets its value, not from gold, but from the products which that money buys.

“Simply put, money should be a sort of accountancy, credits passing from one account to another according to purchases and sales. The sum total of money will depend upon the sum total of production.

“Each time production increases, there is a corresponding increase in the amount of money. Never at any time should interest be paid on new money. Progress is marked, not by an increase in the public debt, but by the issuance of an equal dividend to each individual... Prices are adjusted to the general purchasing power by a coefficient of prices. Social Credit...”

But Tom could no longer contain himself. He got up and set off at a run, the book in his hands, to share this glorious discovery with his four comrades.

17. Money — elementary accounting

So Tom became the teacher. He taught the others what he had learned from that God-sent Social Credit publication.

“This,” he said, “is what we can do without waiting for a banker and his keg of gold, nor without underwriting a debt.

“I open an account in the name of each one of you. In the right hand column are the credits which increase your account; to the left are the debits which subtract from your account.

“Each wants $200 to begin with. Very well. We write $200 to the credit of each. Each immediately has $200.

“Frank buys some goods from Paul for $10. I deduct $10 from Frank, leaving him $190. I add $10 to Paul, and he now has $210.

“Jim buys from Paul to the amount of $8. I deduct from Jim $8, leaving him $192. Paul now has $218.

“Paul buys wood from Frank for $15. I deduct $15 from Paul, leaving $203. I add $15 to Frank's account, and it goes back to $205.

“And so we continue; from one account to another, in the same fashion that paper banknotes go from one man's pocket to another's.

“If someone needs money to expand production, we issue him the necessary amount of new credit. Once he has sold his products, he repays the sum to the credit fund. The same with public works; paid for by new credits.

“Likewise, each one's account is periodically increased, but without taking credits from anyone, in order that all may benefit from the progress society makes. That's the national dividend. In this fashion, money becomes an instrument of service.”

18. The banker's despair

Everyone understood. The members of this little community became Social Crediters. The following day, Oliver, the banker, received a letter signed by the five:

“Dear sir! Without the slightest necessity you have plunged us into debt and exploited us. We don't need you anymore to run our money system. From now on, we'll have all the money we need without gold, debts, nor thieves. We are establishing, at once, the system of Social Credit on the island. The national dividend is going to replace the national debt.

“If you insist on being repaid, we can repay you all the money you gave us. But not a cent more. You cannot lay claim to that which you have not made.”

Oliver was in despair. His empire was crumbling. His dreams shattered. What could he do? Arguments would be futile. The five were now Social Crediters: money and credit were now not more mysterious to them than they were to Oliver.

“Oh!” said Oliver. “These men have been won to Social Credit! Their doctrine will spread far more quickly than mine. Should I beg forgiveness? Become one of them? I, a financier and a banker? Never! Rather, I shall try and put as much distance between them and me as I can!”

19. The fraud unmasked

To protect themselves against any future claim by Oliver, our five men decided to make him sign a document attesting that he again possessed all he had when he first arrived on the island.

An inventory was taken; the boat, the oars, the little press, and the famous barrel of gold.

Oliver had to reveal where he had hidden the gold. Our boys hoisted it from the hole with considerably less respect than the day they had unloaded it from the boat. Social Credit had taught them to despise gold.

The prospector, who was helping to lift the barrel, found it surprisingly light for gold. If the barrel was full, he told the others, there was something in it besides gold.

The impetuous Frank didn't waste a moment; a blow of the axe, and the contents of the barrel was exposed.

Gold? Not so much as a grain of it! Just rocks — plain, worthless rocks! Our men couldn't get over the shock.

“Don't tell us that he could bamboozle us to this extent!”

“Were we such muttonheads as to go into raptures over the mere mention of gold?”

“Did we mortgage all of our possessions for a few pieces of paper based on a few pounds of rocks? It's a robbery, compounded with lies!”

“To think that we sulked and almost hated one another all because of such a fraud! That devil!”

Furious, Frank raised his axe. In great haste, the banker has already taken flight towards the forest.

20. Farewell to Salvation Island

After the opening of the barrel, and the revelation of his duplicity, nothing further was heard of Oliver.

Shortly after, a ship, crusing off the normal navigation route, noticed signs of life on this uncharted island, and cast anchor a short distance offshore.

The men learned that the ship was en route to America. So they decided to take with them what they could carry, and return to the United States.

Above all, they made sure to take back with them the album, “The First Year of Social Credit”, which had proven to be their salvation from the hands of the financier, Oliver, and which had illumined their minds with an inextinguishable light.

All five solemnly promised to get in touch with the management of this paper, once back in America, and to become devoted and zealous apostles of the Cause of Social Credit in their country.

From parable to reality

A debt-money system

The debt-money system introduced by Oliver into the Salvation Island made the little community sink into financial debt in proportion as it developed and enriched the island by its own work.

This is exactly what happens in our civilized countries, is it not?

Canada of today is certainly richer, in real wealth, than it was 50, 100 years ago, or in the pioneers' age. But compare the national debt, the sum of all public debts of Canada today with this sum 50, 100 years, three centuries ago!

Yet the Canadians themselves produced this enrichment by their labour and their know-how. Then why should they be collectively indebted for the result of their own activities?

For example, consider the schools, the municipal aqueducts, the bridges, roads and other fabrics of public character. Who build them all? Builders of the country. Who supply them with the needed materials? Manufacturers of the country. And how come they can be employed in public works ? Because there are other kinds of workers who produce food, clothes, shoes, who supply all the things and services required for the wants of the constructors and manufacturers.

Thus the whole population of Canada by its work of different kinds, produce all those developments. If we must obtain goods from abroad, we send other goods abroad in counterpart of them.

Now, what do you see? Everywhere the citizens are taxed to pay those schools, those hospitals, those bridges, roads and other public works. The Canadians, as a collectivity, are thus compelled to pay what they produce as a collectivity.

You pay much more than the double price

And this is not all. The population is made to pay more than the price of what it produced. Their own production — a real enrichment — has become for the Canadians a debt burdened with interest. When years add to years, the sum of the interests can equal or even exceed the amount of the debt imposed by the system.

It happens that the population may have to pay two, three times the cost of what its members produced.

In addition to the public debts, there are industrial debts, also loaded with interests. They compel the manufacturers and contractors to increase their prices beyond the cost of production, in order to reimburse the capital and the interests; otherwise they would become insolvent, bankrupt.

Both public and industrial debts are paid, plus interest, by the Canadian population, to the financial system. We pay taxes for the public debts, and a surplus of price for the industrial debts. Prices are swelling while the purse is flattened by taxes.

A tyrannical system

These and many other facts are indicative of a money system, a financial system which controls instead of being a servant; a system to dominate the people — as Oliver dominated the fellows of the Island before they rebelled.

And if the money masters refuse to lend, or if they make their conditions unbearable for the public bodies or for the manufacturers, what happens? It happens that the public bodies give up many projects, no matter how urgent; and the manufacturers give up development or production plans that would answer to real needs of Canadians. This is a cause of unemployment. And those who still have something, or who earn a salary, must be taxed to prevent the unemployed from starving completely.

Can you imagine a more tyrannical system, with so baneful effects on every Canadian?

A bar to distribution

And this is not all. Not only the money system indebts the producers, or paralyzes the production it refuses to finance, but it is a wretched financial tool for the distribution of the goods.

Notwithstanding the fact that stores, shops and warehouses are full, and that everything is at hand for an even greater production, the distribution of the goods already produced is stinted.

You can obtain only what you can pay. In face of an abundant production, there should be an abundance of purchasing power, of money in the wallets of the people. Such is not the fact. The price of the finished goods is always higher than the amount of money distributed as purchasing power in the course of their production. This is inherent to the accountancy of the present system of finance which has no mechanism to fill the gap.

The capacity to pay is not made to equal the capacity to produce. Finance and reality do not work at the same rate. Reality means an abundance of goods easy to produce. Finance means a lacking money hard to obtain.

To correct what is wicked

Thus the present money system is truly an oppressive one, when it should be a system of service.

This does not mean that we must do away with it, but we must correct it. The application of the financial principles known as Social Credit would make this correction magnificently. (Do not confound Social Credit with the political party which usurps that name while pursuing other ends and practising an adverse policy.)

The principles of Social Credit, when applied, would make the money system a servant instead of a master. They were discovered and enunciated by a genius, C. H. Douglas (deceased in 1952). His first writings on this subject were published in 1918.

Not a Political Party

The first idea that comes to the mind of too many people living in Canada, when they hear the words Social Credit, is the idea of a political party. But no. Social Credit is not a party, although there was a party by that name. Social Credit is no more a party than Christianity is a party, even if, in some countries you find political parties with such names as Christian Democrats, Christian Party, Christian Center, etc. A political party exists purposely to seek power, to be or strive to be the group that rules the country.

Social Credit works in the very opposite way. Social Credit will set the individual free; it will place the individual in a situation where he can himself be the ruler of his own life. Social Credit will thus distribute power to individuals not the power to boss their neighbours, but the power to order the goods they want from the potential production of their country.

Social Credit. Exact. Logical. Humane

Social Credit considers realities. It refuses to be hypnotized by the halo with which finance has been surrounded.

The economic realities are, on one hand, the production; not only the existing production, but the production immediately possible, the production capacity; and they are, on the other hand, the human needs.

Social Credit gives priority to the realities over the financial signs that are not realities, that must simply represent, and faithfully represent, the realities.

Real credit and financial credit

This is why Social Credit makes a distinction between real credit (a reality) and financial credit (a representation).

The word "credit" comes from the Latin word "credere" and bears the idea of confidence. Even in everyday language, to give credit to someone, is it not to indicate that we have confidence in him?

Social Credit calls real credit of a country what really gives confidence in that country, confidence that one can live there without too much difficulty. The real credit of a country is its production capacity. It is its degree of possibility to produce and deliver the goods to the needs.

And Social Credit affirms that financial credit must be the exact representation of the real credit.

It is therefore the production capacity that must determine the movement of finance. It is absolutely not for finance to command, paralyze or limit the production capacity.

This is why Social Credit demands the establishment of a credit office that would keep an account of national (or provincial) credit. Any production, those of consumption goods and those of capital goods, would then be entered as an increase of wealth. And all consumptions (or destruction, or depreciation) would then be entered as a decrease of wealth. The net increase in wealth would be production minus consumption.

With very few and passing exceptions where a country would live at the expense of another, the production of a country surpasses its consumption. The country is becoming richer. It is therefore absurd to say that it is going into debt. The public debt is an absurdity.

And when a country is getting richer, its citizens must certainly draw advantage of it. This is what Social Credit recognizes, when speaking of a dividend to all, instead of debts and taxes on everyone.

Money without inflation

The present system is subject to inflation. Inflation means rising prices.

When money cannot begin without, as today, creating a debt, it is necessary that ways be found to draw from the public more money than there was put into circulation, so as to refund the debt plus the interest of the debt. Whence taxes, that are added to prices or that diminish the purchasing power before the prices. Whence also increases of prices by industrials, who must draw from the public only the money to pay for the products, but also for the financial charges, the interests on the industrial loans.

Social Credit would suppress this cancer, this tumor upon the prices, since the production would be an increase of wealth, and not an indebtedness.

And, Social Credit would lower the prices to be paid by the buyers, since it would have the community pay only what it consumes, and not all what it produces.

If, as an example, in the whole country, the consumption was only equal to three quarters of the production, the buyers would only pay, on any article bought by them, only three quarters of the accounting price. The Credit Office would take care of compensating the retailer so that he may recuperate all of his accounting price.

This means that the amounts of money included in the prices, but not having reached the hands of the public, or directed towards saving or investment, are not applied to the purchase of the production, would be by the organism of credit replaced to the benefit of those who are in need of the products. This would prevent the accumulation of products in the face of needs. And the mechanism to do it would have the advantage of operating with a decrease in prices, therefore in eliminating all possible inflation.

A dividend to everyone

The periodic dividend to everyone, recommended by Social Credit, is also in conformity with the economic realities.

The modern production, in fact, is more and more the result of applied science, of inventions, of improvements in production techniques, and of all these things that constitute a common good: an heritage transmitted and increased from one generation to the other. The modern production is less and less the result of individual labour.

Hoping to distribute the production only through the reward of human labour, is therefore contrary to the facts. It is at the same time impossible, for the money distributed as recompense for work can never buy the production that contains other elements in its prices.

Seeking salary increases with decreases in human labour, is also to change the meaning of the word salary. It is no more a recompense for work; it is the inclusion in the salary of the hired persons of what should be a dividend for all, since it is the fruit of progress and not of labour. This deviation is a hindrance to the desired goal, since in becoming a salary instead of remaining a dividend, these additional amounts go into the prices.

Social Credit would distribute the dividend to everyone, directly, without charging it to industry. It would truly raise everyone's purchasing power.

Besides being the recognition of a very productive community capital, this social dividend would at the same time be an excellent way of satisfying the primitive destination of the earthly goods. "Earth and its riches were created for all men" (Pius XII). This is totally ignored by the present economic regime in its financial technique of distribution.

Social Credit would thus directly establish an adequate repartition of the goods of nature and of industry, instead of leaving the task to the surgery of taxation, that amputates and grafts continually, without ever healing the disease.

A share to each and everyone, guaranteed by the dividend to each and everyone from birth till death; and this share should be sufficient to at least insure what is necessary for life.

Louis EVEN

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Six Ways to Liberate America From Wall Street Rule

The Unhived Mind Ii > Knights of Malta World commerce system > Six Ways to Liberate America From Wall Street Rule

Title: Six Ways to Liberate America From Wall Street Rule

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Rick Santelli Goes On A Deficit Rampage: "Gov't Title: Rick Santelli Goes On A Deficit Rampage: "Gov't

Description: Must Live Within Its Means! Now, Now, No

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:32 AM (GMT)

Rick Santelli Goes On A Deficit Rampage: "Gov't Must Live Within Its Means! Now, Now, Now! Stop Spending Now!"

[dohtml]<iframe title="MRC TV video player" width="640" height="360" src="http://www.mrctv.org/embed/103456" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Dennis Kucinich "Congress Takes Money From The Title: Dennis Kucinich "Congress Takes Money From The Description: American People And Gives It To War Prof

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:32 AM (GMT)

Dennis Kucinich "Congress Takes Money From The American People And Gives It To War Profiteers And Wall Street!"

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/mJurKRtY2o4?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/mJurKRtY2o4?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Remember the real estate boom? [Vd]

Title: Remember the real estate boom? [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:28 AM (GMT)

Remember the real estate boom?

Fox cheerleading for BS

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/yoZV5jt9puc&rel=0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/yoZV5jt9puc&rel=0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

Here's the crap people were sold

Fair and balanced for Fox News means putting idiots on to spout the party line no matter how insane, ignorant or dishonest.

Look at the two clowns Fox dug out of the intellectual trash heap to predict a 10% increase in real estate prices in 2007.

Note how they are permitted to shout down and ridicule the only person who got it right.

The real estate lending scam was engineered to keep a very shaky credit-crazy economy humming along for as long as possible until the whole thing fell apart.

Mission accomplished, Mr. President.

Recall that Bush & Co. actually sued states that tried to enforce their own long-established and rational real estate lending laws.

This puts the political assassination of Eliot Spitzer in a new light.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: HOME EQUITY NIGHTMARE: Second Liens, Second Wave

Title: HOME EQUITY NIGHTMARE: Second Liens, Second Wave
Description: Of Losses For Big Banks

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:19 AM (GMT)

HOME EQUITY NIGHTMARE: Second Liens, Second Wave Of Losses For Big Banks

http://dailybail.com/home/home-equity-nigh...losses-for.html

This is the great equalizer. The land of insolvency. Georgetown Law professor Adam Levitin did not mince words in his appearance before Congress in January, stating bluntly that JPMorgan, Citigroup, Bank Of America and Wells Fargo are all insolvent, just from their massive portfolios of second-lien loans. It's not even close, according to Levitin, as all 4 our largest commercial banks would be wiped out by an honest valuation of home-equity loans.

The 4 largest banks are insolvent many times over. Their puny and massively over-leveraged capital bases would not just be wiped out, they would be turned into negative multiples of the original equity. Then take the next step and understand that these same criminally fraudulent and insolvent institutions, paid their executives $144 billion in bonuses this year, based on false accounting that was endorsed by Congress and jammed down the throats of FASB in June of 2009.

Chris Whalen is quoted extensively in Gretchen Morgenson's new piece below.

NYT - Gretchen Morgenson

Snip:

While the S.E.C. has been pressing banks to make comprehensive disclosures about these potential pitfalls, regulators have been quiet on another worry for investors: how banks are valuing their vast holdings of home equity lines of credit, also known as second liens.

Privately, however, the S.E.C. has been pushing banks hard on this issue, according to Meredith Cross, the director of the commission's corporation finance unit. As regulators review banks' annual reports, they are asking tough questions about how institutions are valuing their second liens. Ms. Cross expects banks to provide more details about these loans in quarterly reports due next month.

The numbers are significant. Banks held $624 billion of such loans in the first quarter, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation data show. Millions of these loans are deeply troubled. According to CoreLogic, a real estate data concern, almost 11 million of the nation's mortgaged properties — nearly 23 percent of the total — were underwater at the end of March. Some 4.5 million of those properties carried home equity loans, according to CoreLogic. The average amount of negative equity shouldered by borrowers across the nation was $65,000.

WHEN first mortgages run into trouble, second liens are at greater peril, even if homeowners manage to keep up with their payments. That is because in a foreclosure, first mortgages are supposed to be paid off before second mortgages.

It is not clear that is happening, however. Banks like the big four — JPMorgan, Citigroup, Bank of America and Wells Fargo — not only hold home equity lines but also service first mortgages held by others on the same properties. Some analysts worry that servicers are able to protect their own holdings of second-lien loans while foreclosing on the first liens.

"The big four are pretending that the second liens are still money good because many are still performing," said Christopher Whalen, editor of the Institutional Risk Analyst, a research publication. By performing, he means that borrowers are still making payments, if only the minimum. Many home equity lines require only the payment of interest for the first 10 years.

Continue reading...

Levitin spells out the problem...

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/EjTZOekaQlE?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/EjTZOekaQlE?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Video - Georgetown Law Professor Adam Levitin

Start watching at 1:35, though the bomb from Levitin comes near the end...
"If they started writing off their second-lien mortgages, they would have no capital left. They would be insolvent."

He mentions Citigroup (nyse:C), JP Morgan (nyse:jpm), Bank of America (nyse:BAC), and Wells Fargo (nyse:wfc) by name.

Though it's nice to hear the truth leak out in front of a small Congressional committee, this is nothing new to Daily Bail readers. Bill Black made the case here:
William Black Calls On FDIC To Seize Bank Of America
William Black With Dylan Ratigan: "There Is Bank Fraud Everywhere And BERNANKE Is Leading The Cover-Up," PLUS Part 2 Of 'Seize Bank Of America'

Quotes from Levitin's testimony before Congress...

"It is important to emphasize that junk fees on homeowners ultimately come out of the pocket of MBS investors. If the homeowner lacks sufficient equity in the property to cover the amount owed on the loan, including junk fees, then there is a deficiency from the foreclosure sale. As many mortgages are legally or functionally non-recourse, this means that the deficiency cannot be collected from the homeowner’s other assets. Mortgage servicers recover their expenses off the top in foreclosure sales, before MBS investors are paid. Therefore, when a servicer lards on illegal fees in a foreclosure, it is stealing from investors such as pension plans and the US government.

Many foreclosure complaints are facially defective and should be dismissed because they fail to attach the note. I have recently examined a small sample of foreclosure cases filed in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania (Pittsburgh and environs) in May 2010. In over 60% of those foreclosure filings, the complaint failed to include a copy of the note. Failure to attach the note appears to be routine practice for some of the foreclosure mill law firms, including two that handle all of Bank of America’s foreclosures.

Recently, arguments have been raised in foreclosure litigation about whether the notes and mortgages were in fact properly transferred to the securitization trusts. This is a critical issue because the trust has standing to foreclose if, and only if it is the mortgagee. If the notes and mortgages were not transferred to the trust, then the trust lacks standing to foreclose."

DB here. We played a game of roulette in the 1980s when all of our large money-center banks were technically insolvent due to Latin American exposure, and most sloggged their way back to solvency over the the next 10 years. The difference this time is simple - LEVERAGE. Paulson's 2004 SEC-enhanced gift of unlimited leverage for the 5 largest investment banks changed the game.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Walmart to Open up to 300 Stores Serving USDA Food

Title: Walmart to Open up to 300 Stores Serving USDA Food
Description: *Deserts by 2016 [WHOOPI WAR*WART JOBS]*

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 02:44 AM (GMT)

Walmart to Open up to 300 Stores Serving USDA Food Deserts by 2016; More than 40,000 Associates Will Work in These Stores

7-20-11 2:15 PM EDT | E-mail Article
http://news.morningstar.com/all/pr-news-wi...ese-stores.aspx

About 500 new and existing locations will provide access to more than 700 USDA food deserts serving approximately 1.3 million people

WASHINGTON, July 20, 2011 /PRNewswire/ -- Walmart announced today that it will open between 275-300 stores serving the Department of Agriculture (USDA) designated food desert areas between now and 2016. These estimates are based on the company's current real estate plans. These stores, in both urban and rural areas, will provide access to groceries for more than 800,000 people living in food deserts. Walmart made the announcement at the White House today with First Lady Michelle Obama.

Since 2007, the company has opened 218 stores serving food deserts. The projected new and existing locations, totaling about 500 stores, will provide access to fresh and healthy food in more than 700 food deserts and will serve approximately 1.3 million people living in these areas. To be included in this figure, a person must both live in a USDA designated food desert area and be within one mile of an urban Walmart or within ten miles of a rural Walmart store.

"By opening stores where customers need them most, Walmart will help build healthier families and stronger communities. We believe every single person should have access to an abundant selection of fresh fruits and vegetables at an affordable price," said Leslie Dach, executive vice president of corporate affairs at Walmart.

Many areas classified as food deserts are also job deserts.More than 40,000 associates will work in these stores once they are open. These full- and part-time jobs will provide competitive wages and the opportunity to build a career with the company.

Today's announcement continues to fulfill one of the key commitments the company made alongside the First Lady in January 2011 as part of Walmart's healthier food initiative. The other key components of this initiative include:
Reformulating packaged food items by working with suppliers to reduce sodium and added sugars and removing all remaining industrially produced trans fats;
Making healthier food more affordable;
Developing a simple front-of-package seal for identifying healthier food choices, and Increasing charitable support for nutrition programs.

"First Lady Michelle Obama is helping millions of Americans lead healthier lives, and Walmart is proud to partner with her in this work. The First Lady's leadership on products, prices and access to healthier food has helped sharpen our focus on bringing affordable groceries to underserved urban and rural areas," Dach added.

Walmart and the Walmart Foundation are also making a difference in the fight to end hunger by donating $2 billion in cash and in-kind donations through 2015.

The stores announced today have already undergone Walmart's rigorous process for new store development and include store openings and expansions. The final number of stores will depend on local market conditions. Additionally, today's announcement does not include stores yet to be considered through the company's real estate process or stores to be built in Walmart's new small format, Walmart Express. Walmart Express stores are designed to serve urban and rural areas and will likely address food deserts, but their locations are still in the evaluation process.

For this announcement, Walmart used the USDA Food Desert Locator to determine the number of stores that currently serve or will serve food desert areas.

"These stores are just one part of our robust Walmart U.S. growth strategy. We continue to see opportunities to offer customers the products they need at prices they can afford in urban and rural markets across the country," Dach said.

The company will announce its overall capital strategy for growth at its conference for the investment community on October 12.

About Walmart

Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (NYSE: WMT) serves customers and members more than 200 million times per week at over 9,000 retail units under 69 different banners in 28 countries. With fiscal year 2011 sales of $419 billion, Walmart employs more than two million associates worldwide. Walmart continues to be a leader in sustainability, corporate philanthropy and employment opportunity. Additional information about Walmart can be found by visiting http://www.walmartstores.com and on Twitter at http://twitter.com/walmart. Online merchandise sales are available at http://www.walmart.com and http://www.samsclub.com.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Recession hit Midlands workforce hardest

Title: Recession hit Midlands workforce hardest
Description: [YEP TELL ME ABOUT IT]

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 01:31 AM (GMT)

Recession hit Midlands workforce hardest

• Unemployment rate rose most sharply in regions
• South-east and London spared worst of job losses

Heather Stewart
guardian.co.uk, Wednesday 20 July 2011 19.28 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/business/2011/ju...nds-hit-hardest

Workers in the manufacturing heartland of the West Midlands faced the sharpest increase in unemployment during the recession, while London and the south-east were cushioned from the worst of the job cuts.

The unemployment rate in the West Midlands shot up from a pre-recession trough of 4.5%, to 10.6% by mid-2009, according to a new analysis by the Office for National Statistics – an increase of 6.1 percentage points, the sharpest in the country. Yorkshire and Humberside saw the next-largest increase, from 4.4% to 9.7%.

In the south-east, meanwhile, where the jobless rate was just 3.7% in mid-2005, unemployment rose much less sharply as the economy turned down, to hit 6.3% by the spring of last year.

According to the ONS data unemployment was rising in most regions before the economy officially plunged into recession in early 2008. But in London, with its booming financial services sector, unemployment continued to fall until mid-2007, when the first ripples of the credit crunch made themselves felt.

The findings published by the ONS, highlight the divergent fortunes of Britain's regions during the worst recession since the 1930s, and the tough task facing the government as it battles to rebuild the economy. The ONS will next week release its first estimate of GDP growth in the second quarter of 2011 – a key test of George Osborne's "plan for growth".

Brendan Barber, general secretary of the TUC, said: "Today's analysis confirms that regional labour markets went into decline well before the recession started, and that it will take time and sustained investment just to get areas of northern England back to their pre-recession position."

He warned that after dismantling the regional development agencies which had the job of spreading growth throughout the country, and replacing them with less well-funded local economic partnerships, the coalition had left itself with few tools to fix the widening disparities between different parts of the country.

The ONS has also looked below the regional level, to compare unemployment measured on the claimant count, which records the number of people receiving jobseeker's allowance in each local authority area.

Hull stands out as the city with the highest unemployment at any point during the downturn, with 8.4% of the workforce claiming unemployment benefit early last year. It remained the worst-hit place in Britain on the latest labour market data, with a claimant count rate of 8.1%.

Wolverhampton, in the West Midlands, suffered the second-highest claimant count rate, of 8%, and 7.7% of the workforce were still claiming JSA last month.

Low-skilled workers have fared worse than their better-qualified counterparts since the onset of the credit crunch, according to the ONS. Among the lowest skill category – cleaners and catering assistants – unemployment on the claimant count measure shot up by 5.3 percentage points, to 13.2%. Among the highest skilled workers, meanwhile – teachers and doctors, for example – it rose by just 1.1 percentage points, to 1.7%. Higher-skilled workers have also seen unemployment peak earlier, and fall faster.

Andrew Carter, director of policy at the Centre for Cities thinktank, said the differing fortunes of high and low-skilled workers could reflect underlying structural changes in the economy.

"There are just fewer low-skilled jobs now compared to the number of low-skilled workers," he said.

He added that these workers could come under more pressure, as the government's Work Programme, devised by Work and Pensions secretary Iain Duncan-Smith, shifts more people off sickness benefits or lone parents benefits such as income support, and into the workforce. They will receive tailored help to find them a job – but Carter said the risk is that firms are still not hiring. "The worry is really that given the conditions that we're in, the Work Programme is just about to massively increase the supply of labour, and if you increase labour at a time when there's stagnant demand, it makes you wonder what that will do for wages and terms and conditions."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Low-skilled 'more likely to be jobless'

Title: Low-skilled 'more likely to be jobless'

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 01:27 AM (GMT)

Low-skilled 'more likely to be jobless'

North-South divide remains as low-skilled unemployed workers "hit hardest" by recession, experts say.

By Louisa Peacock, Jobs Editor
6:31PM BST 20 Jul 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/finance/jobs/86...be-jobless.html

The number of low-skilled workers claiming the dole since the start of the recession has risen eight times more than the level for job seekers with advanced qualifications, official figures reveal.

A wide-ranging analysis of jobs and unemployment since 2008 shows the number of people with little or no skills claiming jobless benefits rose by 4.2 percentage points over the period, compared to just 0.5 points for highly-qualified individuals.

The claimant count for low-skilled workers increased from 7.8pc in the first quarter of 2008 to 12pc in the three months to March 2011, the Office for National Statistics (ONS) said. In contrast, the number of high-skilled people claiming Jobseekers' Allowance rose from 0.6pc to 1.1pc over the period.

Cleaners and potato peelers are among low-skilled workers with the highest unemployment rates, and doctors and teachers stand a far greater chance of getting back into work, the ONS said.

Jobs with middle-upper skill sets, such as nurses or plumbers, were the next most likely group to re-enter the labour market after unemployment, followed by those with lower-middle skills, such as secretaries or shop assistants, the analysis found.

Experts said job seekers with the lowest skill sets had been “disproportionately” hit since the recession.

Paul Sissons, a researcher at think tank The Work Foundation, said: “The competition for jobs has increased since the start of the recession. Those in high-skilled jobs have bumped down to the middle-level range, which in turn means those at the bottom end are pushed out. If you are shop manager and are desperate to find work, you can take a job as a shop assistant. Shop assistants can’t go down another level; they are bumped out.”

The ONS analysis also showed the UK’s North-South divide for job opportunities has deepened since the start of the recession.

When comparing a region’s lowest unemployment rate with its peak over the past five years, the West Midlands had the biggest jump – 6.1pc – followed by Yorkshire and the Humber. Job hunters in the South East were far better off, with unemployment rising by just 2.7pc from its lowest point over the period.

Joblessness in the West Midlands peaked at the highest level over the period, at 10.6pc, the analysis found. The South East and South West had the lowest unemployment peaks, at 6.3pc and 6.7pc respectively.

Kingston-upon-Hull and Wolverhampton had the highest claimant counts in June, the ONS said.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Inflation hits consumer confidence

Title: Inflation hits consumer confidence

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:57 AM (GMT)

Inflation hits consumer confidence

21 Jul 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...r-confidence.do

Consumer confidence fell in June as high inflation and unemployment combined with low wage growth to weigh on households' spending power, a survey has revealed.

The fall in confidence was driven by declining future expectations, which made people less willing to splash out on big-ticket items or household goods, according to Nationwide Building Society.

Its index for confidence fell four points to 51 between May and June, which is 28 points below its long-run average and 11 points below the same period a year ago.

The index had risen 11 points between April and May after being boosted by the royal wedding, a run of bank holidays and warm weather, but fell back in June when consumers had less to cheer.

Mark Saddleton, head of economic and market analysis at Nationwide, said: "Confidence returned to a more subdued level in June as the index again failed to build any sustained momentum to lift it from its current low level.

"Consumers are still facing challenging conditions with high inflation, fuel prices and unemployment weighing down on household budgets and sentiment.

"Combined with weak wage growth, spending power continues to be eroded and placed under significant pressure, making it difficult for consumers to drive the recovery forward."

A significant change in confidence is unlikely while the recovery struggles to develop momentum, he added.

Future expectations fell seven points to 70 on the index, well below its long-run average of 88, as more people thought the economy and labour market will deteriorate over the next six months.

The measure of consumer spending power fell six points to 74 as fewer people thought now was a good time to make major purchases.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Online rail ticket price warning

Title: Online rail ticket price warning

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:57 AM (GMT)

Online rail ticket price warning

21 Jul 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...rice-warning.do

Some rail passengers may be paying too much for tickets when they shop online, a report by a train customer watchdog has said.

Train companies that use websites to sell tickets must do more to ensure passengers do not overpay, the report by Passenger Focus said.

The report recommended action to: Ensure greater clarity about which tickets are for one train only, and which can be used on whichever train you wish; ensure time-of-day restrictions associated with a ticket can be checked easily; ensure that the "permitted routes" that can be used between A and B can be checked easily; tackle jargon that is confusing to passengers; and implement a range of improvements that will make it easier for passengers to buy tickets online.

Passenger Focus chief executive Anthony Smith said: "Companies that use websites to sell train tickets must do more to make sure passengers do not overpay. It is too easy to pay over the odds simply through lack of familiarity with the fares system and its bewildering jargon.

"Making sure that passengers are not overcharged when they buy online may help improve passengers' perception of fares and value for money on Britain's railways. As more and more tickets are sold online, it is vital this is got right."

Gerry Doherty, leader of the TSSA rail union, said train companies were forcing more passengers to go online by cutting back on ticket office staff and opening hours.

He said: "Our members are obliged to offer passengers the cheapest ticket to get from A to B. There is no such obligation when rail companies are selling online and they offer a narrower and more expensive option on many routes. Passengers often end up paying more than they should."

A spokesman for the Association of Train Operating Companies said: "The vast majority of the millions of people who travel by train every day get the right ticket for their journey.

"There has been a big increase in cheap tickets bought online in recent years, as more and more people have been using the internet to get good-value fares for their journey.

"But we know that there are always improvements that can be made. That's why we are continuing to work closely with the industry and Passenger Focus to ensure we make it as easy as possible for passengers to find the right ticket at the right price for their journey."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Jobs go as fashion stores close

Title: Jobs go as fashion stores close
Description: [SOUND LIKE A RECOVERY TO YOU? HAHAHA]

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:55 AM (GMT)

Jobs go as fashion stores close

21 Jul 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...stores-close.do

A fashion chain formed following last year's collapse of Ethel Austin has been forced to shut 12 stores, making 181 staff redundant.

Life & Style Retail, which ran 91 stores across the UK, has made 440 staff redundant since they entered administration on June 10, a spokesman for the shopworkers' union Usdaw said.

A total of 34 stores have closed, he said.

A spokesman for the union said the administrators RSM Tenon have told them they remain in talks with at least one party interested in buying the remainder of the business.

Usdaw national officer John Gorle said: "We have been urging the administrators to keep all stores open while a buyer is sought but once again stores have been closed and more loyal staff made redundant with barely any notice and absolutely no consultation with their union.

"We will be in contact with all members made redundant this week to offer them our advice, support and representation through this very difficult time and again will be taking all necessary legal steps to protect their interests."

Simon Bonney, joint administrator, said: "Regretfully, to ensure the long-term future of the overall business we have had no alternative but to close further stores."

The latest stores to close were in Ashington, Bangor, the Kennedy Centre in Belfast, Fort William, Gravesend, Great Yarmouth, Johnstone, Leven, Livingstone, Orpington, Reading and Watford, the union said.

The company based in Altrincham, Greater Manchester, was formed from the remnants of the Ethel Austin fashion chain, which collapsed in March 2010.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: US existing home sales fall to seven-month low in Title: US existing home sales fall to seven-month low in Description: June

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:38 AM (GMT)

US existing home sales fall to seven-month low in June

The US housing market is still struggling amid the weak economy and low credit availability

20 July 2011 Last updated at 19:40
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-us-canada-14227405

Sales of previously owned US homes fell 0.8% in June to a seven-month low with contract cancellations the main cause.

Contract cancellations jumped from 4% in May to a record 16% as the depressed US housing market continues.

The National Association of Realtors (NAR) said on Wednesday that sales were running at an annual rate of 4.77 million, the lowest since November.

The report overshadowed one on Tuesday that showed a jump in home construction to a six-month high in June.

The NAR cited a combination of factors that were keeping the market depressed, including the sluggish economy - especially the weak labour market - and the difficulty of getting credit.

Some buyers have cancelled purchases after valuations showed the homes were worth less than their initial bids.

"Buyers and sellers are increasingly running up against conservative appraisals, which often cause deals to fall through or be delayed," said Mark Vitner, senior economist at Wells Fargo Securities in Charlotte, North Carolina.

The US still has a high supply of properties for sale, including a high number of homes whose owners have been forced to sell amid the credit crunch and economic downturn.

Despite the high number of cancellations, average property prices rose in June by 0.8% to $184,300 (£114,290).

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Mortgage lending continues to be subdued, lenders

Title: Mortgage lending continues to be subdued, lenders
Description: says

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:36 AM (GMT)

Mortgage lending continues to be subdued, lenders says

The outlook for new mortgage lending is still depressed

20 July 2011 Last updated at 09:58
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/business-14215561

Mortgage lending picked up in June but was still lower than a year ago, the Council of Mortgage Lenders (CML) said.

Total lending to home owners was £12.9bn last month, up by 16% from May but 3% down on June last year.

For the first six months of the year, total mortgage lending was only slightly down on last year's figure, at £63.7bn.

The CML said the subdued state of lending reflected the poor state of the economy and household finances.

"The UK economy continues to experience disappointing economic growth, strong consumer price pressures, falling disposable incomes and an uncertain jobs market," said the CML's chief economist Bob Pannell.

"Recent emotive headlines on repossession prospects appear overplayed, given that the state of our economy does not warrant large interest rate rises for the foreseeable future.

"But we do expect to see moderately higher arrears and possessions through the second half and into 2012, as we have previously forecast," he added.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Chinese state oil firm buys Canadian oil sands

Title: Chinese state oil firm buys Canadian oil sands
Description: producer [CHINA AGAIN FOLKS]

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:34 AM (GMT)

Chinese state oil firm buys Canadian oil sands producer

The Syncrude extraction facility is one recipient of Chinese investment

20 July 2011 Last updated at 11:40
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/business-14214771

Chinese state oil company CNOOC has agreed to buy Canadian oil sands producer OPTI for $2.1bn (£1.3bn).

The deal - which must be approved by regulators - is the latest move by state-run Chinese firms to buy stakes in North American oil producers.

Canada's Alberta province is believed to have the third-largest reserves of oil in the world.

However it is far more expensive to extract oil from Canada's oil sands than from conventional fields.

CNOOC says it will pay OPTI shareholders $34m, but will also take on the firm's $2bn worth of debt.

The firm's main asset is a 35% stake in the Long Lake oil sands project in Alberta.

OPTI says the deal will allow it to continue to invest further in the project.

"CNOOC is a technically experienced and well capitalised company," said OPTI chief executive Chris Slubicki.

The International Energy Agency (IEA) predicts that in the next five years almost half of global oil demand growth will come from China.

Rising demand for oil and significant cash reserves have led Chinese energy firms to buy into foreign oil reserves.

"We are pleased to expand our presence in the oil sands business," said CNOOC chief executive, Yang Hua.

In 2005 the firm bought a 17% stake in Canadian oil sands firm MEG Energy. CNOOC has also obtained minority stakes in oil projects in Texas and Colorado.

CNOOC is not the only Chinese state oil firm investing in the region.

In 2009 PetroChina bought a $1.7bn share in Athabasca Oil Sands, and Last year Sinopec paid $4.6bn for a 9% share of Syncrude, Canada's largest oil sands producer.

The IEA estimates that by the end of 2010 Chinese state energy companies operated in 31 nations and held shares in oil firms in 20 of those countries.
Environmental concerns

Environmentalists have criticised extracting oil from sand and clay which leads to higher carbon emissions than conventional production.

Such concerns may affect demand for crude from oil sands in the US and Europe where new environmental regulations are planned.

California recently announced new low-carbon fuel standards and plans for a new pipeline from Alberta to Texas have been delayed.

Most oil from Alberta is currently exported to the US.

However a second proposed pipeline would take oil to Canada's pacific coast making it easier to export to China instead.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Wells Fargo Fined $85M for Subprime Loans

Title: Wells Fargo Fined $85M for Subprime Loans

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:32 AM (GMT)

Wells Fargo Fined $85M for Subprime Loans

By Dakin Campbell - Jul 20, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-07-20/w...rime-loans.html

Wells Fargo & Co. (WFC), the largest U.S. home lender, agreed to pay a record $85 million fine to settle Federal Reserve claims it steered borrowers into costlier loans and falsified data in mortgage applications.

Employees at Wells Fargo Financial, the lender's consumer- finance unit, pushed customers who may have been eligible for prime interest rates into loans carrying higher rates intended for riskier borrowers, the Fed said today in a statement announcing the settlement. Separately, sales personnel used false documents to make it appear borrowers qualified for loans when their incomes made them ineligible.

Wells Fargo will "work closely with the Federal Reserve to provide restitution to customers who may have been harmed, and to reinforce our internal controls," Chairman and Chief Executive Officer John Stumpf said in a separate statement.

The company shuttered Wells Fargo Financial in July 2010, eliminating 3,800 jobs and ceased making non-prime home loans. The business was overseen by Mark Oman, 56, who has announced he will retire by year-end. The San Francisco-based bank didn't admit wrongdoing in agreeing to today's action.

The civil penalty is the largest issued by the Fed in a consumer-protection case, according to the Fed's statement. The accord requires Wells Fargo to re-evaluate qualifications of borrowers who received a subprime, cash-out refinancing loan between January 2006 and June 2008.
Compensating Borrowers

Wells Fargo must compensate borrowers harmed by the practices, which may exceed 10,000, according to the Fed. Less than 4 percent of the about 300,000 mortgage loans made by the lender between January 2004 and September 2008 are eligible for restitution, the company said.

Wells Fargo said it will submit a plan to the Fed within 90 days laying out certain oversight and lending procedures.

The Fed also issued consent orders against 16 Wells Fargo employees that bar them from working in the banking industry, the regulator said in the statement. The employees have been fired, Wells Fargo said.

To contact the reporter on this story: Dakin Campbell in San Francisco at dcampbell27@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: David Scheer at dscheer@bloomberg.net.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: New Zealand’s Dollar Advances to Reach Record High

Title: New Zealand’s Dollar Advances to Reach Record High Description: Against U.S. Currency

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:29 AM (GMT)

New Zealand’s Dollar Advances to Reach Record High Against U.S. Currency

By Garfield Reynolds - Jul 20, 2011 11:38 PM GMT+0100
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-07-20/n...s-currency.html

New Zealand’s dollar climbed to a record high, touching 85.74 U.S. cents, before trading at 85.72 cents as of 8:37 a.m. in Sydney, from 85.62 cents yesterday in New York.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: GOOGLE IN TAX STORM

Title: GOOGLE IN TAX STORM

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:22 AM (GMT)

GOOGLE IN TAX STORM

Accounts for Google UK showed the firm saw pre-tax losses double

Thursday July 21,2011
http://www.express.co.uk/posts/view/260183...le-in-tax-storm

GOOGLE is to face a storm of fury for tax avoidance after it emerged its UK arm paid only £1.3million in taxes last year while its parent company racked up enormous profits.

Companies House accounts for Google UK showed the firm saw pre-tax losses double to £22million on turnover up from £170million to £240million for the year to December.

But the US parent said in January that the UK had generated £2.2billion in revenues, around 10 per cent of the total. As a result, it has been suggested the UK arm could have actually generated profits of about £700million. It avoids UK tax by legally diverting revenues to Ireland where corporation tax at 12.5 per cent is less than half the rate charged here.

Companies House accounts for Google UK showed the firm saw pre-tax losses double to £22million

A Google spokesman said: “We have an obligation to our shareholders to set up a tax-efficient structure and ours is compliant with the tax rules in all the countries where we operate. We make a substantial contribution to local and national taxation.”

The accounts also showed employee numbers rose from 848 to 930, with payments into share schemes totalling £40million.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: UNREST PUTS SANTANDER £20BN FLOAT IN QUESTION

Title: UNREST PUTS SANTANDER £20BN FLOAT IN QUESTION

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:21 AM (GMT)

UNREST PUTS SANTANDER £20BN FLOAT IN QUESTION

Santander is braced for a further delay to the £20billion float of its UK arm

Thursday July 21,2011
By Andrew Johnson
http://www.express.co.uk/posts/view/260185...oat-in-question

SANTANDER is braced for a further delay to the £20billion float of its UK arm amid continued market and regulatory uncertainty.

It is believed the Spanish bank, which has 1.8 million UK shareholders, will be forced to push the proposed listing out until the first quarter of next year as the markets remain turbulent in the face of the eurozone debt crisis, uncertainties over the US and fears for continued -Chinese growth.

The company also wants to see final proposals from the Independent Commission on Banking, which are due in September. At the moment the ICB is proposing banks should ring fence their retail and investment banking arms, which could result in Santander having to separate its consumer and corporate businesses.

Santander had initially hoped to float in February but was forced to postpone

It would be the second time Santander has been forced to delay a listing of the division, which snapped up Abbey, Alliance & Leicester and parts of Bradford & Bingley in a string of deals.

The bank had initially hoped to float in February but was forced to postpone the listing until the second half of this year following the departure of then chief executive Antonio Horta--Osorio to run Lloyds Banking Group. He took two top executives with him.

A spokesman said yesterday that no decision had yet been made and the bank still hoped to float later in the year. The bank was originally seeking £3billion to pay for 318 branches it bought from Royal Bank of Scotland.

But it is thought market turmoil and in particular the increased uncertainty over the fate of the eurozone's peripheral economies, including Santander's home market of Spain, which is facing talk it could be forced to go cap in hand to ask for a bailout.

A eurozone collapse would also have a big knock-on impact on the European banking sector.

The bank is also concerned over the possibility the ICB will demand a split between retail and commercial operations.

Along with other banks, such as Royal Bank of Scotland, Santander feels if a ring fence must be put in place then it should be between standard deposit-taking and lending activities and riskier -trading activities.

About 30 floats have been pulled this year across Europe, according to data from Thomson Reuters. Of the 74 floats that were successful many were at the lower end of price ranges.

Santander holds about one in five mortgages.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: NASA telescopes face budget abyss

Title: NASA telescopes face budget abyss

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 03:44 AM (GMT)

NASA telescopes face budget abyss

Flagship missions at risk as astrophysics funding shrinks.

Eric Hand
19 July 2011 | Nature | doi:10.1038/475276a
http://www.nature.com/news/2011/110719/full/475276a.html

A simulated deep-field image of galaxies like those the James Webb NASA Space Telescope might observe.NASA

As the space shuttle glides through its final week, another arm of the US space programme faces a bleak future. Astrophysics was once NASA's highest-funded science division and, with the Hubble Space Telescope, a long-time public-relations winner. But its two flagship telescope missions, ranked as the highest priorities for US astronomy, are now under threat as budget constraints start to bite.

Stung by spiralling costs and charges of mismanagement, the James Webb Space Telescope (JWST) — Hubble's long-awaited successor — is now seen by some critics as too expensive to fly. And the Wide-Field Infrared Survey Telescope (WFIRST), which would hunt for exoplanets and probe the poorly understood phenomenon known as dark energy, may take too long to develop to be worthwhile. Added to that, the astrophysics division is facing a budget crunch while other science divisions within the agency weather the fiscal storm and even come out ahead.

"Clearly there's strong support for science," astrophysics director Jon Morse said at an advisory panel meeting on 13 July as he reviewed his division's place in the scientific pecking order at NASA. "The change here is about priorities."

With support from President Barack Obama, the agency's Earth science budget is at an all-time high. Over the next four months, the planetary science division is due to launch three major missions: to the Moon, to Mars and to Jupiter. And the heliophysics division plans to send a probe plunging into the blistering atmosphere of the Sun, closer than ever before. But because the overall NASA science budget is relatively flat, something had to give. Since 2008, astrophysics funding has plunged relative to other NASA science (see 'Falling fortunes') — and relative to physics and astronomy funding at other agencies.

"We're the orphan of the agency," says Alan Boss, chairman of the advisory panel and an astronomer at the Carnegie Institution for Science in Washington DC.

In Congress, the division faces outright hostility. While Boss lamented the budget trends at last week's meeting, a House appropriations committee was endorsing a bill that would cancel funding for the JWST. By all accounts, the 6.5-metre telescope will be at least as important to astronomy as Hubble has been. Designed to operate in the infrared, where the oldest celestial objects shine, the JWST could peer back to the Universe's first stars. It could also use the exquisite resolution offered by the vacuum of space to spot Earth-like planets. "Every once in a while, NASA does something that changes the game," says Michael Turner, director of the Kavli Institute for Cosmological Physics at the University of Chicago, Illinois. "JWST is in that category."

But the cost of the JWST has also changed the game. In November, an independent panel called in by Congress blasted the project for mismanagement. It found that the telescope's price tag had ballooned to US$6.5 billion and that its launch date would have to be delayed to 2015 (see Nature 468 , 353–354; 2010).

Even that projection seems to have been too optimistic. At the advisory panel meeting, Rick Howard, the recently installed JWST programme director, said that following his overhaul of the mission, the telescope will now launch in 2018 at the earliest.

"Of course people are disappointed," says project scientist John Mather of the Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt, Maryland, which is managing the project. "I wanted it sooner, too." Although the extra time should be enough to resolve technical setbacks that have slowed the project, it also raises costs, as engineers and scientists must be employed for longer. Howard would not reveal exactly what the new price tag was, but he acknowledged that it would be more than $6.5 billion. About $3 billion has been spent already.
“We’re certainly more vulnerable than ever.”

To get the mission back on track, NASA replaced all of the JWST's senior managers and put Howard at the helm. So far, he says, all of the telescope's 18 mirror segments have been polished and assembled. Engineers have also determined why some of the telescope's infrared detectors have begun to degrade. The bad detectors are being replaced at an additional cost of $40 million to $50 million, Howard says.

Many expect that the project's political defenders, such as Senator Barbara Mikulski (Democrat, Maryland), will be able to fend off the immediate threat in Congress. Garth Illingworth, an astronomer at the University of California, Santa Cruz, who was on the independent panel that reviewed the JWST, says that his real worry is whether the telescope will receive the massive infusion of funds it needs to get off the ground by 2018. The White House is currently requesting $355 million for the project in 2012, and slightly more each year for the next four years. At those levels, Illingworth says, the telescope will never launch.

If the JWST is delayed yet again it will further imperil WFIRST, the next big astrophysics mission. The project, declared as the top priority in last year's decadal review of US astronomy by the National Academy of Sciences, is designed to measure the effects of dark energy — thought to be accelerating the expansion of the Universe — and to monitor distant stars for signs of exoplanets. But the rising cost of the JWST, together with NASA's declining astrophysics budget, could mean that the $1.6-billion project might not get off the drawing board, let alone the launch pad.

The progress of a European Space Agency proposal to launch a similar telescope, called Euclid, by 2017 puts WFIRST in an even bigger bind. The proposal, submitted on 14 July, will face a final selection round in October. "If Euclid happens and is as good as they say, then I'm not sure [WFIRST] makes sense," says Turner.

Morse maintains that the division's budget woes will not affect other, smaller astrophysics missions scheduled for the next few years, but with two flagship missions in jeopardy that is small consolation to many astrophysicists.

"We're certainly more vulnerable than ever," says Boss, who worries that the seriousness of the situation may be lost on those outside the astrophysics community. "Maybe people are saying, 'They've got Hubble; that's all they need.'"

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Peter Schiff - 'Moodys should downgrade US debt to Title: Peter Schiff - 'Moodys should downgrade US debt to Description: Junk' [Vd] [MOODYS EXISTS BY GOV]

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 03:43 AM (GMT)

Peter Schiff - 'Moodys should downgrade US debt to junk' (18-Jul-11)

http://revolutionarypolitics.tv/video/view...?video_id=15749

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Death and Budgets

Title: Death and Budgets

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 03:40 AM (GMT)

Death and Budgets

By DAVID BROOKS
Published: July 14, 2011
http://www.nytimes.com/2011/07/15/opinion/...ref=davidbrooks

I hope you had the chance to read and reread Dudley Clendinen's splendid essay, "The Good Short Life," in The Times's Sunday Review section. Clendinen is dying of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, or A.L.S. If he uses all the available medical technology, it will leave him, in a few years' time, "a conscious but motionless, mute, withered, incontinent mummy of my former self."

Instead of choosing that long, dehumanizing, expensive course, Clendinen has decided to face death as one of life's "most absorbing thrills and challenges." He concludes: "When the music stops — when I can't tie my bow tie, tell a funny story, walk my dog, talk with Whitney, kiss someone special, or tap out lines like this — I'll know that Life is over. It's time to be gone."

Clendinen's article is worth reading for the way he defines what life is. Life is not just breathing and existing as a self-enclosed skin bag. It's doing the activities with others you were put on earth to do.

But it's also valuable as a backdrop to the current budget mess. This fiscal crisis is about many things, but one of them is our inability to face death — our willingness to spend our nation into bankruptcy to extend life for a few more sickly months.

The fiscal crisis is driven largely by health care costs. We have the illusion that in spending so much on health care we are radically improving the quality of our lives. We have the illusion that through advances in medical research we are in the process of eradicating deadly diseases. We have the barely suppressed hope that someday all this spending and innovation will produce something close to immortality.

But that's not actually what we are buying. As Daniel Callahan and Sherwin B. Nuland point out in an essay in The New Republic called "The Quagmire," our health care spending and innovation are not leading us toward a limitless extension of a good life.

Callahan, a co-founder of the Hastings Center, the bioethics research institution, and Nuland, a retired clinical professor of surgery at Yale, point out that more than a generation after Richard Nixon declared the "War on Cancer" in 1971, we remain far from a cure. Despite recent gains, there is no cure on the horizon for heart disease or stroke. A panel at the National Institutes of Health recently concluded that little progress had been made toward finding ways to delay Alzheimer's disease.

Years ago, people hoped that science could delay the onset of morbidity. We would live longer, healthier lives and then die quickly. This is not happening. Most of us will still suffer from chronic diseases for years near the end of life, and then die slowly.

S. Jay Olshansky, one of the leading experts on aging, argues that life expectancy is now leveling off. "We have arrived at a moment," Callahan and Nuland conclude, "where we are making little headway in defeating various kinds of diseases. Instead, our main achievements today consist of devising ways to marginally extend the lives of the very sick."

Others disagree with this pessimistic view of medical progress. But that phrase, "marginally extend the lives of the very sick," should ring in the ears. Many of our budget problems spring from our quest to do that.

The fiscal implications are all around. A large share of our health care spending is devoted to ill patients in the last phases of life. This sort of spending is growing fast. Americans spent $91 billion caring for Alzheimer's patients in 2005. By 2015, according to Callahan and Nuland, the cost of Alzheimer's will rise to $189 billion and by 2050 it is projected to rise to $1 trillion annually — double what Medicare costs right now.

Obviously, we are never going to cut off Alzheimer's patients and leave them out on a hillside. We are never coercively going to give up on the old and ailing. But it is hard to see us reducing health care inflation seriously unless people and their families are willing to do what Clendinen is doing — confront death and their obligations to the living.

There are many ways to think about the finitude of life. For years, Callahan has been writing about the social solidarity model — in which death is accepted as a normal part of the human condition and caring is emphasized as much as curing.

In the online version of this column let me provide links to three other essays, which offer other perspectives on why we should accept the finitude of life and the naturalness of death. They are: "Born Toward Dying," by Richard John Neuhaus, "L'Chaim and Its Limits: Why Not Immortality?" by Leon Kass and "Thinking About Aging," by Gilbert Meilaender.

My only point today is that we think the budget mess is a squabble between partisans in Washington. But in large measure it's about our inability to face death and our willingness as a nation to spend whatever it takes to push it just slightly over the horizon.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Internet claims another victim: Borders closes

Title: Internet claims another victim: Borders closes
Description: remaining retail stores

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 01:18 AM (GMT)

Internet claims another victim: Borders closes remaining retail stores

July 18, 2011 | Tom Cheredar
http://venturebeat.com/2011/07/18/borders-...-retail-stores/

Borders, the second-largest chain of book stores, announced that it will close its 399 remaining retail locations after failing to sell to another company, reports the Wall Street Journal.

The closed chain could cause sales of traditional paperback and hardcover to decline even quicker than they have to date. While many consumers have turned from brick-and-mortar locations to digital storefronts like Amazon and Barnes & Noble, spurring the decline of independent booksellers as well as big retail chains, online sales haven't fully made up for real-world sales, resulting in an overall decline over the past several years. At the same time, e-book sales have taken an increasingly large share of the book market, spurred by e-book readers like Amazon.com's Kindle and the Barnes & Noble Nook.

The demise of this retail giant is the final chapter in David vs. Goliath story that started in the mid-1990s, with the founding of Amazon.com. Only now the David has grown up to become a Fortune 500 company, and Goliath is flat on his back.

Borders canceled a bankruptcy-court auction scheduled for Tuesday and instead, will ask the court to approve a sale to liquidators led by Hilco Merchant Resources and Gordon Brothers Group, according to the report. The liquidation could begin as soon as Friday. The company expect to close its doors for good by late September 2011.

The company filed for bankruptcy-court protection in February. Since then Borders has been hemorrhaging money and has failed to improve sales. Part of the reason it was unable to get back on its feet has to do with outstanding debts to publishing companies — most of which refused to ship Borders new products until it satisfied outstanding debts.

If you combine Borders' stale selection of products with its lack of digital sales strategy, it's easy to see why the company felt its best chance of being saved was though acquisition.

The company's last chance at salvation ended after negotiations with private-equity investor Jahm Najafi to buy the retail chain collapsed. Borders was unsuccessful in its efforts to find a new buyer over the weekend, WSJ reports.

Phazon - July 20, 2011 01:24 AM (GMT)

All by design.

In the near future it could become very difficult to purchase a bible.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Big US Banks Ate Everyone's Lunch: Strategist

Title: Big US Banks Ate Everyone's Lunch: Strategist

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 01:18 AM (GMT)

Big US Banks Ate Everyone's Lunch: Strategist

On Monday July 18, 2011, 9:54 am EDT
http://finance.yahoo.com/news/Big-US-Banks...370718.html?x=0

US banks should be allowed to take a hit from risky investments if the free market is to be preserved, Sean Corrigan, chief investment strategist at Diapason Commodities Management, told CNBC Monday.

"The privileged few clustering around the Treasury Secretary and the Fed have eaten everybody else's lunch," Corrigan said.

Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke said on Thursday that another round of quantitative easing was not imminent, after the second round was completed.

Corrigan believes that there will eventually be another round of quantitative easing, but not until after the worst of the economic gloom has passed.

Standard & Poor's warned last week that it may cut the US debt rating as prolonged discussions in government failed to find a resolution over the debt ceiling issue.

One key sticking point lies in raising taxes on higher earners, which many Republicans object to.

"If you want to preserve some kernel of the free market, you can't have corporate welfare socialism and then expect all the austerity to fall at the bottom of the pile," Corrigan said.

"This is supposed to be a free market where informed investors take decisions to invest their capital and when the capital risk backfires they have to pay for it," he added.

On Sunday, White House budget director Jack Lew said there had been "activity and progress" in efforts to conclude to raise the debt ceiling.

Some Republicans, including Michelle Bachman, one of the party's potential Presidential candidates, have vowed to vote against raising the debt ceiling.

"We know that the burden of debt payment is almost certainly unpayable under the current structure," Corrigan said. "We can only presume that efforts are being made, although we can't always approve of the direction they are taking."

The bailout of many of the US banks in the wake of the credit crisis, after Lehman Brothers had collapsed, was misguided, he believes.

"If a bank goes bust, its assets will fall into stronger hands," he said.

"These are pretty deep global markets, and there are trillions of dollars in the world, with lots of people looking for an investment opportunity. Give them one."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Bernanke: "Inflation is a tax" [Vd]

Title: Bernanke: "Inflation is a tax" [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 01:02 AM (GMT)

Bernanke: "Inflation is a tax"

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/D4yBrxmEOkY?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/D4yBrxmEOkY?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The Only Thing You Can Count On

Title: The Only Thing You Can Count On

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 12:52 AM (GMT)

The Only Thing You Can Count On

18 July 2011 53 Comments
Greg Hunter's USAWatchdog.com
http://usawatchdog.com/true-inflation-rate-2011/

Last week, in testimony on Capitol Hill, Fed Chief Ben Bernanke said, "The pace of the economic recovery will pick up." As far as the weak economy is concerned, Mr. Bernanke also said there would be, "a notably better performance than we have seen so far this year." I could not believe what I was hearing. It was totally opposite to other economic news that came out in the very same week. For example, unemployment claims stayed above 400,000 for the 14th straight week! I do not see how that trend is going to reverse itself anytime soon with the anemic job growth in the economy.

Another big economic downer came from RealtyTrac. Even though the happy headline splattered all over the mainstream media was similar to what CNN posted, "Foreclosures plunge in first half of 2011," the real story was buried. CNN went on to say, "RealtyTrac's CEO, James Saccacio, sounded a sour note, however, contending that the drop-off in filings can be traced not to economic improvement or a pick-up in the housing market, but to processing delays . . . '[That's what is] pushing foreclosures further and further out — we estimate that as many as 1 million foreclosure actions that should have taken place in 2011 will now happen in 2012, or perhaps even later,' Saccacio said." (Click here for the complete CNN story.) How do you put out a headline that misses the point of your own story by that much? I guess CNN has the same problem Mr. Bernanke has–grasping reality. The expert quoted in the CNN story said the housing market may not recover until "2016"! (And you thought I was bearish.)

Can we count on Mr. Bernanke when he says the "recovery will pick up"? Treasury Secretary Tim Geithner recently stated just the opposite. He said, "I think for a lot of people it's going to be – it's going to feel very hard, harder than anything they've experienced in their lifetime now, for some time to come." Based on many wrong market calls and current economic facts, I say we cannot count on a recovery for most Americans, at least not anytime soon.

Can we count on Mr. Bernanke being correct when he says gold is not money? Not according to Peter Schiff, CEO of Euro Pacific Capital. In a recent article, Schiff said, "By claiming that gold is not money, the Chairman demonstrates his ignorance of much of monetary history. . . . And gold is money because central bankers like Mr. Bernanke cannot be trusted with a paper substitute. Bernanke further disputes the facts by claiming that the only reason people are buying gold is to hedge against uncertainty, or "tail risks" as he calls them. . . . I can assure him that my gold buying has nothing to do with "uncertainty." In fact, it's just the opposite. I am buying gold because of what is certain, not what is uncertain. I am certain that Mr. Bernanke's incompetence will destroy the value of the dollar and unleash runaway inflation." (Click here to get the complete and most excellent post from Mr. Schiff.)

So, what can you count on? Look at the chart on "core" inflation from economist John Williams of Shadowstats.com put out last Friday. Forget about the ridiculous idea from the government of tracking inflation by excluding food and energy, and just look at the direction. The flight path is up since QE2 was started by the Fed in November 2010.

Williams explains the chart by saying, ". . . The broad economy is experiencing pass-through upside inflationary pressures from higher oil costs. Significant here is that higher inflation does not reflect a strengthening economy, but rather it is tied to the dollar-debasement efforts of the Fed, the resulting weakness in the U.S. dollar and the related strength in oil prices."

Even though inflation is heating up, business activity is cooling off—in a hurry. According to Williams, the economy has "slowed sharply," and the U.S. is already in an "inflationary double-dip recession." Williams goes on to say, "The implications are horrendous in terms of the federal budget deficit, Treasury funding needs and banking-system solvency . . . This circumstance also likely is why Fed Chairman Bernanke suddenly started hemming and hawing about having another round of "stimulus," some form of a QE3. Yes, the economy is that weak."

Consider this is going on against a backdrop of historic budget problems on both sides of the Atlantic. In Europe, the sovereign debt crisis looms. Any one of several countries can cause a daisy chain of debt default. In the U.S., the debt ceiling impasse, where America could default on its obligations globally. I am getting an increasing dark feeling about both of these problems getting resolved before one or both of them blows up. Even if both problems are brought under control, gobs of money will surely be printed to avert the crisis. This brings me to the only thing you can count on–inflation and lots of it. According to Shadowstats.com, the true inflation rate of 2011 (if computed the BLS did it before 1994) is now 11.1%.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Down but not out: Voices of the long-term

Title: Down but not out: Voices of the long-term
Description: Unemployed

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 12:45 AM (GMT)

Down but not out: Voices of the long-term unemployed

By Zachary Roth | The Lookout – Thu, Jul 14, 2011
http://news.yahoo.com/blogs/lookout/down-n...-125453267.html

You can read all the stats you want on America's long-term jobless crisis. More than 6.3 million Americans have been out of work for more than half a year. The average jobless stint now lasts longer than nine months. We could go on.

But no facts or figures bring home the grim human dimension of this epidemic better than an account we received from an unemployed Iraq War veteran. "I have led men in combat, but my last job was a temporary cashier position in the women's department at Nordstrom's," he wrote. "I don't get many interviews, but when I do, I get a lot of handshakes and a 'Thank you for your service, but you're not what we're looking for.'"

Nor can they top this description from a reader of what it's like to go for months searching fruitlessly for work: "You start to hear a voice in your head that tells you, 'Perhaps you're just not good enough.'"

When we asked readers recently to share their personal stories of being out of work for an extended period, we expected to get a lot of responses. But we didn't foresee the flood that ensued. "I imagine that you will have to hire more staff to wade through all the emails you get in response to this article," one reader wrote. It turned out she was right: That's exactly what we did.

The thousands of anecdotes you sent us offer a heart-rending glimpse inside the reality of long-term joblessness during the Great Recession and its aftermath. They convey sadness, anxiety, anger, shame, and despair, but sometimes also humor, generosity, and a quintessentially American determination to roll with the punches. And they offer a portrait of out-of-work people who are smart, articulate, motivated, and resilient--a useful corrective to some of the negative stereotypes that too often shape perceptions of this huge group of Americans.

We want to thank all the thousands of readers who took the time to share their personal stories. For reasons of space, we can only publish here a fraction of the number we'd like to. So we've set up a separate website, "Down But Not Out," to showcase many more in full. [Click here for readers' own tales of long-term joblessness at "Down But Not Out.""]

Meanwhile, here at the The Lookout, we've picked out portions of a smaller number of the most compelling responses, and organized them around some of the major themes that readers highlighted--from accounts of how they lost their job in the first place, to the emotional toll that being without work for so long can take, to the rare and unexpected silver linings that some respondents discovered.

How it all Began: "When the economy imploded in 2009, nobody was building anything"

Many readers described how they first became jobless, with tales that often seemed ripped from the bleak headlines of the last few years--taking in everything from the mortgage meltdown to the housing bust to government budget cuts.

• George C. from Brea, Calif., told us he worked for a bank that had a division that made sub-prime loans. After the housing bust hit, "the federal government ordered the company to cease & desist from all sub-prime operations, because they didn't like banks that were also sub-prime mortgage companies, so that division of the company was shut down," George wrote. Ultimately, the other divisions of the bank were sold, "at which time there was no more work for me to do."

• "I was a steel building detailer with just over 14 years of experience," Tom W. from New Haven, Ind., told us. "When the economy imploded in 2009, nobody was building anything. With no work, my employer was forced to lay off everyone."

• Shannon B., a teacher and school administrator from Phelan, Calif., wrote that she lost her job in February 2009. "When the budget slashes hit, my position was the first to go."

• Jerry, from southern California, told us he had worked in the electrical distribution industry for more than 25 years. "I lost my job in August of 2008 when the housing bubble and second Great Depression were hitting hard. The branch I worked in closed, since the industry relies heavily on new construction."

• "I never saw being let go coming," wrote Elizabeth M., who worked at an educational center. "I simply showed up less and less on the work schedule. Then, after 2 weeks of not appearing at all, I received a voice mail via my cell phone that informed me they were actually letting me go. (Whatever happened to telling someone to their face?)"

The Emotional Toll: "I hide my emotions, but deep down I feel I am dying off"

Your tales of losing long-held jobs--often with minimal advance notice or human consideration--were bracing. But more compelling still were the numerous accounts of how long-term joblessness has affected you personally and psychologically.

• Perhaps no testimony was bleaker than a note we received from Peter K., who said he used to be a middle manager making over $100,000 a year. His life now? "Stay up too late at night and sleep too long in the morning. Drink way too much … stare at the computer screen, stare out the window, stare at your image in the mirror, stare at the ceiling fan … Social life--none. I'm no fun. Sex--none. Women would sooner hear you have Hepatitis then learn you're unemployed … Depressed--big time. Think suicide every day."

• Scott V. told us that when his money began to run out and he didn't know how he was going to feed his children, he had the same thought. "To be extremely honest I thought of taking the easy way out, which probably many people have. I read an internet article a couple of weeks ago about some 22 (?) year old ending her life because she had no job and too many bills that she couldn't handle. Of course I didn't do that, because I consider myself a strong person and I have a lot to live for."

• "Most of the time you can barely get out of bed because you worry so much about your future," wrote Todd L. of Houston, Tex. "I feel so behind, especially when talking to my peers. Several of them have already moved on from their first job to their second one. Many are in long-term relationships, something I know I can never have without a job and financial stability. I feel so ... behind. I have grown much more envious of others lately."

• Stefan K., from South Bend, Ind., told us he'd been out of work for going on two years. "After a few months pass by, you start to take it personally," he wrote. "You start to hear a voice in your head that tells you, 'Perhaps you're just not good enough.' You know it's not true, but it feels true. You then began to feel ashamed when people, who know of your situation, keep asking if you've found a job yet."

• Paul K. described how both he and his fiancée--who is also contending with a long-term bout of joblessness--have seen their relationship suffer as a result of their shared plight. "It's very depressing and has caused many arguments and led to a very unhappy life for us for the last 2-3 years," he wrote. "We now sleep late because we have no money to do anything. Gas costs too much so most days we stay home and just watch TV. It's making me anxious, depressed, and my confidence is all but gone. I pray for a miracle at this point."

• The pain of long-term unemployment doesn't only affect layoff casualties--it's also assailed many first-time entrants into the job market. Jill B. of Jonesboro, Ark. got a master's degree last year, but it didn't help her. "The hardest part of this experience has been having to come home, tail tucked, as a failure," she wrote. "Out of necessity, I am now living with my parents again in a rural, Arkansas town. For financial reasons, I had to leave the thriving job market of Austin, Texas to come back to a place where there are no jobs at all."

• "I hide my emotions, but deep down I feel I am dying off," wrote Jeremy L., from Waupaca, Wisc. "I smile less. Friends don't call me anymore to do things because I can't afford to. I feel like a hermit living under a rock. I feel worthless. I feel like I'm pulling my girlfriend and daughter into a hole with me. Our once loving relationship has turned bitter and sour."

The Financial Strain: "I am scared to death of what lies ahead"

Of course, there's no way to overstate the financial impact of being without a steady income for an extended period. The notes and comments you submitted show the remarkable lengths that some of you have gone just to keep your heads above water.

• A 62-year-old Ohio man, W.M., told us he'd been forced to take contract work in South Carolina and Indiana. "I am the new migrant worker," he wrote. "I get home to see my family when I can. I have about 1/3 less salary and no benefits but I can pay my way."

• Some readers said they were selling their possessions to support themselves. "I have also sold my clothing, many of our belongings, and baby items on Craigslist and in consignment shops," M.N. wrote. "I add oatmeal to many of my dishes to extend the idea of 'beef', as well as buying generics. We've [gotten rid of] all memberships to gyms and cable TV. We are trying to live a more simple life."

• Some have been relying on family or friends. "I am in default for last year's property taxes, and now stand to lose my home of 23 years," wrote Vicki J. of Garland, Tex. "Had it not have been for a friend of mine helping me, I wouldn't have even had electricity or food for the past three months."

• Others are seeking a fresh start. "We can't afford the house payments anymore, but our house lost about 50% of its value, so we can't sell," wrote Shannon B. "We simply cannot live on my husband's salary. We are filing for bankruptcy."

• Judy J. from Catawba, N.C., described paying for groceries with WIC checks--a form of government assistance--and worrying about delaying people behind her in line. "A few times I offered to let someone cut because 'this is going to take a while,'" she wrote. "[B]ut they say, 'No, it's okay. I'm on WIC, too, so I understand.'"

• Karen P. from Maryland told us she had to move back in with her mother at the age of 40, and that her jobless benefits will run out in January. "I am scared to death of what lies ahead," she added. "I have no idea if I will find a job or not."

• And in a harrowing detail that evokes the hardships of an earlier time, M.C. wrote: "My family is eating stir-fried dandelions out of yards to keep from starving."

Trials of the Job Search: "We can't hire any more old people"

Landing a new job in this economy is tough no matter who you are. But when you've already been out of work for so long, it can be even harder.

• We asked whether employers were wary of hiring readers when they found out how long they'd been jobless -- a form of discrimination that appears to have been on the rise lately. "Very much so," replied Susan W. "As if it were my fault I was unemployed, regardless of the fact that I had put out hundreds of resumes and applications."

• Many readers described a daunting level of competition for openings. "In my area, Elkhart County, Ind.., unemployment had gotten so bad that 1200 people applied for 10 openings at one company," wrote Jason G. (Incidentally, if Elkhart rings a bell, that might be because it's where President Obama launched his effort to get the economy moving again almost two and a half years ago.)

• "I applied at one place that literally handed out raffle tickets and the winning 100 tickets were the only ones that got to apply," wrote M.O. "Of course my number wasn't one of them."

• An enormous number of older readers said they think their age is part of the problem for employers. Paula S., from Acworth, Georgia, who said she was "sixty-something," described "two eye-opening experiences of blatant age discrimination . . . . One twenty-something supervisor asked me if I had ever thought about coloring my hair . . . . Another manager told his assistant with the door open when I showed up to complete an application and interview: 'We can't hire any more old people.' "

• Britt S. said he'd tried to transition into another career after getting laid of from his newspaper job. But, "if an employer has a choice between a 27-year-old with a degree and 3 or 4 years of experience and a 57-year-old with the same degree and no experience, who is most likely to get the job?" he asked.

• Even Dan H., a skilled telecommunications technician in Scottsdale, Ariz., who's not exactly long in the tooth, told us he thought his age worked against him. "I do believe that being 37 was a factor in being passed over for jobs," he wrote. "[T]echnology is a young man's game. Potential employers thought I may be rusty with my skills … Trained to an expert level, but no one can afford to hire me."

Tips for Jobseekers: "Any job is a good job"

Many readers who had ultimately landed a job were eager to share what worked for them.

• "Network, network, network. I can't say it enough," wrote E.S., from San Diego, Calif. "LinkedIn is awesome, but enlist your Facebook contacts, or join a networking group. I know it's horrible to ask your friends to keep their eyes out, but in the end that's how I got hired. When you know someone who knows someone, who can vouch for you, you have a much better chance of getting a job with the company you want/in the field you want."

• Kurt G., from Seattle, Wash., thinks the face-to-face meeting is the key. "It doesn't matter what skills you have, and it doesn't matter what skills the employers say they want," he wrote. "What matters is having the skills that get you through the interview process. Focus like a laser on the interview process. If you're successful there, you'll get an offer, and after that, it's up to the employer to retrain you."

• Susan W. suggested making a nuisance of yourself. "I selected three companies I really wanted to work for, applied and kept going back and going back until they either told me to leave me alone or hired me," she told us. "Two told me to leave them alone, the third hired me."

• Chris C. of Modesto, Calif., had a different strategy: moving into a field traditionally dominated by women -- a trend that's said to be increasingly common for male workers on the job market. "I researched the employment situation where I am living and decided to retrain in something it appeared people would want," he wrote. "After I received my nursing license it took me 3 months to find a full-time job."

• And Cindy S. advised job-seekers not to be too picky. "Don't be afraid to downgrade your expectations," she wrote. "Right now, any job is a good job. When the economy recovers, it will be time to stretch out and seek a job for which you are qualified and paid well for, but right now, income is income."

Solutions to the Crisis: "The vast majority of us are on our own."

A lot of readers had thoughts about how to fix the long-term jobless crisis--or at least how to make things easier for its victims.

• Many respondents lamented the problem of having to compete with cheaper foreign labor. "Make it more difficult to offshore work, or to hire foreign workers at a discount," wrote Kurt G., in a typical comment.

• Yvonne P., from Spring Hill, Tenn. suggested that the government give a "small tax incentive to businesses who hire people who have been unemployed for 6 months or more. Call it, 'Americans Back To Work Tax Break.'" Not a bad idea.

• "There aren't enough resources for retraining, especially of college-educated people," wrote E.S. "The vast majority of us are on our own."

• And Todd L. asked for a little more heart from employers. "I want companies and those who represent them to realize that job applicants and the long-term unemployed are not just resumes in a system," he wrote. "We're real people too. Please treat us like one."

The Unexpected Upside: "We have made some memories that are priceless"

As is no doubt clear by now, the picture that most readers painted of long-term unemployment was overwhelmingly bleak. But that doesn't mean there weren't some respondents who had the strength of mind to also take note of the positives.

• Stephanie B. of Memphis, Tenn., told us she works three part-time jobs and is left on a tighter budget than when she was on jobless benefits. And yet, she wrote: "The one thing that has come out of this experience that I am thankful for and hope I won't ever forget, is the closeness we feel as a family. We can sit down to a checker tournament and play for hours. We can pull out the paper and crayons and create artwork we never had time to do before. There's no more running around nonstop all week long. Most days feel like Saturday when school's out. We entertain ourselves and each other on very little, and I think we have made some memories that are priceless."

• Dan H., who rallied to the challenge of unemployment by working with his wife to start a new business, told us: "If you cannot get a job, make one I guess. In the last year, in order, we've moved for a 'better life' across country, had a child (when we conceived all was good), lost job, had car repo'd, borrowed money from family to get wheels, went on public assistance, cried a river over my manly short comings, was inspired by my wife and am now an entrepreneur. Scary how quick life changes."

• Todd L., too, was able to look on the bright side. "I am blessed to have my family," he wrote. "They support me financially and emotionally … I have become more religious. I pray everyday, asking God for a job and a girlfriend. Does it help? Somewhat. It is better than no religion at all. Most of the time it just makes me feel better. God has given me time and comfort. But I am still waiting for a miracle--a job and a girlfriend."

• And Scott V., who's now working after being jobless for more than two years, told others not to give up. "It does suck, but you can make it," he wrote. "I have been humbled by losing my job almost 3 years ago. Having ZERO dollars in my bank account and very little cash in my wallet. Without the support of my family and the love of my life, to help me get by, I would not have made it this far. I do thank God for all his good graces he has bestowed upon me, which I know I don't deserve. So whoever is reading this, DO NOT sit around waiting for something to happen, make it happen."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Conforming loan limits should expire lower – how Title: Conforming loan limits should expire lower – how Description: is a $729,000 government backed mortgage

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 12:44 AM (GMT)

Conforming loan limits should expire lower – how is a $729,000 government backed mortgage viewed as affordable housing when most families only make $50,000 a year?Share

http://www.doctorhousingbubble.com/conform...sing-expensive/

Southern California enjoys adding flare to any event and Carmageddon certainly did not live up to the hype. Certainly the massive amount of coverage given to the event kept many people home and off the 405 between the 101 and the 10 freeways. Unlike the housing apocalypse that has wiped out $6.5 trillion in home equity across the country I'm sure it is manageable for people to sit back and allow for some work to be done on a much used freeway. Housing continues to be a drag on the economy because household incomes are simply facing tough times ahead. No amount of focusing on interest rates or conforming loan limits is going to increase the amount of income entering a household unless the economy improves on the jobs front. With conforming limits set to move lower soon some are arguing that the limits should be kept high for a longer duration. The five year old housing bubble is an issue of inflated housing prices so it is hard to understand why we would want to keep tools that make homes more unaffordable to Americans with more cramped incomes.

The market of distressed homes

Source: Economy.com

We still have over 2 million homes in some stage of foreclosure. The housing market has plenty of lower priced homes for supply and this is what is keeping sales moving. Families are gravitating to lower priced homes because their incomes are unable to support inflated homes that still carry the essence of the housing bubble days. The actions of the Federal Reserve buying up $1.25 trillion in mortgage backed securities simply extended the correction but also provided banks time to fix their own balance sheets. The bailouts were never about helping homeowners and the above chart should be a testament to that most obvious fact.

Underwater nation

14 million homes are in a negative equity position. Being underwater is one of the biggest predictors in forecasting future foreclosure. 6.5 million mortgages are underwater by 30 percent or more. Now keep in mind over 2 million homes are currently in foreclosure. How long would it take for a home to go up 30 percent in value in these times? Now during the bubble this would have occurred over 1 or 2 years especially here in the sunny state of California. With stagnant incomes and massive inventory home values are now back to levels last seen in 2003:

Not only are we not seeing any year-over-year price increases but home prices are actually falling. Now after five years you would think many people would get it that the demand is being driven by lower priced homes. The other outside factors like low mortgage rates or tax credits are simply short-term boosts that give a false sense of recovery. Even after trillions of dollars pumped into the system here we are in the middle of summer in 2011 and home prices are inching back closer to 2003. Why? Because household incomes never kept up with home values. It is all about the paycheck amount.

The jumbo market

Mark Zandi from Moody's has this to say about the coming conforming limit change:

"Without an extension, Fannie and Freddie's loan limit will fall from $729,750 in the highest-cost areas of the country to $625,000.11 FHA loan limits in these areas are likely to fall even more, since they are defined as the lesser of 115% of an area's median-priced home or $625,000. The high-cost areas that would be significantly affected are primarily in the Northeast and California but include some parts of Florida and the Chicago metro area. The higher loan limits affected approximately $140 billion in loans originated in 2010, or less than a tenth of the $1.5 trillion in mortgages made that year (see Chart 8)."

It is hard to find any reason to keep these limits so high. The nationwide median home price is approximately $160,000 so these current figures already seem rather generous to say the least. Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac are the backbone of the current mortgage market because no other buyer would soak up this amount of loans in a fragile economy. Add into the mix FHA insured loans and you have a housing market that is virtually all predicated on the government buying up mortgages and then selling them to itself through the Federal Reserve. It is clearly an unsustainable system.

We should welcome the drop in conforming loan limits because this is an old throwback to the days of the housing bubble. I remember contacts sending over rate sheets almost on a semi-annual basis where caps kept going up arbitrarily with the rising bubble. The banks and lenders were all the more responsive to moving things up even if we now know that it was an entire bubble. So wouldn't it make sense to simply press the reset button and go back to pre-bubble limits? Of course the fight is not going down as easily as you would imagine. Lenders now completely rely on the government since the global market is now a bit weary of mortgage debt even if it is stamped and labeled triple-A.

Ultimately if the government wants to take an active role in fixing the economy it should not take advice from the main players who caused this downturn. The focus should be on creating a system that allows for the thriving of better paying jobs (this assumption is based on the government having to take a major role). The meddling and aiding of banks on Wall Street has merely served as the biggest redistribution of wealth we have ever seen but to the banking sector. Look at the above data and see how much bang for our buck we got with housing from the historic bailouts. Ironically in a time when households need more affordable housing these same actions are keeping home prices inflated. Again, why in the world do we need these $729,750 conforming loan limit caps? How about we peg the cap to the nationwide median home price and other areas that are more expensive should use a hybrid model where the remaining difference will be made up by local banks? This way, banks get to share in the fun of holding giant mortgages and will exercise more due diligence.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Cisco to cut workforce by 9% and sell Mexican unit

Title: Cisco to cut workforce by 9% and sell Mexican unit

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 06:25 PM (GMT)

Cisco to cut workforce by 9% and sell Mexican unit

Cisco is cutting jobs and selling a subsidiary in order to be more competitive

19 July 2011 Last updated at 03:02
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/business-14181332

Cisco, the world's largest maker of computer networking equipment, will cut its workforce by as much as 9%, trimming 6,500 jobs.

The move is part of plans announced in May that aim to cut as much as $1bn (£622m) from Cisco's annual costs.

It also said it will sell a Mexican subsidiary to Foxconn Technology Group.

Cisco is facing increased competition, and said it needs to overhaul the way it operates and focus on core businesses.

Restructuring

Chief executive officer John Chambers said earlier this year that Cisco would look to exit non-performing or less profitable businesses, and refocus on its core networking operations.

Analysts have complained that the company expanded into too many areas at the expense of its main markets.

In May, Mr Chambers announced his intention to shut Cisco's Flip video camera unit resulting in 550 job losses.

The process of repositioning the business is set to continue in the coming months.

As part of the planned job cuts, 15% of employees who are at vice-president level and above will be trimmed. Cisco said that 2,100 employees of the planned 6,500 have elected for a voluntary early-retirement programme.

The company said it will pay all the affected employees severance pay and give them help to find other employment.

Cisco does not expect any job losses to come from its plans to sell its television set-top box manufacturing facility in Juarez, Mexico.

Instead, 5,000 employees will be transferred to contract manufacturer Foxconn in the first three months of the 2012 fiscal year.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Land Securities reports a drop in vacancy rates

Title: Land Securities reports a drop in vacancy rates

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 06:24 PM (GMT)

Land Securities reports a drop in vacancy rates

Its developments include the One New Change project in the City of London

19 July 2011 Last updated at 17:18
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/business-14191301

The amount of vacant properties owned by Land Securities dropped to 3.9% in June from 4.2% in March, the firm said.

The drop, excluding new developments, was in part due to retailers such as Superdry and the White Company taking up spaces in shopping centres.

The UK's biggest property company also said that higher rental income and sales had boosted its expansion plans.

It said it had identified new projects worth £275m to meet growing demand from food and fashion retailers for space.

"The outlook for development in London remains attractive and, despite the mixed messages in the retail sector, our leasing activity demonstrates that the stronger retailers are looking to take new space," said Land Securities chief executive Francis Salway.

The company's report comes at a time when the outlook for the commercial property market is uncertain.

The Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors (Rics) recently reported that the improvement in the commercial property market has been limited to London.

The Rics survey found that new developments for retail and industrial space "continued to fall in the three months to June", despite demand for new office spaces.

Mr Salway added: "While the quarter has seen a period of uncertainty in the wider economy, our activities show that our plan continues to deliver opportunities for value creation."

In its statement, Land Securities announced that it would pay a quarterly dividend of 7.2 pence a share.

It also said it had reduced its debt to 37.5% of its assets, down from 39% at the end of March.

Land Securities' retail properties include Cabot Circus in Bristol and the St David's Shopping Centre in Cardiff.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: European Stress Tests May Spark Need to Raise

Title: European Stress Tests May Spark Need to Raise Description: Additional Capital S&P says

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 06:21 PM (GMT)

European Stress Tests May Spark Need to Raise Additional Capital, S&P Says

By Maud van Gaal - Jul 19, 2011 5:18 PM GMT+0100
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-07-19/e...l-s-p-says.html

European banks may seek to raise additional capital after last week's stress tests revealed their riskiest investments and showed a need to curb their dependence on governments, ratings company Standard & Poor's said.

"The stress test process is likely to add further impetus to banks' capital raising efforts in the lead-up to the implementation of Basel III," Richard Barnes, a London-based credit analyst said in a report today. "Sovereign support remains an important rating factor for many European banks."

The stress tests on 90 European banks published on July 15 showed eight lenders had a combined 2.5 billion-euro ($3.5 billion) capital shortfall. Shares of European lenders across the region slumped yesterday as the tests failed to ease concern they remain vulnerable to a potential sovereign default.

The tests by the European Banking Authority showed that 16 percent of the 1 trillion euros of core tier 1 capital held by lenders came from government, S&P said. The data on lenders' holdings of sovereign debt showed how governments depend on domestic lenders to fund their deficits, Barnes said.

"The unwinding of this interdependency is likely to be difficult and take an extended period of time," he wrote.

Standard & Poor's doesn't plan to revise any it its ratings based on the release of the stress tests, it said today.

To contact the reporter on this story: Maud van Gaal in Amsterdam at mvangaal@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Frank Connelly at fconnelly@bloomberg.net

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Pimco Favors Shorter Debt as Yen is 'Cleanest

Title: Pimco Favors Shorter Debt as Yen is 'Cleanest
Description: Dirty Shirt' Japan Credit

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 06:20 PM (GMT)

Pimco Favors Shorter Debt as Yen is 'Cleanest Dirty Shirt': Japan Credit

By Yoshiaki Nohara, Masaki Kondo and Fion Li - Jul 19, 2011 4:01 PM GMT+0100
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-07-19/p...pan-credit.html

Pacific Investment Management Co., manager of the world's biggest bond fund, favors Japan's shorter-maturity securities as the nation's trade surplus supports the yen and stems concern its debt burden will widen.

While the record earthquake in March has worsened the outlook for Japan's budget deficit, it has prompted companies to save more and focus on domestic assets, said Tomoya Masanao, the head of portfolio management for Japan at Pimco. Notes maturing in one to three years have risen 2.1 percent in July in dollar terms, set for the biggest gain since April, an index compiled by Bank of America Merrill Lynch showed. Similar-maturity Treasuries have risen 0.2 percent.

"The yen is not very beautiful but is the cleanest dirty shirt," said Masanao. "Japan is running a current-account surplus, which means the private sector has savings that are more than enough to finance the public sector's deficit."

Japan's currency has outperformed the euro and dollar for the past three months as leaders in both Europe and the U.S. clashed on policies for containing government debt. Overseas investors bought a net 4.91 trillion yen ($62 billion) in Japanese bonds and notes through June, set for the biggest annual purchase in four years, Ministry of Finance data showed.

Euro-area leaders will meet in Brussels this week to discuss the "financial stability" of the region, European Union President Herman Van Rompuy said in a statement. U.S.

President Barack Obama and leaders of Congress face an Aug. 2 deadline to raise a $14.3 trillion debt ceiling.

Trade Surplus

While Japan has public debt that's twice as big as its annual economic output, its current-account surplus allows the nation to finance itself without relying on foreign capital. The current account is the difference between total exports of goods, services and transfers, versus imports of them. The surplus narrowed 51.7 percent in May from a year earlier to 590.7 billion yen, the Finance Ministry said on July 8.

The yen has climbed 4.4 percent for the past three months, according to Bloomberg Correlation-Weighted Currency Indexes. The euro lost 2.5 percent, while the dollar dipped 0.6 percent. Japan's currency reached 78.47 per dollar on July 14, the strongest since the post-World War II high set on March 17.

Prospects that developed nations will have to maintain monetary stimulus to prop up their economies have also supported bonds. The Bank of Japan has maintained its benchmark interest rate at a range of zero to 0.1 percent since October. That compares with the Federal Reserve's range of zero to 0.25 percent.

Swaps traders have slashed bets on increases in the European Central Bank's key rate, now at 1.5 percent, to 1.4 basis points in the next 12 months from 43.9 points at the end of December, according to a Credit Suisse Group AG index.

Risk Vs. Reward

Japan's government debt reached 200 percent of gross domestic product last year, compared with less than 100 percent levels in the U.S. and the euro region, based on data from the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development. Greece, which was downgraded by Fitch Ratings to the company's lowest grade on July 13, had debt of 147 percent its economy.

Investors in Japanese debt aren't sufficiently rewarded for owning longer-term bonds, said Masanao. The extra yield on 20- year bonds over two-year notes fell to 1.7 percentage points on July 14, the least since Jan. 3. The yield on benchmark 10-year security slid to 1.060 percent yesterday, a level not seen since Nov. 19 and the lowest among the 32 markets tracked by Bloomberg.

"We don't see good value at the long-end of the curve, whereas the front-end is still a safe place to park your money," Masanao said.

Demand for Japan's debt has remained resilient amid calls for an early resignation of Prime Minister Naoto Kan, who survived a parliamentary vote of no confidence last month by promising to step down, without specifying a time. The Asahi newspaper reported on July 12 that 70 percent of respondents in its opinion poll said Kan should resign by the end of August.

High Turnover

Japan's "revolving door" leadership was a credit negative factor, Moody's Investors Service said last month after putting the nation's debt rating on review for a downgrade in May. Kan, the fifth prime minister since September 2006, pledged reforms when he took office a year ago that would balance the budget in 10 years and rein in a debt burden.

"We are surrounded by many bond-buying factors, including the U.S. debt issue, U.S. slowdown concern, Europe's turmoil and Japan's political gridlock," said Jun Fukashiro, a money manager who helps oversee about $17 billion at Toyota Asset Management Co. in Tokyo. "Yen-denominated assets are being used as a refuge."

Five-year contracts to insure Japanese government bonds against default were at 92.65 basis points in New York on July 18, according to data by CMA, which is owned by CME Group Inc. and compiles prices quoted by dealers in the privately negotiated market. The Markit iTraxx Japan index of 50 investment-grade borrowers rose for a second day to 125.5 yesterday in Tokyo.

To contact the reporters on this story: Yoshiaki Nohara in Tokyo at ynohara1@bloomberg.net; Masaki Kondo in Singapore at mkondo3@bloomberg.net; Fion Li in Hong Kong at fli59@bloomberg.net

To contact the editors responsible for this story: Rocky Swift at rswift5@bloomberg.net; Sandy Hendry at shendry@bloomberg.net

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Bank of Canada Keeps Key Rate at 1%, Says Stimulus

Title: Bank of Canada Keeps Key Rate at 1%, Says Stimulus Description: Steps Will Be Withdrawn

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 06:19 PM (GMT)

Bank of Canada Keeps Key Rate at 1%, Says Stimulus Steps Will Be Withdrawn

By Greg Quinn - Jul 19, 2011 4:42 PM GMT+0100
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-07-19/b...ventually-.html

The Bank of Canada kept its main interest rate unchanged and said borrowing costs will increase as the economy recovers, with policy makers dropping the word “eventually” to describe the timing of their next move.

The target for overnight loans between commercial banks remained 1 percent, where it’s been since September, as forecast by all 26 economists surveyed by Bloomberg News. The Ottawa- based bank also raised its outlook for so-called core inflation and affirmed the economy will reach full output by the middle of 2012 while trimming this year’s growth forecast.

“To the extent that the expansion continues and the current material excess supply in the economy is gradually absorbed, some of the considerable monetary policy stimulus currently in place will be withdrawn,” the central bank said in a statement. “Such reduction would need to be carefully considered.”

The Canadian dollar and bond yields rose as investors bet today’s statement could mean rate increases come sooner than previously forecast. Policy makers led by Governor Mark Carney, 46, focused on faster inflation at home as well as Europe’s debt crisis and a weak U.S. economy. The annual inflation rate was 3.7 percent in May, the fastest since 2003 and above the bank’s 2 percent target.

“By taking out the word eventually, it’s signaling the wait for interest rate hikes isn’t going to be as long as the markets were assuming,” said Avery Shenfeld, chief economist at Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce in Toronto.

Dollar Strengthens

The Canadian dollar appreciated 0.9 percent to 95.15 cents per U.S. dollar at 11:11 a. m. in Toronto, from 95.97 cents yesterday. It earlier reached 94.82, the strongest level since May 3. One Canadian dollar buys $1.0510.

The yield on the two-year Canadian government bond rose 7 basis points to 1.46 percent, and the yield on the December bankers acceptance contract rose to 1.47 percent from 1.38 percent.

The bank today reiterated that inflation will exceed 3 percent “in the near term” because of temporary increases in food and energy costs, with the rate expected to slow to 2 percent by mid-2012.

Policy makers also said that core inflation, which excludes eight volatile items, “is slightly firmer than anticipated” because of “temporary factors” and the cost of some services. Core inflation will “remain around 2 percent” through 2013, they said, faster than their April prediction that it would be remain below 2 percent until the second quarter of next year.
Slower 2011 Growth

Economic growth this year will be 2.8 percent, the bank said, less than its April forecast of 2.9 percent. While household spending will be stronger than previously forecast, exports will be weaker, the bank said. The forecasts for 2.6 percent growth in 2012 and 2.1 percent in 2013 were unchanged.

The bank also said that its outlook “assumes that authorities are able to contain the ongoing European sovereign debt crisis, although there are clear risks around this outcome.”

“The bank has been very straightforward, they are going to raise rates,” said Andrew Gretzinger, part of a team that manages C$17 billion in assets for Manulife Asset Management in Toronto. “With all the concerns out there with Greece, the European Union and the U.S. debt ceiling issue, that’s creating a drag.”

Gretzinger, the most accurate forecaster of Canadian data for Bloomberg News surveys in 2009 and 2010, said the rate increase will come late this year or next year if the global risks worsen.
Persistent Dollar Strength

Policy makers also said that growth in the U.S., which buys three-quarters of Canada’s exports, has been weaker than expected and the “persistent” strength in the Canadian dollar is a drag on exports.

"We expect to see continued gradual economic recovery as we've seen for much of the past year," restaurant chain Tim Hortons Inc. Chief Financial Officer Cynthia Devine said on a June 7 conference call. She also said that high gasoline prices and commodity costs represent a "wild card" for the company.

Carney will hold a press conference at 11:15 a.m. New York time tomorrow after the bank publishes its Monetary Policy Report, a quarterly economic forecast paper.

To contact the reporter on this story: Greg Quinn in Ottawa at gquinn1@bloomberg.net

To contact the editors responsible for this story: Chris Wellisz at cwellisz@bloomberg.net; David Scanlan at dscanlan@bloomberg.net

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: BOSSES WANT VAT SLASHED TO 15%

Title: BOSSES WANT VAT SLASHED TO 15%

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 06:16 PM (GMT)

BOSSES WANT VAT SLASHED TO 15%

Tuesday July 19 2011 by Dana Gloger, Consumer Affairs Editor
http://www.express.co.uk/posts/view/259752...-slashed-to-15-

VAT in tourism and construction must be slashed by at least five per cent to kickstart Britain's struggling economy, a report warned yesterday.

The leaders of the nation's small businesses – which make up 99 per cent of all firms in the UK – lobbied ministers after it emerged that business confidence has tumbled in the three months to June.

If VAT is not cut to 15 per cent in these key sectors, Britain's recovery will falter, said the Federation of Small Businesses.

Hard-pressed consumers are simply not spending as much when almost all purchases carry 20 per cent VAT.

The construction and tourism sectors in particular are suffering, as are car retailers.

The federation, which represents firms typically employing fewer than 49 staff, says such VAT cuts would help boost consumer spending and help to create new jobs.

Greater spending could make up for lost revenue to the Treasury. John Walker, chairman of the FSB, said: "The economy is still in a fragile state and these figures show the Government's growth strategy is just not working.

These figures show the Government's growth strategy is just not working.

"In an economy characterised by high unemployment and muted demand, more needs to be done to encourage businesses to take on staff and grow their business.

“We now need the Government’s actions to match its rhetoric, and it must finally deliver on action in its growth strategy.”

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Ireland thrown interest rate crumbs of comfort by Title: Ireland thrown interest rate crumbs of comfort by Description: EU

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 05:41 PM (GMT)

Ireland thrown interest rate crumbs of comfort by EU

Olli Rehn has given his strongest backing yet to an interest rate cut and believes Ireland should be rewarded for its good behaviour

http://www.guardian.co.uk/business/ireland...est-rate-cut-eu

Europe is for turning after all.

As Angela Merkel calls on banks, bond-holders and insurance companies to share the burden of Greek debt, the EU finally concedes that Ireland is behaving itself and has thrown it a few financial crumbs.

Economics commissioner Olli Rehn has given his strongest backing yet to an interest rate cut and believes Ireland should be rewarded for its good behaviour an interest rate cut on Ireland's bailout loans ahead of an emergency eurozone summit on Thursday.

"Ireland provides hard evidence that the EU-IMF conditional financial support approach is working," Rehn told the Sunday Business Post.

"The efforts should be encouraged by lengthening the maturities of the loans and lowering the interest rates," the EU's economic and monetary affairs commissioner said.

Rehn has, up to now, been a strong opponent of any changes to the deal struck in a hurry last November with the IMF/EU, believing the tough conditions would act as a warning to other countries considering defaulting on debt.

Irish politicians have branded the bailout rate "punitive" and "excessive" as it is higher than the rate charged to Greece.

The €85bn (£74bn) bailout package agreed last November is made up of a series of loans from the IMF, two EU funds charged at an average of 5.8% and bilateral loans from the UK, Sweden and Denmark. The UK's direct aid is second most expensive, charged at an interest rate of 5.9%.

But earlier this month, the European Commission issued a clarification on the interest rates revealing the last draw down made by Ireland in May, was charged at 6.4%. Although the two European funds are borrowing the money at about 3% they are charging a margin of just under 3% to Ireland for the loans.

The Irish government had all but given up any hope of achieving the interest cut, going as far as to say it would only save in the region of €200m a year, a relatively minor amount.

Finance minister Michael Noonan showed his exasperation with Europe when he pronounced that the IMF/EU would make a €9bn profit out of Ireland's crisis.

Noonan has been campaigning for a interest rate cut for almost six months now so any concession must be read as a reward for good behaviour. Nothing more.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Travelodge apologises for double-charging

Title: Travelodge apologises for double-charging Description: customers

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 05:40 PM (GMT)

Travelodge apologises for double-charging customers

Thousand of Travelodge customers find extra payments on their bank statements, as company issues guarantee that banking details were not compromised

guardian.co.uk, Tuesday 19 July 2011 15.44 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/money/2011/jul/1...rging-customers

Budget hotel group Travelodge has apologised after thousands of customers were double-charged for room bookings, and has promised to refund any bank charges incurred as a result of the error.

It is the second glitch to affect Travelodge customers in less than a month. In late June it emerged the hotel chain was investigating an apparent hacking attack on its database after some customers received spam emails to the address they had used to register. However, a spokeswoman said the latest incident was not connected to the data breach.

An undisclosed number of customers who booked rooms on 9 June – the first day of an online sale – have learned in the past few days that, due to an error, they were charged twice for a room booking.

In an email sent at the weekend to those affected, the company said that on their next bank statement they would notice an additional charge and a refund for a room booking made on that date.

It added: "Unfortunately, this is due to a genuine mistake by our payment processing company, the Logic Group, who sent a wrong file for payment which resulted in a small number of customers being charged twice … As soon as the Logic Group brought this matter to our attention, we immediately authorised all payments to be refunded.

"We have been informed by our bank that most of our customers affected by this incident will receive their full refund today. However, for some customers it may take up to 48 hours due to their banks' clearing procedures. We sincerely apologise for any inconvenience."

Travelodge operates more than 460 hotels across the UK, Ireland and Spain. A spokeswoman told the Guardian that the incident affected only part of one day's trading.

Pressed on how many people were affected, she said: "A couple of thousand." She added: "We did notify all the customers. If anyone has incurred charges as a result of this, we will happily refund them."

The Logic Group was unavailable for comment.

Some of those hit by the error took to web forums on sites such as MoneySavingExpert.com to vent their anger. One said: "Only just got the blanket email – am not impressed. That should have been sent first thing on Thursday morning when this happened, would have saved me the hassle of emails and phone calls to Travelodge and my bank trying to find out wtf was going on. I have written back with a complaint. I suggest everyone takes this up with the relevant regulating body …"

On 23 June, Travelodge chief executive Guy Parsons wrote to customers to say it was investigating a data breach. He said a "small number" of people may have received a spam email via the email address they had registered with the company.

He added that the company was carrying out a comprehensive investigation into what had happened, and he reassured customers that "no financial information [such as credit card details] has been compromised".

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 'Ending wars best resolution to US debt'

Title: 'Ending wars best resolution to US debt'

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 03:53 AM (GMT)

'Ending wars best resolution to US debt'

Mon Jul 18, 2011 4:7PM
http://www.presstv.ir/detail/189656.html

With an August 2nd deadline for raising the debt limit nearing, a new survey shows most people believe the best way to resolve the US debt crisis is 'to end wars in Afghanistan, Iraq and Libya.'

About 80.5 percent of the respondents to a Press TV poll believe “ending war in Afghanistan, Iraq and Libya and reducing military spending” is the best way for the US to reduce its 14-trillion-dollar debt.

A total of eight percent said the best resolution was for the US to default on its debt, and 2.9 percent of the respondents believe Washington could get loans from foreign banks or governments to bailout its economy.

The US officially hit its 14.3-trillion-dollar debt ceiling on May 16, up from 10.6-trillion-dollar when Barack Obama took office in 2009.

The White House and Congress have to meet an August 2 deadline to decide on federal spending cuts and increasing the borrowing limit so that the US will not default.

President Obama has warned if Congress does not submit its approval to raise the debt ceiling by the August 2 deadline, some employees' and specially the retirees' income will be put at risk.

The US Treasury has announced that it will exhaust its borrowing capacity by August 2, which means that it will run out of funds to timely repay all its debts.

Treasury officials have also warned that failure to seal a deal by the August deadline could spook investors, causing US interest rates to surge, stock prices to plummet and putting the US at risk of another recession.

The US is currently involved in four wars in Afghanistan, Iraq, and Libya -- alongside coalition forces -- as well as in Somalia in the form of drone attacks against al-Shabab militants.

According to the research project "Costs of War" by Brown University's Watson Institute for International Studies, the latest objective estimate for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan is between USD 3.7 trillion and USD 4.4 trillion.

The respected Nobel Prize-winning economist Joseph Stiglitz and Harvard Professor Linda Bilmes wrote a book in 2008 and calculated that the combined cost of the Iraq and Afghanistan wars would be between USD 5 and USD 7 trillion.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: "Business As Usual Is Bankrupting This Nation!"

Title: "Business As Usual Is Bankrupting This Nation!"
Description: Sen Ron Johnson [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 03:36 AM (GMT)

"Business As Usual Is Bankrupting This Nation!" Sen Ron Johnson

http://revolutionarypolitics.tv/video/view...?video_id=15746

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Government-funded electric car company folds; more

Title: Government-funded electric car company folds; more Description: than $500,000 in taxpayer funds lost

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 03:36 AM (GMT)

Government-funded electric car company folds; more than $500,000 in taxpayer funds lost

Product of Green Vehicles

Madison Ruppert, Contributing Writer
Monday, July 18, 2011
http://www.activistpost.com/2011/07/govern...ar-company.html

The State of California is completely overwhelmed by debt; roughly $377 billion in debt to be specific. To make matters worse, the City of Salinas and their residents are now going to have to eat over half of a million dollars in lost taxpayer dollars. Mike Ryan, President and Co-Founder of the now-defunct Green Vehicles company just added insult to injury by breaking the news to city officials via e-mail.

This represents something far too common in today's world of bloated, incompetent government: funding of non-viable or unreliable projects with taxpayer money with no guarantees.

Green Vehicles received two loans from the government of Salinas since 2009, one for $300,000 and an additional $240,000 loan after the corporation began showing their hand as a failure.

In situations like these, the people of Salinas who are having their hard-earned money squandered by bureaucrats should be able to dictate the terms and approval of a loan. Perhaps if the local government held a town hall and/or a vote they wouldn't be struggling to get a measly half of the lost funds returned.

Ineffective government spending has become the norm, with Federally-funded public schooling being a perfect example of a giant money sink that bears little to no fruit.

Taxpayers should not be allowing local governments to engage in the same ill-advised practices.

The fact is that when government gets involved in an enterprise that should be in the realm of the private free market, it rarely benefits the people.

Another example of the inept and corrupt government spending culture that comes to mind is the United States Postal Service. After hundreds of years in government subsidies and a former monopoly, they continue to fall far short of the standards set by private businesses like FedEx, UPS, DHL, etc.

In 2009 the USPS managed to lose $3.8 billion while even under extreme economic hardship FedEx was able to post $98 million in profits during 2009.

If someone approached me looking for a loan after proving themselves to be completely incapable of following through, I would not hesitate to tell them that it will never happen.

Why are our supposed representatives in government any different? What about their position gives them the impression that the money either is not real or it does not matter?

With record debt, why are we allowing governments either local or federal to invest in anything without the consent of the people? If we continue to have our country signed on to more debt, the already gargantuan public debt and annual deficit will only continue to grow.

Regardless of what the financial terrorists at the IMF or the private Federal Reserve babble about, the economic reality is that we cannot handle more debt, nor do we need it to begin with.

The entire climate of fear surrounding the debt ceiling issue is very similar to the one created in order to push through the 2008 banker bailouts. In reality, it is unlikely that we will default if the debt ceiling is not raised.

The people of America cannot sit back any longer and watch a clearly ineffectual monetary policy and investment strategy destroy our economy. We must demand full control over every single cent we pay into government, and maintain total authority over if, when, and where our money is spent. Without this, we will continue to see the government invest in companies that struggle from the start, then announce their failure via e-mail and watch our money go down the drain with it.

Madison. Ruppert is the Editor and Owner-Operator of the alternative news and analysis database End The Lie and has no affiliation with any NGO, political party, economic school, or other organization/cause. If you have questions, comments, or corrections feel free to contact him at admin@EndtheLie.com

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Ron Paul: "Every Time the Federal Reserve Engages Title: Ron Paul: "Every Time the Federal Reserve Engages Description: In More Quantitative Easing and Devalues

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 03:32 AM (GMT)

Monday, July 18, 2011
http://www.washingtonsblog.com/2011/07/ron...al-reserve.html

Ron Paul: "Every Time the Federal Reserve Engages In More Quantitative Easing and Devalues the Dollar, It Is Defaulting on the American People by Eroding their Purchasing Power and Inflating their Savings Away. The Dollar Has Lost Nearly 50% of Its Value Against Gold Since 2008 ... This Is a Default. Just Because It Is a Default On The People and Not The Banks and Foreign Holders of Our Debt Does Not Mean It Doesn't Count"

Powerful words from Ron Paul:

Politicians need to understand that without real change default is inevitable. In fact, default happens every day through monetary policy tricks. Every time the Federal Reserve engages in more quantitative easing and devalues the dollar, it is defaulting on the American people by eroding their purchasing power and inflating their savings away. The dollar has lost nearly 50% of its value against gold since 2008. The Fed claims inflation is 2% or less over the past few years; however economists who compile alternate data show a 9% inflation rate if calculated more traditionally. Alarmingly, the administration is talking about changing the methodology of the CPI calculation yet again to hide the damage of the government's policies. Changing the CPI will also enable the government to avoid giving seniors a COLA (cost of living adjustment) on their social security checks, and raise taxes via the hidden means of "bracket creep." This is a default. Just because it is a default on the people and not the banks and foreign holders of our debt does not mean it doesn't count.

***

Perhaps the most abhorrent bit of chicanery has been the threat that if a deal is not reached to increase the debt by August 2nd, social security checks may not go out. In reality, the Chief Actuary of Social Security confirmed last week that current Social Security tax receipts are more than enough to cover current outlays. The only reason those checks would not go out would be if the administration decided to spend those designated funds elsewhere. It is very telling that the administration would rather frighten seniors dependent on social security checks than alarm their big banking friends, who have already received $5.3 trillion in bailouts, stimulus and quantitative easing. This instance of trying to blackmail Congress ....

***

We need to stop expensive bombing campaigns against people on the other side of the globe and bring our troops home. We need to stop allowing secretive banking cartels to endlessly enslave us through monetary policy trickery. And we need to drastically rethink government's role in our lives so we can get it out of the way and get back to work.

Remember, quantitative easing doesn't help anyone but the biggest Wall Street companies (and see this, this and this).

And while "the dollar has lost nearly 50% of its value against gold since 2008", it got creamed by Federal Reserve policies before then as well. As I noted last year:

Here's a chart of the trade weighted US Dollar from 1973-2009.

And here's a bonus chart showing the decline in the dollar's purchasing power from 1913 to 2005:

Indeed, Ben Bernanke has previously admitted that inflation is a tax on the American people:

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/D4yBrxmEOkY?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/D4yBrxmEOkY?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Note: While money printing creates inflation, so does war. Paul's anti-war comments are thus relevant to the economy as well.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

24395

PLEASE MOVE OVER TO THE NEW SITE:

http://z15.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mind_III/

18 JULY 2011 .. GOLD HITS NEW HIGH OF $1604 AS SILVER RAISES TO $40.38 PER OUNCE. THE OVERT DEPRESSION IS ON, ALL READY FOR THE COMING COLLAPSE BETWEEN OCT 2011 - OCT 2012! THE LIKES OF WHICH HAS NEVER BEEN WITNESSED BEFORE WORLDWIDE, ARE YOU READY? MENTALLY? YOU SURE? GET HARDENED NOW AND PREPARE ASAP.....

THE UNHIVED MIND
This site is dedicated to the truthsayers assassinated such as William Cooper, Jim Arrabito, Alberto Rivera, Joe Vialls, Brian Downing Quig, Phil Schneider etc.

KING 'FARNESE' CARLOS
World War III
The Unhived Mind

THE KNIGHTS OF MALTA
DEUTSCHE VERTEIDIGUNGS DIENST
HOMELAND
DEPARTMENT
CARPATHIA HOSTINGS INC CYBERNAZIS

CARDINAL RATZINGER
And his Oslo Accords
UHM

C.I.A (D.V.D) PREPARE TO
TESLA ATTACK U.K
EXERCISE ORION
SEPTEMBER 2010
UHM

WTC nuclear demolition
Dimitri Khalezov

WATCH OUT MIDDLE EAST
KING JUAN CARLOS IS
IN RUSSIA 24/25 FEB

LATEST INFO

The Unhived Mind Ii->WORLD CONTROL->Knights of Malta economic Depression

Pages: (31) [1] 2 3 ... Last »

NEW TOPIC NEW POLL

Knights of Malta economic Depression

		Topic Title	Topic Starter	Replies	Views	Last Action
		Important Topics
		TODAYS STOCK MARKETS + OIL/GOLD PRICES (Pages 1 2 3 ...14)	TheUnhivedMind	204	5,385	19th July 2011 - 12:48 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Charles Blahous admits Social Security is a PONZI -Schiff Radio [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	1	149	19th February 2011 - 10:23 PM Last Post by: seekerx
		THE DAY THE DOLLAR FALLS [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	1	392	16th November 2010 - 07:04 AM Last Post by: seekerx
		Greenspan: Bankers commit FRAUD [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	152	15th November 2010 - 04:48 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		2010 CIRCUIT BREAKERS	TheUnhivedMind	4	623	27th August 2010 - 03:28 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		CNBC Guest Mentions the Presidents Working Group [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	247	11th July 2010 - 03:41 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Government protocols for Economic Collapse "The 6900 Series of Treasury Rules"	TheUnhivedMind	1	798	7th June 2010 - 11:21 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		GLOBAL ECONOMIC COLLAPSE SEPT-OCT 2008? (Pages 1 2 3 ...97)	TheUnhivedMind	1,454	53,398	28th April 2010 - 04:29 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Forum Topics
		"[We'll Have] a Never-Ending Depression	TheUnhivedMind	0	66	21st July 2011 - 04:39 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Peter Schiff: If We Raise The US Debt Limit That's Bully for Gold & Bears for the Dollar [V	TheUnhivedMind	0	21	21st July 2011 - 04:38 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Is Kodak Going Bankrupt Fast?	TheUnhivedMind	0	24	21st July 2011 - 04:31 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		EU's QE: Printing money is Europe's only way out	TheUnhivedMind	0	8	21st July 2011 - 04:31 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Jim Rogers: Fed Will Launch QE3 by Q3	TheUnhivedMind	0	13	21st July 2011 - 04:16 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Moody's: McConnell Backup Debt Plan Won't Save Rating	TheUnhivedMind	0	7	21st July 2011 - 04:16 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		State of CRISIS [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	22	21st July 2011 - 03:43 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		IMF warns the Eurozone of £400bn global 'earthquak and urges them to rescue Greece	TheUnhivedMind	0	12	21st July 2011 - 03:16 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		China urges U.S. to boost confidence in debt, dlr	TheUnhivedMind	0	12	21st July 2011 - 03:00 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		A Trillion of revenue is on the plate	TheUnhivedMind	0	8	21st July 2011 - 03:00 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Ron Paul: "We Will Default Because The Debt Is Unsustainable [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	21st July 2011 - 02:58 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Fed Preparing For US Default Says Plosser	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	21st July 2011 - 02:44 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		$ Is Over. (If you want it.)	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	21st July 2011 - 02:41 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Economic D-Day for the Euro 21Jul11	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	21st July 2011 - 02:39 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Crisis And Collapse Unfortunate but Inevitable	TheUnhivedMind	0	9	21st July 2011 - 02:33 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		A fate worse than debt ceiling	TheUnhivedMind	0	13	21st July 2011 - 01:35 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Ratings agencies running the show in Ireland and Europe	TheUnhivedMind	0	8	21st July 2011 - 01:30 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Wall Street paralysed by US debt talks	TheUnhivedMind	0	7	21st July 2011 - 01:28 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Eurozone has liquidity - and that should buy us some time [DOWN WITH THE EURO]	TheUnhivedMind	0	6	21st July 2011 - 01:28 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Eurozone leaders set for crunch debt summit	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	21st July 2011 - 12:46 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Interest rate rise unlikely in near term, says Bank	TheUnhivedMind	0	9	21st July 2011 - 12:41 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		UK bank ring-fencing plans 'unclear'	TheUnhivedMind	0	6	21st July 2011 - 12:37 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Number of Scottish people going bust rises by 25% [SOUND LIKE A RECOVERY TO YOU? HAHAHA]	TheUnhivedMind	0	9	21st July 2011 - 12:33 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Obama Open to Short-Term Debt Increase	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	21st July 2011 - 12:33 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		EU Said to Weigh Bailout Fund Use for Emergency Credit to Thwart Contagion	TheUnhivedMind	0	6	21st July 2011 - 12:31 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Papandreou Sees Make-or-Break Time in Debt Crisis on Eve of Europe Summit	TheUnhivedMind	0	5	21st July 2011 - 12:30 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Moody's eyes rating cuts for 5 US states	TheUnhivedMind	0	23	20th July 2011 - 04:00 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		UK on the verge of Bankruptcy !!!!!! [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	39	20th July 2011 - 03:43 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		AP: Mortgage 'robo-signing' continues in Michigan other states	TheUnhivedMind	0	7	20th July 2011 - 03:41 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Must Watch Video: Debunking The Bullshit Corporate Media Lies We Are Told About Greece	TheUnhivedMind	0	38	20th July 2011 - 03:22 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Greece Bonds Collapse, Interest Rates Surge To Near 40% As ECB Announces They Will Allo	TheUnhivedMind	0	14	20th July 2011 - 03:16 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Greek Bonds Collapse As ECB's Nowotny Announces	TheUnhivedMind	0	8	20th July 2011 - 03:15 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Sign of the Times: San Francisco Court System "Essentially Out of Business"	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	20th July 2011 - 03:13 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Marc Faber - financial Sense Newshour 15 july 2011 [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	28	20th July 2011 - 12:57 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Obama Embraces Senators' Deficit-Cutting Plan	TheUnhivedMind	0	6	20th July 2011 - 12:56 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		18 Signs That Global Financial Markets Smell Blood In The Water	TheUnhivedMind	0	18	20th July 2011 - 12:52 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		10 Signs That The American People Are Starting To Freak Out About The Condition Of the Eco	TheUnhivedMind	0	29	20th July 2011 - 12:51 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The Head Of The World's Biggest Hedge Fund Sees "E "Economic Collapse" Due To Money Printin	TheUnhivedMind	0	13	20th July 2011 - 12:42 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Too Big To Fail?: 10 Banks Own 77 Percent Of All U.S. Banking Assets	TheUnhivedMind	0	6	20th July 2011 - 12:40 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Greece debt: Merkel dampens expectations of deal	TheUnhivedMind	0	12	19th July 2011 - 06:29 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Bank of America posts record quarterly loss of $8.6nb [REMOVE FROM BANKING]	TheUnhivedMind	0	12	19th July 2011 - 06:27 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Goldman Sachs profits 'disappoint' [THEY SHOULD BE REMOVED FROM BANKING]	TheUnhivedMind	0	6	19th July 2011 - 06:27 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		IMF says eurozone must act firmly on crisis [GEITHNER AND CO SUCK EGGS]	TheUnhivedMind	0	7	19th July 2011 - 06:26 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Spain's borrowing costs increase on debt fears	TheUnhivedMind	0	7	19th July 2011 - 06:25 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		House to Act on Doomed U.S. Deficit Plan	TheUnhivedMind	0	6	19th July 2011 - 06:23 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Investors Leery Europe Can Fix Greek Crisis: IMF	TheUnhivedMind	0	6	19th July 2011 - 06:22 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Portugal's Prime Minister Pedro Passos Coelho discovers 'colossal' budget hole	TheUnhivedMind	0	9	19th July 2011 - 05:40 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		US inches closer to govt. default	TheUnhivedMind	0	33	19th July 2011 - 03:54 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		U.S. Downgraded by Egan Jones Rating Agency [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	15	19th July 2011 - 03:27 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		The Deficit Battle	TheUnhivedMind	0	7	19th July 2011 - 03:25 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Complete History Of U.S. Debt Defaults	TheUnhivedMind	0	14	19th July 2011 - 03:24 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Moody's suggests U.S. eliminates debt ceiling [PATHETIC]	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	19th July 2011 - 02:27 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		FTSE KANED FOR £24 BILLION YESTERDAY	TheUnhivedMind	0	13	19th July 2011 - 01:11 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Pressure Rises for Greek Debt Buy-Back, Swap	TheUnhivedMind	0	15	18th July 2011 - 06:37 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Geab 56 - Global systemic crisis – Last warning before the Autumn 2011 shock, when $15 t	TheUnhivedMind	0	37	18th July 2011 - 06:34 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Trillions In Commercial And Industrial Loans To Europe's Insolvent Countries [VESSELS]	TheUnhivedMind	0	8	18th July 2011 - 06:29 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Manias, implosions, and financial disasters – the unsustainable nature of our current debt	TheUnhivedMind	0	8	18th July 2011 - 06:27 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Treasury To Stop Funding Its Market Manipulation Fund To Delay US Bankruptcy	TheUnhivedMind	0	8	18th July 2011 - 06:20 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Millions of jobs 'at risk': Clegg warns of serious threat to UK from global debt crisis	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	18th July 2011 - 05:12 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Clinton backs Greek strategy on debt crisis [WITCH OF CARLOS AND MARCY]	TheUnhivedMind	0	24	18th July 2011 - 03:39 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Cuts Would Ground Ferries	TheUnhivedMind	0	19	18th July 2011 - 03:37 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Ratings agencies rattle cages in U.S., Europe [ECONOMIC WARFARE BY ASSWIPES]	TheUnhivedMind	0	9	18th July 2011 - 03:37 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Crisis And Collapse Unfortunate but Inevitable	TheUnhivedMind	0	15	18th July 2011 - 03:19 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Economic Armageddon? Is the US Economy Collapsing? [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	28	18th July 2011 - 03:12 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		FINALLY! - Ireland Issues Threat To Billionaire Bondholders	TheUnhivedMind	0	14	18th July 2011 - 03:10 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Stopping the Rot: Stress tests fail 8 Euro banks [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	6	18th July 2011 - 02:58 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		48 HOURS TO SAVE THE EURO AS GREECE DEAL STALLS [KILL THE EURO NIGHTMARE]	TheUnhivedMind	0	25	18th July 2011 - 01:25 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Debt Ceiling Debate Charade Masks Planned Entitlement cuts	TheUnhivedMind	0	20	18th July 2011 - 12:36 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Obama making a personnel announcement tomorrow	TheUnhivedMind	0	30	17th July 2011 - 11:34 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Europe Scrambles For Swiss Safety As EURCHF Plummet At Open To All Time Lows	TheUnhivedMind	0	12	17th July 2011 - 11:27 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		IMF says that huge Greek debt 'on knife edge'	TheUnhivedMind	0	13	17th July 2011 - 10:17 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Trichet Says Europe Can Surmount Debt Crisis	TheUnhivedMind	0	7	17th July 2011 - 10:16 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Governors Raising Petition Seeking Congressional Debt-Limit Deal	TheUnhivedMind	0	6	17th July 2011 - 10:15 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Ditching Euro No Option for Greeks Who Endured History of Drachma Hardship	TheUnhivedMind	0	8	17th July 2011 - 10:15 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Euro Weakens, Extending Declines on Debt Concern; Franc Advances on Safety	TheUnhivedMind	0	7	17th July 2011 - 10:14 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Wealthy Britons prepare to flee	TheUnhivedMind	0	22	17th July 2011 - 10:10 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Greece 'will not go bankrupt', vows Papandreou [DREAM ON VERMIN, ITS TAKING A HAIRCUT]	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	17th July 2011 - 10:04 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		US debt talks threaten dollar's safe haven status	TheUnhivedMind	0	6	17th July 2011 - 09:59 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		THE ONE THAT IS ON ITS WAY, THE GREATEST FINANCIAL CRISIS OF ALL TIME [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	110	17th July 2011 - 03:23 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		European stress tests: banks set for 'chaos Monday after nina fail	TheUnhivedMind	0	29	17th July 2011 - 03:23 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		MICHIGAN SENATE VOTES TO LIMIT WELFARE BENEFITS	TheUnhivedMind	0	27	17th July 2011 - 03:20 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Item Club scales back growth forecasts saying UK at 'critical juncture'	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	17th July 2011 - 02:08 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Santander, I want to invest elsewhere. Why won't you return my cash?	TheUnhivedMind	0	17	17th July 2011 - 02:06 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		US deficit: Obama in further congressional crisis talks	TheUnhivedMind	0	16	17th July 2011 - 12:42 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Panic Over Default Would Be Worse Than Lehman	TheUnhivedMind	0	15	17th July 2011 - 12:40 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Treasury To Stop Funding Its Market Manipulation F Fund To Delay US Bankruptcy	TheUnhivedMind	0	24	16th July 2011 - 02:23 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		CHART SHOCK - The Real National Debt Is $202 Tln	TheUnhivedMind	0	26	16th July 2011 - 01:41 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Washington Park police officers refuse calls, don't show up after not receiving timely	TheUnhivedMind	0	13	16th July 2011 - 01:35 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		FDIC Chairwoman: Mortgage Industry 'Didn't Think Borrowers Were Worth Helping'	TheUnhivedMind	0	13	16th July 2011 - 12:25 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		5 Spanish Banks Fail EU Test With $2.2B Shortfall	TheUnhivedMind	0	20	15th July 2011 - 10:07 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		BofA Drops Below $10, First Time in 2 Years	TheUnhivedMind	0	9	15th July 2011 - 10:07 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Obama seeks end to debt showdown	TheUnhivedMind	1	12	15th July 2011 - 10:06 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

Showing 100 of 3071 topics sorted by last post date in descending order from the beginning Go!

Pages: (31) [1] 2 3 ... Last »

NEW TOPIC NEW POLL

Open Topic (new replies)

Open Topic (no new replies)

Hot Topic (new replies)

Hot Topic (no new replies)

Poll (new votes)

Poll (no new votes)

Locked Topic

Moved Topic

Search this forum: Enter Keywords Go

- Knights of Malta economic Depression Go

Mark this forum as read

Hosted for free by InvisionFree (Terms of Use: Updated 2/10/2010) | Powered by Invision Power Board v1.3 Final © 2003 IPS, Inc.
Page creation time: 0.0663 seconds | Archive

The Orsini Skin by Bunthius Zeta Board mods

0

View Full Version: Knights of Malta economic Depression

51. IMF says eurozone must act firmly on crisis
52. Spain's borrowing costs increase on debt fears
53. House to Act on Doomed U.S. Deficit Plan
54. Investors Leery Europe Can Fix Greek Crisis: IMF
55. Portugal's Prime Minister Pedro Passos Coelho
56. US inches closer to govt. default
57. U.S. Downgraded by Egan Jones Rating Agency [Vd]
58. The Deficit Battle
59. Complete History Of U.S. Debt Defaults
60. Moody's suggests U.S. eliminates debt ceiling
61. FTSE KANED FOR £24 BILLION YESTERDAY
62. Pressure Rises for Greek Debt Buy-Back, Swap
63. Geab 56 - Global systemic crisis – Last warning
64. Trillions In Commercial And Industrial Loans To
65. Manias, implosions, and financial disasters – the
66. Treasury To Stop Funding Its Market Manipulation
67. Millions of jobs 'at risk': Clegg warns of serious
68. Clinton backs Greek strategy on debt crisis
69. Cuts Would Ground Ferries
70. Ratings agencies rattle cages in U.S., Europe
71. Crisis And Collapse Unfortunate but Inevitable
72. Economic Armageddon? Is the US Economy Collapsing?
73. FINALLY! - Ireland Issues Threat To Billionaire
74. Stopping the Rot: Stress tests fail 8 Euro banks
75. 48 HOURS TO SAVE THE EURO AS GREECE DEAL STALLS
76. Debt Ceiling Debate Charade Masks Planned
77. Obama making a personnel announcement tomorrow
78. Europe Scrambles For Swiss Safety As EURCHF
79. IMF says that huge Greek debt 'on knife edge'
80. Trichet Says Europe Can Surmount Debt Crisis

81. Governors Raising Petition Seeking Congressional
82. Ditching Euro No Option for Greeks Who Endured
83. Euro Weakens, Extending Declines on Debt Concern;
84. Wealthy Britons prepare to flee
85. Greece 'will not go bankrupt', vows Papandreou
86. US debt talks threaten dollar's safe haven status
87. THE ONE THAT IS ON ITS WAY, THE GREATEST FINANCIAL
88. European stress tests: banks set for 'chaos Monday
89. MICHIGAN SENATE VOTES TO LIMIT WELFARE BENEFITS
90. Item Club scales back growth forecasts saying UK
91. Santander, I want to invest elsewhere. Why won't
92. US deficit: Obama in further congressional crisis
93. Panic Over Default Would Be Worse Than Lehman
94. Treasury To Stop Funding Its Market Manipulation F
95. CHART SHOCK - The Real National Debt Is $202 Tln
96. Washington Park police officers refuse calls,
97. FDIC Chairwoman: Mortgage Industry ‘Didn’t Think
98. 5 Spanish Banks Fail EU Test With $2.2B Shortfall
99. BofA Drops Below $10, First Time in 2 Years
100. Obama seeks end to debt showdown

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta economic Depression

101. Eight banks fail EU stress test with 16 in danger
102. Top German economic institute says eurozone
103. ITALIAN DEBT CRISIS SPELLS ENDGAME FOR THE EURO, A
104. IMF REPORT SHOWS IRELAND IS SINKING INTO DEBT LIKE
105. Return of the Stop-Go Economy
106. CDS Fears behind Greece Default Shenanigans
107. The Mob Howls for More Money!
108. What the Democrats Want from the Debt Ceiling
109. Preparing for a "Greater" Great Depression
110. The Consequences of Debt Ceiling Failure
111. Italy Is Too Big To Bail, Even For France And
112. Why Banks Aren't Lending: The Silent Liquidity
113. If The U.S. Government Loses Its AAA Rating It
114. Russian steel company to get $730 million loan
115. Fitch Downgrades Greece on Lack of Funding Program
116. Ireland's Bonds Downgraded to Junk
117. Greece seeking new bailout deal by late August,
118. Debt crisis threatens Italy, one of euro zone's
119. China urges US to protect investors
120. US debt default would trigger global 'crisis':
121. The Money Changers Last Hurrah
122. "Our Whole Financial System Is An Illusion"
123. Moody's Will Cut 7,000 Top-Rated Munis If U.S.
124. Sovereign Debt Blows Big Holes in Big Banks
125. Quantitative Easing Rounds 1 and 2 Hurt the Econom
126. Britain to suffer 50 years of Austerity
127. Mike Ruppert - We Have Until July at Latest [Vd]
128. House to Vote on $2.4 Trillion Debt Increase, Cuts
129. The last time the US defaulted
130. US debt standoff threatens to turn crisis into

131. LSE offers service to trade UK gilts
132. EU bank stress test results due
133. S&P says it may downgrade the US's triple-A debt
134. Italy's government bond yields hit record high
135. German bank Helaba 'to pull out of stress tests'
136. Italian Senate passes austerity package
137. Reinhart and Rogoff: The Economy Can't Grow
138. Democrats May Add Spending Cuts to McConnell Plan
139. European Bank Stress Tests Compromised by Greek
140. Retail Sales in U.S. Stagnate as Rising Unemployme
141. Bernanke: No Plans Now for Bond Purchases
142. Bernanke Says Failure to Raise Debt Limit Would Be
143. German banks 'in crisis denial'
144. Clarke and Dawe - The Greek Economy [Vd]
145. President Obama abruptly walks out of talks
146. IMF: Greece needs new bailout package
147. Richard Wolff: US is in serious trouble [Vd]
148. PIIGS, Presstitutes And The Global Meltdown
149. Moody's to review US triple-A debt rating
150. A Run on the United States Government

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta economic Depression

151. Gloves Come Off In Debt Ceiling Fight
152. A brave new banking system – while public is told
153. John Williams Exclusive - US Dollar Selling &
154. Gerald Celente - Expect Bank Holiday & Economic
155. US Federal Reserve faces split if economy fails to 156. Portugal Calls EU To Take 'Robust' Steps To
157. George Soros Blames The Euro Crisis Largely On
158. IMF urges Italy to enforce spending cuts
159. Moody's cuts Irish debt rating to junk status
160. Dollar Weakens as Bernanke Says the Fed Will
161. Barroso slams 'junking' of Ireland
162. UK may be hit by new Irish bailout after its credi
163. UK debt set to pass 100pc of GDP, says watchdog
164. Fitch downgrades Greece to CCC
165. Age of austerity to continue for DECADES, warns
166. Italy’s borrowing costs soar
167. Fed Officials Divided on Further Stimulus
168. CIA: U.S. finances at bottom of planet
169. One by one, bars get tapped out
170. Irish bonds cut to junk status on bail-out worries
171. "Dr. Doom" Marc Faber: Here's How the US Debt
172. Dennis Kucinich "Social Security Will be Able To 173. U.S. Debt Ceiling Talks “A Sham”- Jim Rogers on
174. CHART: U.S. Debt To GDP 1940-2015
175. Time Lapse Video - Food Stamps Are The New Normal
176. Greece set to default on massive debt burden,
177. Race to safe havens as debt crisis deepens
178. German 'Nein' leaves Italy and Spain in turmoil
179. Perfect Storm for Financial and Civil Collapse
180. The Lee-Toomey-Paul Cut, Cap and Balance Act Press

181. Obscure clause may help US avert default
182. TOTAL EURO CHAOS TONIGHT
183. Ratio Of Insider Selling To Buying: 3,700 To 1
184. EU Revives Buyback Idea as Crisis Hits Italy
185. Putin says U.S. monetary policy "hooliganism"
186. Obama "cannot guarantee" social security checks
187. Britain's total debt to top £2,000,000,000,000
188. Rome jittery over 'Athens Syndrome'
189. "We Cannot Balance Our Budget Instantly Without 190. Top Retail Analyst: "I Think What's Going On ...
191. Watch The U.S. Debt Clock Tick Above $14.5 Trillio
192. There's No Recovery Because the Government Made it
193. Mounting Public Debt. The Looting of Federal
194. Michael Hudson: Greece a Dress Rehearsal for U.S.
195. The size of Greece's debt [Vd]
196. Peter Schiff: US debt ceiling talks in deadlock
197. Ron Holland on the Inevitability of Societal Chaos
198. Economic Collapse a Mathematical Certainty - Top 5
199. What An American Bank Run Would Look Like
200. Italy and Spain must pray for a miracle

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta economic Depression

201. Economy faces a jolt as benefit checks run out
202. Ron Paul: No Attempt To Say Maybe We've Overextene
203. Renault sees global car sales hit
204. US in push for China audit deal amid stock scandal
205. US budget: No new deal in White House talks
206. Italian, Spanish, Portuguese Bonds Slump
207. Greece Needs ‘Endgame’ From EU to Enact Deficit
208. Fed on Hold Longest Since 1940s
209. TOP EU CHIEFS MEET AS ITALY FACES BAILOUT CRISIS
210. U.K. TO BROKE TO COLLECT/CLEAN DUSTBINS AS IT AXES
211. A third of finance directors believes UK economy
212. Greece faces "summer of uncertainty"
213. Bank stress tests won't restore market confidence,
214. From Motown to Ghost town: How the once mighty 215. Record one in six Americans now on food stamps as
216. Watching A Flatlining Economy
217. 'No delaying' deadline to lift US debt ceiling
218. U.K. MSM ADMITS BRITISH DEPRESSION
219. Top EU officals meet over Italy debt contagion
220. US Taxpayers Just Paid $780 Million To Fund The
221. 3 Failed Banks In Colorado and Illinois Cost FDIC
222. 'Horrific' Jobs Report Renews Fears of Double-Dip
223. Real Unemployment Rises to 16.2% in June
224. Should Ireland Copy Iceland?
225. Defaulting rescued Argentina. It could work for 226. Construction slump may force Britain back into
227. Borg: EU Needs to Cut Greece’s Debt Service Costs
228. Countrywide Wages Victorious Tranche Warfare
229. Sen. Ron Johnson Says U.S. Can Avoid Default If
230. European Central Bank battles defaults in Greece,

231. Greece to get next part of IMF financial rescue
232. Fears Italian banks may fail stress tests
233. US debt limit: Obama says sides are 'still far
234. Italy: Austerity Measure Withdrawn
235. Currency Wars Not Over, Says Brazil
236. A Whole Bunch Of Econ Data Just Missed Expectation
237. Homeform's administrators say 453 have lost
238. Greek talks banking chief positive for future
239. Ratings agencies criticised by European Commission
240. Obama to meet congressional leaders over debt
241. Iceland Credit Raters Miss Resurrection After
242. Greece blasts ratings agency 'madness' as Portugal
243. Ireland May Be Next to Face Junk After Portugal
244. "Who Will Default First On Their Debt Greece Or
245. Smoke and Mirrors
246. Only 13 Weeks til the Bond Markets Crash?
247. Britain's Impending Sovereign Debt Crisis
248. Is a U.S. Default Inevitable?
249. Peter Schiff: The rise of the barter economy
250. Iceland, a country that wants to punish the

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta economic Depression

3051. If Inflation Is Contained Why Are Prices Soaring?
3052. A "V" Shaped Recovery In Inflation
3053. Could a Greek Tragedy Morph into a Lehman Meltdown
3054. Greece is just the 'tip of the iceberg', Nouriel 3055. EU official: Deal on Greece aid ready in few days
3056. Greek public say they are the scapegoat 3057. [vid] Tsunami alarm: Tarpley predicts 2nd wave of 3058. [vid] Warning Greek economic crisis could spread 3059. Spain hit as Greek 'illness' spreads over Europe
3060. Greek's debt troubles raise contagion worries
3061. 20 things you'll need to survive economic collapse
3062. Police And Prosecutors Offices Stealing Assets
3063. Spain Calls May 10 Summit Over Greece
3064. Greece crisis: Europe 'must act fast' ex-minister 3065. Macro – Europe: The Titanic is SINKING
3066. [vid] Marc Faber: Time to Kick Greece Out of EU
3067. Greece Bondholders May Lose $265 Billion in Defaul
3068. GREEK DEBT CUT TO JUNK, PORTUGAL DOWNGRADED
3069. SPAIN DEBT DOWNGRADED BY STANDARD & POOR'S
3070. Greece crisis: Fears grow that it could spread

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: TODAYS STOCK MARKETS + OIL/GOLD PRICES

Title: TODAYS STOCK MARKETS + OIL/GOLD PRICES

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 12:48 AM (GMT)

ARCHIVE
http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...showtopic=10592

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 12:48 AM (GMT)

Thu 11 Sep 2008

FTSE 100 5318.40down -47.80 -0.89%
Dax 6178.90down -31.42 -0.51%
Cac 40 4249.07down -34.59 -0.81%
Dow Jones 11433.71up 164.79 1.46%
Nasdaq 2258.22up 29.52 1.32%
BBC Global 30 5584.99up 14.90 0.27%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 25,552.49 -70.42
NIKKEI 225 12,102.50 -244.13
HANG SENG INDEX 19,388.72 -611.06
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,814.30 -91.20

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 98.24 2.36 2.3
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 101.89 1.62 1.6
Forex Gold Index $/oz 740.75 35.00 4.5
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 134.35 2.55 1.9
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 6865.00 37.50 0.5

£$ - 1.7564

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 12:49 AM (GMT)

Fri 12 Sept 2008

FTSE 100 5416.70up 98.30 1.85%
Dax 6234.89up 55.99 0.91%
Cac 40 4332.66up 83.59 1.97%
Dow Jones 11421.99down -11.72 -0.10%
Nasdaq 2261.27up 3.05 0.14%
BBC Global 30 5541.78down -43.21 -0.77%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 25,588.41 35.92
NIKKEI 225 12,214.76 112.26
HANG SENG INDEX 19,352.90 -35.82
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,903.80 89.50

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 97.91 0.33 0.3
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 101.74 0.15 0.1
Forex Gold Index $/oz 750.25 9.50 1.3
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 135.10 0.40 0.3
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 7157.50 292.50 4.3

£$ - 1.7939

craig-oxley - September 16, 2008 10:12 PM (GMT)

Tue Sept 16 2008

FTSE 100 5025.60down -178.60 -3.43%
Dax 5965.17down -98.99 -1.63%
Cac 40 4087.40down -81.57 -1.96%
Dow Jones 11059.02up 141.51 1.30%
Nasdaq 2207.90up 27.99 1.28%
BBC Global 30 5344.80up 22.47 0.42%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 24,618.15 -970.26
NIKKEI 225 11,609.72 -605.04
HANG SENG INDEX 18,300.61 -1,052.29
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,750.80 -66.90

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 88.80 3.15 3.4
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 92.92 3.23 3.4
Forex Gold Index $/oz 779.50 4.50 0.6
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 129.85 4.25 3.1
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 6855.00 20.00 0.3

£ - 1.7801

craig-oxley - September 17, 2008 09:25 PM (GMT)

Wed 17 Sept 2008

FTSE 100 4912.40down -113.20 -2.25%
Dax 5860.98down -104.19 -1.75%
Cac 40 4000.11down -87.29 -2.14%
Dow Jones 10609.66down -449.36 -4.06%
Nasdaq 2098.85down -109.05 -4.94%
BBC Global 30 5152.69down -192.11 -3.59%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 23,456.84 -1,161.31
NIKKEI 225 11,749.79 140.07
HANG SENG INDEX 17,637.19 -663.42
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,722.20 -28.60

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 89.94 1.14 1.3
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 92.92 0.00 0.0
Forex Gold Index $/oz 779.50 0.00 0.0
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 129.45 0.55 0.4
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 6829.50 25.50 0.4

£$ - 1.8133

craig-oxley - September 18, 2008 11:42 PM (GMT)

Thu 18 sep 2008

FTSE 100 4880.00down -32.40 -0.66%
Dax 5863.42up 2.44 0.04%
Cac 40 3957.86down -42.25 -1.06%
Dow Jones 11019.69up 410.03 3.86%
Nasdaq 2199.10up 100.25 4.78%
BBC Global 30 5176.49no movement
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 24,577.90 1,121.06
NIKKEI 225 11,489.30 -260.49
HANG SENG INDEX 17,632.46 -4.73
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,607.30 -114.90

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 95.05 0.00 0.0

West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 99.89 0.00 0.0
Forex Gold Index $/oz 863.00 50.00 6.2
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 130.60 0.00 0.0
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 6842.50 0.00 0.0

£$ - 1.8159

craig-oxley - September 22, 2008 11:39 PM (GMT)

Mon 22 Sept 2008

FTSE 100 5236.26down -75.04 -1.41%
Dax 6107.75down -81.78 -1.32%
Cac 40 4223.51down -101.36 -2.34%
Dow Jones 11015.69down -372.75 -3.27%
Nasdaq 2178.98down -94.92 -4.17%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 25,131.91 -569.12
NIKKEI 225 12,090.59 169.73
HANG SENG INDEX 19,632.20 304.47
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 5,020.50 216.40

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 101.24 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 107.22 0.00 0.0
Forex Gold Index $/oz 889.00 20.00 2.3
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 137.00 3.50 2.6
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 7222.50 0.00 0.0

£$ - 1.8568

craig-oxley - September 23, 2008 09:31 PM (GMT)

Tue 23 Sept 2008

FTSE 100 5136.12down -100.14 -1.91%
Dax 6068.53down -39.22 -0.64%
Cac 40 4139.82down -83.69 -1.98%
Dow Jones 10854.17down -161.52 -1.47%
Nasdaq 2153.33down -25.65 -1.18%
BBC Global 30 5226.82down -96.02 -1.80%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 24,969.17 -162.74
NIKKEI 225 12,090.59 169.73 1.42%

HANG SENG INDEX 18,872.85 -759.35
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,923.50 -97.00

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 103.70 2.46 2.4
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 107.80 0.58 0.5
Forex Gold Index $/oz 899.00 10.00 1.1
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 135.80 1.70 1.2
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 7070.00 152.50 2.1

£$ - 1.8513

craig-oxley - September 24, 2008 08:48 PM (GMT)

Wed 24 Sept 2008

FTSE 100 5095.57down -40.55 -0.79%
Dax 6052.87down -15.66 -0.26%
Cac 40 4114.54down -25.28 -0.61%
Dow Jones 10825.17down -29.00 -0.27%
Nasdaq 2155.68up 2.35 0.11%
BBC Global 30 5225.92down -0.90 -0.02%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 24,944.25 -24.92
NIKKEI 225 12,115.03 24.44
HANG SENG INDEX 18,961.99 89.14
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,981.90 58.40

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 102.89 0.81 0.8
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 108.35 0.55 0.5
Forex Gold Index $/oz 896.00 3.00 0.3
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 135.05 0.75 0.6
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 6910.00 160.00 2.3

£$ - 1.8466

craig-oxley - September 26, 2008 01:03 AM (GMT)

Thu 25 Sep 2008

FTSE 100 5197.02up 101.45 1.99%
Dax 6173.03up 120.16 1.99%
Cac 40 4226.81up 112.27 2.73%
Dow Jones 11022.06up 196.89 1.82%

Nasdaq 2186.57up 30.89 1.43%
BBC Global 30 5333.96up 14.21 0.27%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 25,645.50 701.25
NIKKEI 225 12,027.22 20.69
HANG SENG INDEX 18,934.43 -27.56
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,957.30 29.90

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 98.80 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 103.88 4.47 4.1
Forex Gold Index $/oz 888.50 7.50 0.8
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 137.60 1.70 1.3
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 6917.50 0.00 0.0

£$ - 1.8430

craig-oxley - September 26, 2008 10:33 PM (GMT)

Fri Sept 26 2008

FTSE 100 5088.47down -108.55 -2.09%
Dax 6063.50down -109.53 -1.77%
Cac 40 4163.38down -63.43 -1.50%
Dow Jones 11143.13up 121.07 1.10%
Nasdaq 2183.34down -3.23 -0.15%
BBC Global 30 5324.96up 5.21 0.10%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 25,593.77 -51.73
NIKKEI 225 11,893.16 -113.37
HANG SENG INDEX 18,682.09 -252.34
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,904.80 -22.60

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 100.29 1.49 1.5
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 105.22 1.34 1.3
Forex Gold Index $/oz 902.00 13.50 1.5
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 134.40 3.15 2.3
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 6792.50 125.00 1.8

£ - 1.8430

craig-oxley - September 29, 2008 10:25 PM (GMT)

Mon 29 Sept 2008

CRASH OUT

DOW JONES INDUS. AVG 10,365.45 -777.68 -6.98% 16:30
S&P 500 INDEX 1,106.42 -106.85 -8.81% 09/29
NASDAQ COMPOSITE INDEX 1,983.73 -199.61 -9.14% 17:16
S&P/TSX COMPOSITE INDEX 11,285.07 -840.93 -6.93% 09/29
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 23,955.67 -1,638.10 -6.40% 09/29
BRAZIL BOVESPA STOCK IDX 46,028.06 -4,754.93 -9.36% 16:18
DJ EURO STOXX 50 € Pr 3,008.19 -148.27 -4.70% 09/29
FTSE 100 INDEX 4,818.77 -269.70 -5.30% 09/29
CAC 40 INDEX 3,953.48 -209.90 -5.04% 09/29
DAX INDEX 5,807.08 -256.42 -4.23% 09/29
IBEX 35 INDEX 10,945.70 -442.20 -3.88% 09/29
S&P/MIB INDEX 25,803.00 -1,351.00 -4.98% 11:35
AEX-Index 323.55 -31.03 -8.75% 09/29
OMX STOCKHOLM 30 INDEX 774.33 -47.05 -5.73% 09/29
SWISS MARKET INDEX 6,500.13 -315.39 -4.63% 09/29
NIKKEI 225 11,743.61 -149.55 -1.26% 09/29
HANG SENG INDEX 17,880.68 -801.41 -4.29% 09/29
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,807.40 -97.40 -1.99% 09/29

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 98.49 1.80 1.8
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 103.15 2.07 2.0
Forex Gold Index $/oz 905.00 3.00 0.3
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 129.30 4.20 3.1
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 6550.00 242.50 3.6

£ - 1.8023

craig-oxley - October 5, 2008 03:51 PM (GMT)

Fri 3 Oct 2008

FTSE 100 4980.25up 109.91 2.26%
Dax 5797.03up 136.40 2.41%
Cac 40 4080.75up 117.47 2.96%
Dow Jones 10325.38down -157.47 -1.50%
Nasdaq 1947.39down -29.33 -1.48%
BBC Global 30 5210.64down -54.00 -1.03%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 22,989.50 -1,037.85
NIKKEI 225 10,938.14 -216.62
HANG SENG INDEX 17,682.40 -528.71
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,695.40 -65.70

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 91.05 3.72 3.9
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 94.38 3.86 3.9
Forex Gold Index $/oz 828.00 24.00 2.8
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 121.65 3.25 2.6
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 5935.00 7.50 0.1

£$ - 1.7751

craig-oxley - October 7, 2008 12:12 AM (GMT)

Monday 7 2008

FTSE 100 4589.19down -391.06 -7.85%
Dax 5387.01down -410.02 -7.07%
Cac 40 3711.98down -368.77 -9.04%
Dow Jones 9955.50down -369.88 -3.58%
Nasdaq 1862.96down -84.43 -4.34%
BBC Global 30 5054.94down -23.94 -0.47%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 21,749.13 -1,240.37
NIKKEI 225 10,473.09 -465.05
HANG SENG INDEX 16,803.76 -878.64
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,420.10 -120.30

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 86.75 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 90.20 0.00 0.0
Forex Gold Index $/oz 875.50 47.50 5.7
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 114.50 0.00 0.0
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 5505.00 0.00 0.0

£$ - 1.7435

craig-oxley - October 7, 2008 10:54 PM (GMT)

Tue 7 Oct 2008

FTSE 100 INDEX 4,605.22 16.03
Dax 5326.63down -60.38 -1.12%
Cac 40 3732.22up 20.24 0.55%
Dow Jones 9447.11down -508.39 -5.11%
Nasdaq 1754.88down -108.08 -5.80%
BBC Global 30 4873.87down -205.01 -4.04%

MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 20,884.74 -864.39
NIKKEI 225 10,155.90 -317.19
HANG SENG INDEX 16,803.76 -878.64
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,618.70 78.30

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 84.90 1.85 2.1
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 90.18 0.00 0.0
Forex Gold Index $/oz 876.75 1.25 0.1
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 114.00 0.35 0.3
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne n/a 0.0

£ - 1.7474

craig-oxley - October 9, 2008 11:08 PM (GMT)

Thu 9 oct 2008

FTSE 100 4313.80down -52.89 -1.21%
Dax 4887.00down -126.62 -2.53%
Cac 40 3442.70down -54.19 -1.55%
Dow Jones 8579.19down -678.91 -7.33%
Nasdaq 1645.12down -95.21 -5.47%
BBC Global 30 4585.68down -207.86 -4.34%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 20,310.20 -368.77
NIKKEI 225 9,157.49 -45.83
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,320.90 -67.20
HANG SENG INDEX 15,943.24 511.51

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 84.20 0.13 0.2
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 89.28 0.00 0.0
Forex Gold Index $/oz 883.50 20.00 2.2
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 114.50 0.15 0.1
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 5325.00 0.00 0.0

£ - 1.7084

craig-oxley - October 10, 2008 11:29 PM (GMT)

Fri 10 Oct 2008

FTSE 100 3932.06down -381.74 -8.85%

Dax 4544.31down -342.69 -7.01%
Cac 40 3176.49down -266.21 -7.73%
Dow Jones 8451.19down -128.00 -1.49%
Nasdaq 1649.51up 4.39 0.27%
BBC Global 30 4433.89down -151.79 -3.31%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 19,905.27 -404.93
NIKKEI 225 8,276.43 -881.06
HANG SENG INDEX 14,796.87 -1,146.37
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 3,960.70 -360.20

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 78.59 5.61 6.7
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 82.81 6.47 7.2
Forex Gold Index $/oz 900.50 17.00 1.9
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 113.50 1.15 1.0
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 4845.00 480.00 9.0

£$ - 1.7063

craig-oxley - October 14, 2008 12:39 AM (GMT)

Monday 13 Oct 2008

FTSE 100 4256.90up 324.84 8.26%
Dax 5062.45up 518.14 11.40%
Cac 40 3531.50up 355.01 11.18%
Dow Jones 9387.61up 936.42 11.08%
Nasdaq 1844.25up 194.74 11.81%
BBC Global 30 4757.58no movement
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 22,095.89 2,190.62 11.00%
NIKKEI 225 8,808.20 531.77 6.43%
HANG SENG INDEX 16,312.16 1,515.29 10.24%
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,428.30 247.60 5.92%

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 76.70 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 80.88 0.00 0.0
Forex Gold Index $/oz 831.50 69.00 7.7
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 118.25 2.35 2.0
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 5087.50 0.00 0.0

£ - 1.7423

craig-oxley - October 14, 2008 10:28 PM (GMT)

14 Tue Oct 2008

FTSE 100 4394.21up 137.31 3.23%
Dax 5199.19up 136.74 2.70%
Cac 40 3628.52up 97.02 2.75%
Dow Jones 9310.99down -76.62 -0.82%
Nasdaq 1779.01down -65.24 -3.54%
BBC Global 30 4856.11up 98.53 2.07%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 22,244.61 148.72
NIKKEI 225 9,447.57 1,171.14 14.15%
HANG SENG INDEX 16,832.88 520.72 3.19%
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 4,335.20 154.50

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 79.18 2.48 3.2
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 83.92 3.04 3.8
Forex Gold Index $/oz 832.50 1.00 0.1
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 118.50 1.25 1.1
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 5245.00 157.50 3.1

£ - 1.7426

craig-oxley - October 16, 2008 12:26 AM (GMT)

Wed 15 Oct 2008

FTSE 100 4079.59down -314.62 -7.16%
Dax 4861.63down -337.56 -6.49%
Cac 40 3381.07down -247.45 -6.82%
Dow Jones 8577.91down -733.08 -7.87%
Nasdaq 1628.33down -150.68 -8.47%
BBC Global 30 4563.73up 43.96 0.97%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 21,135.42 -1,109.19 -4.99%
HANG SENG INDEX 15,998.30 -834.58 -4.96%

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 79.18 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 83.92 0.00 0.0
Forex Gold Index $/oz 847.00 14.50 1.7
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 112.80 0.00 0.0
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 4975.00 0.00 0.0

£ - 1.7235

craig-oxley - October 16, 2008 11:40 PM (GMT)

Thu Oct 16 2008

FTSE 100 3861.39down -218.20 -5.35%
Dax 4622.81down -238.82 -4.91%
Cac 40 3181.00down -200.07 -5.92%
Dow Jones 8979.26up 401.35 4.68%
Nasdaq 1717.71up 89.38 5.49%
BBC Global 30 4591.29up 71.52 1.58%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 20,457.93 -677.49
NIKKEI 225 8,458.45 -1,089.02 -11.41%
HANG SENG INDEX 15,230.52 -767.78 -4.80%

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 69.68 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 74.22 0.00 0.0
Forex Gold Index $/oz 802.50 44.50 5.3
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 114.15 0.00 0.0
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 4695.00 0.00 0.0

£$ - 1.7346

craig-oxley - October 18, 2008 12:36 AM (GMT)

Fri 17th October 2008

FTSE 100 4063.01up 201.62 5.22%
Dax 4781.33up 158.52 3.43%
Cac 40 3329.92up 148.92 4.68%
Dow Jones 8852.22down -127.04 -1.41%
Nasdaq 1711.29down -6.42 -0.37%
BBC Global 30 4648.07up 56.78 1.24%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 20,312.83 -145.10 -0.71%
NIKKEI 225 8,693.82 235.37 2.78%
HANG SENG INDEX 14,554.21 -676.31 -4.44%
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 3,970.80 -42.60

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 67.07 2.61 3.7
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 71.20 3.02 4.1
Forex Gold Index $/oz 784.50 18.00 2.2
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 116.15 3.05 2.7

Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 4775.00 80.00 1.7

£ - 1.7288

craig-oxley - October 21, 2008 12:05 AM (GMT)

Mon 21st Oct 2008

FTSE 100 4282.67up 219.66 5.41%
Dax 4835.01up 53.68 1.12%
Cac 40 3448.51up 118.59 3.56%
Dow Jones 9265.43up 413.21 4.67%
Nasdaq 1770.03up 58.74 3.43%
BBC Global 30 4899.46no movement
NIKKEI 225 9,005.59 311.77 3.59% 10/20
HANG SENG INDEX 15,323.01 768.80 5.28% 10/20
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 20,786.21 473.38 2.33%

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 69.29 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 73.76 2.56 3.6
Forex Gold Index $/oz 795.00 10.50 1.3
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 114.50 0.35 0.3
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 4745.00 0.00 0.0

£ - 1.7173

craig-oxley - October 21, 2008 11:33 PM (GMT)

Tue 21 Oct 2008

FTSE 100 4229.73down -52.94 -1.24%
Dax 4784.41down -50.60 -1.05%
Cac 40 3475.40up 26.89 0.78%
Dow Jones 9033.66down -231.77 -2.50%
Nasdaq 1696.68down -73.35 -4.14%
BBC Global 30 4868.77down -30.69 -0.63%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 20,203.27 -582.94 -2.80%
NIKKEI 225 9,306.25 300.66 3.34%
HANG SENG INDEX 15,041.17 -281.84 -1.84%

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 69.43 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 73.76 0.14 0.2
Forex Gold Index $/oz 772.00 23.00 2.9

Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 115.40 0.20 0.2
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 4545.00 200.00 4.2

£$ - 1.6651

craig-oxley - October 22, 2008 11:16 PM (GMT)

Wed 22nd Oct 2008

FTSE 100 4040.89down -188.84 -4.46%
Dax 4571.07down -213.34 -4.46%
Cac 40 3298.18down -177.22 -5.10%
Dow Jones 8519.21down -514.45 -5.69%
Nasdaq 1615.75down -80.93 -4.77%
BBC Global 30 4710.95down -157.82 -3.24%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 18,787.34 -1,415.93 -7.01%
NIKKEI 225 8,674.69 -631.56 -6.79%
HANG SENG INDEX 14,266.60 -774.57 -5.15%

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 64.56 4.87 7.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 69.30 4.32 5.9
Forex Gold Index $/oz 744.00 28.00 3.6
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 112.20 1.90 1.7
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 4205.00 340.00 7.5

£$ - 1.6188

GERMANY'S MARKETS KANED & FINISHED @

DAX DOWN -213 (4.5%)
TECDAX DOWN -30.56 (5.4%)
MDAX -242.60 (4.34%)

U.K'S FTSE 100 KANED & FINISHED @

FTSE 100 -88.84 (4.4%)

BANKS BATTERED AGAIN

Barclays 224.50 -18.00 7.42%
HBOS 74.70 -7.80 9.45%
HSBC Holdings 796.00 -14.00 1.73%
Lloyds TSB Group 167.50 -6.50 3.74%

Royal Bank of Scotland Group 68.30 -11.00 13.87%
Standard Chartered 946.00 -91.00 8.78%

craig-oxley - November 3, 2008 12:51 AM (GMT)

Fri 31 Oct 2008

FTSE 100 4377.34up 85.69 2.00%
Dax 4987.97up 118.67 2.44%
Cac 40 3487.07up 79.25 2.33%
Dow Jones 9325.01up 144.32 1.57%
Nasdaq 1720.95up 22.43 1.32%
BBC Global 30 5018.95
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 20,445.32 238.30 1.18%
NIKKEI 225 8,576.98 -452.78 -5.01%
HANG SENG INDEX 13,968.67 -361.18 -2.52%

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 60.21 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 64.50 0.00 0.0
Forex Gold Index $/oz 730.75 24.50 3.2
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 113.00 2.00 1.8
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 4017.50 0.00 0.0

£$ - 1.6111

craig-oxley - November 4, 2008 02:11 AM (GMT)

Mon 3 2008 Nov

FTSE 100 4443.28up 65.94 1.51%
Dax 5026.84up 38.87 0.78%
Cac 40 3527.97up 40.90 1.17%
Dow Jones 9319.83down -5.18 -0.06%
Nasdaq 1726.33up 5.38 0.31%
BBC Global 30 5164.59up 21.79 0.42%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 20,612.68 167.36 0.82%

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 64.26 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 64.50 2.55 4.1
Forex Gold Index $/oz 729.50 1.25 0.2
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 112.35 0.15 0.1
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 4092.50 0.00 0.0

£$ - 1.5803

craig-oxley - November 5, 2008 03:31 AM (GMT)

Tue 4 Oct 2008

FTSE 100 4639.50up 196.22 4.42%
Dax 5278.04up 251.20 5.00%
Cac 40 3691.09up 163.12 4.62%
Dow Jones 9625.28up 305.45 3.28%
Nasdaq 1780.12up 53.79 3.12%
BBC Global 30 5359.05up 89.88 1.71%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 21,535.27 922.59 4.48%

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 58.41 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 62.66 4.39 6.5
Forex Gold Index $/oz 741.25 0.00 0.0
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 116.70 4.65 4.1
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 4412.50 0.00 0.0

£$ - 1.5966

craig-oxley - November 6, 2008 12:49 AM (GMT)

Wed 5 Nov 2008

FTSE 100 4530.73down -108.77 -2.34%
Dax 5166.87down -111.17 -2.11%
Cac 40 3618.11down -72.98 -1.98%
Dow Jones 9139.27down -486.01 -5.05%
Nasdaq 1681.64down -98.48 -5.53%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 20,446.77 -1,088.50 -5.05%
Nikkei 225 9521.24up 406.64 4.5%

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 64.50 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 68.75 0.00 0.0
Forex Gold Index $/oz 753.75 12.50 1.7
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 116.40 0.05 0.0
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 4195.00 0.00 0.0

£$ - 1.5863

craig-oxley - November 7, 2008 12:07 AM (GMT)

Thu 6 Nov 2008

DOW JONES INDUS. AVG 8,695.79 -443.48 -4.85% 16:30
FTSE 100 INDEX 4,272.41 -258.32 -5.70% 11/06
NIKKEI 225 8,899.14 -622.10 -6.53% 11/06
HANG SENG INDEX 13,790.04 -1,050.12 -7.08% 11/06
DJ EURO STOXX 50 € Pr 2,542.04 -168.61 -6.22% 11/06
CAC 40 INDEX 3,387.25 -230.86 -6.38% 11/06
DAX INDEX 4,813.57 -353.30 -6.84% 11/06
IBEX 35 INDEX 9,133.90 -610.80 -6.27% 11/06
S&P/MIB INDEX 21,607.00 -1,151.00 -5.06% 11:35
AEX-Index 260.61 -18.83 -6.74% 11/06
OMX STOCKHOLM 30 INDEX 658.02 -44.50 -6.33% 11/06
SWISS MARKET INDEX 5,924.90 -252.25 -4.08% 11/06
S&P 500 INDEX 904.88 -47.89 -5.03% 11/06
NASDAQ COMPOSITE INDEX 1,608.70 -72.94 -4.34% 17:16
S&P/TSX COMPOSITE INDEX 9,555.41 -331.79 -3.36% 11/06
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 19,650.86 -795.91 -3.89% 11/06
BRAZIL BOVESPA STOCK IDX 36,361.91 -1,423.75 -3.77% 11/06

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 60.78 3.72 5.8
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 64.48 4.27 6.2
Forex Gold Index $/oz 754.50 0.75 0.1
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 110.55 5.90 5.1
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 3852.50 342.50 8.2

£$ - 1.5584

NOTE B.B.C UP TO THEIR TRICKERY AS USUAL YOU'LL NOTICE B.B.C TRY TO COVER UP LOSSES MANY TIMES AS THEY PROVIDE THE DATA FOR THE FTSE AS IF IT WAS UNCHANGED FROM THE DAY PREVIOUSLY BY USING BLACK. I'VE SEEN THEM DO THIS MANY TIMES. BUT WHAT DO YOU EXPECT WHEN JESUIT TRAINED MARK THOMPSON IS A DIRECTOR OF THE B.B.C? WHAT DO YOU EXPECT WHEN THE POPE'S COMMON PURPOSE AND BRITISH INTELLIGENCE CONTROL THE B.B.C? HERES THE TRICK:

GLOBAL FINANCIAL CRISIS
News, explanation and analysis - full coverage of the global turmoil

MARKET DATA - 23:58 UK

FTSE 100	4272.41
Dax	4813.57	-353.30	-6.84%
Cac 40	3387.25	-230.86	-6.38%
Dow Jones	8695.79	-443.48	-4.85%
Nasdaq	1608.70	-72.94	-4.34%
BBC Global 30	4903.68	-207.18	-4.05%

Data delayed by at least 15 minutes

craig-oxley - November 10, 2008 03:56 AM (GMT)

Fri 7 Nov 2008

FTSE 100 4364.96up 92.55 2.17%
Dax 4938.46up 124.89 2.59%
Cac 40 3469.12up 81.87 2.42%
Dow Jones 8943.81up 248.02 2.85%
Nasdaq 1647.40up 38.70 2.41%
BBC Global 30 5033.73up 5.74 0.11%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 19,865.22 214.36 1.09%
Nikkei -316

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 57.55 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 61.46 3.02 4.7
Forex Gold Index $/oz 735.25 0.00 0.0
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 112.10 1.25 1.1
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 3815.00 0.00 0.0

£$ - 1.5831

craig-oxley - November 11, 2008 02:07 AM (GMT)

10 Nov 2008 Mon

FTSE 100 4403.92up 38.96 0.89%
Dax 5025.53up 87.07 1.76%
Cac 40 3505.75up 36.63 1.06%
Dow Jones 8870.54down -73.27 -0.82%

Nasdaq 1616.74down -30.66 -1.86%
BBC Global 30 5066.10up 1.43 0.03%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 20,020.53 155.31 0.78%
Nikkei 225 9080.55

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 58.76 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 61.46 2.08 3.5
Forex Gold Index $/oz 753.00 17.75 2.4
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 112.80 1.05 0.9
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 3955.00 0.00 0.0

£ - 1.5579

craig-oxley - November 12, 2008 12:41 AM (GMT)

11 TUE NOV 2008

FTSE 100 4246.69down -157.23 -3.57%
Dax 4761.58down -263.95 -5.25%
Cac 40 3336.41down -169.34 -4.83%
Dow Jones 8693.96down -176.58 -1.99%
Nasdaq 1580.90down -35.84 -2.22%
Nikkei 222 8809.3down -271.25
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 19,795.25 -225.28 -1.13%
HANG SENG INDEX 14,040.90 -703.73 -4.77%

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 56.74 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 63.54 2.95 4.4
Forex Gold Index $/oz 733.75 19.25 2.6
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 113.35 0.25 0.2
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 3657.50 0.00 0.0

£ - 1.5402

craig-oxley - November 13, 2008 03:16 AM (GMT)

Wednesday 12 Nov 2008

DOW JONES INDUS. AVG 8,282.66 -411.30 -4.73%
S&P 500 INDEX 852.30 -46.65 -5.19%
NASDAQ COMPOSITE INDEX 1,499.21 -81.69 -5.17%
S&P/TSX COMPOSITE INDEX 8,922.57 -501.43 -5.32%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 18,804.95 -990.30 -5.00%
BRAZIL BOVESPA STOCK IDX 34,373.99 -2,887.91 -7.75%

DJ EURO STOXX 50 € Pr 2,400.74 -82.87 -3.34%
FTSE 100 INDEX 4,182.02 -64.67 -1.52%
CAC 40 INDEX 3,233.96 -102.45 -3.07%
DAX INDEX 4,620.80 -140.78 -2.96%
IBEX 35 INDEX 8,646.80 -265.10 -2.97%
S&P/MIB INDEX 20,227.00 -482.00 -2.33%
AEX-Index 249.25 -7.88 -3.06%
OMX STOCKHOLM 30 INDEX 630.26 -19.20 -2.96%
SWISS MARKET INDEX 5,702.86 -177.93 -3.03%
NIKKEI 225 8,695 -113 -1.29%
HANG SENG 13939 -101.9

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 53.79 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 60.59 3.02 4.7
Forex Gold Index $/oz 724.75 0.00 0.0
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 111.75 0.60 0.5
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 3625.00 0.00 0.0

£$ - 1.4934

craig-oxley - November 15, 2008 01:30 AM (GMT)

Friday 15 Nov 2008

FTSE 100 4232.97up 63.76 1.53%
Dax 4710.24up 60.72 1.31%
Cac 40 3291.47up 22.01 0.67%
Dow Jones 8497.31down -337.94 -3.82%
Nasdaq 1516.85down -79.85 -5.00%
BBC Global 30 5066.34down -84.73 -1.64%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 19,562.14 -147.96 -0.75%
NIKKEI 225 8,462.39 223.75 2.72%
HANG SENG INDEX 13,542.66 321.31 2.43%
S&P/ASX 200 INDEX 3,748.10 50.80 1.37%

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 52.91 0.76 1.5
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 57.81 1.63 2.9
Forex Gold Index $/oz 747.50 34.00 4.8
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 111.30 0.80 0.7
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 3782.50 125.00 3.4

£ - 1.4751

craig-oxley - November 18, 2008 03:15 AM (GMT)

Monday 18th 2008 Nov

FTSE 100 4132.16down -100.81 -2.38%
Dax 4557.27down -152.97 -3.25%
Cac 40 3182.03down -109.44 -3.32%
Dow Jones 8273.58down -223.73 -2.63%
Nasdaq 1482.05down -34.80 -2.29%
BBC Global 30 4936.84down -10.54 -0.21%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 19,562.14 -147.96 -0.75%
BRAZIL BOVESPA STOCK IDX 35,717.21 -71.89 -0.20%
Nikkei 225 8522.58up +60.19

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 51.66 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 56.86 0.00 0.0
Forex Gold Index $/oz 734.00 13.50 1.8
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 110.55 0.60 0.5
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 3645.00 0.00 0.0

£$ - 1.4984

MOON ENTERS LEO FROM CANCER

craig-oxley - November 20, 2008 02:28 AM (GMT)

Week 47 = 11 (Saturn's Judgement) on Mercury Day and First Quarter Moon

Wednesday 19 Nov 2008

FTSE 100 4005.68down -202.87 -4.82%
Dax 4354.09down -225.38 -4.92%
Cac 40 3087.89down -129.51 -4.03%
Dow Jones 7997.28down -427.47 -5.07%
Nasdaq 1386.42down -96.85 -6.53%
S&P 500 INDEX 806.58 -52.54 -6.12% 11/19
S&P/TSX COMPOSITE INDEX 8,490.56 -345.17 -3.91% 11/19
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 18,578.38 -457.85 -2.41% 11/19
BRAZIL BOVESPA STOCK IDX 33,404.55 -690.11 -2.02% 11/19
DJ EURO STOXX 50 € Pr 2,295.36 -94.74 -3.96%
IBEX 35 INDEX 8,211.50 -319.30 -3.74% 11/19
S&P/MIB INDEX 19,535.00 -584.00 -2.90% 11/19
AEX-Index 238.12 -12.50 -4.99% 11/19

OMX STOCKHOLM 30 INDEX 594.12 -33.25 -5.30% 11/19
SWISS MARKET INDEX 5,524.06 -151.52 -2.67%

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 48.68 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 55.71 1.62 2.8
Forex Gold Index $/oz 762.00 24.00 3.3
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 111.00 0.10 0.1
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 3617.50 0.00 0.0

£ - 1.4973

craig-oxley - November 20, 2008 11:59 PM (GMT)

Week 47 = 11 (Saturn's Judgement) on Jupiter Day of DEATH! As Isis moves from Leo to Virgo linked to Commerce/Mercury! -Craig

Thursday 20 Nov 2008

DOW JONES INDUS. AVG 7,552.29 -444.99 -5.56%
FTSE 100 INDEX 3,874.99 -130.69 -3.26%
NIKKEI 225 7,703.04 -570.18 -6.89%
HANG SENG INDEX 12,298.56 -517.24 -4.04%
S&P 500 INDEX 752.44 -54.14 -6.71%
NASDAQ COMPOSITE INDEX 1,316.12 -70.30 -5.07%
S&P/TSX COMPOSITE INDEX 7,724.76 -765.80 -9.02%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 18,190.70 -387.68 -2.09%
BRAZIL BOVESPA STOCK IDX 33,404.55 -690.11 -2.02%
DJ EURO STOXX 50 € Pr 2,225.99 -69.37 -3.02%
CAC 40 INDEX 2,980.42 -107.47 -3.48%
DAX INDEX 4,220.20 -133.89 -3.08%
IBEX 35 INDEX 7,988.40 -223.10 -2.72%
S&P/MIB INDEX 19,124.00 -411.00 -2.10%
AEX-Index 227.82 -10.30 -4.33%
OMX STOCKHOLM 30 INDEX 587.71 -6.41 -1.08%
SWISS MARKET INDEX 5,306.10 -217.96 -3.95%

craig-oxley - November 26, 2008 04:10 AM (GMT)

Fri 21 Nov 2008

FTSE 100 3780.96down -94.03 -2.43%
Dax 4127.41down -92.79 -2.20%
Cac 40 2881.26down -99.16 -3.33%

Dow Jones 8046.42up 494.13 6.54%
Nasdaq 1384.35up 68.23 5.18%
BBC Global 30 4743.59down -21.01 -0.44%

craig-oxley - November 26, 2008 04:14 AM (GMT)

Tuesday 25 Nov 2008

FTSE 100 4171.25up 18.29 0.44%
Dax 4560.42up 6.09 0.13%
Cac 40 3209.56up 37.45 1.18%
Dow Jones 8479.47up 36.08 0.43%
Nasdaq 1464.73down -7.29 -0.50%
BBC Global 30 4918.07down -12.88 -0.26%
MEXICO BOLSA INDEX 19,297.63 -231.62 -1.19%

Brent Crude Oil $/barrel 49.80 0.00 0.0
West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil $/barrel 51.96 0.21 0.4
Forex Gold Index $/oz 820.50 0.00 0.0
Coffee "C" Futures US cents/pound 112.50 0.45 0.4
Copper 3mo Unofficial Confirmed $/m tonne 3665.00 0.00 0.0

£$ - 1.5353

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Charles Blahous admits Social Security is a PONZI

Title: Charles Blahous admits Social Security is a PONZI
Description: -Schiff Radio [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - February 16, 2011 12:06 AM (GMT)

SchiffRadio.com Exclusive! Charles Blahous admits Social Security is a PONZI SCHEME!

From: SchiffReport | 05 February 2011

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/ITMEZImvNio?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/ITMEZImvNio?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

seekerx - February 19, 2011 10:23 PM (GMT)

Maybe it is not, please explain more.

Ponzi defined as Noun

Pon·zi
• •/•p•nzi/ Show Spelled[pon-zee] Show IPA –noun
a swindle in which a quick return, made up of money from new investors, on an initial investment lures the victim into much bigger risks.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: THE DAY THE DOLLAR FALLS [Vd]

Title: THE DAY THE DOLLAR FALLS [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - November 15, 2010 05:40 AM (GMT)

[dohtml]<object id="dtvplayer" width="480" height="360"> <param name="movie" value="http://www.disclose.tv/swf/player.swf" /> <param name="wmode" value="transparent" /> <param name="allowFullScreen" value="true" /> <param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always" /> <param name="flashvars" value="config=http://www.disclose.tv/videos/config/flv/31522.js" /> <embed type="application/x-shockwave-flash" width="480" height="360" allowFullScreen="true" src="http://www.disclose.tv/swf/player.swf" flashvars="config=http://www.disclose.tv/videos/config/flv/31522.js"/></embed></object>
Disclose.tv - THE DAY THE DOLLAR FALLS Video
[/dohtml]

seekerx - November 16, 2010 07:04 AM (GMT)

Stupid, gasoline, don't need it called hydrogen, called cold fusion. But hes only saying what he knows.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Greenspan: Bankers commit FRAUD [Vd]

Title: Greenspan: Bankers commit FRAUD [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - November 15, 2010 04:48 AM (GMT)

Greenspan: We Need More Regulation

14 comments | November 11, 2010
http://seekingalpha.com/article/236277-gre...more-regulation

At last weekend's banking conference at Jekyll Island, Alan Greenspan made some astonishing remarks. In short, he said the banking sector has been guilty of rampant fraud and needs much higher levels of oversight. After a 30 year crusade of deregulating markets and being an advocate of efficient markets Greenspan appears to have come around to the (obvious) realization that markets are made up of human beings and human beings are not all necessarily good and rational.

He said:

We need…to get far higher levels of enforcement of fraud statutes. Existing ones. I'm not even talking about new ones…Things were being done which were certainly illegal and clearly criminal in certain cases.

Naturally, Ben Bernanke practically covers his face half way through the commentary:

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/731G71Sahok?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/731G71Sahok?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 2010 CIRCUIT BREAKERS

Title: 2010 CIRCUIT BREAKERS

craig-oxley - June 7, 2010 11:13 AM (GMT)

Circuit Breaker Trigger Points and Trade Halt Durations for Second Quarter*, 2010 for the NYSE, NASDAQ and OTCBB Markets.

	Before 1:00 P.M.	Before 2:00 P.M.	2:00 - 2:29 P.M.	2:30 p.m. or Later
1050-point Decline in the Dow	1 Hour Halt	1 Hour Halt	1/2 Hour Halt	No Halt
2150-point Decline in the Dow	2 Hour Halt	1 Hour Halt	Close For Day	Close For Day
3200-point Decline in the Dow	Close For Day	Close For Day	Close For Day	Close For Day

craig-oxley - June 7, 2010 11:20 AM (GMT)

Government protocols for Economic Collapse
"The 6900 Series of Treasury Rules"
http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...?showtopic=1831

craig-oxley - June 11, 2010 02:40 AM (GMT)

http://online.wsj.com/article/BT-CO-201006...latestheadlines
JUNE 10, 2010, 4:59 P.M. ET

2nd UPDATE:SEC Signs Off On Stock Market 'Circuit Breakers'

WASHINGTON (Dow Jones)--Trading exchanges as early as Friday will implement rules designed to tame the volatility of individual stocks by temporarily halting trading during dramatic price changes, even as market participants are bracing for stiffer rules.

Members of the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission signed off on the stock market "circuit breaker" Thursday, the agency said.

The New York Stock Exchange said it will begin a phased rollout Friday. BATS Global Markets and Direct Edge also have said they expect to begin implementation Friday.

The rule will be in effect on a pilot basis for six ..

craig-oxley - July 24, 2010 01:42 PM (GMT)

Heres a nice example of the circuit breakers in action. This is fraud and market manipulation, call the FBI oh sorry they're in on the deceptions. -Craig

Genzyme Rally Prompts Two Circuit Breakers, Spurring Complaints

By Whitney Kisling - Jul 24, 2010
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2010-07-23/g...-investors.html

Genzyme Corp.'s rally after reports the drugmaker was approached about a takeover triggered two halts under market circuit breakers adopted in June, frustrating traders trying to speculate on the stock.

Shares of the Cambridge, Massachusetts-based company were paused for five minutes at 1:18 p.m. New York time yesterday after surging 10 percent in less than a minute. A second halt began at 1:25 p.m., when Genzyme climbed another 10 percent.

Genzyme's halt, triggered by curbs enacted after the May 6 market plunge erased $862 billion in 20 minutes, was the first that wasn't spurred by orders that were later canceled. While the pauses worked as designed, the halt at 1:25 p.m., which came after the Wall Street Journal reported France's Sanofi-Aventis SA approached Genzyme, made no sense, according to U.S. Global Investors Inc.'s Michael Nasto and Raymond James Financial Inc.'s Dan McMahon.

"The second is inexcusable," said McMahon, director of equity trading at Raymond James in New York. "At some point, you need to let efficient market theory rule how stocks trade."

A goal of the curbs is to help prevent swings in individual stocks from causing another crash like the one on May 6. The Securities and Exchange Commission is testing a program that pauses trading for 5 minutes in Standard & Poor's 500 Index companies when their stock rises or falls 10 percent or more in less than 5 minutes after 9:45 a.m. New York time.

Anadarko, Citigroup

“We don’t comment on rumors and speculation,” said John Lacey, a spokesman for Genzyme Sanofi spokesman Jean-Marc Podvin didn’t immediately return a call seeking comment.

“Genzyme was a case of two circuit breaker halts that happened one after the other,” Nasdaq OMX Group Inc. spokesman Robert Madden wrote in an e-mail. Genzyme’s shares are listed on the Nasdaq Stock Market.

Washington Post Co., Andarko Petroleum Corp. and Citigroup Inc. have all had their stocks halted since the pilot program began June 14. All of those executions were later canceled. Genzyme’s trades yesterday weren’t been voided.

“Increased regulation is taking away opportunities for traders who might have noticed this before others and failed to profit from the trade due to regulation,” Nasto, a senior trader at U.S. Global Investors, wrote in an e-mail in reference to the second pause. His firm manages about $2.5 billion in San Antonio. The shares “shouldn’t have been stopped the second time,” he added.

Russell 1000

The circuit breakers that apply to S&P 500 stocks will soon expand to Russell 1000 Index companies and to more than 300 exchange-traded funds. Brokers and firms such as Credit Suisse Group AG, Getco LLC and Allston Trading LLC have suggested the SEC should consider an alternate mechanism that prevents trading below a specified level instead of halting all transactions when a circuit breaker is triggered.

While the first halt gave Andrew Ross, partner and global equity trader for First New York Securities LLC, time to check orders and position for when trading began again, he said the second halt was unnecessary.

“The stock should be up 20 percent on the news,” he said. “The first halt provided an amazing opportunity to buy.”

The shares rose 15 percent, the most since 2000, to $62.52 at 4 p.m. in New York. The surged as much as 24 percent. Sanofi, France’s biggest drugmaker, is waiting for a response to the approach and hasn’t entered substantive negotiations, said two people familiar with the matter, who declined to be named because the talks are private. The offer values Genzyme at less than $20 billion, they said.

To contact the reporter on this story: Whitney Kisling in New York at wkisling@bloomberg.net.

craig-oxley - August 27, 2010 03:28 PM (GMT)

INTEL TRIPS CIRCUIT BREAKERS AS STOCK COLLAPSES:
http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...showtopic=37909

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: CNBC Guest Mentions the Presidents Working Group

Title: CNBC Guest Mentions the Presidents Working Group
Description: [Vd]

craig-oxley - July 11, 2010 03:41 PM (GMT)

CNBC Guest Says Absent Plunge Protection Team Stepping In, Market Would Fall; Wien, Kernan Disgusted

Submitted by Tyler Durden on 07/08/2010 08:44 -0500
http://www.zerohedge.com/article/cnbc-gues...-kernan-disgust

A highly amusing exchange occurred earlier on CNBC when guest Damon Vickers of Nine Points Capital had an unexpected moment of truthiness and turned some heads when he said that "unless the plunge protection team comes in over the next couple of days, the markets are looking very dicey here." When a disgusted Joe Kernan asks if Vickers was making a joke about the PPT, the response is "absolutely not - it's common knowledge that the government steps in and does things to step on the gas and buy stock here and there." To which Byron Wien has a strong retort: "I don't believe it." All that and much more in the clip below. In the meantime, the market is sure having a field day with stocks as once again bad news are discarded and the smallest glimmer of positivity serves as a springboard for yet another ramping short covering spree.

[dohtml]<object id="cnbcplayer" height="380" width="400" classid="clsid:D27CDB6E-AE6D-11cf-96B8-444553540000" codebase="http://download.macromedia.com/pub/shockwave/cabs/flash/swflash.cab#version=9,0,0,0" >
<param name="type" value="application/x-shockwave-flash"/>
<param name="allowfullscreen" value="true"/>
<param name="allowscriptaccess" value="always"/> <param name="quality" value="best"/>
<param name="scale" value="noscale" />
<param name="wmode" value="transparent"/>
<param name="bgcolor" value="#000000"/>

<param name="salign" value="lt"/>
<param name="movie" value="http://plus.cnbc.com/rssvideosearch/action/player/id/1539898909/code/cnbcplayershare"/>
<embed name="cnbcplayer" PLUGINSPAGE="http://www.macromedia.com/go/getflashplayer" allowfullscreen="true" allowscriptaccess="always" bgcolor="#000000" height="380" width="400" quality="best" wmode="transparent" scale="noscale" salign="lt" src="http://plus.cnbc.com/rssvideosearch/action/player/id/1539898909/code/cnbcplayershare" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" />[/dohtml]
</object>

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Government protocols for Economic Collapse

Title: Government protocols for Economic Collapse
Description: "The 6900 Series of Treasury Rules"

craig-oxley - October 3, 2008 06:13 PM (GMT)

Government protocols for Economic Collapse "The 6900 Series of Treasury Rules"

Editor's Note: The article appearing below was first written in 2001. Its author is unknown but the facts outlined are ALL verifiable. Every web site that has published this piece has been strong-armed into removing it. In the interest of asserting freedom of speech, I re-publish this here:

Protocols for Economic Collapse in America

This is how the U.S. Treasury would handle an economic collapse. It's called the 6900 series of protocols. It would start with declaring a force majeure, which would immediately be interpreted by the marketplaces as a de facto repudiation of debt.

Then the SEC and the various regulatory exchanges would anticipate the market's decline, hour by hour -- when Japan's markets opened the next day, what would happen when the European markets, and all the inter-linkages of the global markets.

On the second day, US Special Forces would be dropped in by parachute in the cities where the twelve Federal Reserve district banks are located.

The origin of these protocols comes from the Department of Defense. This is contingency planning for a variety of post-collapse scenarios. Those scenarios would include, obviously, military collapse, World War III, in other words, and its aftermath. What we're talking about now is aftermath -- how the aftermath would be handled.

One does not necessarily know how the events would transpire that would cause the collapse, whether it's military collapse or economic collapse. In World War III, it would become obvious -- when the mushroom cloud started to appear over cities.

Economic collapse scenarios were always premised on the basis of a US declaration of force majeure on debt service. It's a very extensive scenario. The scenarios are all together, i.e., military, economic, political and social complete destabilization leading to collapse. Then they break down individual scenarios.

In the economic collapse scenario, the starting point would be the United States Treasury declaring a force majeure on debt service, which is de facto repudiation, and that's how it would be interpreted by the world's capital marketplaces.

Then the scenario goes on from there. The US Treasury would obviously declare a force majeure sometime after the European markets had settled down. In other words, they had gone out on the day, which means 11:38 a.m. EDT, our time. They'd wait until the European markets closed, and the US markets had been open for a couple of hours. That's when they'd determine how to begin the process of unwinding or controlling the collapse to the best extent possible, mainly because they know that the greatest hedge pressure would be people seeking to use other markets to hedge their long exposure in the United States and that the US would be the biggest seller in all the rest of the world's markets. Therefore you would want to declare the force majeure when the rest of the world's markets closed.

The declaration of force majeure would be precipitated by the declaration that the United States is no longer able to service its debt. That's pretty simple.

Who makes that decision? The Treasury Department. The President does not make that decision. The Secretary of the Treasury does. He has that authority.

You might ask -- wouldn't he have his arm twisted not to do that?

The answer is that if there isn't any money left to service the debt, it doesn't make any difference what the current regime might want to do.

The day of reckoning is now coming. What has happened in the interim, from 2001 to present, is dynamic, global economic deterioration. The economic deterioration visited upon the United States is not a localized event. It is, in fact, global. We have a planet now that is sinking into a sea of red ink.

The United States is consuming 80% of the planet's savings rate to finance its debt. The central banks of Germany, Japan and Saudi Arabia are no longer the powerhouses they used to be. Their reserves have now been substantially depleted. They can, therefore, no longer hide the fact that they own a certain number, likely in the trillions of dollars, of U.S. Treasury debt that isn't being serviced, because they can't hide it through bookkeeping tricks anymore because their reserves are so depleted.

Therefore somebody has covertly been putting demands on the Bush-Cheney regime for payment. Why do you think 2900 metric tons of gold is depleted from U.S. inventory since March of `01?

Why do you think that $2 billion in currency seized from Iraq last May is now unaccounted for?

Someone is putting demands on the Bush-Cheney regime. Someone is saying to the Bushonian Cabal that -- “You’ve got to start servicing this debt because we, foreign central banks, are in nations – European and Asian – whose reserves are now nearly exhausted.”

Who could be putting that kind of pressure on them?

It has to be coming from whoever is organizing this thing at the very top, which I would tend to think has got to be most likely a cabal of people that would involve Henry Kissinger, James Baker, George Schultz, possibly William Simon. It would be somebody at the very top that is familiar with how to do this. It would have to be someone familiar with finances.

So would this be one faction of a cabal blackmailing or forcing another faction? No, it’s not really blackmailing. It’s being done out of desperation. The German, Japanese and Saudi central banks are saying to the Bushonian cabal, “You’ve got to start servicing this debt because we don’t have the reserves to cover you anymore. We can no longer make it appear that the debt is being serviced because our own reserves are so substantively depleted. Therefore you must begin to cover this debt. If you don’t, then, at some point, we will have to publicly admit–in order to save our own necks -- that we were the end buyers of a lot of stealth debt, a lot of debt that your Treasury issued illegally and has never serviced. That would then expose the whole cabal.

The Kissinger-Baker faction are at the top of how this was done on the economic side of the equation. They were not the original insiders so much, but the managers of the conspiracy from the U.S. Treasury, to wit, the U.S. Treasury and Federal Reserve role-play the part.

Take Henry Kissinger. It may not have occurred to anyone why in the last 3 years Henry Kissinger has been back in Washington more than he has in the last 30 years. And why are all these quiet meetings in Washington with alleged senior Bush-Cheney regime officials, as foreign news services endlessly put it. It’s because Kissinger is the point man. He’s the one that is telling them the disposition of other foreign central banks.

Kissinger would probably also be involved in transfer or hypothecation of any assets from the cabal. In other words, they’re being stolen from the American people by the Bush-Cheney regime and the Bushonian Cabal, and they are being used to hypothecate, transfer, service, or otherwise carry this debt held by certain foreign central banks.

The process of unraveling has already begun because of ever-spiraling Bushonian budget deficits. The Bush-Cheney regime, even in its overt policies (now they're overt political, economic, social and military policies) is generating $600-billion-plus deficit per year, which is consuming 80% of the planet's net savings rate.

It doesn't have the slack. In other words, it can't refinance stealth debt by issuing more stealth debt anymore. Nor can they bleed money out of the system like they could in the 1980s by hiding it when the overt policies of the Bush-Cheney regime are already producing a budget deficit of 6% of Gross Domestic Product. There is no other mechanism that they could use anymore to hide expansion of debt that could be used to service said stealth debt, and they are, frankly, running out of assets that they can steal from the American people.

So the proverbial day of reckoning is coming. The Bush-Cheney regime (and I give them credit for this) are telling the American people what's coming, knowing the American people are too stupid to understand. They are telling the American people about the re-institution of the Gold Confiscation Act and the sudden scrapping of the Treasury's emergency post-collapse gold note scheme to maintain domestic liquidity.

David Walker, US Comptroller General and chief of the GAO has said that the United States could no longer service its debt beyond 2009. They're not hiding it from anybody anymore. They are telling you what's happening.

Now, what does that mean? The key is in what Walker is saying when he says the debt can no longer be serviced. I've been asked this on the radio shows. People have noticed what Walker said because he's out in the news more often than he used to be. It's unusual for the Comptroller General of the United States, which is a rather arcane position, to be out in the news so much.

It simply means that when he says the United States "will no longer be able to sustain budget deficits," he means that by 2009,, the United States will be consuming 100% of the planet's savings rate to finance budget deficits.

Therefore, if the planet can no longer generate any more liquidity to lend to the United States, one of three things have to happen:

A) There has to be a sudden and dramatic reduction in federal spending. There are only two places that can come from. There would have to be an immediate $100-billion cut in defense spending, which would end any hopes the Republicans had of getting into office for years to come because it would destroy any confidence the NFWCs (Naïve Flag Waving Crowd) had in them. Or you would have to scrap the multi-trillion-dollar tax cuts for the rich, something that's equally unpalatable.

The other option, B, as Paul O'Neill mentioned, is a dramatic increase in the rate of federal income taxation from the current nominal rate of 28% to 65%, which is what the Treasury Department estimated would be required post-2009 to provide the U.S. Treasury with sufficient revenues to continue to service debt.

The third option, or C, becomes the declaration of a force majeure on credit service of U. S. Treasury debt by the United States Treasury, which is tantamount and would be accurately construed as de facto debt repudiation by the United States of America.

There are other signs to look for. some currency expatriation control. See if that doesn't come in the way Nixon tried it in May-June of 1971.

In the second term, there will be some sort of currency expatriation control in the United States, but there will also be loopholes that will allow the large money to escape. The restrictions will apply to the 10- and 20-thousand-dollar people. It ain't going to apply to the 10- and 20-million-dollar people. It would be self-defeating to do that.

When that day comes, in other words, when the U.S. Treasury declares a force majeure on debt, it wouldn't be broad-cast on mainstream media. There's no sense because the American people don't even understand what it means. But the announcement would actually be put on the Federal Reserve wire system, which would, of course, immediately be picked up by all media outlets anyway.

The U.S. Treasury would declare a force majeure on debt after the Asian and European markets closed, probably at 12:30 p.m. EDT. The reason why that hour was always selected is because Asian and European markets close. It's also the lunch hour for the markets. It's when you're going to have the fewest people on the floor of the exchanges. That would be the ideal time to make such an announcement.

A few seconds after that announcement was made, all United States markets, both equities debt and commodities–i.e., stock, bonds, commodities, that have trading collars or permissible daily limits –would all be limit-offered with pools. "Limit-offered" means that there are more sellers at the limit – i.e., limit down– than there are buyers.

So-called 'pools' would immediately begin to form, probably a thousand contracts every few minutes. 'Limit-offered with pools'–this is trader language. Pools to sell–2,000 lots, 3,000 lots. That means, the number of sellers over and above the available buyers at the limit-offered price. That would begin to build.

By 1:00, the news would begin to sink in – because it would take awhile before panic selling would arise from the public. This news is being released at lunch hour.

A lot of the American people initially would not even understand the temerity of the news. You would see professional selling first, and as that professional selling intensified over the afternoon, the SEC, the CFTC, NASDAQ, and various market regulatory authorities would begin to institute certain emergency market protocols. This would be the installation of the so-called ‘declaration of fast market conditions,’ for instance; the declaration of ‘no more stop orders,’ the declaration of ‘fill at any price,’ etc.–in a desperate bid to maintain liquidity.

That first day, the Dow Jones Industrial Average and related indices on a percentage basis would lose about 20% of their value by the close of business that day. The real impact would come overnight when the American people found out what this was all about and when it was explained to them.

At 7:30 a.m. EDT, the Tokyo markets would open, and no price would be affixed for probably three or four hours into the session due to the avalanche of selling. Once prices were established, the government of Japan would close all of its financial markets. Europe would not even open. All European governments would close all capital exchanges the next day.

The United States would, in order to accommodate global electronic trading, attempt to open the market on the second day, which they would do, regardless of price, just to maintain some liquidity. At the end of Day Two, the Dow Jones and related indices, would have lost two thirds of their value, and prices would be set accordingly.

On Day Three, the New York Stock Exchange, the SEC and other related agencies would recommend to the United States Treasury and the Federal Reserve that all markets be closed. That would be on the morning of Day Three. Eleven a.m., the Federal Reserve would then order all domestic banks closed. All of the twelve Federal Reserve district banks would (30 minutes later) have special U.S. forces parachuted in and around them to secure whatever gold bullion reserves they had left.

Day Three, 9:00 p.m., the President of the United States would declare a state of martial law. All financial transactions would come to an end. The Treasury would act to formally de-monetize the U.S. dollar and declare it worthless.

This would be totally unprecedented. In the past, collapses have been temporary and have been brought back up. But what we’re talking about now is the end.

These protocols that I’m referring to aren’t even all that secret. They were publicly available all through the Clinton era. These are Treasury protocols that were instituted mostly in the late 1970s when the Treasury and Federal Reserve began to feel that it was important to have an emergency-collapse protocol in place.

What precipitated the timing of this was the inflationary spiral of the late 1970s. The U. S. Treasury and the Federal Reserve were both concerned that this inflationary spiral, which was occurring not only domestically but globally, might lead to a global, uncontrollable hyper-inflation that the Federal Reserve or major central banks could not stop by traditional means, i.e., by raising interest rates and contracting money supply.

There was also the recognition, of course, that global central reserve bank bullion inventories had been so depleted over the previous 30 years that any re-institution of a species currency, even on a temporary basis, and even within a regional or individual nation-state basis, was no longer possible.

This is an analogy. In a military scenario, it's like the President of the United States pushing the final red button -- the commit button. The Treasury Secretary of the United States has a similar mechanism. It's called the yellow button, the commit button. The Secretary of Defense has the same system. This is what happens. Computer program starts to institute these protocols. Imagine the complexity of trying the manage all this. I think it's going to happen all simultaneously. There are hundreds of different agencies involved, both domestically and internationally. In order to maintain liquidity for as long as possible, it has to be extremely well-coordinated, and there must be existing collapse protocols that can be used.

The reason I was familiar with them was because I used to see the U.S. Treasury 6900 Series Collapse Protocol, 6903, 6904–there'll be A, B, and so on–which keyed in to the Department of Defense to be incorporated within the Department of Defense's own World War III scenario and various types of military/ political/ social instability/ war/ pestilence, chaos, etc. scenarios.

All federal agencies had individual collapse protocols that ultimately got coordinated through the Department of Defense. Obviously, the Department of Defense would be the ultimate coordinator because it would need to have special forces available, on a stand-by basis, ready, that could quickly parachute into areas all over the country, into the cities particularly, to secure federal properties and assets.

And that's literally how it would begin. By the end of the third day, it would be all over -- a state of martial law. We're not talking about war, now; this is just economic collapse.

There's no military implication here, no political, no social implication or policy directive thereunto. This is strictly economic collapse. By the end of Day Three, effectively, all banks in the world will be shut down, all paper currencies will become valueless. Martial law would be declared. There would be no continuing transactions, at least for a period of time, of commodities. All providers of fuels and foods would be shut down automatically.

They have this in great detail too. U.S. Department of Defense Special 117th Assault Unit would parachute in to seize control of the cattle yards in Oklahoma City. This is how well it's planned. In other words, economic collapse would automatically involve expansive military action and control.

By the end of the third day, when you no longer have a domestic medium of exchange, you have to have secured food and fuel stocks. You've got to have troops that have secured distribution points where there is food and fuel stocks, warehouses, tanks, etc. Otherwise people are just going to go get them, and the people have to know that if they try to go break into that store and steal that loaf of bread, they're going to be shot.

Protocols for environmental disasters are called 'scaling-circle scenarios.' 'Scaling circles' is a Department of Defense euphemism. It's also used in FEMA, OEM and other emergency management services. In environmental catastrophes, which are going to become national or global, it's got to start someplace. It's going to start in one very small, specific area. Therefore what happens is that the immediate force containment is the greatest in the first circle, to try to contain the spread of the disaster and keep it within that circle.

The environmental problem, to whatever extent it's possible, before it spreads, will be neutralized or mitigated, in order to keep that catastrophe within that circle, or, if it is likely that it is to escape that circle, to attack whatever it is in such a fashion as to mitigate its strength and its ability to contaminate or otherwise affect other areas.

In the case of earthquakes, for instance, affecting the west coast, beginning at Mt. Rainier and moving southward -- that's a different type of scenario. That does not include as much Department of Defense involvement. It includes separate protocols, wherein mostly FEMA and OEM act as the senior coordinating agencies between municipal, county and state disaster and containment, which is called Disaster and Containment Units. Federal troops would only be brought in for the purposes of maintaining control.

In a military or economic collapse situation, National Guard units would provide any spare help they could in combating whatever the problem is. Federal troops would be used in order to have the specific authority simply to shoot anyone. There are plans for all sorts of scenarios. The economic-disaster scenario is the one I always found the most intriguing because it is the one that is least understood by the American people.

Military control would be necessary when lines begin to form at the banks, people trying to access their money. But that wasn't even anticipated as a big problem. Lines would form at the banks, but it was not even envisioned until sometime on Day Three because the American people wouldn't get it. It would be announced that the stock markets are down 2000 or 3000 points, and since we've always been taught they'll come back, the people would still be buying stocks.

You could count on everybody remaining in ignorance all the way down because the American people have never been taught Economics 101.
The American people wouldn't realize the full extent of it until the markets were closed on the third day, or until the time when they went down to cash a check and the bank was closed with soldiers out in front. Then they would go down and see the gas station's closed. They see the local supermarket has been shuttered, and there's federal troops in front of it. Then they might begin to catch on

And remember -- it's not just federal troops. In emergency-collapse protocols, even before the declaration of a formal state of emergency or a state of martial law, the local military authorities within any given county or jurisdiction have the ability to essentially militarize anyone, that is, any civilian. This would be more than just deputizing civilians. It's federal. In other words, they would have the ability to militarize and give military authority to a civilian force.

This would include not only police and the sheriffs and state police, but all local law enforcement that exists below the state level would be immediately militarized.
They wouldn't take just anybody – like they did in Iraq. It would be like the military when they "call for volunteers." Then they'd have everybody and their brother-in-law volunteering, waving around the American flag and so on.

"And besides, if you do this, then you're going to get to eat."

In other words, this is how it would unfold over three days, but, in fact, very few Americans would know what to do about it or how to take any precautions. They wouldn't have a clue because they don't understand enough about economics to know what is happening.

So that's what it is -- Economic Armageddon.

In conclusion, since there is very little the people of the United States can do to protect themselves. We're not going to make any suggestions of how to protect yourselves because there's very little you can do.

We could tell you to go out and buy gold coins and bury them in the coffee can in the back yard and go to your nearest survivalist store, but, frankly, that's useless. In the last analysis, it's a lot of hype. There is very little the average US citizen could do.

The only thing that can prevent this, as the Comptroller alluded to when he was asked by Barbara Walters, "How do we prevent reaching the problem by 2009?" He said simply, "A change of regimes."

So how do you prevent it? Don't vote for Bush and Cheney -- and hope that Bush does not use his emergency powers to cancel or postpone the election by edict, powers which you, the flag-waving citizens, have given him.

All flag-waving citizens, be warned. If you want to vote for Bush-Cheney again, make sure you got plenty of Spam on hand.

Here's an interesting and humorous aside. A couple of days ago, Hormel Foods, which makes Spam, announced that in the last six months there have been record sales of Spam in the United States – the survivalists' food of choice. After all, they pride themselves on the fact, as the spokesman for Hormel said, "It is the only food product you can buy with an expiration that's 50 years."

When everything goes to hell, when all that man has created has turned to dust again, the final legacy is going to be Spam. It will be the last surviving item -- when the anthropologists of 20 thousand years from now are digging sites and they see these enormous mountains of unopened cans of Spam They'll have monuments to the past out of Spam.

On April 13, 2004, Deputy Assistant Treasury Secretary John Boine talked about potential currency restrictions. He used the word that's going to fuel the flames of the survivalist and gloom-and-doom collapse people.

It's very, very telling that the U.S. Treasury may institute a restriction on the amount of U.S. dollars that can be converted into gold.

Furthermore, he intimated (and I suspected that this was coming, although this wouldn't actually become law until Bush-Cheney was in office for second term one way or another) that the Bush-Cheney regime determines that the Gold Confiscation Act gives to Treasury the power for so-called forced disclosure of gold holdings.

I'm not quite sure of the language of the Gold Confiscation Act from 1933. It just says, "compelled," as in citizens are lawfully compelled to redeem gold for script. I don't think there was any such provision, which he was inferring that there is. That was FDR's "Raw Deal" of 1934, when people were coerced into giving up their gold. But nowhere in this act does it specifically authorize the Treasury to mandate citizens to report their gold holdings. So if this gets any press at all, particularly within the circles of gold bugs and so on, watch out.

Furthermore, on Washington Journal they were talking about how FEMA has recommended to the Office of Homeland Security to have increased restrictions regarding citizen hoarding of long-term food and fuel supplies. That's pretty sinister too.

What they're talking about is the purchase of long-term so-called stores of survival food. FEMA was talking about some sort of restriction preventing people from accumulating food stores; putting it simply, that's what it means. The second point was to increase restrictions that already exist.

FEMA was recommending even tighter restrictions on citizens building their own private property underground storage tanks for the purposes of long-term storage of fuel. The real intent of this is is threefold: a) to restrict citizens' ability to hoard food; B) restrict citizens' ability to hoard long-term storage of fuel; c) the forced identification of citizens to reveal food and fuel stocks they may be hoarding.

And that, in my opinion, is the real essence. The Bush-Cheney regime was scared of having the FEMA angle put into the equation because they knew what it means and how people would interpret it.

They have tried to use environmental legislation to restrict people's ability to build fuel storage facilities on their own property -- to get around what the true intent of that was.

But the bigger picture is that if you start to limit citizens' ability to hoard fuel and food and shake them up by potential forced identification of gold holdings or forced redemption…

In other words, what you don't want is citizens who have the ability to store a lot of food and fuel and to own gold because they would be able to resist state control in the future.

You've got to have every citizen on a rationing card to control the civilian population. You can't have citizens out there hoarding food and fuel because then people can say to government, "I ain't taking a rationing card, baby, with my national ID card. I don't have to. You can't control me through food and fuel and ever-worthless paper currency."

I used to make fun of these people. But now, things have come full circle on this debate. The Bush-Cheney regime is making it increasingly clear through their small changes in policy. Not a lot of people monitor these decisions, but I do. And the pattern is becoming increasingly clear.

In fact, I would believe that those of the survivalist mentality (the food, fuel, the gold coins in the coffee can in the back yard) people who think that way will be ultimately vindicated.

People should quit making fun of them because they would be vindicated – even though they were all burned out, twenty-dollared to death, buying books and tapes, and discredited by mainstream media. It may sound like a hollow victory, but it won't be a hollow victory for them – them that's got the Spam… "
Posted by HalTurnerShow.com at 10/01/2008 07:41:00 AM 10 comments

craig-oxley - June 7, 2010 11:21 AM (GMT)

Circuit Breaker Trigger Points and Trade Halt Durations for Second Quarter*, 2010 for the NYSE, NASDAQ and OTCBB Markets.

	Before 1:00 P.M.	Before 2:00 P.M.	2:00 - 2:29 P.M.	2:30 p.m. or Later
1050-point Decline in the Dow	1 Hour Halt	1 Hour Halt	1/2 Hour Halt	No Halt
2150-point Decline in the Dow	2 Hour Halt	1 Hour Halt	Close For Day	Close For Day
3200-point Decline in the Dow	Close For Day	Close For Day	Close For Day	Close For Day

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: GLOBAL ECONOMIC COLLAPSE SEPT-OCT 2008?

Title: GLOBAL ECONOMIC COLLAPSE SEPT-OCT 2008?

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 01:13 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

 BREAKING NEWS *****

OFFICIAL DATA FROM THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD OF GOVERNORS CONFIRMS BANKS WILL RUN OUT OF MONEY TO LEND BY LATE THIS YEAR

OUR "FRACTIONAL RESERVE" BANKING SYSTEM WILL COLLAPSE NOT LATER THAN 2009

http://www.halturnershow.com/index.html

The Chart above came directly from the federal reserve. It shows that late this year, "Non-Borrowed Reserves of Depositiory Institutions" will hit zero.

In layman's terms this means all cash reserves of the banks will have been lent out; there won't be any more money to lend to anyone.

If banks have no money to lend, then consumers cannot buy things on credit. Even if they could buy on credit, businesses will not be able to borrow to restock inventory or get raw materials for manufacturing. With consumers not buying and with business unable to manufacture or restock, businesses will have to layoff employees. MASSIVE layoffs. Huge unemployment.

As folks lose their jobs, they won't have money coming in to repay any outstanding debts they already have. The bad debts will take out the banks. No credit, no business, no jobs. Total economic collapse.

The only hope they have of delaying (not avoiding) this massive collapse is to change the fractional reserve rules to allow Banks to lend even more money than they have in reserves.

When they make that rule change, they will have to pump several TRILLION in cash into the economy; which will result in almost immediate hyper-inflation. Other currencies will rise sharply against the U.S. dollar resulting in all imported goods skyrocketing in price. Since we don't manufacture anything in our country anymore, these skyrocketing prices will impact everything we buy.

As people find themselves unable to afford the basic necessities of life, social chaos will erupt.

Cities, dependent upon outside sources of food and other goods, will erupt into chaos sooner than outlying areas. There will be food riots. As happens anytime a major emergency occurs, the Blacks and Hispanics will do what they always do: loot, pillage and burn.

As the cities disintegrate into anarchy, folks in suburbs will soon find themselves targets of starving, violent two-legged animals. Without food to buy or steal in the cities, the savages will move to attack the suburbs to take YOUR food and YOUR goods.

When this takes place, you'd better make sure you have enough guns and ammunition to protect yourself, your family and your property. Shoot to kill. Don't worry about the law, because there won't be any law.

Dialing 911 will be useless because the looting, violence and anarchy will totally overwhelm local, county and state law enforcement.

Whether the feds change the fractional Banking rules now or not, the scenarios outlined above will take place. The only question remaining is WHEN the scenarios will take place: In September 2008, February 2009 or at some later date after the rules change once the hyper-inflation kicks-in.

Ladies and gentlemen, I am sorry to tell you that in our lifetime we will see the literal collpase of the United States. We will see oursleves a nation gone mad. It will be a madness that cannot be restrained, but which can only exhaust itself in blood.

When the time for bloodshed comes, I want all of you to know exactly who is to blame so those people can be hunted down and dealt with. To that end, let me make clear, all of the trouble coming at us later this year and into early next year is is going to happen because of our federal government borrowing itself (and us) into oblivion.

The government was aided and abetted by rich jew bankers - the federal reserve. The jew bankers refused to stop lending to our long-Bankrupt government and even went so far as to monetize government debt so the jew bankers could earn billions in interest for themselves, even though they knew the coming social chaos would take place.

When the collapse happens, it will be time to take up arms and overthrow the government of the United States by force, violence and assassinations. The politicos who got us into this mess must pay a price so terrible that others who follow them will knnow to behave -- or face the same fate.

The jew bankers in the federal reserve must also pay the same terrible price. Slaughter would be appropriate.

Folks are already e-mailing me asking "What can I do to protect myself." The short answer is prepare now. Start accumulating food to feed yourself and your family for upwards of a full year!

Stock up on canned foods. Lots of canned foods. They don't go bad for years and the price you pay now will be a lot cheaper than if you wait.

Buy large amounts of BREAD FLOUR to bake your own bread. If you cannot get BREAD FLOUR, buy "All Purpose Flour" and also "WHEAT GLUTEN" to add to it for baking bread. You'll need yeast for the bread, so buy yeast too.

Buy large amounts of dried rice and dried oatmeal.

Buy Honey. Cinnamon, brown sugar and white sugar. Lots of white sugar. Salt. Pepper.

When the crash happens and the supermarkets are empty it will be too late. Plan now. You only have until September of this year to prepare, so get to it.

You can cook some rice, open a can of food, pour the can over the rice, heat it up and have a full, healthy meal.

At breakfast, you can cook up some oatmeal, put honey, cinnamon or brown sugar on top and have a healthy breakfast.

Buy a gravity-fed water filter system and additional filters for it.

Have at least one hand gun for each mature teenager and adult in your family. Have at least one twelve guage shotgun for your family. Have at least one hunting rifle, a .308 or 30-06 to hunt for food. Have ammunition for each weapon and make certain you and your family know how to use them all.

It's gonna get ugly, folks. Real ugly. The feds may delay it awhile, but they cannot avoid it.

QUOTE

$130 Oil!

Wednesday May 21, 2008
http://urbansurvival.com/week.htm

Meantime, Here on the Hindenburg

Although it is likely not until late September or early October (Oct. 7, 7:10 UTC just to single out the moment) that the real crash of the economy will become apparent, there are plenty of signs about now that the design of the Not really Federal and not really much in Reserves US Banking system and the design of the Zeppelin LZ-129 seem to share common design elements.

Assuming that you remember what happened to the Hindenburg on May 6, 1937 at Lakehurst Naval Air Station in New Jersey, this email from an aware reader should make perfect sense:

"George,

After seeing this chart from the St. Louis Federal Reserve Bank

http://research.stlouisfed.org/fred2/series/BOGNONBR can we dispense with the nick name Helicopter Ben and just move on to Hindenburg Ben? Because to me that looks like something going down in flames more than anything else I have ever seen. Am I reading this right in the amount of money the banks have in reserve that is non-borrowed is at a fifty year low? In fact in 4 months since it entered negative territory (for the only time in the 50 years on record) it has exceeded 50 years of positive values by 50% on the negative side? Does this not mean that the banks are not only insolvent but underwater more than they were ever positive?

Well, er, I think under the Patriot Act, I can't say anything negative about the US economic system, tempting as that might be since its hijacking by corporate interests, but the Act doesn't say anything about being mum on the banksters who have watered down the purchasing power of the US dollar in the name of political expediency, free lunches, and lobbyists with reckless abandon, all the while driving the financial system onto the rocks, as I've been writing about here since 1997.

No, wait a minute. It's not as bad as you think. It 's probably much WORSE than this chart shows. Why? Because this data series doesn't even start until 1958 or so. If the series went back to the last Great Depression, we would maybe see some pattern replay.

The St. Louis Fed chart doesn't go back to the Roaring Twenties.

The Fed now finds itself between a rock and a hard place: On the one hand we need to have lots of liquidity in the financial system, and so instead of demanding high quality assets to back up borrowing at the Fed's discount window, it's 'bring whatever you have' that would otherwise send honest accountants scurrying fleeing for fear of prison terms.

If the Fed didn't have this policy, we'd already be in a Depression.

Worse? The amount of malinvestment that has been run up since the last Great Depression (which in turn needs to be wrung out of the economy before honest growth can resume) absolutely dwarf's anything in history. When this thing all goes kablooey, it will make the South Seas Bubble look like a cakewalk and the Depression like a bad weekend.

Still, what's a Fed to do? If there's no liquidity, there's no "money" (such as it is) to buy oil and the consumer goods from China, since damn near all production has been outsourced along with incomprehensible foreign "customer service" agents. WASF. Got your survival garden in?

America is the greatest country in the world. But, it has been hijacked by corporate interests who have only one thing in mind - fattening their bottom lines based on cost-reductions and "value-engineering". Starting with the banks, they have proclaimed themselves "too big to fail" and under this mantra, the money-printers will be working day and night through a summer of brownouts and rolling blackouts, soaring food prices, whopping foreclosure increases, civil disobedience, and all the rest that comes in a 'crack-up boom' before the real story unfolds and we get to size up what a real economic abyss looks like this fall.

This is not to be apocalyptic. This is a simple trend summation.

QUOTE

Petraeus may urge troop cutbacks in September

by Staff Writers
Washington (AFP) May 22, 2008
http://www.spacewar.com/reports/Petraeus_m...tember_999.html

The top US commander in Iraq said Thursday he expects to recommend further cuts in US forces in Iraq before he relinquishes command in September because of improved security.

"My sense is I will be able to make a recommendation at that time for some further reductions," General David Petraeus said in confirmation hearings on his appointment to become head of the US Central Command.

Petraeus' upbeat forecast came as President George W. Bush made a new push for public support for the war, telling army paratroopers back from Iraq that a hasty pullout would increase the chance of another September 11-type attack.

"Withdrawal before success would send a signal to terrorists and extremists across the world that America is weak and does not have the stomach for a long fight," he said at Fort Bragg, North Carolina.

"Withdrawal before success would be catastrophic for our country," Bush added.

Senate Democrats, including presidential hopeful Hillary Clinton, pressed Petraeus on how he would deal with the growing threat posed by Al-Qaeda in Pakistan, and a loss of momentum in Afghanistan.

He said more troops may be needed to pacify southern Afghanistan, but argued that Al-Qaeda's main effort was in Iraq and it was appropriate "to do everything that we can there to pursue Al-Qaeda in Iraq."

Petraeus said one of his first trips as the Centcom commander would be to Pakistan, whose new government has struck a peace deal with Taliban insurgents.

Despite the improved security in Iraq, Petraeus acknowledged that the US goal of turning all 18 provinces to Iraqi security control by the end of the year will not be met, in part because of violent conditions around Mosul in northern Iraq.

And he said provincial elections, a crucial step in Iraq's political consolidation, are likely to slip from October to November.

Petraeus said he would make recommendations on further troop cuts following the withdrawal of the last of five surge brigades in July and a 45-day period of consolidation and assessment.

"I do not mean to imply that that would be a BCT (brigade combat team) or some major formation -- but it could," he told the Senate Armed Services Committee.

"But I do believe that there will be certain assets that, as we are already looking at the picture right now, we'll be able to recommend can be either redeployed or not deployed to the theater in the fall," he said.

A combat brigade consists of about 3,500 troops.

The general said security conditions have continued to improve despite the withdrawal of three of the five surge brigades, with security incidents falling last week to the lowest point in more than four years.

A chart he provided showed "weekly security incidents" -- attacks on infrastructure, roadside bombs, sniper and small arms attacks, and mortar, rocket and surface-to-air attacks -- dropping to about 400 in early May, from a peak of more than 1,500 a year ago.

The general attributed the improvement to military operations against Iranian-backed Shiite militias in the southern city of Basra and Baghdad's Sadr City.

Petraeus said he was looking for signs of Iran pulling back support for Shiite militias, or special groups.

"We know, though, that a number of the special group leaders have gone back to Iran, as they have been put under pressure in first Basra then other areas in the southern provinces and now in Sadr City," he said.

Petraeus was joined at the hearing by General Raymond Odierno, his former number two in Iraq and the Pentagon's choice to succeed Petraeus as the top general there.

The generals' confirmation appeared assured.

Senator Carl Levin, the committee chairman, said they would bring "unprecedented continuity of senior military leadership" with "unparalleled knowledge of the situation on the ground."

The change will put Petraeus in command of a vast portfolio of security challenges in a region that stretches from Afghanistan to Lebanon, and where demand for US military forces has exceeded the supply.

He faces a reconstituted al-Qaeda leadership in Pakistan, a resurgent Taliban in Afghanistan, an emboldened regime in Tehran, political strife in Lebanon, and instability in Somalia and the Horn of Africa.

"Engagement will be a central aspect of my responsibilities as the CENTCOM commander, if confirmed," Petraeus said.

"In most of the issues we'll address, a purely military approach is unlikely to succeed and our strategy must recognize that," he said.

QUOTE

The September War

http://hallindsey.org/index.php?option=com...d=278&Itemid=56

According to a number of sources, Mahmoud Ahmadinejad is planning to bring his first reactor on line sometime in September 2008, which is just about in line with what the Israeli Mossad had estimated back in 2003 when the full extent of Iran's secret nuclear program became known.

The Iranian announcement came on the heels of a surprise announcement by the government of Israel confirming it had entered into third-party peace talks with Syria's Bashar Assad. The surprising confirmation on Wednesday was the first acknowledged contact between the two parties in eight years, which will be mediated by Turkey. Equally surprising was a statement from the United States saying it had no objection to the talks. Previously, the U.S. had rejected any peace overtures toward Syria as long as it was sponsoring Hezbollah and Hamas. In fact, President Bush seemed to have been blindsided by the news. According to transcripts of an interview he granted to the Jerusalem Post, Bush responded to the news by stammering; "I expect an explanation, but I'm – he made a decision that he made – or no decisions have been made, except the idea of trying to get some dialogue moving, which is – and I know him well, and know that he is as concerned about Israeli security as any other person that's ever been the prime minister of Israel. And so I presume the decision is made."

Despite the White House's official welcome of the news, privately, officials were furious. The New York Times quoted an "anonymous" (of course) "administration official" who called Israel's unilateral move "a slap in the face."

While Damascus and Jerusalem talk peace, Iranian-backed Hezbollah consolidated the gains it made in fighting against government forces in the streets of Beirut and elsewhere.

After six days of mediation between Hezbollah and the Lebanese government, Hezbollah emerged a clear winner in a settlement agreement in which Hezbollah was granted veto rights over the government, affirming its stature as "the preponderant military actor and the super political power in Lebanon," according to political scientist Hilal Khashan of the American University of Beirut. Khashan told the AFP that "it was an excellent deal for the Hezbollah-led opposition and a major defeat for the U.S.-backed government." The deal was brokered by the Qatari government. The Arab League played a major part in securing the deal, with both Syria and Iran declaring their support for Hezbollah's victory. Under the arrangement, Parliament will elect as president the current head of the Lebanese Army, Gen. Michel Suleiman. Gen. Suleiman will then appoint a new government – one in which Hezbollah holds enough seats to veto any decisions it doesn't like – such as disarming Hezbollah.

Meanwhile, Israeli military sources say that Iran is continuing to ship weapons and ammunition, via Hezbollah, to the Hamas-occupied Gaza Strip, including rockets, missiles and rocket launchers. According to the Mossad, these shipments have been stepped up in recent months, reaching a peak in March-April. Using fishing boats, Iran has successfully smuggled Iranian-made 120 mm mortars with a range of up to six miles. The Mossad says that the smuggling operation is overseen by the Iranian Revolutionary Guard using Syrian ports and Hezbollah operatives.

Meanwhile, back in Israel, Prime Minister Ehud Olmert is fighting desperately to keep his job while he is under investigation by police on charges of obtaining money by fraud, breach of trust, money laundering and tax offenses, according to Haartez. And fears are rampant within Israeli circles that Olmert may be considering trading the Golan Heights in exchange for a peace deal he can trumpet to deflect attention away from his legal problems.

If one sits down and connects the dots, one ends up with a very different picture than the one being presented by the mainstream media suggesting the Syrian-Israeli talks are representative of a major breakthrough.

It is worth remembering that it was the Persians who invented chess, and Ahmadinejad seems to be controlling all the pieces. In the first place, Ahmadinejad knows that Israel will attack its reactor the moment that they take it on line. He's been arming and training Hamas to serve as its proxy in the event of war, to harass the IDF on its flanks. To the north in Lebanon, Ahmadinejad has succeeded in rearming and re-equipping Hezbollah since the Lebanon War in 2006. The Mossad estimates Hezbollah is stronger now than it was before Israel invaded. Hezbollah has succeeded, for all intents and purposes, in taking over the Lebanese government.

Hamas controls all of the Gaza Strip. Mahmoud Abbas' Palestinian Authority barely has a handle on the West Bank – and in any event, would turn on Israel the second the opportunity presented itself.

Syria's insistence on the return of the Golan Heights as a precondition for peace is a Trojan Horse – particularly considering the timing. It was only last September that Israel destroyed a Syrian nuclear reactor that was only weeks from being operational. Syria has built one of the most formidable arsenals of missiles and rockets in the region, all of them aimed at Israel. From the Golan Heights, Syria would control much of northern Israel, as it did prior to losing the Golan to Israel in the Six Days War.

Israel is therefore surrounded with Hezbollah and Syria to the north, Hamas on both flanks, with al-Qaida sympathizers flooding in through Egypt and Jordan. Everything is in place for war except the pretext to start things off.

Starting up a nuclear reactor will do nicely.

QUOTE

* The estimated Federal Reserve crash date around September stated by Leo's economic advisor, Swiss-based Italian Marco Saba.

QUOTE

Leo called me up on Skype together with Italian monetary reformer Marco Saba:

http://studimonetari.org/
http://studimonetari.org/news.htm

First we briefly broach the subject of Leo's credibility as a Grandmaster of the Illuminati in the eyes of Mr Saba..

Then the next topics are discussed:

-The Dollar versus the Euro and that basically both are doomed currencies;

-The potential crash of the FED/Dollar in September with the Euro following suit only three months after;

-The looming danger of Bush declaring Martial Law;

-That Saba favours Ron Paul as president, with Dennis Kucinich as vice-president, because Paul may be the only one candidate suitable for implementing monetary reforms by supplanting the FED and its Internal 'Racket' Service (IRS);

-Fellow monetary reformer, Richard C Cook:

http://www.richardccook.com/

http://www.globalresearch.ca/index.php?con...authorName=Cook

http://www.globalresearch.ca/index.php?context=va&aid=8977

http://www.globalresearch.ca/index.php?con...&articleId=5494

-Saba's local Italian currency called the SCEC ("shek") launched in May of 2007;

-The putting into effect of the Federal Reserve act, Income Tax act, Rockefeller Foundation and the ADL all in the year 1913;

-The Bretton Woods Agreement: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bretton_Woods_system

-The Kennedies and Monetary Reform;

-How a "nation of sheep begets a government of wolves";

-That Ron Paul is favoured by the US Militias;

-Benjamin Fulford: http://www.rense.com/general82/dapt.htm http://benjaminfulford.com/secretgoverment.html

-That the recent Aldo Moro Conference in April this year was more than just a "book-signing" as some Zagami 'detractors' maintain;

-The Dinosaurs running about in the Italian Government;

-The psychopathy of Economist Maynard Keynes;

-The scope of the current economic crash compared with that of the crash of 1929;

-Marco Saba's connection to the Jewish Community?

http://studimonetari.org/haatzmaut.jpg

MPEG-1 layer 3 (mp3)
64kbit
48000Hz Mono
53m16s

http://www.mediafire.com/?zmmwmmz12jp

QUOTE

Controlled Landings

Jun 3 2008
http://urbansurvival.com/week.htm

Most times, when we read about "landings" or "controlled descents" it has something to do with things aeronautical or economics.

A couple of examples: An American Airlines jet makes an emergency landing in Texas when a passenger window breaks on Sunday, or the Mars lander Phoenix touches down and sends back data. Or, on the economic side, China says it is not expecting a 'hard landing' risk from declining exports and Treasury Secretary Hank Paulson in the Middle East is working to avoid a hard (or crash) landing for the US economy by convincing at least one Dubai leader, sheikh Mohammed, to says "The Dollar Peg Will Stay..."

But, speaking of airlines, the CEO of Emirates Airlines, Time Clark, who I'd expect to have pretty good visibility on matters like oil prices, is reportedly says that oil will hit about $140 this year before leveling off...a departure from the street buzz of $200 oil this year.

Nevertheless, when one looks at Wall Street lately, the buy and hold mantra which promoted the idea of just pouring money into a 401 (k) program and blinding holding through thick and thin has certainly worn a bit thin. And I don't mean with the market gyrations of Monday, particularly, although being down more than 200-points for a while can be a little disturbing for those who have voluntarily locked themselves in the wrong casino.

The thing I keep in mind is that in early 2000, the Dow hit a high of 11,723. And if you click over to the Federal Reserves own calculator which does compound inflation calculations (which in non-banker terms shows how much the purchasing power of our money is being stolen by printing more money than the nation produces in added value), you can see that the Dow needs to be at 14,667.58 just have maintained purchasing power parity with 2000!.

Whenever I write this inconvenient number down, people look at me like I have two heads. Many start to stammer, turn red in the face, and begin flailing around for any kind of excuse to cover up for the miserable performance of Wall Street's well-oil sales machine.

"George, that doesn't count dividends or stock splits, so you can't say that!" Oh, but I do. And in most of the funds I've looked at the dividends and sp-lits about make up for the compound cost of the management fees of the funds.

On the other hand, in 2001, I bought a small about of physical gold for $275 or so, when I saw this coming. In order to just keep even with inflation gold needs only to hit $334.97 to equal the Dow...that is if the Dow could rally to 14,667.

The lesson of history here is pretty simple, isn't it? Paper assets have lost purchasing power over the longer term (since 2000) when compared with the hard assets like gold and silver. Don't forget we bought silver around $7 in 2005, and apprised you of the purchase in July or August of '05. Based on our $7/ounce cost, silver needs only be at $7.72 to break even with inflation.

This buying physical assets is not just a long-term strategy. Just for the heck of it, I entered the CNBC Million Dollar Challenge and threw together a 2-minutes portfolio of four precious metals stocks. So far, it's up 7.9% and my game rank is 76,587. Just holding cash (which I did in a second account for benchmarking purposes) has a rank going into today's open of 411,714.

Awesome! See how nicely 'simple single decisions' can work out? I jump ahead of 335,127 other portfolios with a simple four stock PM portfolio and simply watch money dynamics move me up. Why people don't get it is just beyond me.

My point? What's my Point?

We're living in an age where a huge 'transformation' is shaping up that will fully impact our lives in 2009 and beyond. One of the hallmarks of that change will be the shift away from aper and into real assets and things that can produce local value.

The really smart people I know are starting to localize, socialize, and demonetize. In two words: "Get local!".

Stories about 'new survivalists' are starting to pop up all over. And here's a story on the SF Gate web site (San Francisco Chronicle) headlines "From One Rat to Antoher: How one man went from living the urban rat race to living like a desert rat."

I've been writing about voluntary Deconsumption and voluntary downsizing of lifestyles for years now, I suppose to the distain of former colleagues in the six-figure world who thought (think?) I'm nuts. That may be, and all, but life's just a slightly longer version of the CNBC game: Make make a couple of fundamental good decisions to get in harmony with the general direction of the times and then ride the elevator stress-free.

QUOTE

US Economy is a National Security Crisis: 'US Needs to Raise $6 Trillion and It is Simple,' Says Visionary William Glynn

Right now, China, Russia, India and Saudi Arabia basically own the United States. Our economy is the real target of terrorists and this is our potential downfall," says Glynn. His solution is transparent and uncomplicated... a 10% solution. "If we are to prevent another Great Depression we need to pass one simple law: All pension plans, endowments, 401(k)s and the like will be required to allocate 10% of their portfolios to buy back U.S. debt and currency.

http://www.prweb.com/releases/2008/6/prweb961894.htm

Atlanta, GA (PRWEB) June 6, 2008 -- According to Bill Glynn, the founder and Managing Director of Collective IQ www.collectiveiq.com, ranked the #1 Corporate Venture Capital Platform in the world, and author of "Left on Red" www.billyg.net the real terrorist threat to America does not come in the form of a suicide bomber or from Islamic extremists. Rather, the Achilles Heel of the United States is our economy. According to Glynn, in the aftermath of September 11th almost a trillion dollars was wiped out of the economy, and we are still reeling as a result of it.

"Right now, China, Russia, India and Saudi Arabia basically own the United States. Our economy is the real target of terrorists and this is our potential downfall," says Glynn. His solution is transparent and uncomplicated... a 10% solution. "If we are to prevent another Great Depression we need to pass one simple law: All pension plans, endowments, 401(k)s and the like will be required to allocate 10% of their portfolios to buy back U.S. debt and currency."

With more than 40 trillion dollars currently invested in these types of accounts, Glynn asserts that some four trillion dollars could be freed up in a matter of days to wipe out the national debt, buy back the $1.6 trillion in U.S. debt currently owned by China and more. He suggests that approximately one trillion dollars go into a 10-year Zero Coupon Bond with the proceeds ultimately going back to the endowments and pension plans. "Rather than seeing this as simply giving money back to the government, it's really a 10-year interest-free loan that has incredible benefits," he explains.

He believes the immediate increase in world confidence with respect to the United States, the anticipated rise in the value of the U.S. dollar, as well as the boost to the overall economy would have far reaching and dramatic impact on equity prices. "In the very near term, the 10% allocation would almost undoubtedly be offset by a corresponding increase in the value of the remaining assets in these portfolios," Glynn continues.

If this law was enacted there would certainly be resistance at first. However, Glynn confidently predicts and openly challenges anyone to refute that there would be a massive uptick in U.S. and world markets if the National Debt were paid off. "It would cause one of the county's biggest celebrations: Liberation Day! The day the U.S. took back its economic leadership before it is squandered. This plan is so simple and powerful - I would be willing to debate any politician, pundit, talk show host or Presidential candidate on its validity," Glynn says.

Glynn believes that we should be a nation of savers, not borrowers. He is also calling for an increase in the minimum wage and for 5% of all wages (up to $50,000) to be placed into low-interest bearing "deficit or economy bonds." "This would create another account with a surplus of trillions of dollars that could be used to funnel money back into the economy for infrastructure, social security, health care and more. It would put America back into the hands of Americans... not foreign entities or governments," he concludes.

About Collective IQ:
Collective IQ is a Global Asset Management and Advisory Firm focused exclusively on Corporate Venture Capital. In 2007, CIQ was ranked the top corporate venture platform by the leadership of the Strategic Venture Association.

Collective IQ is supported by one of the world's largest asset management companies with US$ 600 billion under management. CIQ works on behalf of its investors and corporate partners to deliver superior returns and to commercialize disruptive technologies.

About the Book "Left on Red : How to Ignite, Leverage and Build Visionary Organizations"

Venture capitalist Bill Glynn (Billy G), ranked one of the world's top innovators by Information Week magazine, presents an insider's view of the way great businesses are built.

"Left on Red" www.amazon.com reveals how visionary thinkers and risk-takers build great companies. Bill Glynn provides an insider's view into some of the world's coolest deals in a refreshingly politically incorrect, intelligent manner. Google, Apple, and YouTube are the products of leaders who break the old rules of business to bring their radical ideas to life. Armed with a wealth of examples and innovative insights, Glynn shows entrepreneurs and executives how to navigate a business landscape often littered with great ideas and innovators who are unprepared to lead.

QUOTE

Folks we're 12209 -Craig

Urgent Update: Landry "5-Minute Chart Breakdown!"

I just had a call from my stock broker friend Robin Landry with an urgent report.

"George, the 5-minute chart is in breakdown mode if I am reading it right - means that the market may close down 350 or more today. Let me explain the technical picture:

Based on the movement in the 5-minute chart, either today or early next week we are likely to go down and test the 12,269 Dow level. now, if we get through that, the next major level of support comes around 10,986. Look for the PPT to be in action late session today or early next week unless something big changes.

Then if we get through that, the 10,986 level, we could see all hell break loose and Bob Prechter could be right. We could be looking at a retest within a week or two of the 7,400 levels which came in as the 2002 lows.

"OK, what about oil and commodities?"

"George there are two wave counts on oil. One of them says the price of oil shoots up to about $150 and then comes down to around $50. But the other says that oil have an extended fifth wave which would take it up to the $300 to $500 a barrel range."

I then asked Landry what he thought about the Big Picture. One of his concerns is that if it looks like we're going to take out the 12,269 level, then the Fed will have to come in with the PPT and they will have to pump like crazy. However, if you're keeping track, I think the Fed has burned through $450 billion of their $600 billion credit facility, and a major run in the markets now, especially if coupled with another major player bankruptcy of another investment bank, would put the quality of the US dollar in serious question.

If THAT happens, there would be a huge crisis of confidence in the currency, which would give us the momentum to the downside to attack the 10,986 level, and should that fail, then the way is open for 7,400. But, because the dollar would be collapsing, and remember this is what the predictive linguistics have been forecasting, then we could get a huge burst of inflation in the commodities and gold which are real things, as opposed to notional.

Landry (email: rlandry@allegiance.tv) is hoping, like any rational person would, that events don't work out this way. But, in case you were wondering, this would lead to the kind of hyperinflationary blow-off top in commodity markets which I've been positioned for in my personal account for a couple of months. The trick, if it happens, will be to take the commodity gains at the top and then roll in to the very defensive sectors like foreign denominated paper and US Treasuries (like Jas Jain has been in for a good long while) because at that point, after a hyperinflationary burst, we could be setting up for the long Kondratiev Wave long Winter's night.

This is not investment advice. You own your own paper, kiddo.

QUOTE

400 Point Question: "So, How did you do?"

7 June 2008
http://urbansurvival.com/week.htm

So along comes a bummer of a Friday and you're planning for the long weekend when "Whap!" the market starts to slide and oil goes screaming skyward. You click over to this site at 9:45 AM and read Robin Landry's prediction of a possible close down 350-points. Today, we have to ask the sometimes difficult question: "How did you do?"

OK, the drop was the eighth worst in the history of the Dow - but I reckon we could do even worse next week, not that key support (by Landry's work, 12,269) has been broken.

I don't mind sharing my portfolio's performance. I was down $39-bucks for the day, would have actually been a small gain, but coffee dropped a bit in the commodity market after being up earlier.. What the hell, right?

My outlook on the markets for quite some time has been that a person would have to be a darned fool to be loaded up on paper assets which are little more than paper with ink - the same kind of stuff that I can crank out of my laser printer.. Of course, because I won't break counterfeiting, or any other laws that I'm aware of, I won't put "Good for all debts Public and Private" on it, although even that is disappearing with some stores now requiring credit cards in order to comply with anti-terrorism laws, but that's another discussion.

A long term chart of the S&P sure looks like a double top is in to some of our readers.

QUOTE

Trouble Ahead? Bank on it!

June 7 2008
http://urbansurvival.com/week.htm

An email from a reader got my attention:

Hi George, reading your site on daily basis; thanks for the common sense and the unfiltered info. Here's my question: recently I was in Europe and I tried opening an account in a European bank (in Paris to be exact), the manager looked straight into my eyes and said that they have a directive from high above not to open accounts for US citizens and actually they have asked every us citizen who has an account with them to leave the bank (banks name is ), very disappointed I created a havoc about discrimination, human rights etc (with bankers? what was I thinking?), then I lectured my wife (she's French) about the freedoms in our country and rotten values in Europe; a week later I'm in LA in my bank (Bank of ) where my friend is the manager and he told me that they've just asked all euro pen citizens to clear the bank; plain and simple, to take their money and get lost; what do you thing is going on? something is in works.

Yes. It's warring currencies! What have we been telling you? $139 oil is just the start! First we hy6perinflate and then we collapse. Quite simple. The monetarists mantra "Crack-up Boom" comes to mind, eh? For recent pointers, instead of going to Europe, next time try Argentina or still, Zimbabwe where the currency has become unusable. You see, that's the beauty of digidollars. Just slide the decimal point and keep on printing....

QUOTE

'The Running Man' intro

I've just had a quick thought. If one watches the beginning of the film 'The Running Man,' they will see that the economy collapses in 2017. Now folks I put it to you like this, we're seeing the likely hood of this by October this year which is 2008. Now folks please take a look at 2017, now what if we add the 1 and 7 together? We get a figure of 8! So was that some sort of coding maybe for 2008? No one else seems to have thought of this yet.

-Craig Oxley

QUOTE

The Running Man (pt 1)

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/bwOOkb-FyU8&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/bwOOkb-FyU8&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

QUOTE (CRAIG-OXLEY @ Aug 18 2008, 03:51 AM)

Trouble Ahead? Bank on it!

June 7 2008
http://urbansurvival.com/week.htm

An email from a reader got my attention:

Hi George, reading your site on daily basis; thanks for the common sense and the unfiltered info. Here's my question: recently I was in Europe and I tried opening an account in a European bank (in Paris to be exact), the manager looked straight into my eyes and said that they have a directive from high above not to open accounts for US citizens and actually they have asked every us citizen who has an account with them to leave the bank (banks name is ), very disappointed I created a havoc about discrimination, human rights etc (with bankers? what was I thinking?), then I lectured my wife (she's French) about the freedoms in our country and rotten values in Europe; a week later I'm in LA in my bank (Bank of ) where my friend is the manager and he told me that they've just asked all euro pen citizens to clear the bank; plain and simple, to take their money and get lost; what do you thing is going on? something is in works.

Yes. It's warring currencies! What have we been telling you? $139 oil is just the start! First we hy6perinflate and then we collapse. Quite simple. The monetarists mantra "Crack-up Boom" comes to mind, eh? For recent pointers, instead of going to Europe, next time try Argentina or still, Zimbabwe where the currency has become unusable. You see, that's the beauty of digidollars. Just slide the decimal point and keep on printing....

European Banking

I reported recently about how a European bank was deliberately discouraging an American from opening an account. Seems this is becoming widespread as another reader checks in with this:

"George, I got the same treatment from an Irish bank in Vienna about six weeks ago. My wife and I have had a trust account there since 1994 and tried to open two individual ones instead. Our account rep said she talked to two supervisors and both rejected it. Said that complying with US regs was beyond them now (this from a bank that practically wrote the book on serving US customers) and that they no longer accept US clients.

We are stuck there for now. A Singaporean friend of mine said to try HSBC in Singapore. The Asians want to scoop up all the business the Europeans are tossing away."

Nice to know that even though we may not be secure from terrorism, we are at least secure from some bankers...

QUOTE

RBS issues global stock and credit crash alert

By Ambrose Evans-Pritchard
Last Updated: 11:44pm BST 17/06/2008
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/money/main.jhtm...18/cnrbs118.xml

The Royal Bank of Scotland has advised clients to brace for a full-fledged crash in global stock and credit markets over the next three months as inflation paralyses the major central banks.

"A very nasty period is soon to be upon us - be prepared," said Bob Janjuah, the bank's credit strategist.

A report by the bank's research team warns that the S&P 500 index of Wall Street equities is likely to fall by more than 300 points to around 1050 by September as "all the chickens come home to roost" from the excesses of the global boom, with contagion spreading across Europe and emerging markets.

Such a slide on world bourses would amount to one of the worst bear markets over the last century.

RBS said the iTraxx index of high-grade corporate bonds could soar to 130/150 while the "Crossover" index of lower grade corporate bonds could reach 650/700 in a renewed bout of panic on the debt markets.

"I do not think I can be much blunter. If you have to be in credit, focus on quality, short durations, non-cyclical defensive names.

"Cash is the key safe haven. This is about not losing your money, and not losing your job," said Mr Janjuah, who became a City star after his grim warnings last year about the credit crisis proved all too accurate.

RBS expects Wall Street to rally a little further into early July before short-lived momentum from America's fiscal boost begins to fizzle out, and the delayed effects of the oil spike inflict their damage.

"Globalisation was always going to risk putting G7 bankers into a dangerous corner at some point. We have got to that point," he said.

US Federal Reserve and the European Central Bank both face a Hobson's choice as workers start to lose their jobs in earnest and lenders cut off credit.

The authorities cannot respond with easy money because oil and food costs continue to push headline inflation to levels that are unsettling the markets. "The ugly spoiler is that we may need to see much lower global growth in order to get lower inflation," he said.

"The Fed is in panic mode. The massive credibility chasms down which the Fed and maybe even the ECB will plummet when they fail to hike rates in the face of higher inflation will combine to give us a big sell-off in risky assets," he said.

Kit Jukes, RBS's head of debt markets, said Europe would not be immune. "Economic weakness is spreading and the latest data on consumer demand and confidence are dire. The ECB is hell-bent on raising rates.

"The political fall-out could be substantial as finance ministers from the weaker economies rail at the ECB. Wider spreads between the German Bunds and peripheral markets seem assured," he said.

Ultimately, the bank expects the oil price spike to subside as the more powerful force of debt deflation takes hold next year.

QUOTE

Morgan Stanley warns of 'catastrophic event' as ECB fights Federal Reserve

By Ambrose Evans-Pritchard, International Business Editor
Last Updated: 1:29am BST 17/06/2008
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/money/main.jhtm...C-mostviewedbox

The clash between the European Central Bank and the US Federal Reserve over monetary strategy is causing serious strains in the global financial system and could lead to a replay of Europe's exchange rate crisis in the 1990s, a team of bankers has warned.

"We see striking similarities between the transatlantic tensions that built up in the early 1990s and those that are accumulating again today. The outcome of the 1992 deadlock was a major currency crisis and a recession in Europe," said a report by Morgan Stanley's European experts.

Just as then, Washington has slashed rates to bail out the banks and prevent an economic hard-landing, while Frankfurt has stuck to its hawkish line - ignoring angry protests from politicians and squeals of pain from Europe's export industry.

Indeed, the ECB has let the de facto interest rate - Euribor - rise by over 100 basis points since the credit crisis began.

Just as then, the dollar has plummeted far enough to cause worldwide alarm. In August 1992 it fell to 1.35 against the Deutsche Mark: this time it has fallen even further to the equivalent of 1.25. It is potentially worse for Europe this time because the yen and yuan have also fallen to near record lows. So has sterling.

ECB in no mood to rescue us from debtadvertisementMorgan Stanley doubts that Europe's monetary union will break up under pressure, but it warns that corked pressures will have to find release one way or another.

This will most likely occur through property slumps and banking purges in the vulnerable countries of the Club Med region and the euro-satellite states of Eastern Europe.

"The tensions will not disappear into thin air. They will find fault lines on the periphery of Europe. Painful macro adjustments are likely to take place. Pegs to the euro could be questioned," said the report, written by Eric Chaney, Carlos Caceres, and Pasquale Diana.

The point of maximum stress could occur in coming months if the ECB carries out the threat this month by Jean-Claude Trichet to raise rates. It will be worse yet - for Europe - if the Fed backs away from expected tightening. "This could trigger another 'catastrophic' event," warned Morgan Stanley.

The markets have priced in two US rates rises later this year following a series of "hawkish" comments by Fed chief Ben Bernanke and other US officials, but this may have been a misjudgment.

An article in the Washington Post by veteran columnist Robert Novak suggested that Mr Bernanke is concerned that runaway oil costs will cause a slump in growth, viewing inflation as the lesser threat. He is irked by the ECB's talk of further monetary tightening at such a dangerous juncture.

The contrasting approaches in Washington and Frankfurt make some sense. America's flexible structure allows it to adjust quickly to shocks. Europe's more rigid system leaves it with "sticky" prices that take longer to fall back as growth slows.

Morgan Stanley says the current account deficits of Spain (10.5pc of GDP), Portugal (10.5pc), and Greece (14pc) would never have been able to reach such extreme levels before the launch of the euro.

EMU has shielded them from punishment by the markets, but this has allowed them to store up serious trouble. By contrast, Germany now has a huge surplus of 7.7pc of GDP.

The imbalances appear to be getting worse. The latest food and oil spike has pushed eurozone inflation to a record 3.7pc, with big variations by country. Spanish inflation is rising at 4.7pc even though the country is now in the grip of a full-blown property crash. It is still falling further behind Germany. The squeeze required to claw back lost competitiveness will be "politically unpalatable".

Morgan Stanley said the biggest risk lies in the arc of countries from the Baltics to the Black Sea where credit growth has been roaring at 40pc to 50pc a year. Current account deficits have reached 23pc of GDP in Latvia, and 22pc in Bulgaria. In Hungary and Romania, over 55pc of household debt is in euros or Swiss francs.

Swedish, Austrian, Greek and Italian banks have provided much of the funding for the credit booms. A crunch is looming in 2009 when a wave of maturities fall due. "Could the funding dry up? We think it could," said the bank.

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 01:25 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

Seat Belts Won't Help

18 Jun 2008
http://urbansurvival.com/week.htm

A number of market technical letters have been forwarded to me in the past couple of days reporting that a very rare technical confluence called the Hindenburg Omen has appeared in the markets having been confirmed with Monday's action. The Wikipedia write up goes like this:

The traditional definition of a Hindenburg Omen has five criteria:

That the daily number of NYSE new 52 Week Highs and the daily number of new 52 Week Lows must both be greater than 2.2 percent of total NYSE issues traded that day.

That the smaller of these numbers is greater than 75. (this is not a rule but a function of the 2.2% of the total issues)

That the NYSE 10 Week moving average is rising.

That the McClellan Oscillator is negative on that same day.

That new 52 Week Highs cannot be more than twice the new 52 Week Lows (however it is fine for new 52 Week Lows to be more than double new 52 Week Highs). This condition is absolutely mandatory.

These measures are calculated each evening using Wall Street Journal figures for consistency. The occurrence of all five criteria on one day is often referred to as an unconfirmed Hindenburg Omen. A confirmed Hindenburg Omen occurs if a second (or more) Hindenburg Omen signals occur during a 36-day period from the first signal.

Getting ahead of events, as I forget and do every once in a while - being often accused of living about 10-minutes in the future anyway, you may wish to click back to the May 21 report where I laid some of the groundwork for the problem at hand under the headline (a little more than a third of the way down the page) "$130 Oil: Meantime Here on the Hindenburg". I don't usually quote myself, but let's see how the following looks now that the Hindenburg Omen has appeared:

"The Fed now finds itself between a rock and a hard place: On the one hand we need to have lots of liquidity in the financial system, and so instead of demanding high quality assets to back up borrowing at the Fed's discount window, it's 'bring whatever you have' that would otherwise send honest accountants scurrying fleeing for fear of prison terms.

If the Fed didn't have this policy, we'd already be in a Depression.

Worse? The amount of malinvestment that has been run up since the last Great Depression (which in turn needs to be wrung out of the economy before honest growth can resume) absolutely dwarf's anything in history. When this thing all goes kablooey, it will make the South Seas Bubble look like a cakewalk and the Depression like a bad weekend.

Still, what's a Fed to do? If there's no liquidity, there's no "money" (such as it is) to buy oil and the consumer goods from China, since damn near all production has been outsourced along with incomprehensible foreign "customer service" agents. WASF. Got your survival garden in?"

As you're probably suspecting by now, all this leads to what is likely the biggest story of the day in all of the press, yet one which only a very few, like Ambrose-Evans Pritchard, International Business Editor of the Telegraph over in the UK, has been putting in print. This headline ought to scare the hell out of you:

"RBS Offers global stock and credit crash alert:"

At hand, says the article, is the potential for disaster as inflation rears its ugly head, something I've referred to as the (von Mises) Crack-up Boom.

"How bad could it be?" you're wondering; after all the PPT will save the day, right?

Sadly, likely not. Although the President's Working Group on Financial Markets has a large bundle of cash in their Exchange Stabilization Fund which is specifically earmarked for maintaining economic order in currency markets (lest oil really go to $500 a barrel), a broad based global attack on the Dollar could easily swamp the small funds the government has. The game plan is to aggressively get ahead of the problem and remain one step ahead of disaster where the size is manageable.

"Has RBS been channeling you and Robin Landry?" one early-riser wondered in an email.

Most likely not. Presumably, these group of bankers can see the handwriting on the wall as well as anyone else, which in case you missed it, features a continuing collapse of the housing market, an inflation rate of finished goods in the Producer Price Index running at an unadjusted 17+% and oil that has been testing $140 for a breakout to $150 and above.

Oh, did I mention the flooding in the Midwest which means that ultimately, the US will have less food available for export, thereby putting us further behind the eight ball in the Balance of Trade department?

Not to put too fine a point on it, but headlines like "Mississippi River breaks through Illinois levee" and "Corn equals record high on floods, soy up" should be enough to send you scurrying to put in a fall planting in that garden I've been urging you to put in..

Beyond that, it should be spurring you to some serious "dot-connecting'.

One example would be to note that "Bush will urge Congress to lift offshore oil drilling ban". Why? Because with a big burst of inflation in the works, members of congress will no doubt see that unless we get some domestic oil flowing, times will continue to get event worse, as the US Dollar collapse which I expect to return with a vengeance over the summer and into fall, pushes the price of oil toward $300, not just the obvious $150 target that could be mere weeks away.

Now, back to the impact of high reliance on foreign oil and devastated crops. for a moment.

The Bureau of Economic Analysis released an update on Q!-08 International Transactions on Tuesday. The short version of it is this:

"The U.S. current-account deficit--the combined balances on trade in goods and services, income, and net unilateral current transfers--increased to $176.4 billion (preliminary) in the first quarter of 2008 from $167.2 billion (revised) in the fourth quarter of 2007. The increase was mostly accounted for by a decrease in the surplus on income. In addition, the deficit on goods and net unilateral current transfers to foreigners both increased. An increase in the surplus on services was partly offsetting.

I don't know if you're awake enough to check me on this, but this sure smacks of a 5.32% quarterly change. And that pushes out to a 23% annual rate of increase.

But of course, it doesn't. It's actually much worse than that because at some point the markets global go non-linear short the dollar. Recent jaw-boning about the mythical "Strong Dollar Policy" (so mythical that the Wiki entry is basically missing) has likely about run its course, and my the solstice, I expect we'll be completing the "bounce" phase of the buck's latest advance and be ready for the next leg down on the currency, which should spark the next huge spike up in oils and metals; these things run as tides.

Thanks to the magic of compounding interest, no one wants to talk about what happens with all that US debt paper sloshing around the world, but with food now coming into short enough supply that we could actually run out of corn before the 2009 crop comes in, I suppose the RBS experts are simply stating the obvious. Which is not spoken of in US MainStreamMedia (MSM) for fear of setting off premature panic. We'll have the well-seasoned, saw-it-coming type along soon enough.

In May, Larry Matlack of the American Agriculture Movement made the case:

“According to the May 1, 2008 CCC inventory report there are only 24.1 million bushels of wheat in inventory, so after this sale there will be only 2.7 million bushels of wheat left the entire CCC inventory,” warned Matlack. “Our concern is not that we are using the remainder of our strategic grain reserves for humanitarian relief. AAM fully supports the action and all humanitarian food relief. Our concern is that the U.S. has nothing else in our emergency food pantry. There is no cheese, no butter, no dry milk powder, no grains or anything else left in reserve. The only thing left in the entire CCC inventory will be 2.7 million bushels of wheat which is about enough wheat to make ½ of a loaf of bread for each of the 300 million people in America.”

To summarize: America keeps spending more than we produce enabled by formerly willing buyers of US debt instruments. With travel on the verge of collapse due to oil prices, I'm just guessing Boeing will have a tougher time selling jets, which in turn would hurt the balance of trade. With less grain to sell, grain sales overseas will drop, and this at a time when the compound interest which we've been promising on our debt-paper is passing into the non-linear compounding stage.

Yes, it ought to be quite a site to see.

"This guy out in East Texas is a nutjob," you're thinking to yourself. "How can anyone have such an outlook and still claim to be optimistic?"

First, let me say it's not just me that holds the "get ready for worse than bad" - it's now the bankers at RBS who see it.

Secondly, the alternative view which seems more closely linked to reality than the MSM-spoon-fed pabulum is widely and commonly available for anyone who's willing to do a little slogging around on the 'net.

One good starting point is former presidential hopeful Ross Perot's website "Perot Charts" which explains it in boardroom level charts.

I suppose it would be duplication of previous suggestions to read up on what Ron Paul and other green/libertarian/Constitutionalists have been saying about banker-owned money policies that have resulted in the highest concentration of wealth at the top in history. So much so that it's becoming obvious to the degree that CNBC has a special report coming up June 26th "CNBC Presents: "Untold Wealth: Rise of the Super Rich". No, they haven't asked to interview me, either.

For most of us, the trick will be simply preserving our wealth and property through the coming year. And remember, this is before we get to the likely quake windows (according to the predictive linguistics team at HPH) which comes between June 21 and about September 1 with a question mark about July 7-9, and then something big just before mid-December.

Unfortunately, those events will also add to the horrific economic disaster because as we read Tuesday: "American Red Cross: Disaster Funds are depleted." National Guard forces that would normally be on hand to lead recovery efforts, I don't need to remind you, have already been serving their country in the Bush-Cheney oil wars, although there's an economic stimulus to that which can't be overlooked in that it has kept unemployment in check and resulted in massive windfalls for certain companies with connections to the White House.

I won't even try to list the unreported news about the Wars, or for that matter items like the headline "USA Military Officers Challenge Official Account of September 11" which got no traction in MSM but which pops up in places like Pakistan. So, who's got the 'free press' franchise, at least by their market claims?

So where does this stew put us at mid week? I mean besides the headline "Fed's Bear Stearns Books Look Prime for Cooking" which leads into a good summary of Fed accounting shenanigans outlined by Jonathan Weil today. And you know there are people raising a ruckus about the NY Fed's secret meetings to dole out Fed mercy payments to the banksters of the rich?

The Fed Open Markets Committee meets next Tuesday and Wednesday with a rate decision expected out around1 2:15 PM Wednesday. We can almost take "Pass" and hold at 2% to the bank now.

Will seat belts help? Nope, not a chance. Just projecting a 23% annualized rate in the current accounts deficit means that $172 oil is a slam dunk within a year, no matter what. Unless we crash, that is. Then oil collapses along with everything else.

That sets up a wonderful window for regular working people to 'fire-proof' their life savings. Seems to me that with headlines like "European bonds fall for fifth week on Interest-rate Speculation" that we may see a window of opportunity over the course of late summer to blow out of equities and roll into government-backed bonds (and not just of the US, BTW) in order to preserve purchasing power and wealth through what could be a wildly deflationary period following what I expect will be the fall in the Fall.

Heavy Duty Weather Control

The headlines that Russia is messing about with weather control comes as no surprise, of course. But, what does is that they use sacks of cement dumped out of planes to throw particular into the atmosphere. And that sometimes doesn't work out as planned and the bags drop unopened. Concrete proof of weather control?

QUOTE

RBS stock market alert: Fund managers react

Fund managers respond to the RBS prediction of a fully-fledged stock market crash.

Last Updated: 12:19am BST 19/06/2008
By Paul Farrow
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/money/main.jhtm...C-mostviewedbox

Fund managers have reacted strongly to the forecast by the Royal Bank of Scotland of stock market crash and warn investors not to act in haste and panic.

The Royal Bank of Scotland has advised clients to brace for a full-fledged crash in global stock and credit markets over the next three months as inflation paralyses the major central banks.

Stock market storm: but do turbulent times really lie ahead?

"A very nasty period is soon to be upon us - be prepared," said Bob Janjuah, the bank's credit strategist. But Richard Buxton, fund manager at Schroders, says Mr Janjuah's comments are 'alarmist'.

"If you strip out anything stocks related to oil, energy and mining in the FTSE you will see that the market is already down by 30 per cent over the past year. We are in a bear market which has been masked by the performance of those sectors."

Buxton points out that many UK shares closely connected to the slowing economy are down between 50 and 80 per cent over the year already and it is too late for investors who have yet to protect their portfolios. They will merely crystallise losses, he says.

"Yes, we are in for a tough time and there may be another sell-off but average earnings are cheap and an awful lot of the bad news is already priced in. It is too late to sell, investors need to look through the volatility - I am investing aggressively on downturns. Any falls will be temporary - the falls are simply pushing down on a spring in valuation terms."

Robin Geffen, chief investment officer at Neptune Asset Management says that he finds it 'amusing' that the grim outlook from RBS has emerged just days after the beleaguered bank completed its Rights Issue.

He echoes Buxton's sentiments. "The RBS analyst is a bit late with his forecast, about a year and half late. We have already had a bear market in many areas of the market. The guy has got the financial world confused with the real world where the consumer is real and the building of infrastructure is real. Any parallels to the stock market crash in the late 1920's are ga-ga."

Geffen argues that there is value and opportunities to be found - he has around 10 per cent in cash and is selectively adding to his portfolios.

"I still like emerging market, oil, gas and mining stocks."

The RBS report warns that the S&P 500 index of Wall Street equities is likely to fall by more than 300 points to around 1050 by September as "all the chickens come home to roost" from the excesses of the global boom, with contagion spreading across Europe and emerging markets.

Such a slide on world bourses would amount to one of the worst bear markets over the last century.

"Cash is the key safe haven. This is about not losing your money, and not losing your job," said Mr Janjuah, who became a City star after his grim warnings last year about the credit crisis proved all too accurate.

Yet Martin Walker, fund manager at Invesco Perpetual says the market has de-rated to such an extent that he can't envisage the market falling much from here.

"Much of the market is trading on historic low valuations, aside from the resource and basic materials. Even if those sectors fall by half it will not make a massive difference to the overall fall in the FTSE."

Walker is keen on the pharmaceutical stocks such as GlaxoSmithKline and AstraZeneca because they are uncorrelated to the economic cycle.

"There are also great opportunities to invest in companies that are growing profits and growing sustainable dividends. BT is yielding 7.5 per cent - and it is a safe yield – that's fantastic value."

Leading portfolio manager John Chatfeild-Roberts at Jupiter admits that the US economy which is teetering on the brink of a recession is a concern and that stagflation (stagnant economic growth and rising inflation) remains a real threat to all Western economies. But he is looking to invest and make the most of the volatility.

He has recently increased his exposure to Japan which he reckons is the one major economy in the world that will benefit from the re-emergence of inflation.

He adds: "The portfolios remain very underweight the UK, which is still in the early stages of a significant consumer slow down. We are underweight financials and have no direct property exposure. On the other hand, we favour a variety of energy, infrastructure and emerging market plays and think that the current risk/reward ratio of investing in good quality corporate bonds to be very favourable. We will look to increase our exposure to these securities where appropriate. We do expect volatility to pick up over the summer months and look forward to taking advantage of this across the portfolios."

QUOTE

Nosebleed for the Markets

21 Jun 2008
http://urbansurvival.com/week.htm

When we were chatting last Saturday morning, the Dow had just closed out the week at 12,307.35. This morning, I can't help but notice that the Dow has closed at 11,842.69 for the week and if you're awake enough to handle a calculator, pencil, of still have enough mental acuity to do it in your head, that's a little more than a 464 point drop for the week.

If you're wondering why the market took a dive, there were plenty of 'reasons' proposed on MSM outlets. One of the reasons cited was Israel's Iran War dry run, which in turn caused a bump up in oil prices, leading to headlines like "Crude oil jumps on Israel-Iran bomb talk."

That in turn led to the Russian foreign minister warning against an attack, but the price of oil paid no mind and went up anyway.

A second factor in oil's rise was the continuing deterioration of the domestic situation in Nigeria, where rebels are suggesting that foreign workers exit while they can.

And all those headlines were extra-bad for the automakers, especially when mixed in with a Standard and Poor's plan to cut the credit/debt ratings of GM, Ford, and Chrysler.

All of which gets us around to the question "What's next?"

In a mid-session chat Friday, Robin Landry made an interesting suggestions. "George, in one of your Peoplenomics reports, maybe you should lay out what life would be like with $500 oil, $25 gas, and all the rest of what could be coming..."

He then went on to explain how the next couple of weeks will be pivotal. One wave count would have us spent a little more time at these levels, but above 11,700, and then take off with a final moonshot of the Dow to well over 14,700 - maybe even as high as 16,000 or greater, before getting to the massive collapse that will come as the world's greatest-ever paper bubble collapses.

On the other hand, if we sink through the 11,700 level, and then under 10,000, we can pretty much expect the conclusion of the decline to take us down to the 2001-2002 kind of lows (with 7,400 as a target) and perhaps even below that.

So we'll just bide our time and see what comes next. The Big Players are winding up Q2 and balancing their books.

The specific problem is that Q1 ended with the Dow at 12,262.89 and the year began from a 2007 close of 13,264.82.

Not counting dividends, the Dow has lost 10.7% of its value in the first six months of the year, something that is not being widely reported in mainstream media.

To be sure, there aren't many mutual funds that invest as the Dow, so a look at the S&P is a little more fair. It ended 2007 at 1468.36 and closed Friday at 1,317.93. So excluding dividends and the hidden fees (which Bloomberg's Mike Schneider did a fine job of reporting on this week - click for short video) the year to date decline has only been 10.2%

Not that people will be able to do anything about it, as the PowersThatBe are still firmly in control. Expect to hear the term "buy and hold" all over mainstream media in the coming few weeks.

QUOTE

ALL THE LATEST STOCK MARKET FIGURES

http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...showtopic=10592

QUOTE

http://www.the-privateer.com/1933-gold-confiscation.html

The Gold Confiscation Of April 5, 1933

From: President of the United States Franklin Delano Roosevelt
To: The United States Congress
Dated: 5 April, 1933
Presidential Executive Order 6102

Forbidding the Hoarding of Gold Coin, Gold Bullion and Gold Certificates By virtue of the authority vested in me by Section 5(B) of the Act of October 6, 1917, as amended by Section 2 of the Act of March 9, 1933, entitled

An Act to provide relief in the existing national emergency in banking, and for other purposes~', in which amendatory Act Congress declared that a serious emergency exists,

I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, do declare that said national emergency still continues to exist and pursuant to said section to do hereby prohibit the hoarding gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates within the continental United States by individuals, partnerships, associations and corporations and hereby prescribe the following regulations for carrying out the purposes of the order:

Section 1. For the purpose of this regulation, the term 'hoarding" means the withdrawal and withholding of gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates from the recognized and customary channels of trade. The term "person" means any individual, partnership, association or corporation.

Section 2. All persons are hereby required to deliver on or before May 1, 1933, to a Federal Reserve bank or a branch or agency thereof or to any member bank of the Federal Reserve System all gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates now owned by them or coming into their ownership on or before April 28, 1933, except the following:

(a) Such amount of gold as may be required for legitimate and customary use in industry, profession or art within a reasonable time, including gold prior to refining and stocks of gold in reasonable amounts for the usual trade requirements of owners mining and refining such gold.

(B) Gold coin and gold certificates in an amount not exceeding in the aggregate $100.00 belonging to any one person; and gold coins having recognized special value to collectors of rare and unusual coins.

© Gold coin and bullion earmarked or held in trust for a recognized foreign government or foreign central bank or the Bank for International Settlements.

(d) Gold coin and bullion licensed for the other proper transactions (not involving hoarding) including gold coin and gold bullion imported for the re-export or held pending action on applications for export license.

Section 3. Until otherwise ordered any person becoming the owner of any gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates after April 28, 1933, shall within three days after receipt thereof, deliver the same in the manner prescribed in Section 2; unless such gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates are held for any of the purposes specified in paragraphs (a),(B) or © of Section 2; or unless such gold coin, gold bullion is held for purposes specified in paragraph (d) of Section 2 and the person holding it is, with respect to such gold coin or bullion, a licensee or applicant for license pending action thereon.

Section 4. Upon receipt of gold coin, gold bullion, or gold certificates delivered to it in accordance with Section 2 or 3, the Federal reserve bank or member bank will pay thereof an equivalent amount of any other form of coin or currency coined or issued under the laws of the Unites States.

Section 5. Member banks shall deliver alt gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates owned or received by them (other than as exempted under the provisions of Section 2) to the Federal reserve banks of there respective districts and receive credit or payment thereof.

Section 6. The Secretary of the Treasury, out of the sum made available to the President by Section 501 of the Act of March 9, 1933, will in all proper cases pay the reasonable costs of transportation of gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates delivered to a member bank or Federal reserve bank in accordance with Sections 2, 3, or 5 hereof, including the cost of insurance, protection, and such other incidental costs as may be necessary, upon production of satisfactory evidence of such costs. Voucher forms for this purpose may be procured from Federal reserve banks.

Section 7. In cases where the delivery of gold coin, gold bullion, or gold certificates by the owners thereof within the time set forth above will involve extraordinary hardship or difficulty, the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, extend the time within which such delivery must be made. Applications for such extensions must be made in writing under oath; addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury and filed with a Federal reserve bank. Each applications must state the date to which the extension is desired, the amount and location of the gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates in respect of which such application is made and the facts showing extension to be necessary to avoid extraordinary hardship or difficulty.

Section 8. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to issue such further regulations as he may deem necessary to carry the purposes of this order and to issue licenses there under, through such officers or agencies as he may designate, including licenses permitting the Federal reserve banks and member banks of the Federal Reserve System, in return for an equivalent amount of other coin, currency or credit, to deliver, earmark or hold in trust gold coin or bullion to or for persons showing the need for same for any of the purposes specified in paragraphs (a), ©, and (d) of Section 2 of these regulations.

Section 9. Whoever willfully violates any provision of this Executive Order or these regulation or of any rule, regulation or license issued there under may be fined not more than $10,000, or,if a natural person may be imprisoned for not more than ten years or both; and any officer, director, or agent of any corporation who knowingly participates in any such violation may be punished by a like fine, imprisonment, or both.

This order and these regulations may be modified or revoked at any time.
/s/
Franklin D. Roosevelt
President of the United States of America
April 5, 1933

QUOTE

Analyst tips 30 per cent stock plunge

By Nick Gardner June 21, 2008 12:00am http://www.news.com.au/business/money/stor...5013953,00.html

A TOP UK credit strategist from Royal Bank of Scotland is warning clients that the US stockmarket could fall 30 per cent within three months and lead to one of the worst bear markets of the past 100 years.

Bob Janjuah, a star credit analyst who correctly predicted the credit crisis before it kicked in last year, says the global economy is on a collision course with disaster because of high inflation, oil prices and continued fallout from the credit crunch.

He says the US may see a rally into July before short-lived momentum from America's fiscal boost begins to fizzle out and the delayed effects of the oil-price spike really do their damage.

He says that the fall in US markets will be echoed in Europe and emerging markets, which would have knock-on effects for Australia.

"A very nasty period is soon to be upon us -- be prepared," he said. "US Federal Reserve and the European Central Bank both face a `Hobson's choice' as workers begin to lose their jobs in earnest and lenders cut off credit."

The crunch is, he says, that authorities cannot respond by lowering interest rates because oil and food costs continue to push inflation up to uncomfortable levels.

"The Fed is in panic mode. The massive credibility chasms down which the Fed and even the ECB will plummet when they fail to hike rates in the face of higher inflation will combine to give us a big sell-off in risky assets."

"The ugly spoiler is that we may have to see much lower global growth in order to get lower inflation."

Local pain

Chief economist of AMP Capital Shane Oliver says that if the RBS analysts' predictions come true, Australia may well suffer even more badly than the US.

"In recent times our market has tended to magnify both gains and losses on the US markets," he said. "When the market hit its highs in November, the US market fell 19 per cent while our market fell 26 per cent."

"Similarly, the rally from March to mid-May saw us rise by 18 per cent compared to 14 per cent in the US."

ANZ chief economist Saul Eslake agrees that equity markets may not be pricing in a full-blown US recession and falls could be on the cards but he says that the analyst has it wrong when it comes to central banks and their fight against inflation.

"If interest rates need to go up, they will go up. They (central banks) may have to make difficult decisions but they will make them, so I do not share the analyst's view about the credibility of central banks."

QUOTE

http://www.halturnershow.com/index.html

U.S. ECONOMY TO COMPLETELY, UTTERLY COLLAPSE IN SEPTEMBER!

EXPERTS NOW SAYING WHAT I'VE BEEN SAYING FOR THE PAST YEAR!

A long read but worth every moment. This expert provides exacting technical details about why the collapse is coming and why it cannot be avoided.

He also repeats what I published on this site last week, that Morgan Stanley is warning of a "catastrophic event" and the Royal Bank of Scotland is warning of a Stock Market collapse. He reveals that both MS and RBS are inside players in the illuminati and "they know what's coming."

QUOTE

Dollar Diving

Posted: June 21 2008
http://www.theinternationalforecaster.com/...y/Dollar_Diving

Dollar to fall to metals in upcoming rallies, rate hikes soon wont be able to fix economic problems, real inflation understated for years, USDX contracts plummet,why arent people fleeing from the stock market... Exchange Traded Funds are a disaster, losses from global write downs, Fed still invited to intervene in spite of failures

The dollar has once again collapsed. Get ready for the next dollar debacle and the coming rally in gold and silver which have just broken out. The elitists have lost all credibility. The would-be lords of the universe have told so many pathological lies that no one "in the know" believes anything emanating from the forked tongues of Buck-Busting, Bear-Bashing, Big-Ben Bernanke and Hanky Panky Paulson. If our Fed Head and Treasury Secretary had been characters in the Walt Disney movie entitled "Pinocchio," their noses would have quickly grown to lengths that could have been wrapped around the earth's equator several times. God would have had to reverse the earth's rotation to extricate them.

Wall Street tells us the odds favor two quarter percent rate hikes to the Fed funds rate by the end of the year. We ask whether that would be before or after the economy collapses? If before, the Fed's rate hikes will destroy what is left of our economy, and the dollar will collapse, thereby erasing any benefits from the rate hikes. If after, you will see rate cuts instead of rate hikes as the Fed attempts to save the fraudsters on Wall Street who are not even remotely close to recovering from the credit-crunch despite what the elitists might tell you to the contrary. We ask who the morons are that make up these odds, and what planet they come from. They give aliens a bad name. These index predictions are just another form of jaw-boning and disinformation.

As soon as the economy starts its final descent into Davy Jones' Locker, which is likely to occur in the very near future, the Fed and the US Treasury will unceremoniously toss the so-called "strong dollar" policy into the nearest financial dumpster in order to save the economy and the fraudsters. Accompanying the "strong dollar" policy on its way to the dumpster will be the next round of derivative toxic waste that is on its way courtesy of the upcoming surge in fallout from tanking real estate markets in a process that will see the Fed blow what remains of its general collateral in exchange for such waste. Once the Fed's general collateral is exhausted, we will be ushered into a new hyperinflationary era characterized by direct monetization of US treasuries to fund our deficits and to absorb more toxic waste as it continues to pour down on elitist financial institutions like Niagara Falls.

A few measly quarter percent cuts will do absolutely nothing to slow the acceleration of inflation, especially if the Fed keeps the M3 at current levels. Only a double-digit Fed funds rate and greatly reduced M3 could have any eventual and meaningful impact on the inflation that is built into the system for at minimum the next year and one half at levels in the area of 15% to 18%, and even then the impact will not be felt until the current baked-in inflation has run its course. Direct monetization of treasuries to replenish Fed collateral and to absorb our growing deficits will put inflation beyond the point of no return, as will the breaking of OPEC dollar pegs.

As you can see, there is no way that any of the proposed diminutive rate hikes will have a positive impact on the economy, on the dollar or on the balance sheets of the fraudsters. Therefore, there will not be any rate hikes. Any increase in the Fed funds rate would be accompanied by an economic catastrophe of epic proportions that would occur as a direct result of the raising of that rate. Any rate hike would take a year to a year and a half to have an impact on inflation. By the time the anticipated Fed rate hikes could have any kind of impact whatsoever, the economy will already be in a state of rampant hyperinflation, and would be well on its way to depression, far too late to save the dollar or the economy. Ergo, the new elitist motto will soon become: "Damn the inflation, full greed ahead!"

The Fed's and the government's lies about inflation and other economic statistics have trapped them in an impossible situation. For instance, because they have tremendously understated official inflation for so long, they cannot impose a plausible solution to fight actual inflation. Any meaningful action they might take to give people relief by lowering the level of actual inflation must be scaled down to match what they are saying about official inflation and would therefore be totally ineffective and pointless. The same scenario holds true for other economic issues as well.

As if to accentuate the collapse of the dollar, open interest on the USDX plummeted on Wednesday by a gargantuan 20,461 contracts, from 46,665 to 26,204. This also means that since last week Tuesday, when open interest was boosted by the PPT by a huge 14,393 contracts to a total of 52,520 contracts to boost the dollar and to make it look as though Big Ben really meant business about the buck, the open interest has been cut by half, with a total of 26,316 contracts having been liquidated over the course of the past week.

The last time this kind of a breakdown in USDX open interest occurred was on December 19, 2007, when open interest dropped a whopping 22,966 contracts, from 57,389 to 34,423, when the spot USDX stood at 77.587. The spot USDX then plummeted to a double bottom of 71.459 on March 17 and 71.329 on April 22, before rebounding to a recent closing high of 74.146 on June 13. This week Friday, June 20, the spot USDX has already dropped to 73.030 from its recent closing high of only a week ago as the collapse of the dollar got underway once again. Between December 19 and June 13, the closing high for the spot USDX was 77.794 set on December 20, while the all-time low was set at 70.698 on March 17. If that pattern is followed again, we could be looking at a dollar breakdown to the low to mid-67 area. Then again, we could be looking at a total collapse as hyperinflation and severe recession continue to eat away at what is left of our hapless economy. Gold and silver are headed for outer space.

We further note that as of Friday, there were 25,382 USDX futures contracts for September, 2,362 for December and only a handful for later months. There certainly does not appear to be much interest in the "strong dollar" after September, which is when the supposed rate hikes are "expected" to occur.

Gee, we wonder if it could be that traders don't believe Ben-the-Bear-Killer and Hanky Panky about the "strong dollar" policy and have a sneaking suspicion that post-election America will mark the start of the final bloodbath that will destroy the real estate, stock, bond and derivatives markets along with the US and world economies? Royal Bank of Scotland has warned of the potential for a full-fledged crash in global stock and credit markets over the next three months as inflation voraciously consumes and destroys everything in its path worldwide. Morgan Stanley has predicted a "catastrophic event" in world currency markets during the coming months as occurred in 1992 due to opposing views between the Fed and the ECB about what to do about monetary policy and inflation and due to imbalances in the ECB itself. Both RBS and MS are elitist insiders high in the food chain of Illuminist companies. They know what is coming.

The ECB is history no matter what Trichet does. If he hikes to fight inflation, the weaker members will be destroyed. If he cuts to save the weaker members, Germany, the strongest member that is carrying virtually the whole Euro Zone economy, will bolt, and the EU will be shattered by hyperinflation. Germany is the holder of most of the Euro Zone's surplus dollar forex reserves which are being destroyed by inflation. Then on top of losing purchasing power with respect to its dollar forex, Germany's citizens are fed up with inflation from a euro they view as being too weak and the vast majority of them want the Deutsche Mark back. Germans are savers and they resent having their savings destroyed by a weak euro as their wages stagnate. Germany may soon join Ireland in their political rejection of the EU and its Lisbon Treaty. Adding to Trichet's woes is the fact that if he hikes rates, and the Fed does not follow through with its jaw-boning about rate increases, which they won't, the damage to the weaker EU members will be accelerated as their exports become more expensive in the US on account of the resulting much stronger euro versus the dollar. That would make them less competitive in the US and in nation's with currencies pegged to the dollar, forcing them into tighter competition with domestic companies and with other foreign exporters of goods to the US and to other dollar-pegged economies, thereby increasing their growing trade deficits to intolerable levels. Nothing could be more positive for the US than the break-up of the EU, which will delay the evil Illuminati's plans for a one-world government for over half a century.

In reviewing the movement of the yen versus the Dow, we are astounded that every human being drawing breath on the face of our planet and that every business entity with offices located anywhere on the globe are not fleeing in terror from the general stock and bond markets along with their related derivatives. The last time the Dow closed below 12,000 (11,972.85), on March 17, the yen stood at 96.88 yen per dollar and 152.731 yen per euro. On Friday, the Dow closed below 12,000 (11,842.69) with the yen at 107.42 yen per dollar and 167.855 yen per euro. So despite yen weakness in the range of 10 yen per dollar and 15 yen per euro, the stock markets have gone nowhere. If that doesn't freaking scare you, nothing will. The carry trade can no longer carry the markets. The de-leveraging from the credit-crunch, the destruction of corporate profits, stagnant consumer spending despite the stimulus, outrageous energy and food prices, the ongoing real estate debacle, the monetary profligacy of the Fed, wars for profit and eternal deficits in our budget, our trade balance and our current account are simply too much for the markets to absorb, even with the help of the PPT. We are headed much lower. We are 100 to 200 Dow points from a total catastrophe. If gold and silver start to rally and the PPT crashes the markets with yen-hits to drain liquidity, it will be all over but the crying for stock markets worldwide.

The real catastrophe comes when elevated levels of risk push rates up despite what the Fed does with its funds rate. LIBOR is up 1% despite the Fed's lower rates and this affects mortgages, credit cards, student loans and a host of other variable rate loans that are tied to LIBOR. Higher real rates of interest will destroy principal values for corporate bonds and treasuries that are already way underwater on account of rampant inflation, and that inflation will administer the coup de grace to bonds and treasuries as everyone flees to the only real money - gold and silver. When the towel is finally thrown in on the bond and treasury markets and all that money migrates into commodities, and especially into gold and silver, you will see gold and silver move in ways you never thought possible that will delight you with shock and awe as all the money in the world pours into the tiny precious metals markets and their related shares. Already, some mainstream analysts are calling for gold prices to rise to $5,000 an ounce and beyond as investors decimated by miniscule returns in the face of hyperinflation seek to protect themselves. This latest prediction came from Schroder Investment Management Ltd., which oversees $277 billion of assets globally.

This week, the PPT tried to blow out the specs' protective derivatives by driving stocks up at the beginning of expiration week for stock index and other options. The specs struck back once again like clockwork and pounded stocks into the ground, racking up huge gains to fund the coming precious metals rally. The PPT continues to press specs who are short oil to protect metals positions, and this is partly why oil keeps dropping and popping on short squeezes that are explained away with all kinds of jaw-boning pretexts in the fane-stream media. The elitists have driven oil up while metals were suppressed to use it as a suppressive counterbalance against precious metals. This will backfire as everyone exits oil and takes their proceeds into the gold and silver pits. Stark, raving fear and the need for a safe haven from tanking markets and rampaging inflation will take over where oil left off. Resource stocks will greatly benefit from lower energy costs as oil gets tanked to hit the next metals rally, so its time to LOAD UP!!! The bottoms are in and its up, up and away!

Don't worry, be happy. The fact that the ETF's are a disaster due to the piles of gold and silver they have put into elitists hands for naked-shorting, leasing and swapping against the owners of those piles, and due to the diversion of funds away from producers' shares, is nothing to worry about. Just convert your worthless paper (ETF shares, mint certificates and leveraged futures) into physical gold and silver bullion and then take possession of it. The elitists have unwittingly drawn many into knowledge about the gold and silver markets who otherwise might have stayed clear with their ETF machinations. We can turn their ETF gambit against them! Although you have been incorrectly instructed as to how to invest in gold and silver, that is what we are here for, to tell you how to do it right. The elitists have built their position on a house of cards. Their weakness is their lack of physical gold and silver in deliverable form. If you push them, their house of cards will collapse. Only a little push is necessary. Just empty out the COMEX cupboards and the dealers vaults by taking possession, avoid the casino leverage and we can take over the markets. Then you can gamble with impunity. Fabulous fortunes will be made. If you are not sure who you can trust, call us, we'll tell you. We've been in this for 50 years. You should also consider joining Jim Sinclair's battle against naked shorting. He has some great ideas about exposing these reprobates who are stealing from us. When people find out who they are, they will be ruined and their reputations will be destroyed. You must get proactive. Do not be lazy and keep your gold and silver in paper form, unless you are buying resource stocks, which are now dirt cheap. Holders of resource stocks will be the big winners when all is said and done. The whole reason we are now in the predicament we are in is because our citizens swill beer, view meaningless sports games and watch inane television programs while their country, their economy and their freedoms fall down around their ears! Do not be like them! Go after that gold and silver like your life depends on it, because it does!!!

Regional banks are now getting hit with defaults. Huntington Bankshares, National City and Sun Trust have as much as 20% of their loans in home equity loans. The FDIC says total outstanding home equity loans total about $625 billion.

The ABC/Washington Post consumer confidence index rose 1-point last week.

The rumor is that Lehman may have to cut 20% of its workforce.

Commercial real estate investment fell 69.5% in the first four months of 2008 yoy. That is $48.2 billion versus $157.8 billion.

The quarterly CEO Economic Outlook Index fell 5-points to 74.5 in the 2nd quarter, its lowest since 10/03. They see 2008 GDP up 1.3% not 1.5%.

We stated some time ago that the losses from global write-downs and losses from the credit crisis would reach $2 trillion. John Paulson says they will reach $1.3 trillion. Finally there is someone in our league in the securities business who is willing to tell it like it is. He sees no sign of stabilization. He manages $33 billion, returned 12% ytd May and last year his fund was up 6-fold. The GAO, the Government Accounting Office, has backed Boeing's protest against the US Air Force, and its award of a $35 billion contract to Northrop Grumman-Airbus to begin replacing Stratotankers.

The MBA, Mortgage Bankers Association, purchase index for homes fell 4.3% and their market index fell 8.7%.

Another startling revelation is that the Fed doesn't follow normal accounting rules, rather it creates and writes its own as it goes along. Picture an accounting system where a bank never had to recognize losses on any security it holds, as long as it continues holding them. That, too, is the Fed's policy.

Now that the Fed has taken on Bear Stearns' toxic garbage and may have to take on more garbage in its auction exchanges of Treasuries for junk, the Fed could become a bottomless pit for garbage. In addition, the Fed's Board of Governors can change the rules anytime it wants.

The Fed has taken on $30 billion of Bear's bonds probably worth on average $0.40 on the dollar. To put that in perspective, the Fed's total capital was $40.4 billion as of 6/11/08. JP Morgan Chase will lend the Fed $1 billion to absorb any losses, which is laughable. Morgan is the Fed's biggest shareholder, so they have a sweetheart deal. If there are losses they will never be taken. They can be held on the books indefinitely at cost, never being marked to market. If they followed FASB's rules they would have to recognize a charge against net income whenever the securities declined in value.

This is a joke and this is how the Illuminists control our banking system and our lives and reap enormous profits. This is pure accounting trickery to avoid losses.

We want to see this manual, which is held in secret. We want exposure to what the Fed is doing. A reporter asked for one under the Freedom of Information Act, received it 18-days later, so redacted it was near useless.

How can anyone have any confidence in the privately owned Fed when such things go on?

What we do know now is that the Fed is lying about almost everything it does. That considered, Congress should disband the Fed and turn operations over to the US Treasury.

The risks associated with the vast, unregulated market for credit default swaps played a crucial role in the bailout – assassination of Bear Stearns, or at least that is the excuse to further enrich JP Morgan Chase, largest shareholder in the Fed.

The question now is will MBIA, the big bond insurance company, renege on a promise to shore up a crucial unit with $900 million in capital. We do not think so. They have written $137 billion in swaps, privately traded insurance contracts. In addition, MBIA insures $670 billion in municipal bonds and mortgage-related securities. We do not see how they can survive and if we are right, many bondholders will lose billions. Losses look to be $14 billion presently. The company no longer has an AAA rating.

House prices fell again in San Diego County in May, with the median reaching its lowest level, $380,000, since 9/03. That is down 23% yoy. The peak was in 11/05 at $517,500. That puts prices down 26.5%. We predict San Diego, dependent on the area, will fall 40% to 60%. As we forecasted April's slightly higher prices were misleading. New homes and condos have gotten hit the worst. May sales fell 51% in those two categories. Resale homes fell 3% by comparison. Builders dumbly refuse to stop building.

Sales of bank-owned homes made up 36% of all resale purchases. Re-sales of single-family homes fell 3% yoy, but prices of re-sales fell hard from $557,000 to $420,000 yoy.

In the first half of 2008, 36% of buyers got jumbo loans in May – only 17% did.

The correction for San Diego, which led the charge upward several years ago, is 40% to 50% from the bottom. That will take place over the next two years.

Fifth Third Bancorp, Ohio's second biggest bank, cut its dividend from $0.44 to $0.15 and must raise $2 billion.

National City Bank, Key and Fifth Third have more than $65 billion in additional losses. We forecast this would spread to banks all over the country. Do not have more than $100,000 in any bank account.

Office Max will eliminate 2,700 management positions.

The CFTC said the oil market was ripe for illegal manipulative activity, and imposed limits of the speculative positions on some trades made on overseas exchanges, particularly in London. All large trades would be reported to the CFTC.

The Confidence Board's Leading Index rose 0.1% in May, matching April's gain.

Phoenix based real estate lender Mortgages, Ltd. will lay off 17 of their 43 employees. They have halted making new loans in commercial real estate.

Weekly jobless claims fell 5,000 to 381,000. The 4-week average of initial claims rose 3,250 to 375,250.

If you can believe this, Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson wants the Fed, which caused all of our monetary, financial and economic problems, to intervene in the workings of Wall Street firms to protect the financial system that they destroyed. They would step in to avert events that pose unacceptable systemic risk. What this really means is that the Fed will further nationalize the financial industry via consolidation in a true fascist manner. The Fed has neither the statutory authority nor the mandate to anticipate and deal with risks across our entire financial system. This is a power grab, plain and simple. This takeover has been in the works for well over a year. The Fed wants to extend its open discount window and auctions beyond September when they expire, so they can stop a bankrupt system from collapsing. The loans will be extended and Wall Street and the banks can gamble and speculate to their hearts content.

QUOTE

http://www.halturnershow.com/index.html

Here it comes!

Staggering "Inflation" hits manufacturing sectors. . .

Iron Ore price up 96% in ONE day; Dow Chemicals up 25% in ONE day

The largest iron ore mining company in the world has just taken a 96% price increase for iron ore and smaller iron ore companies are talking about increases of 100% or more!

Dow Chemical has taken a price increase of 25% on many of its chemicals and other companies are talking 75% increases.

This is the beginning of "hyper-inflation." The continuing slide in value of the U.S. Dollar is causing this to happen and there's no end in sight. . . . . until the entire world economy collapses.

The reason companies are taking these increases now is because they all know the collapse will be here by September and they want to make as much as they can before all hell breaks loose.

FULL ARTICLE:
http://www.ft.com/cms/s/0/fea3e3e6-41f4-11...?nclick_check=1

MORE CREDIT TURMOIL-WORSE THAN WHEN BEAR-STEARNS COLLAPSED!

FRESH BATCH OF "DARK" NEWS HITS BANKS

THE WARNING SIGNS ARE NOW EVERYWHERE - GET YOUR MONEY OUT WHILE YOU CAN!

Analysts have warned that the downgrades could set off fresh turmoil -- with some saying it could be worse than March's sell-off, when Bear Stearns collapsed.

QUOTE

Bond insurer, economic woes to feed fresh credit turmoil

Tue Jun 24, 2008 9:17am EDT Email | Print | Share| Reprints | Single Page| By Jane Baird
http://www.reuters.com/article/bondsNews/i...0080624?sp=true

LONDON, June 24 (Reuters) - More credit turmoil is yet to come as further problems emerge, including a massive shift in risk from bond insurers to banks, and fresh macroeconomic risks, leading bankers and investors said on Tuesday.

Global stock and credit markets have suffered in June as sentiment has worsened, with the tone darkening this week as fresh worries about the financial system have emerged.

The FTSEurofirst 300 hit a three-month low on Tuesday, while the iTraxx Europe <ITRAC5EA=> credit derivatives index flirted with the 100-basis-point barrier for the first time since April.

"For most of the year we have seen a market contraction which is the result of over-leverage," Jan Pethick, Merrill Lynch's (MER.N: Quote, Profile, Research, Stock Buzz) chairman of debt capital markets for Europe, the Middle East and Africa, said at the Euromoney Global Borrowers and Investors Forum in London.

"Now we are in for another dose," he said, as risk held by the monoline insurers could fall back on the books of the banks.

Moody's Investors Service last week dished out multi-notch downgrades to MBIA Inc (MBI.N: Quote, Profile, Research, Stock Buzz) and Ambac Financial Group (ABK.N: Quote, Profile, Research, Stock Buzz), formerly rated triple-A.

Analysts have warned that the downgrades could set off fresh turmoil -- with some saying it could be worse than March's sell-off, when Bear Stearns neared collapse.

One of the main conduits for losses from the credit crisis has been on complex structures known as collateralised debt obligations (CDOs). Some firms, such as Merrill Lynch and UBS (UBSN.VX: Quote, Profile, Research, Stock Buzz), built up big holdings of these structures and then had to take billions of dollars of writedowns on them.

"The big assumption was that the banks could hedge them and that hedging devices would offset the risk," said Pethick. "We have found that these devices were not perfectly hedging our risk exposures ... It's a wake-up call."

One route to hedging was to buy CDO insurance from a monoline insurer -- deals that banks and the insurers are now seeking to unwind, the Financial Times said this week.

"We didn't know the full consequences of what we were dealing with ... the monolines are not going to be as robust as we thought," he said.

ECONOMIC WOES

Beyond the financial sector, the global credit crisis has left the U.S. economy teetering on the brink of recession, with fears now building that problems could spread elsewhere, speakers at the conference said.

As the U.S. economy suffers, "we don't see where there will be another engine of growth," said Rene Karsenti, executive president of the International Capital Markets Association.

So-far resilient emerging markets could suffer too, spreading the pain from the credit crisis.

"The shoes to drop could be in some emerging markets," said Louis Gargour, chief investment officer at LNG Capital, mentioning Argentina and Iceland in particular.

He also cited India's inflation of 11 percent and GDP growth of 9.2 percent as unsustainable.

"The other question is when does the European economy go into recession?" he asked.

Gargour and Larry Elliott, economics editor of UK newspaper the Guardian, identified Spain, Ireland, Italy and Portugal as being particularly vulnerable to a slowdown.

(Reporting by Jane Baird, writing by Richard Barley; editing by Elaine Hardcastle)

NEW MODEL OF (ECONOMIC) NASTINESS

HOMEOWNERS IN U.S., BRITAIN, SPAIN SHOULD EXPECT THEIR HOMES TO LOSE FIFTY TO SIXTY-FIVE PERCENT OF VALUE WITHIN THE NEXT THREE YEARS!

MORTGAGE "CALLS" WILL WREAK SOCIAL, NATIONAL, INTERNATIONAL HAVOC

The balance of probability must thus be for a global downturn which combines the inf

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 01:29 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

THE BEAR'S LAIR

A new model for nastiness

By Martin Hutchinson
Jun 25, 2008
http://www.atimes.com/atimes/Global_Economy/JF25Dj04.html

Since the late 1990s, bears like myself have been forecasting a major economic downturn in the United States, but wavering as to whether it would be more like the 1930s, with price deflation and really deep economic decline, or the 1970s, with unpleasant inflation but shallower economic decline. The urge to forecast gloom and despondency continues, even intensifies, but we need a new model for the type of depression we are to enter, as neither the 1930s nor the 1970s now seems to fit the bill.

The causes of the Great Depression have been analyzed ad infinitum, and there is still not general agreement as to their relative importance. The major downward revaluation of asset prices - stocks and to a lesser extent housing and real estate - that occurred after 1929 certainly played a significant role. From the Japanese 1990s experience, it would have been likely to lead to a decade of below-par growth, but not necessarily to a catastrophic downturn. The lack of a significant downturn after the 1987 crash and the relative mildness of the downturn after 2000 also suggest that asset price declines are a contributing but by no means controlling factor.

Other contributors to the Great Depression were the sharp move towards protectionism epitomized by the 1930 Smoot-Hawley Tariff (although the world of 1930 was already highly protectionist by modern standards), the international banking crisis sparked by the 1931 collapse of Austria's Creditanstalt and the extraordinary stupidity of the Herbert Hoover administration in raising the top rate of income tax from 25% to 63% in early 1932. Other Hoover administration activities failed to improve matters, but do not seem to have made them much worse, though Smoot-Hawley and the income tax hike together push Hoover well beyond the unlucky and well-meaning James Buchanan on the list of America's worst presidents.

The 1970s stagflation was initially caused by excessive public spending for the Vietnam war, which created a severe deficit problem, exacerbated by sloppy monetary policy, particularly around the time of president Richard Nixon's 1972 re-election. The oil and commodities price hikes of 1973 played a supporting role in throwing the world into stagflation but were largely effects of loose monetary policy in the US, Britain and Japan rather than independent causal factors. After a remission caused by president Gerald Ford's conservative fiscal policy, further monetary and fiscal sloppiness under president Jimmy Carter brought a recurrence of the problem, which was only solved by the advent of Paul Volcker to the Federal Reserve chairmanship in 1979.

The sharp eye will immediately note that there is very little commonality between the causes of the two episodes. There was no surge of protectionism during the 1970s, nor was there a sharp stock market crash such as had precipitated matters in 1929 (though stock prices declined in real terms by three quarters between 1966 and 1982, undoubtedly producing a depressing effect on the economy). There was a banking crash in 1973 in Britain, a pretty spectacular one, but nothing like the 1931-33 global cascade of bank failures. There were no enormous tax increases during the 1970s.

Conversely, US fiscal management during the 1920s had been a paragon of rectitude under Treasury secretary Andrew Mellon. There had been some excess money creation in 1927-29, but interest rates remained securely positive in real terms. Just as most of the Great Depression's causal factors were absent in the 1970s, so none of the causes of 1970s stagflation were significantly present in 1929-32.

That suggests that the taxonomy of major downturns probably has more than two archetypes, and that we should not seek to fit the current episode closely to either the 1930s or the 1970s but examine it in its own right, expecting a major downturn if it occurs to be of some third type not closely resembling either.

This time around, we certainly have had the long-term fiscal and monetary sloppiness that caused the 1970s stagflation. However, we also have had an asset price bubble that seen in certain lights looks more severe than in 1929. We currently have a worldwide outbreak of protectionism similar to that of 1930, although much less extreme, and we have a banking crisis that if things go wrong may well resemble the rout of 1931-33. With presumptive presidential candidate Senator Barack Obama proposing increases in taxation on higher incomes, we may even have the equivalent of Hoover's 1932 tax policies, although presumably the rise will be less severe than the 38 percentage point marginal rate increase that Hoover imposed.

The Great Depression and the 1970s represent extreme cases of economic downturns. The Great Depression had a gigantic economic hole (in the United States) but no inflation at all, rather the opposite, whereas the 1970s was primarily about inflation, with the economic downturns being fairly mild and confined to manufacturing (though if you were in heavy industry in 1979-82 it wasn't fun.)

Both downturns were generally felt around the world, with the 1930s downturn being severe pretty well everywhere (probably least severe in Britain although the 1920s had been pretty unpleasant there) and the 1970s one avoiding the Middle East (because of their oil revenues) parts of Latin America (Brazil had an excellent few years until 1980 or so - its problems occurred during the 1980s) and the Asian Tiger emerging markets outside Japan.

Since this time around we have most of the symptoms of the Great Depression and the 1970s (albeit in lesser degree in the case of 1930s protectionism and tax rises) we could reasonably expect a downturn that shared the nastier features of both. It would have more depth than did the 1970s downturns outside manufacturing, and it be would unlike the 1930s be inflationary. It would also almost certainly include a major 1930s style asset price decline, although part of that would be obscured by the 1970s style inflation. For example, the US house price decline currently under way is likely to be substantially cushioned by increases in nominal incomes, as households receive pay increases that do not keep them ahead of inflation but nevertheless hold them within shouting distance of it.

Internationally, the downturn seems likely to be most severe in countries and regions where asset price inflation has been most intense. In the developed world, Japan should more or less escape it, as should South Korea and Germany. None of them have had house price or stock price booms of any magnitude in the past few years. At the other end of the scale, Britain (primarily housing) the US (both housing and the remaining un-deflated stock bubble from the late 1990s) and Spain (housing again) will probably have severe downturns, as may China (primarily real estate, but also stocks and the banking system in general.)

If we believe that the downturn is likely to share some of the characteristics of the 1930s, rather than being simply a repeat of the 1970s, then it is unlikely that oil producing countries and commodity exporters will escape problems. Oil prices have been driven up to levels considerably higher in real terms than the 1970s by demand pull from China and India. If China and to a lesser extent India suffer severe downturns, then oil demand must drop off correspondingly and it becomes unlikely that the 1970s pattern of continuing high oil prices even in a recession will be repeated.

If oil prices drop sharply, the political effect on oil producing countries will be considerable, and not necessarily pleasant. The Shah of Iran basically fell because of the 1973 oil price rise. He was already overspending in 1972-3, supported largely by bank loans, then he spent with total abandon in 1974 as higher revenues had appeared to make Iran's oil wealth inexhaustible. Needless to say, he then ran out of money, as the international banking system would not provide him with sufficient funds to complete the projects he'd initiated in the bubble year. 1976 and 1977 were thus years of relative austerity in Iran, much to the fury of the Iranian people who had come to expect a bonanza. It should thus have been no surprise that revolution occurred in 1979, although robust US support for the shah might have enabled him to overcome it.

This time around, the overspending oil producers are obvious: Venezuela and Russia. Venezuela will undoubtedly get into severe difficulty once the oil price collapses. This is on balance likely to favor US interests (and those of the Venezuelan people) provided that the crisis can be leveraged to remove Hugo Chavez from the country's leadership. If he remains, Venezuela will become another Cuba, with deep repression and a suffering and impoverished populace but forming no real threat to the United States.

Russia is a much more dangerous story, being both economically and militarily more powerful. The parallels with Germany of the 1930s are disquieting, although the move to aggression in an economic downturn would presumably take the form of an assumption of further authoritarian powers by Vladimir Putin, rather than his replacement by an even more sinister figure.

However a downturn in the oil price might well cause an aggressive Russia to intervene militarily in its neighbors, use the weapon of Gazprom's gas pipelines disruptively against Western Europe and devote 25% of output to the military, as did the Soviet Union in its most aggressive periods. Should that happen, Russia would become a considerably more dangerous threat to the world than al-Qaeda could ever dream of; it is to be hoped that western leaders, particularly in Europe, recognize the danger early and effectively.

The balance of probability must thus be for a global downturn which combines the inflation of the 1970s with the severe recession and geopolitical danger of the 1930s. Not an appealing prospect.

Martin Hutchinson is the author of Great Conservatives (Academica Press, 2005) - details can be found at www.greatconservatives.com.

QUOTE

American financial fiasco could take down world economy

Posted By BERT HIELEMA
25 jun 2008
http://www.intelligencer.ca/ArticleDisplay.aspx?e=1087226

Triple warnings this past week: the Royal Bank of Scotland fears a steep fall in the world stock market; the bank of all banks in the world, the BIS, Bank of International Settlements, in Switzerland, said that a worldwide depression is now a distinct possibility; Morgan Stanley, a leading American Investment firm, signaled similar pessimistic messages.

So what's happening out there? Frankly, all financial institutions are in deep trouble, and the reason is the American dollar. The situation is so dire that it's not going to make a hoot of difference who becomes the next president of the United States: it's beyond the power of the rulers of the American political and economic system to curtail severe damage to its entire economic enterprise. Neither Obama nor McCain can do anything to stem the disaster that will be fully employed by the end of this year.

Part of the cause is that the USA happens to be the most indebted nation on the planet and its people the least prepared to cope with peak oil and peak food. Even now Americans throw away up to 40 per cent of the food they buy, their high-powered and fuel-thirsty automotive park cannot be converted to more efficient vehicles for many years, while their exurban lifestyle makes car-sharing and mass transport impossible for most.

So what's so inevitable of the current monetary scene?

The world's entire Gross domestic product is some $50 trillion, of which the USA accounts for about $13 trillion. However, it owes more than $2 trillion to foreigners, of which Japan and China carry about half and Great Britain some 10 per cent with the remainder divided over many countries. Canada has less than one per cent. The American public carries $9 trillion in credit-card debt and even more in mortgages. Its national debt is close to $10 trillion while its Social Security and Medicaid has a future liability in excess of $50 trillion, burdening the average USA household with debt totaling more than $600,000.

And then there are the outstanding derivatives! They grew from $100 trillion 5 years ago to $500 trillion in 2007. Warren Buffet -- the world's richest man after Bill Gates and a most savvy investor -- wrote in 2002: "We try to be alert to any sort of mega-catastrophe risk, and that posture may make us unduly appreciative about the burgeoning quantities of long-term derivatives contracts and the massive amount of uncollateralized receivables that are growing alongside. In our view, however, derivatives are financial weapons of mass destruction, carrying dangers that, while now latent, are potentially lethal."

Now, when everything that can go wrong is going wrong, this financial WMD, this weapon of mass destruction, is no longer latent but out in the open ready to kill the American economy.

According to the LEAP think tank, based in Europe -- subscriptions cost 200 Euro or $300 per year -- in the next six months all factors affecting the economy will converge, and create a perfect socio-economic hurricane.

Advertisement

The root of the problem is always money, basically the US dollar of which there are trillions too many in circulations, so many that its value is decreasing, and the world doesn't know what to do with them. It's this flood of money that drives up the price of all commodities, including oil, of course. Nobody wants more US dollars, unless its value increases.

But that can only happen when the US pushes up interest rates, which will cause the US economy to die within a few weeks, as the real estate market falls to zero by lack of affordable credit, interest on Adjustable Rate Mortgage loans skyrockets, drastically shrinking consumption, and corporate failures multiply exponentially and stock markets collapse.

No, higher interest rates are not the solution. However, to do nothing is not an option either, because soon nobody will accept U. S. dollars anymore.

Basically the US has lost the ability to govern its own economic policy. Thanks to its trillions of debts, it is now powerless to avoid disaster. No wonder banks are getting nervous.

The immediate consequence of America's economic collapse will be the end of the war in Iraq, because, suddenly, as the greenback disappears as the world currency, the US will be forced to live within its means. Since the war is the most costly of all its undertakings, the troops will abruptly go home.

Curiously the WMDs -- the weapons of mass destruction -- were not in Iraq: they are in the heart of America, right on Wall Street. Pity the veterans and the wounded; there will be no money to look after them -- no pensions, no jobs, no medical care.

Eventually a new financial system will emerge, but only after a period of tremendous turmoil and pain.

QUOTE

We May be Facing a Fall Stock Market Disaster

Jun 24, 2008 - 12:16 PM
By: Michael_Swanson
http://www.marketoracle.co.uk/Article5205.html

It has been almost ten full months now since the Fed first lowered interest rates. If you remember at first there was a lot excitement over the Fed cuts. The DOW and Nasdaq rallied to new 52-week highs a few weeks after the first rate cut in September. The rally and promise of more Fed intervention for the market made many big name commentators extremely optimistic about the market.

But just a few weeks later the market turned lower and has been stuck in a bear market ever since. The banking problems multiplied and inflation skyrocketed with oil rising almost double in price now from where it was a year ago. The rate cuts tasted good at first, but are no longer palatable.

When thinking about the financial markets sometimes it is best to take stock of things before trying to look ahead and decide if you need to make changes to your portfolio or figure out where to look for the best investment opportunities. A lot can be learned about looking at where the market was a year ago and comparing it to today.

A year ago from today the DOW, S&P 500, and Nasdaq were all climbing higher. They had experienced a fast and furious correction that took the S&P 500 down over seven percent in February of 2007. The financial media blamed that quick correction on "credit worries," a fast drop in the dollar versus the yen, and a huge correction in the Chinese stock market. Rumors also circulated that some billion dollar Bear Stearns hedge funds were in trouble.

Over the next few months as the market went higher everyone thought that all of these problems were gone. Then the financial press started to focus on oil prices that were making new highs and the threat to inflation that they posed. In July the market peaked as talk intensified that the Fed might actually start to raise interest rates by the end of the year. Indeed Fed fund futures a year ago were pricing in rates hikes by the end of 2007.

Fed officials gave repeated speeches and statements that sounded hawkish on interest rates. At the same time though the drop in real estate prices started to pick up and the value in "subprime" mortgage securities went into collapse. Rumors abounded that several large hedge funds were in trouble.

The Fed publicly ignored all of this. At its August FOMC meeting they released a more hawkish statement on inflation to prepare the way to raise rates. The market dropped hard that day and James Cramer blasted the Federal Reserve and Ben Bernanke on TV for knowing "nothing." His statement was one of the most watched moments in financial TV reporting as people watched it millions of times on the Internet.

At that moment he was right. Within two weeks the market went into a mini-crash and the Federal Reserve lowered the discount rate in what looked like a panic move. The value of "subprime" securities went to zero. They are still being counted as "level three" assets on the balance sheets of some of the world's largest banks but in reality they are worthless and have been worthless since last August.

The Fed changed course 180% degrees in August and began to slash rates in September. It continued its rate cutting campaign and has lowered rates in the past ten months at the fastest rate than it ever has before in history - faster than it did even during the Great Depression.

Since then we have seen the "credit crisis" worsen. We have seen the economy slow down, real estate prices continue to drop, inflation explode, and the Fed print about 30 billion dollars and hand that money to JP Morgan so that it could buy Bear Stearns and prevent a potential systemic bank run.

What a roller coaster! And it ain't over yet folks. You can expect to see more volatility and the overall downward bias in the financial markets to continue the rest of the year.

What I want you to do right now though is think about the situation last year and how it compares with today. Just like in June of 2007, right now we can look back on this year and see a big correction behind us. Just like the correction in February of 2007, this one we saw in the first quarter was linked to credit problems and the unwinding of the real estate bubble. And just like then we have seen the market rally after that correction and lots of big name experts come out and declare the worst behind us. For instance Abby Cohen of Goldman Sachs claims that there is going to be a second half economic boom that will make the stock market rise much higher than it is now into the end of the year.

Things are certainly different right now than they were last year. The US is in a bear market right now whereas last year it was approaching the tail end of a cyclical bull market. That is a huge difference. But there is one important similarity that you need to focus on right now. At this time last year most people were worried about inflation and were expecting the Fed to raise rates by the end of 2007. Right now everyone is worried about inflation and the Fed has talked very hawkish about inflation over the past few weeks. Most of the talking heads are looking for the Fed to raise rates by the end of the year. This is exactly the same spot we were in this time last year!

But what if the economy doesn't pick up steam in the second half of the year and the stock market continues lower? What if more banking problems materialize? Bank stocks are making new 52-week lows and have been falling fast this month. They do not seem to be forecasting an end to the credit crunch. And really they shouldn't, because there is no sign of a bottom in real estate and all indicators I follow suggest that we won't see one into at least the second half of 2009.

I think we are likely to see a Fall shock hit the market. Last year we saw the Fed do a 180 degree turn from talking about inflation to cutting rates like a mad hatter. This year I believe we will see the Fed abandon its talk of fighting inflation to once again intervening to bail out some bank, patch up the leaky economy, or in response to a stock market mini-crash. I think the situation right now is like it was a year ago - everyone is worried about inflation, but the bigger problems lurk in the cooked books the banks are carrying. In fact we are more likely to see more problems emerge and the stock market go lower as that is the primary trend right now.

In essence the Fed is playing a game of poker. It is bluffing when it says it is fighting inflation. It has no chips left and has bet everything on the slim chance that the economy has already bottomed. If something happens to make the Fed intervene again then it will be faced with a choice of fighting inflation by raising rates, which would have the effect of blowing up the banking system, or intervening to save the banking system, the economy, and the stock market, which of course would mean more inflation, a falling dollar, and falling bond prices. The Fed has proven that if it gets trapped into such a corner it will side to help the banks and the stock market a stable currency be damned.

If this is what we see happen in the Fall then the Fed will lose all of its credibility when it comes to maintaining a stable currency.

What do you need to do? You need to do what you should always be doing - keeping your pulse on market trends to figure out the best way to position yourself to make money is. You can profit from any situation. Right now we have a bear market and that means using bear market strategies.

I will leave you with one last thought for today. In the past ten years every time the Fed has gone on a campaign of lowering interest rates it has create a "bubble". In 1998 the Fed lowered rates to bailout the Long-Term Capital Management Fund. When it did so it put excess money into the banking system. There was a lack of good investments for that money to go into so it flowed into Internet and tech stocks and formed a bubble. When that bubble burst the Fed lowered rates again to try to make the stock market go back up. As a result they dropped interest rates to an artificially low point, which created a housing bubble.

We are now suffering through the fallout of the housing bubble - the direct result is a recession, bear stock market, and "credit crisis" from banks who went nuts during the bubble.

Now remember - every time the Fed cuts rates it creates a bubble, because it puts excess money into the economy.

Well, the bubble now is now in commodities and oil. A direct result is inflation, a falling dollar, and eventually a bear market in bonds. There are opportunities to profit from this and I believe gold and precious metal stocks along with tactical short selling against he broad market and bonds will be the best way to go. If the Fed abandons this current inflation fighting talk this Fall I expect we'll see gold prices skyrocket into the end of the year.

Of course this is looking ahead and that isn't always an easy thing to do when it comes to the stock market. I can't say with certainty that this is going to happen. But I do know the technical signs in the market that will appear over the next two months if this is indeed what is going to happen and I know how I will position myself. The next eight weeks are going to be some of the most important we've ever seen in the financial markets. Not because of what will happen during these weeks, but to see how the markets are positioned once they are over. As any technical signs appear to point us the way I will draw your attention to them and explain to you exactly what they mean so that you can take advantage of anything that may happen too. From chaos comes opportunity and opportunity is another way to spell profits.

This article is an except from a WallStreetWindow subscription article. The full article contains more price projections of what I see happening for the S&P 500 and gold for the rest of the year. You need to subscribe to my free weekly newsletter to get all future articles. Just click here .

By Michael Swanson
WallStreetWindow.com

Mike Swanson is the founder and chief editor of WallStreetWindow. He began investing and trading in 1997 and achieved a return in excess of 800% from 1997 to 2001. In 2002 he won second place in the 2002 Robbins Trading Contest and ran a hedge fund from 2003 to 2006 that generated a return of over 78% for its investors during that time frame. In 2005 out of 3,621 hedge funds tracked by HedgeFund.Net only 35 other funds had a better return that year. Mike holds a Masters Degree in history from the University of Virginia and has a knowledge of the history and political economy of the United States and the world financial markets. Besides writing about financial matters he is also working on a history of the state of Virginia. To subscribe to his free stock market newsletter click here .

QUOTE

Urgent Update: A Chat with Mr. Pucker

Jan 26 2008
http://urbansurvival.com/week.htm

OK, here's the word from Robin Landry - who at the moment might be called "Mr. Pucker":

"We have violated the 34-year trend line and now we are at the point at which the bearish count begins to take precedence. In other words, if the market can't recover and cross back up through the 34-year trend line, we're toast."

Many times the market will go back up and touch the trend line in what is commonly referred to as the 'kiss of death'. The very same thing happened in 1987. When I counted five waves down, and then an A-B-C rally to the bottom of the trend line.

That was the day I exited all my client's equity positions and that was five days before the 508-point down day, which was a 25% decline and today the action will be very closely watched.

If you see a rally, back up (and right now that trend line is somewhere around 11,781-82 on my computer - it will be different on others) then there is two levels to look at for hope.

We have passed the March low - the next low is the January low at 11,643. The low so far has been 11,645 - talk about testing the lows!

Now, so far, I still have a bullish divergence for the Dow. So the hope of the rally is not over ...yet. But, as I said earlier, the odds are beginning to swing toward the bearish outlook. So short term, it's 'do or die'.

If we break these levels, really the next support is down around 10,984, at which time the possibility of the bullish count being correct goes away. Simple as that - it would be the bearish count.

9,700 and then there's virtually nothing until 7,400."

So we all swallow hard and watch the tape... Landry's office number is 405-275-6162.

QUOTE

HEY FOLKS I'VE TAKEN A QUICK LOOK AND

I BELIEVE THE ECONOMY IS LIKELY TO BE

COLLAPSED IN WEEK 42 BEING

OCTOBER ON THE 18TH IN 2008

ALSO KEEP YOUR EYES ON THESE DATES:

JULY 12 - WEEK 28
AUGUST 06 - WEEK 32
AUGUST 30 - WEEK 35

PLEASE NOTE WE HAVE WEEK 42 = 4+2 = PERFECTION 6 THE SIX OF THE HEX. THE HEXAGRAM OF WITCHCRAFT. THE HEXAGON ITSELF TURNED INTO A PERFECTION CUBE BY WAY OF THE 7TH POINT (6X7=42 WEEK). REMEMBER THAT THE 6 BECOMES A 9 REFLECTED BY ISIS WHICH IS COMPLETION. NOTE HOW SATURN (EL) IS THE GOD OF CHAOS, WAR AND DEATH. NOTE HOW THE 6, 8, 11, CUBE AND SQUARE RELATE TO SATURN. NOTICE THE OCTOBER BEING THE 8(OCT)BER. NOTE THE 10TH MONTH + 18 = 28. 28 BEING THE HOLY ANKH OF VENUS/LUCIFER. IF WE USE THE 4 X 7 WE GET 28 WHILST 4+7 GIVES US 11 OF EL. NOW WE HAVE THE 18TH ITSELF THE 6+6+6 9+9=1+8(9) 999

REVERSED 666 THE SQUARING OF THE 6 PERFECTION. THUS WE HAVE A HEXAGRAM WITH ITS 6 POINTS, 6 TRIANGLES AND 6 SIDES WITH THE INTERNAL HEXAGON. THE GREATEST SYMBOL OF WITCHCRAFT. NOW REMEMBER THE HEXAGRAM ON THE SEAL OF THE DOLLAR? NOTE THE LUCIFERIAN CIRCLE AROUND IT? THE COMPLETION 9 COLLAPSE TO BRING ABOUT THE NEW BANKING SYSTEM? THE HEXAGRAM IS THE GENERATIVE PRINCIPLE FOLKS. THE SEXUAL UNION WHICH BRINGS ABOUT TWO AS ONE BUT MORE IMPORTANTLY BRINGS THE LEFT/RIGHT HEMISPHERES OF THE BRAIN TOGETHER AS ONE DURING ORGASM. THUS A CONNECTION BETWEEN CONSCIOUS AND SUBCONSCIOUS AS PROVEN BY WILHELM REICH. REMEMBER HOW THE BRAIN IS CODED BY THE CUBE OF PERFECTION. SO WE WILL SEE THE POWER OF THE SCORPION ON THIS DAY AND HIS DEADLY KISS. THE SCORPION IS LINKED TO THE MONTH OF NOVEMBER BEING 11 (EL).

-CRAIG OXLEY

QUOTE

Barclays warns of a financial storm as Federal Reserve's credibility crumbles

Last Updated: 12:30am BST 27/06/2008
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/money/main.jhtm...barclays127.xml

US central bank accused of unleashing an inflation shock that will rock financial markets, reports Ambrose Evans-Pritchard

Barclays Capital has advised clients to batten down the hatches for a worldwide financial storm, warning that the US Federal Reserve has allowed the inflation genie out of the bottle and let its credibility fall "below zero".

"We're in a nasty environment," said Tim Bond, the bank's chief equity strategist. "There is an inflation shock underway. This is going to be very negative for financial assets. We are going into tortoise mood and are retreating into our shell. Investors will do well if they can preserve their wealth."

Barclays Capital said in its closely-watched Global Outlook that US headline inflation would hit 5.5pc by August and the Fed will have to raise interest rates six times by the end of next year to prevent a wage-spiral. If it hesitates, the bond markets will take matters into their own hands. "This is the first test for central banks in 30 years and they have fluffed it. They have zero credibility, and the Fed is negative if that's possible. It has lost all credibility," said Mr Bond.

The grim verdict on Ben Bernanke's Fed was underscored by the markets yesterday as the dollar fell against the euro following the bank's dovish policy statement on Wednesday. Traders said the Fed seemed to be rowing back from rate rises. The effect was to propel oil to $138 a barrel, confirming its role as a sort of "anti-dollar" and as a market reproach to Washington's easy-money policies.

The Fed's stimulus is being transmitted to the 45-odd countries linked to the dollar around world. The result is surging commodity prices. Global inflation has jumped from 3.2pc to 5pc over the last year. Mr Bond said the emerging world is now on the cusp of a serious crisis. "Inflation is out of control in Asia. Vietnam has already blown up. The policy response is to shoot the messenger, like the developed central banks in the late 1960s and 1970s," he said.

"They will have to slam on the brakes. There is going to be a deep global recession over the next three years as policy-makers try to get inflation back in the box."

Barclays Capital recommends outright "short" positions on Asian bonds, warning that yields could jump 200 to 300 basis points. The currencies of trade-deficit states like India should be sold. The US yield curve is likely to "steepen" with a vengeance, causing a bloodbath for bond holders.

David Woo, the bank's currency chief, said the Fed's policy of benign neglect towards the dollar had been stymied by oil, which is now eating deep into the country's standard of living. "The world has changed all of a sudden. The market is going to push the Fed into a tightening stance," he said.

The bank said the full damage from the global banking crisis would take another year to unfold. Rob McAdie, Barclays' credit strategist, said: "The core issues have not been addressed. We're still in a very large deleveraging cycle and we're seeing losses continue to mount. We think smaller banks will struggle to raise capital. We're very bearish - in the long-term - on high-yield debt. The default rate will reach 8pc to 9pc next year."

He said investors had taken their eye off the slow-motion disaster engulfing the US bond insurers or "monolines". Together these firms guarantee $170bn of structured credit and $1,000bn of US municipal bonds.

The two leaders - MBIA and Ambac - have already been downgraded as the rating agencies belatedly turn stringent. The risk is further downgrades could set off a fresh wave of bank troubles. "The creditworthiness of many US financial institutions will decline in coming months," he said.

The bank warned that engineering and auto firms we're likely to face a crunch as steel and oil costs surge. "Their business models will have to be substantially altered if they are going to survive," said Mr McAdie.

A small chorus of City bankers dissent from the view that inflation is the chief danger in the US and other rich OECD countries. The teams at Société Générale, Dresdner Kleinwort, and Banque AIG all warn that deflation may loom as housing markets crumble under record levels of household debt.

Bernard Connolly, global startegist at Banque AIG, said inflation targeting by central banks had become a "totemism that threatens to crush the world economy".

He said it would be madness to throw millions out of work by deflating part of the economy to offset a rise in imported fuel and food prices. Real wages are being squeezed by oil, come what may. It may be healthier for society to let it happen gently.

QUOTE

QUOTE

Craig Oxley:

HEY FOLKS I'VE TAKEN A QUICK LOOK AND

I BELIEVE THE ECONOMY IS LIKELY TO BE

COLLAPSED IN WEEK 42 BEING

OCTOBER ON THE 18TH IN 2008

QUOTE

Outsider:

Week 42 also includes OCTOBER 13th the date of the Masonic Corner Stone laying ceremony of the WHITE HOUSE and also important for its TEMPLAR associations, which may indicate the possibility of FALSE FLAG attack against it on this date.

Both the Pentagon and WTC were attacked on the date of their Masonic Corner Stone being laid, on September 11.

This makes OCTOBER 13th one of the most likely dates for a FALSE FLAG attack on the WHITE HOUSE, wether it occurs this year, or a future year.

For what its worth, some astrologers on the internet are predicting that there will be NO US ELECTIONS in 2008, based on their reading of the planetary alignments at that time.

Craig, I believe you have very probably correctly identified week 42 as being the week in which the main economic crash will occur. Number 42 is a hugely significant number. See below for the reasons why...

QUOTE

The number 42 appears in various contexts in Christianity. There are 42 generations (names) in the Gospel of Matthew's version of the Genealogy of Jesus; it is prophesied that for 42 months the Beast will hold dominion over the Earth (Revelation 13:5); 42 men of Beth-azmaveth were counted in the census of men of Israel upon return from exile (Ezra 2:24); God sent bears to maul 42 of the youths who mock Elisha for his baldness (2 Kings 2:23), etc.

42 also occurs in other religions. There are 42 principles of Ma'at, the Ancient Egyptian personification of physical and moral law, order, and truth. In the judgement scene described in the Egyptian and the Book of the Coming/Going Forth by Day (the Book of the Dead (which evolved from the Coffin Texts and the Pyramid Texts)), there are 42 Gods and Goddesses of Egypt, personifying the principles of Ma'at, who ask questions of the departed, while Thoth records the answers, and the deceased's heart is weighed against the feather of Truth (Ma'at). These 42 correspond to the 42 Nomes (Governmental Units) of Egypt. If the departed successfully answers all 42, s/he becomes an Osiris.

In Judaism, the number (in the Babylonian Talmud, compiled 375 AD to 499 AD) of the "Forty-Two Lettered Name" ascribed to God. Rab (or Rabbhs), a 3rd century source in the Talmud stated "The Forty-Two Lettered Name is entrusted only to him who is pious, meek, middle-aged, free from bad temper, sober, and not insistent on his rights". [Source: Talmud Kidduschin 71a, Translated by Rabbi Dr. I. Epstein]. Maimonides felt that the original Talmudic Forty-Two Lettered Name was perhaps composed of several combined divine names [Maimonides "Moreh"]. The apparently unpronouncable Tetragrammaton provides the backdrop from the Twelve-Lettered Name and the Forty-Two Lettered Name of the Talmud.

42 is the number with which God creates the Universe in Kabalistic tradition. In Kabbalah, the most significant name is that of the En Sof (also known as "Ein Sof", "Infinite" or "Endless"), who is above the Sefirot (sometimes spelled "Sephirot").[5] The Forty-Two-Lettered Name contains four combined names which are spelled in Hebrew letters (spelled in letters = 42 letters), which is the name of Azilut (or "Atziluth" "Animation"). While there are obvious links between the Forty-Two Lettered Name of the Babylonian Talmud (see further up this page) and the Kabbalah's Forty-Two Lettered Name, they are probably not identical due to the Kabbalah's emphasis on numbers. The Kabbalah also contains a Forty-Five Lettered Name and a Seventy-Two Lettered Name.
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/42_(number)

QUOTE

It should also be noted that 42 days is the detention limit which people can be held without charge in the UK.

QUOTE

WORST WEEK SINCE THE GREAT DEPRESSION OF 1929

WORST JUNE SINCE THE GREAT DEPRESSION OF 1929

Week 26 which we can flip to get a 29 giving us 2+9=11=EL=CHAOS/WAR/DEATH or 2x9=18=666.

QUOTE

Don't get fooled into another Waterloo

Written by Andrew Winkler, The Rebel Media Group
Friday, 27 June 2008
http://www.ziopedia.org/articles/editorial...other_waterloo/

When asking Western school children about the significance of Waterloo, the answer will be something along the lines of ‘the decisive battle between Napoleon and an English lead European coalition’. In fact, the future of the European continent was perceived to depend upon the battle of Waterloo. If Napoleon won, France would have been confirmed as the undisputed master of Europe. If Napoleon was beaten, England would have become the leading power in Europe and greatly expand its sphere of influence.

What Western school children are not taught - for obvious reasons - is the much bigger story behind the official narrative, the story of one of the biggest frauds in human history. Nathan Rothschild, the head of the English branch of the Rothschild crime family, took advantage of his advance knowledge of the outcome of the battle by tricking the London Stock Exchange into believing that Napoleon had won. The resulting crash of the Exchange enabled Nathan Rothschild’s agents to buy the entire London stock market for a Penny in the Pound and seize control of the Bank of England.

This shameless fraud was ruthlessly repeated in 1929. The private owners of the U.S. Federal Reserve, Rothschild subsidiaries J.P. Morgan, Citi Bank and Chase Manhattan Bank were awash with money earned by financing World War I. Using their market power, Rothschild’s agents first engineered an artificial boom in the stock market, tricking smaller banks and private investors into putting huge amounts of money into the stock market and then deliberately crashed it, enabling the Rotschild agents to buy most of the U.S. stock market. The ripple effect of the New York crash also enabled Rothschild agents in other countries, such as Germany, to buy local corporations at a fraction of their actual value.

Eighty years later, it looks like our ruling psychopaths are at it again. They are systematically destroying trust in the U.S. dollar, causing holders of large amounts of greenbags to sell them. At the same time, the Rothschilds are preventing the European Central Bank from printing sufficient Euros for U.S. Dollar owners to exchange all of their holdings into Euros. That way Dollar owners are forced to buy gold instead, causing the gold price to explode.

Simultaneously, the Rothschilds are using their influence on the media sector to spread rumours of an imminent crash of the U.S. Dollar and international stock markets. As per usual, in the day and age of infowar, those rumours first started in the alternative Internet based media, only to spread into the mainstream business media. Last week's 'global stock and credit market warning' of the Rothschild owned Royal Bank of Scotland means that the next Waterloo must be imminent.

All it takes is a trigger such as a thwarted USraeli attack on Iran or the blocking of the Persian Gulf for oil transports, followed by a major stock sell-off by Rothschild agents. Once the world's stock and credit markets have completely crashed, the price of an ounce of gold will be in the thousands, enabling the Rothschilds and other owners of large gold holdings to buy the market for a fraction of their true value.

Andrew Winkler is the editor/publisher of Sydney based dissident blogs ZioPedia.org, Jews Anonymous and Power of No . He can be contacted at andrew@therebel.orgThis e-mail address is being protected from spam bots, you need JavaScript enabled to view it .

QUOTE

$142 Oil is NOT the Really, Really Bad News...

27 Jun 2008
http://urbansurvival.com/week.htm

Now and then, this here web site has been called by various deniers of fact, a 'doom and gloom' site. The reason goes to the idea that "No one in their right mind would focus on 'worst case' outcomes unless they were a little crazy." If that's your opinion, your welcome to it, because the study of non-traditional economics I practice is no different that dozens of other professions, most of which are considerably more 'respectable'.

Take airline pilotry, just as a for instance. Do you want to be driven from point A to point B by someone operating at the precise limit of their abilities on a ceiling and visibility unrestricted (CAVU in hanger-talk) day? Is there a group of pilots that really train for the worst? You bet! They all do. I'd opt for the PIC (pilot in command) being an ex-fighter jockey turned sky bus driver who still gets up and wrings out a Citabria on weekends, or my person favorite, the A152 Cessna Aerobat, thanks.

Or, would you like to be operated on by a surgeon who was operating (on you) at the limits of his or her professional training, not knowing having any tricks up their sleeve in the event they "Ooops! Nicked an artery there, hemostat, please?" Again, even if it's minor surgery, I would take the doc who has 4-years of front line combat experience, or someone who's put 5-years in as a trauma doc in a high volume big city ER, over the "artiste" who is genius-level in specialty but lacks breadth and exposure to the worst of the worst-case possibilities. Stuff happens even, or maybe especially, in OR's.

Yet, somehow, when we get into the area of finance, and the now 11-year weather-eye this site has cast toward the storm clouds on the financial horizon, training for the worst somehow suddenly turns into a bad thing and I'm labeled an alarmist. (Nutjob is better, thanks)

Folks don't want to read the fine print that stocks and bonds can and do lose money, which you may have figured out by checking your account balances last week and today. And the few who read that don't want to believe or act on it. Go figure.

Several weeks ago in one of my subscriber Peoplenomics newsletters, I outlined a "worst case" view for readers. I opined that we should all be setting up contingency plans for Dow 7,400. I reiterated that my long-time broker friend Robin Landry had gotten his managed accounts out of stocks and into bonds or cash on the sidelines two months ago based on his market models.

I've even gone so far as to admit that Jas Jain is right about rolling into bonds, but he may have been early. Time will tell on that, especially if we get one last serious bounce before the MOAC arrives this fall. (The MOAC I refer to is the "mother of all crashes" if you dozed off during earlier reports).

With that in mind, I talked Monday after the close with Robin Landry about what he expects this morning - and going forward...

"I expect the market to open down this morning a hundred or so points, and then we'll really begin to tell if the panic is setting in and we're heading for the test of the 10,984 level, which as I said yesterday is the real level at which the bullish count fades away. That wouldn't preclude a bounce from some area down here from an overbought condition, but there would really be no support once we go through that 10,984 area until the 7,400.

There will be some little rallies but no meaningful things.

So my prayer is that we turn before we get there but as I tell everyone, I believe in God, but I'm not sure He worried about levels in the Dow Jones Industrial Average.

There's end of the quarter window dressing. This is the time that the 10 984 could get a really good test. "

Landry's view may be that of an optimist compared with a knowledgeable market player in Europe who has shared some outlooks with me from time to time. As this morning's headline suggests, his really, really bad news is that the worst case now brings a Dow under 2,000 into view. Yes, you read that right - the MOAC would have 7,400 as a bounce point on the way to the near 'death of stocks'...

"George,

Have you checked your 1929 overlay lately?

1:1 since Oct 10 in price % DJIA, not time but price. According to that we should get a "snapper" today...(one last one) so lets see...(wouldn't trade on it, but lets keep on the look-out- today was a bit much..

Laundry is right, if we don't revisit in fact there are only two more ref points:

11, 440 (for the big 5-7% bounce, we touched 11454 today and missed out on it on Bear Stearns day due do FED discount manip on 3/17)) see 1929... and 9,500 for an interim stop then 7300 -9,100/9200 and 7,400 again.

Your head will be spinning... back to 10,900 and see you at 1,618 there after (Dow that is not SPX)...

All this to be completed no later than new years eve 2009 (that would be the latest date) in fact, most if it might be done in a year...The only thing the FED (Ali and Ben) achieved is to mess around with the time window by first hiking (delay) into May 06 and then lowering (raising expectations) more delays since July 07. They are part of the problem and not the fixers that they make us believe.

After that we will have "Obama Air" and "Billary Banks", not their fault, but their only choice...communism wandered from Moscow to the US of A.

You also will see that there is no "PPT" cause they will be curiously absent...(never were there in the first place)...They always make noise when the pressure is greatest (just like journalists give people what they want to hear- they are part of the system/universe, not outside it, but the public doesn't get it, otherwise they would hang from the proverbial tree , and my hunch is that might well happen when the people see the emperors have no clothes:

Sample Soc Gen cut = end of wave 3 Bear sterns surprise = end of wave 5 (look at SPX its clearer than Dow) April cut = near the end of wave II big (ABC up) and yesterday no action = acceleration, the ammunition is gone - poof!

The bureaucrats listened to the siren calls of WS and shot all their powder on the credit crisis but that was only part one, what they forgot is that there will be a nasty century recession on top of the credit crisis... To mind comes Jordin Sparks' song: " NO AIR" ....to breathe..."

Oh, oh. One of the interpretations of the predictive linguistics that have reminded us that October 7th at 7:10 is the center point for an emotional event that seems to be largely economic in content - the MOAC kind of thing) is that 7,400 this summer, then a bounce and fall collapse scenario which could push the Dow under 2,000 would fit perfectly with the expectation of this European contributor.

Needless to say that with subscriptions open to the next predictive linguistics run from www.halfpasthuman.com ($240 for what's usually a 7-part 7-8 week run) we'll be watching closely as immediacy values build getting closer to the 'event' and share what we are allowed from the series.

One macro-level view: The reports have been labeling 2009 as the year of 'transformation'.

It doesn't take too many brain cells to figure that a Middle East Mistake, with resulting $500-$1,000 oil, and a Dow of 2,000 would do a fair bit of 'transforming'.

Social fallout of this approach to 'transformation'? Oh, yeah. I can almost see the Billy Bob Thornton character reading a year-end brokerage statement this fall and saying "Yep, yep, yep..." as he reaches for....

QUOTE

Bear with us: A Stock Mortem

POST MORTEM - From the Latin, after death.

STOCK MORTEM - From the Ureism, after the Friday close..

28 Jun 2008
http://urbansurvival.com/week.htm

"It could have been worse" is about the best face that can be put on it, and even that would take a couple of shots of Jack with a beer chaser to blurt out without choking up for most folks, especially among the nearly 'grays' who have bought into paper assets as a means of holding value long-term. A dodgy proposition, at best, as I've mentioned.

Wrong on much of his work, at least Marx got 'owning the means of production' right. This was not a good week for the sheep of cannibal capitalism...

Besides breaking a 34-year trend line from the 1970's (varies by who's doing the counting, but it's around there), the closing Dow of 11,346.51 compared with last Saturday morning's 11,842.69. That's just 3.82 points from being a 500-point loss for the week. Close enough for a Saturday morning chat.

The truth of the matter is there's a simple reason for this week's rout: More sellers than buyers, a condition exacerbated by the end of quarter jockeying as fund managers want to show something other than the truth of this year's performance. And that is?

On December 31, 2007, the Dow closed at 13,264.82, so if you're pushing calculator buttons and worried about your retirement plans going "Poof!", you ought to come up with a drop of 1,918.31 for the year-to-date. That's only a 14.46% decline in the Dow, but I should remind you (if I can with a straight face) that dividends by the Dow 30 would soften that a bit. You may have figured out that's about as useful as KY with a locomotive.

On the other hand, flipping over to the www.Kitco.com chart site, and not to rub salt around in it, but the close of the 'yellow dog' was $833.30 on December 31, 2007. That same chart set reveals 926.80, although they may be having an issue with updating. www.ino.com reports the last trade on August gold was at$930.90 or $931.30, depending if you wand 100 ounces from the CBOT with an August delivery, or a NYMEX August contract.

Even using the Kitco figures, lowest of the group and closest to spot, you'd be looking at an 11.2% gain for the year to date.

The Blame Game

The conventional wisdom - shunned around here - is that a bear market is a decline of 20% - and to be sure, this market is there,; it's a bear.

Recall the 52-week Dow high is showing as 14,280 and the requisite 20% off that would put the Dow around 11,424...and since the Dow closed well under that this week, you're probably wondering where headline writers are getting their gumption to refer to this as the "brink of bear market" as in the Bloomberg headline "U.S. stocks slump, Pushing Dow average to brink of bear market".

"Gee, George, Maybe they are talking about the S&P, or something..."

Yah think? Let's test that theory, shall we? 52-week high for the S&P 500: 1,576.09 so 20% off that would be...1260.87. Take a gold star... that's why it's not officially a 'Bear".

Think the market can lose 1.4% next week? Think McDonalds might serve a burger today?

End of quarter portfolio cleaning aside, what's at fault? Take your pick of the headlines:

"Credit scores hit by card limits"

":Libya's threat to cut oil sends out the jitters"

"Stocks slump on oil, earnings news"

"Consumer confidence nears all-time low"

On this last, it's the worst levels since April and May of 1980. But, maybe it was actually worse in the last Depression. They only started measuring in 1952.

Yes, the mortgage market has problems, yes oil is expensive, and yes, the dollar is still overpriced relative to the goods and services produced by America and traded with the rest of the world - especially if you drop out financial products from the mix. Might want to save some for paper mache, though.

Is there a long term fix and a way to get America back on a sound footing? Oh sure. Go to a real currency with direct convertibility, and I'm not talking gold and silver. This weekend for Peoplenomics.com subscribers I explain how a BTU-based currency, set initially based on purchasing power parity and featuring a deliverability attribute, would thin down the Fat Cat Bankster system in no time.

Delivery clauses honesty, and without it you end up with things like....oh, the ABX maybe?

We're in a world where BTU's are the most important underpinning of society, whether they come from oil, wind, solar, gas, or cord wood and food. A calorie or BTU-based currency system with absolute deliverability solves a lot of problems, unless of course, you live in Midtown and are a calorie sink. You might consider honest work, for a change...

Packaging financial product with a side order of carbon credits just perpetuates the banker class. What the world needs is honest trade and a BTU/caloric system with deliverability would thin down the banking model which has been on a Ponzi-like run for a long time - but more on this for subscribers.

More proof that BTU's rule? Oil hit over $142 this week.

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 01:34 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

Fortis is a large bank and insurer in the Netherlands and Belgium. It took over ABN Amro last year, together with RBS and another bank. Last Thursday, its share lost 17% because Fortis attracted foreign capital.

I was shocked when I read the following, which was brought out 4hours ago:

American 'meltdown' reason for money injection Fortis.

28th of June, 9:10
https://www.kitcomm.com/showthread.php?t=19066

BRUSSEL/AMSTERDAM (DFT) - Fortis counts within some days up to weeks on complete collapsing the American financial markets. That explains interventions of Thursday to the serial according to the bank insurer to reinforce itself with €8 billion. „We are on the nippertje ready. It goes in the United States much more badly than thought, Fortis-chairman Maurice say lip paunch, which continues that top man Votron stays on. Fortis expect bankruptcies under 6000 American banks which have cover now little. „But also Citigroup, General engines, there start complete meltdown in the US. Fortis picked up yesterday €1,5 billion with aandelenemissie. End previous year had Belgisch-Nederlandse the concern €13 billion to new shares spend for the adoption of ABN AMRO, for which the €24 billion paid. lip paunch bases its care on conversations with bankers. „Two months suffered did not know we that it goes badly this way in America. And it still much will go more badly. We have to a thick mattress necessary the coming eighteen months pass when we can introduce ABN AMRO. Two weeks suffered communicated the American matter bank and consultant of Fortis Merrill Lynch that certain €6,2 billion extra to capital necessary were. THE VEB required yesterday clarification of Fortis: top man Jean-Paul Votron kept by the end of April full that Fortis did not need the capital market after purchase of ABN AMRO on. In a year €30 billion to grant value have been destroyed. After Votrons last consent the rate of the share with 19.4% plummeted, already it climbed yesterday with 4.4% up to €10,65. The enormous disorder around the bank insurer has especially stocked at our zuiderburen in Belgium as a bomb. Whereas the ophef sets limits in the Netherlands to the financial world, it is at our zuiderburen the conversation of the day. The bank not only dominates the street picture there, moreover but has been rockly-hard found by the mokerslag for Belgian volksaandeel hundred thousands small beleggers. All Belgian newspapers opened yesterday with heuse rampenkoppen, in which the free fall of the bank insurer became broad uitgemeten. Fortis crasht', calamity day for Fortis' and Fortis lose 5.3 miljard', this way opened three authoritative newspapers. The panic around the concern is concerning the border even this way large that the national supervision holder tried CFBA forced reassuring words speak itself direction the become desperate savers. „The need seizure of Fortis is run no reason to the bank and your money eraf CFBAwoordvoerder to obtain, thus. „Meet the bank all legal requirements, but themselves simply very sharp aims have put. Maurice lip paunch claimt that all large shareholders yesterday evening unanimously support to „has promised. Just like in the Netherlands the arrows aim especially at top man Jean-Paul Votron, who seems himself have strained oneself lifting heavily to the adoption of ABN AMRO. But whereas the inhabitant of brussels in the Netherlands is called its bonus of €2,5 million one requires pay in Belgium is departure. Which goes wrong such large, must carry the impact and therefore dismissal to take, thus President Huybregts of the Flemish federation of placement clubs and Beleggers. The fall of the share is for him an affirmative that the adoption of ABN AMRO much too expensive and was timed badly. „The former shareholders of ABN AMRO take a bath in champagne, emphasise Huybrechts now. „Which goes wrong large, must go away. Fortis are real volksaandeel and with that faith you can deal not recklessly. Also the Belgian newspaper the standard is rock-hard concerning the top man: „The credit crisis has met all banks, but it is no excuse. Fortis the much have decreased more sharply, thus commentator. „Fortis have always denied that there still a capital increase came. That was therefore or leugens, or inexperience. Both are just as terrible, thus Votron must keep the honour to themselves. He is some which something has deserved to the complete operation. According to the Belgian mediums want announce to Fortis Thursday that the bonus of Votron would be crossed out, but this has not happened at the last moment nevertheless. Also it is already very speculated concerning its succession, where especially the name of Filip Dierckx falls. Votron themselves want know of no districts. „The shareholders stand behind me and also in the top of the concern have I only support got operation set up for these by me, thus under fire located Fortis-topman. Also he rejects the terugstorten of the meanwhile controversial bonus resolutely. „What I do with my money, are my matter. The bonus had do nothing with ABN AMRO, but concerned the year 2007, thus Votron. The top man has been, however, prepared receive a part of its salary in Fortis-stukken. Moreover Votron can count still complete on chairman lip paunch, which denies that the bank has himself on the adoption of ABN AMRO verkeken. „Votron the top man remains simply. At this moment intervene, which is difficult that is real leadership show.

QUOTE

VOTRON BLIJFT AAN NA GOLF VAN KRITIEK

Amerikaanse 'meltdown' reden geldinjectie Fortis

28 Jun 08, 09:10
http://www.dft.nl/bedrijven/fortis/4339542...tie_Fortis.html

BRUSSEL/AMSTERDAM (DFT) - Fortis rekent binnen enkele dagen tot weken op het volledig instorten van de Amerikaanse financiële markten. Dat verklaart volgens de bankverzekeraar de serie ingrepen van donderdag om zich met €8 miljard te versterken. „We zijn op het nippertje gereed. Het gaat in de Verenigde Staten veel slechter dan gedacht", zegt Fortis-chairman Maurice Lippens, die volhoudt dat topman Votron aanblijft. Fortis verwacht faillissementen onder 6000 Amerikaanse banken die nu weinig dekking hebben. „Maar ook Citigroup, General Motors, er begint een complete meltdown in de VS."
Fortis haalde gisteren €1,5 miljard met een aandelenemissie op. Eind vorig jaar moest het Belgisch-Nederlandse concern €13 miljard aan nieuwe aandelen uitgeven voor de overname van ABN Amro, waarvoor het €24 miljard betaalde. Lippens baseert zijn zorg op gesprekken met bankiers. „Twee maanden geleden wisten we niet dat het zó slecht gaat in Amerika. En het zal nog veel slechter gaan. We hebben een dikke matras nodig om de komende achttien maanden door te komen wanneer we ABN Amro kunnen inbrengen."

Twee weken geleden meldde de Amerikaanse zakenbank én adviseur van Fortis Merrill Lynch dat zeker €6,2 miljard extra aan kapitaal nodig was. De VEB eiste gisteren opheldering van Fortis: topman Jean-Paul Votron hield eind april vol dat Fortis na de aankoop van ABN Amro niet de kapitaalmarkt op hoefde. In een jaar is €30 miljard aan beurswaarde vernietigd. Na Votrons laatste bekentenis kelderde de koers van het aandeel met 19,4%, al klom het gisteren met 4,4% tot €10,65.

De enorme onrust rond de bankverzekeraar is vooral bij onze zuiderburen in België als een bom ingeslagen. Terwijl de ophef zich in Nederland tot de financiële wereld beperkt, is het bij onze zuiderburen het gesprek van de dag. Niet alleen domineert de bank er het straatbeeld, maar door de mokerslag voor hét Belgische volksaandeel zijn bovendien honderdduizenden kleine beleggers keihard getroffen.

Alle Belgische kranten openden gisteren met heuse rampenkoppen, waarin de vrije val van de bankverzekeraar breed werd uitgemeten. 'Fortis crasht', 'Rampdag voor Fortis' en 'Fortis verliest 5,3 miljard', zo openden drie toonaangevende kranten.

De paniek rondom het concern is over de grens zelfs zo groot dat de nationale toezichthouder CFBA zich genoodzaakt zag geruststellende woorden te spreken richting de vertwijfelde spaarders. „De noodgreep van Fortis is geen reden naar de bank te rennen en je geld eraf te halen", aldus een CFBAwoordvoerder. „De bank voldoet aan alle wettelijke vereisten, maar heeft zichzelf gewoon heel scherpe doelen gesteld."

Maurice Lippens claimt dat alle grote aandeelhouders gisteravond „unaniem steun" hebben toegezegd.

Net als in Nederland richten de pijlen zich vooral op topman Jean-Paul Votron, die zich zwaar vertild lijkt te hebben aan de overname van ABN Amro. Maar terwijl de Brusselaar in Nederland wordt opgeroepen zijn bonus van €2,5 miljoen terug te storten eist men in België zijn vertrek.

Wie zulke grote fouten maakt, moet de gevolgen dragen en dus ontslag nemen", aldus voorzitter Huybregts van de Vlaamse federatie van Beleggingsclubs en Beleggers. De val van het aandeel is voor hem een bevestiging dat de overname van ABN Amro veel te duur en slecht getimed was.

„De voormalige aandeelhouders van ABN Amro nemen nu een bad in champagne", benadrukt Huybrechts. „Wie grote fouten maakt, moet opstappen. Fortis is een echt volksaandeel en met dat vertrouwen kun je niet roekeloos omspringen."

Ook de Belgische krant de Standaard is keihard over de topman: „De kredietcrisis heeft alle banken getroffen, maar het is geen excuus. Fortis is veel scherper gedaald", aldus de commentator. „Fortis heeft steeds ontkend dat er nog een kapitaalverhoging kwam. Dat waren dus ofwel leugens, ofwel onkunde. Beide zijn even erg, dus moet Votron de eer aan zichzelf houden. Hij is de enige die iets verdiend heeft aan de hele operatie."

Volgens de Belgische media wilde Fortis donderdag aankondigen dat de bonus van Votron zou worden geschrapt, maar is dit op het laatste moment toch niet gebeurd. Ook wordt al druk gespeculeerd over zijn opvolging, waarbij vooral de naam van Filip Dierckx valt.

Votron zelf wil van geen wijken weten. „De aandeelhouders staan achter me en ook in de top van het concern heb ik alleen maar steun gekregen voor deze door mij opgezette operatie", aldus de onder vuur liggende Fortis-topman.

Ook het terugstorten van de inmiddels omstreden bonus wijst hij resoluut af. „Wat ik met mijn geld doe, is mijn zaak. De bonus had niets met ABN Amro te maken, maar ging over het jaar 2007", aldus Votron. De topman is wel bereid een deel van zijn salaris in Fortis-stukken te ontvangen.

Votron kan daarnaast nog altijd volledig op chairman Lippens rekenen, die ontkent dat de bank zich op de overname van ABN Amro heeft verkeken. „Votron blijft gewoon de topman. Op dit moment ingrijpen, dat is moeilijk, dat is echt leadership tonen."

QUOTE

Faber: Federal Reserve Could Fail

06-28-2008
http://cryptogon.com/?p=2824

His chortles at the CNBC bozos were great.

PART 1 OF 2:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=3g7Ln2wc4Ww

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/3g7Ln2wc4Ww&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/3g7Ln2wc4Ww&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

PART 2 OF 2:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=t7zs_fxKLrA

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/t7zs_fxKLrA&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/t7zs_fxKLrA&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

http://i247.photobucket.com/albums/gg145/2tuff2006/britishisrael4.jpg
British Israel World Federation Movement's Destiny Magazine, February 1941 issue, page 31

QUOTE

http://www.gold-eagle.com/editorials_08/wa...wein062808.html

The June 2008 Dow Crash and the coming first strike attack on Iran herald the end of dollar hegemony.

BREAK-DOW!

They say that pictures speak a thousand words, so let's start this with a picture:

Today, the Dow crashed through its eight-year support level at 11,750. There isn't much below now to keep it from dropping all the way back down to the 7,500-range. What that will do to American investor psychology and worse, consumer confidence, and therefore spending, and therefore the economy, is only too apparent.

The gold-attack on Monday obviously didn't take. Gold recovered the following day and powered up by $26 the very next day to close in NY at $911. On Friday, gold confirmed its breakout, which means there will be little holding it back - just like there is now very little that's holding the Dow up.

Unsurprisingly, the US war machinery is in full swing at this time. Troop and military asset movements into the Iranian theater are nearly complete, the Israelis have flown their practice-attack of 100-plus fighter jets over the Mediterranean, and Congress has again prostrated itself before its banking-guild rulers who want total government (and therefore banking) of all economic activity.
Congress did this by passing the FISA Amendments Act of 2008 to give retroactive immunity to telcoms spying for the government, and by proposing a resolution (the already infamous H. Con. Res. 362) by which Congress demands that Bush completely blockade Iran in order to force it to stop enriching uranium. This, naturally, is a perfect setup for unleashing the long-planned bombing campaign on Iran. Congressmen know that Iran will not accede to these international demands.

End result: We will probably get another war because of all this, just like we got one back in 2002-03 when the Dow plunged into the chasm this recently broken support level has bridged for these past eight years (see chart above).

The problem is that this time, it is a bipartisan gang of US war mongers in our Congress who all appear hell-bent on forcing Bush to attack Iran with a preemptive strike, possibly even an unprovoked nuclear first strike – something that human history so far has not had to deal with.

It is also something that will cause the US to forfeit any legitimate claims of world leadership for the remainder of that history.

The War Currency
Wars are rarely fought over national security issues, as political leaders often claim. At rock bottom, they are mostly fought over economic issues.
Iraq and Iran (if Congress and the administration get their way) are the only two countries the US has ever attacked preemptively. They are also the only two oil-producing countries that ever went off the petrodollar. The alleged nuclear ambitions of a terrorist-sponsoring country cannot be the real reason for the planned attack – because terrorist-sponsor North Korea was not only allowed to develop nuclear weapons unmolested, it was even allowed to test-launch a potentially nuclear-tipped ICBM at the US without any military repercussions whatsoever.

There goes the "national security" rationalization for this planned attack.

This fact exposes the attacks for what they really are. tools of US monetary policy. The dollar has no real value internationally, save for the fact that the now militarily enforced necessity for countries to buy dollars in order to buy oil creates artificial demand.

The euro's existence threatens all of this, now. Oil countries have a dollar-alternative in the euro, and so does the rest of the world. The euro is designed to not be quite as inflationary as the dollar is and has been. This is done by virtue of the ECB's exclusive mandate of "price stability", another word for inflation fighting.

Yet Another War Currency
Yet, even the euro carries the fiat-disease within it. Even the euro is structurally inflationary – just at a slower pace than th edollar. Ultimately, even the euro will fail, but it has served its intended purpose well: to sideline the US dollar and thereby the dollar-based US empire.
The old US dollar empire has now served its own purpose as the engine for global growth and for achieving general globalization. Like the Jumbo Jets of yore that piggy-backed the early space shuttles perform their test flights before they could finally launch into space on their own power, the US economic mother ship has now fulfilled its purpose and is no longer needed.

In the globalists' view, the US can now safely be discarded because it has inherent "flaws."

America has a constitutional system that, even though it has been successfully neutralized to a large extent, was designed to protect individual freedom, and that makes some of her people insist on them. Such cannot be tolerated in a truly globalized world. It tends to make people of other countries want to simulate the US and to insist on keeping their countries' sovereignty intact to protect their own tenuous freedoms.

In the final analysis, therefore, the euro is a war currency as well. It is a model currency, designed to centralize economic power in artificial, regional political bodies and away from sovereign national governments. It is a currency designed to abolish the nation state. It serves as the model to be implemented by other regions: North America next, then Asia and Africa, later North and South America combined, and eventually all of these regions will be forced to bow to a supra-regional, global control mechanism.

This will only achieved by more warfare – except it won't be called "war" anymore. Future military campaigns will be called "peace actions", for they will ostensibly be waged to "enforce peace" – a linguistic and conceptual contortion that rivals anything George Orwell could have dreamed up.

The Peace Currency
Gold is truly the peace currency. It needs no military to prop it up. It needs no centralized control system to regulate its supply, only the natural, ultimately decentralized controls of supply and demand. Wars may be fought over access to gold mines some day, but correct me if I'm wrong, so far this has not happened in history. Gold can easily be acquired in trade. Fighting a war over access would be self-defeating because it costs more than the potential benefit could yield.
So, the world is now faced by an America that claims it wants to "spread democracy" while using its military to tyrannize countries that simply want to sell their oil for another currency. America has become what she always claims to be opposed to: an absolute tyranny that no longer even cloaks itself. Not surprising, given the role assigned to her by her globalist masters in ushering in the preconditions for eventual total centralization.

Gold is allowed to play its limited role in all of this because increased use of gold for investment purposes, and as currency, tends to weaken the dollar-empire and strengthen other regions (Europe), and nations (China).

Americans, however, have it within their power to mess up the globalist's game plan for good. They have a chance to completely neutralize the eventual "winner" of the globalists' remaining, hand-picked presidential candidates. They have a chance to boot out every Congressman and Senator up for reelection this fall who ever voted to pass measures such as the "Patriot" Act, the Military Commissions Act, or the upcoming vote on House Concurrent Resolution 362 discussed above.

They can also fire all who refuse to vote for Ron Paul's Honest Money Act designed to reintroduce gold and silver as the peace currency.

If they achieve this victory, Congress will, for once, pay attention to their political will. Congress will then, for once, be a true check on presidential executive power. Such a Congress can then even be moved to abolish the Federal Reserve – but only if Americans start to pay attention to what power their choice of currency can convey to – or withhold from – their government.

It's all up to them.

In the meantime, gold will have unbelievable bull runs as the US Fed carries out Vladimir Lenin's instructions on how to "best" destroy the capitalist system – by debauching the currency.

Got gold?

QUOTE

Global economy faces deep slowdown, warns central bankers' club

By Edmund Conway, Economics Editor
Last Updated: 1:19am BST 30/06/2008
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/money/main.jhtm...30/cnbis130.xml

The global economy may be heading for a far deeper crisis than is expected and a bout of deflation in the world's biggest economies is now a possibility, according to one of the world's most highly regarded economic institutions.

The Bank for International Settlements has warned that many in the City and elsewhere may have underestimated the scale of the coming economic downturn in one of its most sombre portraits yet of the international financial system.

The Swiss institution - known as the central bankers' bank - issued the alert in its annual report, released today.

It warned that the sub-prime crisis in financial markets was merely a reflection of growing debt burdens in the developed world, which could soon contribute to a deep slowdown.

"The difficulties in the sub-prime market were a trigger for, rather than a cause of, all the disruptive events that have followed," it said. "Moreover... the magnitude of the problems yet to be faced could be much greater than many now perceive."

The warning will cause particular concern among participants in the financial sector, as the BIS was among the earliest major institutions to warn that the world could face a credit crisis and financial slump.

The report draws stark comparisons between the current crisis and a variety of others including the Great Depression.

It said: "Historians would recall the long recession beginning in 1873, the global downturn that began in the late 1920s, and the Japanese and Asian crises of the early and late 1990s respectively.

" In each episode, a long period of strong credit growth coincided with an increasingly euphoric upturn in both the real economy and financial markets, followed by an unexpected crisis and extended downturn.

"In virtually every instance, some form of new economic discovery or new financial development provided a further 'new era' justification for rapid credit expansion, and predictably became a focus for blame in the downturn."

Most sobering is the report's warning that developed economies including the US and Britain could face deflation.

It said: "The eventual global slowdown could prove to be much greater and longer lasting than would be required to keep inflation under control. This could potentially even lead to deflation, which would evidently be less welcome."

•Profitability in financial services is falling at its fastest rate in at least 19 years as the credit crisis continues to hurt, a new study indicates. A balance of 44pc of firms have reported a fall in profits in the quarterly financial services survey released today by the CBI and PricewaterhouseCoopers. It is the worst result since the survey began in 1989.

QUOTE

US Mint Suspends Gold Coin Sales

GATA.org
Submitted by cpowell
8-17-8

Dear Friend of GATA and Gold:

The U.S. Mint has suspended sales of American Eagle gold coins and is refusing orders from dealers, two coin and bullion dealers confirmed Thursday.

The mint's suspension of gold coin sales follows its tight rationing of sales of silver eagle coins, begun in May, when sales to the public were terminated and sales to the mint's 13 authorized dealers were tightly limited.

Word of the mint's suspension of gold coin sales came from the American Precious Metals Exchange in Edmond, Oklahoma, (<http://apmexdealer.blogspot.com/2008/08/news-alert-us-mint-suspends-sales-of.htmlhttp://apmexdealer.blogspot.com/2008/08/news-alert-us-mint-suspends-sales-of.html) and from Centennial Precious Metals in Denver, Colorado.

The suspension is overwhelming evidence that the futures contract price of gold on the commodities exchanges is substantially below the physical market price and that, indeed, the commodities exchanges are being used as GATA long has maintained -- as part of a massive scheme of manipulation of the precious metals, currency, and bond markets.

Michael Kosares, proprietor of Centennial Precious Metals and host of its Internet bulletin board, the USAGold Forum

(<http://www.usagold.com/cpmforum /http://www.usagold.com/cpmforum/), explained Thursday:

"The U.S. Mint buys direct from the refiners, and this suspension of gold eagle sales may be an indication that the supply line is already backing up, or that the mint expects that it will back up for the rest of the year. I wonder who would give up physical metal at these prices and under these circumstances except distressed sellers. The central banks are in a hunker-down mode as far as I can determine, and it's the mines that supply the refiners. So if the mint, which buys from the refiners, is having a difficult time locating metal, what does that tell you? I keep saying that we may get a surprising rubber-band effect later in the year when the pre-holiday/festival season kicks off in September/ October. It may happen sooner. One of our indicators of approaching a bottom in gold is how many calls Centennial Precious Metals gets from our U.S.-based Indian clientele. Here's a quote from my office's report to me at the end of the day today: 'Today was a good day. ... There must have been an Indian convention where someone was handing out USAGold business cards.' That may give you a clue as to thinking in India proper and probably the rest of the Asian rim."

That is, through their agents the bullion banks the Western central banks, desperate to prop up a corrupt and totteringt financial system, have put gold so much on sale that even the U.S. Mint can't find any now. The price reported from the commodities markets is a fiction -- a scary one, perhaps, but a fiction no less.

You can strike a blow at the market riggers who are defrauding the world -- just buy a little real metal The dealers listed at the bottom right of this dispatch will be glad to help you do it.

CHRIS POWELL, Secretary/Treasurer Gold Anti-Trust Action Committee Inc.

* * *
Contact GATA
info@gata.org

QUOTE

Ephilution:

Here is a grasp of interesting and relevant quotes coming from a document from a British Defence think-tank called the Development, Concepts and Doctrine Centre (DCDC) which predicts what general societal changes will take place over the next 30 years or so:

> QUOTE
>
> There will be an increased risk of humanitarian catastrophe in the most vulnerable regions, caused by a mixture of climate change, resource pressures, uneven distribution of wealth, the effect of disease and the failure of authorities to cope with population growth and urbanization.

Page 6

> QUOTE
>
> Diseases. Several communicable diseases will continue to have a significant impact on population and development and, without effective control measures, may spread from developing regions to more settled and affluent areas. Some diseases will re-emerge in strength, like tuberculosis, malaria and cholera, as environmental changes occur and the pattern of human activity becomes more diverse and complex. HIV/AIDS will remain prevalent in Sub-Saharan Africa, Asia and Eastern Europe and, although a cure and/or vaccination is likely before 2035, its impact will be long-lasting. The social, economic and human costs of contagious and communicable diseases will remain high and are likely to slow economic growth drastically in the worst affected regions for at least the first half of the period.

Page 7

> QUOTE

Urbanization & Human Settlement. By 2035, 60% of the world's population will live in urban areas.8 There will be a substantial growth in shanty towns and unplanned, random urban settlement, increasing the resource cost and environmental impact. In some cases, rapid, uncontrolled development will challenge the ability of growing cities' infrastructure and governance to control and support the additional settlement and some cities may not cope. Similarly, populations will increasingly inhabit areas which defy nature and will be at significant environmental risk. This is particularly true in areas susceptible to volcanic and seismic activity and in low-lying coastal regions where extreme weather events and inundation are likely to occur with increasing frequency. This will result in an increase in humanitarian crises and a significant rise in mass migration.

Page 9

QUOTE

Transnational Terrorism. Transnational and locally based terrorism, particularly Islamist, will continue to derive its energy and justification from political motivations, disadvantage and grievance, extending beyond poorer and more volatile regions to include the marginalized in middle-income and more affluent societies. The casualties and amount of damage inflicted will remain low, compared to other forms of coercion and conflict, but the effect will be magnified by reach (both physical and psychological), the scale of disruption to infrastructures and the sensationalist value inherent in the 'Theatre of Violence' and the 'Propaganda of the Deed'. Based on technological availability and historic examples, chemical, biological and radiological elements will be viable and credible possibilities for terrorist attack throughout the period, together with a lower possibility of nuclear use.

Page 16

QUOTE

Chemical, Biological, Radiological and Nuclear Weapon Proliferation. Access to technology that enables the production and distribution of Chemical, Biological, Radiological and Nuclear (CBRN) weapons is likely to increase. A critical indicator of risk is contained in the examples of North Korea and Iran - both in obtaining or seeking nuclear weapons and in exploiting their putative possession for political and economic advantage. In future, much proliferation and threat will be manifest in the ungoverned space between legality and realpolitik, together with the distinct possibility of the acquisition of CBRN material by non-state and rogue elements.

Page 17

QUOTE

Disease. Infectious diseases in general will continue to have significant economic and social impact across many regions of the world. Beyond Sub-Saharan Africa, emerging economies such as India, China and Russia are likely to be challenged significantly by HIV/AIDS, with an estimated 10-20m sufferers in China by 2010.26 These and other regions will be affected by antibiotic resistant strains of other major diseases, like tuberculosis and hepatitis, whose incidence will be multiplied by global interconnectivity and travel. A major pandemic may be the instrument that causes a reverse in the process of globalization as national responses to contain infection will involve significant restrictions on personal mobility and interaction over a lengthy period. Some states may even be destabilized by the effort and resources required to address the situation.

Page 28

QUOTE

US Economic Vulnerability. The perception of the US as an ultimate guarantor of international security and the health of the international economic engine, able to intervene politically and militarily in unstable areas and in the settlement of intractable problems, is central to the stability of the present international system. A US economic downturn, resulting in its reduced international posture, may lead to increased global tension, inter-state rivalry and a greater military provision, and possibly intervention, by other nations.

Page 29

Source: DCDC Global Strategic Trends Programme 2007-2036
http://www.cuttingthroughthematrix.com/articles.html

Or download directly from:
http://www.mediafire.com/?ky5fsmullm6
http://www.mediafire.com/?qhfzznjqpqm

If an economic meltdown will indeed become a reality then it is likely that through the ensuing shock-wave engulfing society, chaos will not only manifest itself in rises in crime and unemployment, the general hygiene is also likely to plummet. Now this would in my opinion be an excellent staging base for our leaders to release biological weaponry on the public. After all, they then could always simply blame poor standards of hygiene for any sudden devastation brought on the populace caused by epidemics of infectious diseases. No terrorists needed, just blaming the degenerate and sorry state of society will do just nicely thank you.

As such, they then have a seemingly ideal explanation for any drops in population numbers without the need for resorting to the actions of foreign based terroristic agents, which after all may relatively easily be flagged as being insidious cases of false flag terrorism imposed by local governments themselves.
We, the so-called 'useless eaters' (then: 'useless eaters gone wild' through hunger, discontempt and disease) then face extinction seemingly entirely through 'natural' means; no war and no foreign terrorists needed.

QUOTE

DuckingDafta:

these first three pages in pdf just in case it 'get's lost' again or someone wants to read it offline.

http://www.megaupload.com/?d=LIBKW74E

QUOTE

Meet the Economist Who Thinks We're Doomed

By Stephen Mihm, The New York Times. Posted August 18, 2008.
http://www.alternet.org/workplace/95375/me...we%27re_doomed/

Dr. Nouriel Roubini believes we face a housing bust, a huge credit crisis, an oil shock and a deep recession. Just for starts.

On Sept. 7, 2006, Nouriel Roubini, an economics professor at New York University, stood before an audience of economists at the International Monetary Fund and announced that a crisis was brewing. In the coming months and years, he warned, the United States was likely to face a once-in-a-lifetime housing bust, an oil shock, sharply declining consumer confidence and, ultimately, a deep recession. He laid out a bleak sequence of events: homeowners defaulting on mortgages, trillions of dollars of mortgage-backed securities unraveling worldwide and the global financial system shuddering to a halt. These developments, he went on, could cripple or destroy hedge funds, investment banks and other major financial institutions like Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac.

The audience seemed skeptical, even dismissive. As Roubini stepped down from the lectern after his talk, the moderator of the event quipped, "I think perhaps we will need a stiff drink after that." People laughed -- and not without reason. At the time, unemployment and inflation remained low, and the economy, while weak, was still growing, despite rising oil prices and a softening housing market. And then there was the espouser of doom himself: Roubini was known to be a perpetual pessimist, what economists call a "permabear." When the economist Anirvan Banerji delivered his response to Roubini's talk, he noted that Roubini's predictions did not make use of mathematical models and dismissed his hunches as those of a career naysayer.

But Roubini was soon vindicated. In the year that followed, subprime lenders began entering bankruptcy, hedge funds began going under and the stock market plunged. There was declining employment, a deteriorating dollar, ever-increasing evidence of a huge housing bust and a growing air of panic in financial markets as the credit crisis deepened. By late summer, the Federal Reserve was rushing to the rescue, making the first of many unorthodox interventions in the economy, including cutting the lending rate by 50 basis points and buying up tens of billions of dollars in mortgage-backed securities. When Roubini returned to the I.M.F. last September, he delivered a second talk, predicting a growing crisis of solvency that would infect every sector of the financial system. This time, no one laughed. "He sounded like a madman in 2006," recalls the I.M.F. economist Prakash Loungani, who invited Roubini on both occasions. "He was a prophet when he returned in 2007."

Over the past year, whenever optimists have declared the worst of the economic crisis behind us, Roubini has countered with steadfast pessimism. In February, when the conventional wisdom held that the venerable investment firms of Wall Street would weather the crisis, Roubini warned that one or more of them would go "belly up" -- and six weeks later, Bear Stearns collapsed. Following the Fed's further extraordinary actions in the spring -- including making lines of credit available to selected investment banks and brokerage houses -- many economists made note of the ensuing economic rally and proclaimed the credit crisis over and a recession averted. Roubini, who dismissed the rally as nothing more than a "delusional complacency" encouraged by a "bunch of self-serving spinmasters," stuck to his script of "nightmare" events: waves of corporate bankrupticies, collapses in markets like commercial real estate and municipal bonds and, most alarming, the possible bankruptcy of a large regional or national bank that would trigger a panic by depositors. Not all of these developments have come to pass (and perhaps never will), but the demise last month of the California bank IndyMac -- one of the largest such failures in U. S. history -- drew only more attention to Roubini's seeming prescience.

As a result, Roubini, a respected but formerly obscure academic, has become a major figure in the public debate about the economy: the seer who saw it coming. He has been summoned to speak before Congress, the Council on Foreign Relations and the World Economic Forum at Davos. He is now a sought-after adviser, spending much of his time shuttling between meetings with central bank governors and finance ministers in Europe and Asia. Though he continues to issue colorful doomsday prophecies of a decidedly nonmainstream sort -- especially on his popular and polemical blog, where he offers visions of "equity market slaughter" and the "Coming Systemic Bust of the U.S. Banking System" -- the mainstream economic establishment appears to be moving closer, however fitfully, to his way of seeing things. "I have in the last few months become more pessimistic than the consensus," the former Treasury secretary Lawrence Summers told me earlier this year. "Certainly, Nouriel's writings have been a contributor to that."

On a cold and dreary day last winter, I met Roubini over lunch in the TriBeCa neighborhood of New York City. "I'm not a pessimist by nature," he insisted. "I'm not someone who sees things in a bleak way." Just looking at him, I found the assertion hard to credit. With a dour manner and an aura of gloom about him, Roubini gives the impression of being permanently pained, as if the burden of what he knows is almost too much for him to bear. He rarely smiles, and when he does, his face, topped by an unruly mop of brown hair, contorts into something more closely resembling a grimace.

When I pressed him on his claim that he wasn't pessimistic, he paused for a moment and then relented a little. "I have more concerns about potential risks and vulnerabilities than most people," he said, with glum understatement. But these concerns, he argued, make him more of a realist than a pessimist and put him in the role of the cleareyed outsider -- unsettling complacency and puncturing pieties.

Roubini, who is 50, has been an outsider his entire life. He was born in Istanbul, the child of Iranian Jews, and his family moved to Tehran when he was 2, then to Tel Aviv and finally to Italy, where he grew up and attended college. He moved to the United States to pursue his doctorate in international economics at Harvard. Along the way he became fluent in Farsi, Hebrew, Italian and English. His accent, an inimitable polyglot growl, radiates a weariness that comes with being what he calls a "global nomad."

As a graduate student at Harvard, Roubini was an unusual talent, according to his adviser, the Columbia economist Jeffrey Sachs. He was as comfortable in the world of arcane mathematics as he was studying political and economic institutions. "It's a mix of skills that rarely comes packaged in one person," Sachs told me. After completing his Ph.D. in 1988, Roubini joined the economics department at Yale, where he first met and began sharing ideas with Robert Shiller, the economist now known for his prescient warnings about the 1990s tech bubble.

The '90s were an eventful time for an international economist like Roubini. Throughout the decade, one emerging economy after another was beset by crisis, beginning with Mexico's in 1994. Panics swept Asia, including Thailand, Indonesia and Korea, in 1997 and 1998. The economies of Brazil and Russia imploded in 1998. Argentina's followed in 2000. Roubini began studying these countries and soon identified what he saw as their common weaknesses. On the eve of the crises that befell them, he noticed, most had huge current-account deficits (meaning, basically, that they spent far more than they made), and they typically financed these deficits by borrowing from abroad in ways that exposed them to the national equivalent of bank runs. Most of these countries also had poorly regulated banking systems plagued by excessive borrowing and reckless lending. Corporate governance was often weak, with cronyism in abundance.

Roubini's work was distinguished not only by his conclusions but also by his approach. By making extensive use of transnational comparisons and historical analogies, he was employing a subjective, nontechnical framework, the sort embraced by popular economists like the Times Op-Ed columnist Paul Krugman and Joseph Stiglitz in order to reach a nonacademic audience. Roubini takes pains to note that he remains a rigorous scholarly economist -- "When I weigh evidence," he told me, "I'm drawing on 20 years of accumulated experience using models" -- but his approach is not the contemporary scholarly ideal in which an economist builds a model in order to constrain his subjective impressions and abide by a discrete set of data. As Shiller told me, "Nouriel has a different way of seeing things than most economists: he gets into everything."

Roubini likens his style to that of a policy maker like Alan Greenspan, the former Fed chairman who was said (perhaps apocryphally) to pore over vast quantities of technical economic data while sitting in the bathtub, looking to sniff out where the economy was headed. Roubini also cites, as a more ideologically congenial example, the sweeping, cosmopolitan approach of the legendary economist John Maynard Keynes, whom Roubini, with only slight exaggeration, calls "the most brilliant economist who never wrote down an equation." The book that Roubini ultimately wrote (with the economist Brad Setser) on the emerging market crises, "Bailouts or Bail-Ins?" contains not a single equation in its 400-plus pages.

After analyzing the markets that collapsed in the '90s, Roubini set out to determine which country's economy would be the next to succumb to the same pressures. His surprising answer: the United States'. "The United States," Roubini remembers thinking, "looked like the biggest emerging market of all." Of course, the United States wasn't an emerging market; it was (and still is) the largest economy in the world. But Roubini was unnerved by what he saw in the U.S. economy, in particular its 2004 current-account deficit of $600 billion. He began writing extensively about the dangers of that deficit and then branched out, researching the various effects of the credit boom -- including the biggest housing bubble in the nation's history -- that began after the Federal Reserve cut rates to close to zero in 2003. Roubini became convinced that the housing bubble was going to pop.

By late 2004 he had started to write about a "nightmare hard landing scenario for the United States." He predicted that foreign investors would stop financing the fiscal and current-account deficit and abandon the dollar, wreaking havoc on the economy. He said that these problems, which he called the "twin financial train wrecks," might manifest themselves in 2005 or, at the latest, 2006. "You have been warned here first," he wrote ominously on his blog. But by the end of 2006, the train wrecks hadn't occurred.

Recessions are signal events in any modern economy. And yet remarkably, the profession of economics is quite bad at predicting them. A recent study looked at "consensus forecasts" (the predictions of large groups of economists) that were made in advance of 60 different national recessions that hit around the world in the '90s: in 97 percent of the cases, the study found, the economists failed to predict the coming contraction a year in advance. On those rare occasions when economists did successfully predict recessions, they significantly underestimated the severity of the downturns. Worse, many of the economists failed to anticipate recessions that occurred as soon as two months later.

The dismal science, it seems, is an optimistic profession. Many economists, Roubini among them, argue that some of the optimism is built into the very machinery, the mathematics, of modern economic theory. Econometric models typically rely on the assumption that the near future is likely to be similar to the recent past, and thus it is rare that the models anticipate breaks in the economy. And if the models can't foresee a relatively minor break like a recession, they have even more trouble modeling and predicting a major rupture like a full-blown financial crisis. Only a handful of 20th-century economists have even bothered to study financial panics. (The most notable example is probably the late economist Hyman Minksy, of whom Roubini is an avid reader.) "These are things most economists barely understand," Roubini told me. "We're in uncharted territory where standard economic theory isn't helpful."

True though this may be, Roubini's critics do not agree that his approach is any more accurate. Anirvan Banerji, the economist who challenged Roubini's first I.M.F. talk, points out that Roubini has been peddling pessimism for years; Banerji contends that Roubini's apparent foresight is nothing more than an unhappy coincidence of events. "Even a stopped clock is right twice a day," he told me. "The justification for his bearish call has evolved over the years," Banerji went on, ticking off the different reasons that Roubini has used to justify his predictions of recessions and crises: rising trade deficits, exploding current-account deficits, Hurricane Katrina, soaring oil prices. All of Roubini's predictions, Banerji observed, have been based on analogies with past experience. "This forecasting by analogy is a tempting thing to do," he said. "But you have to pick the right analogy. The danger of this more subjective approach is that instead of letting the objective facts shape your views, you will choose the facts that confirm your existing views."

Kenneth Rogoff, an economist at Harvard who has known Roubini for decades, told me that he sees great value in Roubini's willingness to entertain possible situations that are far outside the consensus view of most economists. "If you're sitting around at the European Central Bank," he said, "and you're asking what's the worst thing that could happen, the first thing people will say is, 'Let's see what Nouriel says.' " But Rogoff cautioned against equating that skill with forecasting. Roubini, in other words, might be the kind of economist you want to consult about the possibility of the collapse of the municipal-bond market, but he is not necessarily the kind you ask to predict, say, the rise in global demand for paper clips.

His defenders contend that Roubini is not unduly pessimistic. Jeffrey Sachs, his former adviser, told me that "if the underlying conditions call for optimism, Nouriel would be optimistic." And to be sure, Roubini is capable of being optimistic -- or at least of steering clear of absolute worst-case prognostications. He agrees, for example, with the conventional economic wisdom that oil will drop below $100 a barrel in the coming months as global demand weakens. "I'm not comfortable saying that we're going to end up in the Great Depression," he told me. "I'm a reasonable person."

What economic developments does Roubini see on the horizon? And what does he think we should do about them? The first step, he told me in a recent conversation, is to acknowledge the extent of the problem. "We are in a recession, and denying it is nonsense," he said. When Jim Nussle, the White House budget director, announced last month that the nation had "avoided a recession," Roubini was incredulous. For months, he has been predicting that the United States will suffer through an 18-month recession that will eventually rank as the "worst since the Great Depression." Though he is confident that the economy will enter a technical recovery toward the end of next year, he says that job losses, corporate bankruptcies and other drags on growth will continue to take a toll for years.

Roubini has counseled various policy makers, including Federal Reserve governors and senior Treasury Department officials, to mount an aggressive response to the crisis. He applauded when the Federal Reserve cut interest rates to 2 percent from 5.25 percent beginning last summer. He also supported the Fed's willingness to engineer a takeover of Bear Stearns. Roubini argues that the Fed's actions averted catastrophe, though he says he believes that future bailouts should focus on mortgage owners, not investors. Accordingly, he sees the choice facing the United States as stark but simple: either the government backs up a trillion-plus dollars' worth of high-risk mortgages (in exchange for the lenders' agreement to reduce monthly mortgage payments), or the banks and other institutions holding those mortgages -- or the complex securities derived from them -- go under. "You either nationalize the banks or you nationalize the mortgages," he said. "Otherwise, they're all toast."

For months Roubini has been arguing that the true cost of the housing crisis will not be a mere $300 billion -- the amount allowed for by the housing legislation sponsored by Representative Barney Frank and Senator Christopher Dodd -- but something between a trillion and a trillion and a half dollars. But most important, in Roubini's opinion, is to realize that the problem is deeper than the housing crisis. "Reckless people have deluded themselves that this was a subprime crisis," he told me. "But we have problems with credit-card debt, student-loan debt, auto loans, commercial real estate loans, home-equity loans, corporate debt and loans that financed leveraged buyouts." All of these forms of debt, he argues, suffer from some or all of the same traits that first surfaced in the housing market: shoddy underwriting, securitization, negligence on the part of the credit-rating agencies and lax government oversight. "We have a subprime financial system," he said, "not a subprime mortgage market."

Roubini argues that most of the losses from this bad debt have yet to be written off, and the toll from bad commercial real estate loans alone may help send hundreds of local banks into the arms of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. "A good third of the regional banks won't make it," he predicted. In turn, these bailouts will add hundreds of billions of dollars to an already gargantuan federal debt, and someone, somewhere, is going to have to finance that debt, along with all the other debt accumulated by consumers and corporations. "Our biggest financiers are China, Russia and the gulf states," Roubini noted. "These are rivals, not allies."

The United States, Roubini went on, will likely muddle through the crisis but will emerge from it a different nation, with a different place in the world. "Once you run current-account deficits, you depend on the kindness of strangers," he said, pausing to let out a resigned sigh. "This might be the beginning of the end of the American empire."

QUOTE

Roubini - http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=78...ini&vt=lf&hl=en

Ron Paul advisor - Peter Schiff..... http://video.google.com/videosearch?source...-8&sa=N&tab=wv#

Meredith Whitney
http://video.google.com/videosearch?q=mere...=1&sa=N&tab=wv#

QUOTE

Nouriel Roubini on Bloomberg TV

July 17, 2008

Bloomberg TV Interview: Worst Financial Crisis Since the Great Depression and Worst U.S. Recession in Decades

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/bWa1uzhQQQI&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/bWa1uzhQQQI&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=bWa1uzhQQQI

Dollar Collapse - Peter Schiff Versus Mike Norman

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/WVDzQU311tc&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/WVDzQU311tc&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=WVDzQU311tc

Meredith Whitney: More writedowns ahead

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/42mVTnFkuus&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/42mVTnFkuus&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=-2...h+whitney&vt=lf

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 01:44 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

Warning from Alliance & Leicester

Tuesday, 19 August 2008 15:23 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7570048.stm

The Alliance & Leicester (A&L) bank has warned of "significant external risks" to itself if Banco Santander's planned takeover is rejected by shareholders.

More than 560,000 A&L shareholders are being urged in a letter to support the £1.3bn takeover, announced in July.

Roy Brown, the bank's acting chairman, said if the deal did not go through then the bank would be exposed to the worsening economic slowdown.

Investors are being offered one Santander share for three A&L shares.

If the deal takes place as planned this October, then A&L will be merged with Banco Santander's existing UK subsidiary, the Abbey.

This will create a much larger bank with 959 branches and 10% of the UK's bank current accounts.

In a document outlining the terms of the deal to shareholders, Mr Brown emphasised the risks involved in the deal not happening.

"There remain significant external risks presented by the deterioration in the broader economic outlook and the continuing turbulence in financial markets," he said.

"The A&L Board sees no obvious circumstances that are likely, materially, to improve conditions in the financial markets or the broader economic outlook in the near to medium term."

Need for shelter

The Abbey was bought by Santander, Spain's biggest bank, in 2004.

A&L and its suitor require a 75% vote in favour of the deal by A&L's shareholders by the deadline of Sunday 14 September.

The offer values each A&L share at 317 pence each, as of 8 August, in turn valuing the bank at £1.333bn.

Including an impending interim dividend, worth 18p per share, the deal represents a 53% premium to A&L's stock market value just before the takeover was announced in July.

The A&L Board is... acutely aware of the significant external risks presented to A&L

A&L statement

The need for A&L to shelter under Santander's wing is highlighted by figures in the 260-page document outlining the rationale for the deal.

First revealed at the start of August, they show that in the first six months of this year, profits at A&L evaporated almost completely, falling from £290m in the first half of 2007 to just £2m this year.

The bank goes out of its way to warn that it is "acutely aware" that its financial position may become even weaker because of the credit crunch.

Further shocks?

And it hints strongly that, on its own, its finances might be weakened further.

"The A&L Board also recognises the risk that further shocks to the financial system created by unfavourable developments at other financial institutions could generate widespread general adverse sentiment towards financial groups like A&L," the bank said.

"The A&L Board has concluded therefore that there is a risk of external events further eroding shareholder value and that the value to A&L shareholders of the greater certainty provided by being part of a larger organisation is considerable," it added.

To make sure that A&L's finances do not become even worse, Santander says it is prepared to inject, if necessary, up to £1bn in extra cash to cover any further losses on loans and investments.

To win over staff, every A&L employee is being offered 100 free shares in Banco Santander if the takeover goes through.

The Spanish bank expects that merging the A&L with the Abbey will save about £180m a year in running costs.

Santander says staff cuts are likely among the combined bank's workforce but an A&L spokeswoman said there had been no discussion about the scale of redundancies among its 7,300 staff.

QUOTE

US bank 'to fail within months'

A "whopper" bank is going to "go under", Mr Rogoff said

Tuesday, 19 August 2008 10:46 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7569903.stm

The global financial crisis is set to get worse, with a large US bank likely to collapse in the next few months, a former IMF chief economist has warned.

Kenneth Rogoff's comments came as shares in Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac sank on a report that the home lenders would, in effect, be nationalised.

Despite hopes that the US economy had turned the corner, Mr Rogoff claimed it was "not out of the woods".

"I would even go further to say 'the worst is to come'," he said.

"We're not just going to see mid-sized banks go under in the next few months," said Mr Rogoff, who held the IMF role between 2001 and 2004.

"We're going to see a whopper, we're going to see a big one, one of the big investment banks or big banks."

Speaking at a conference in Singapore, Mr Rogoff, now an economics professor at Harvard, forecast that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac would "probably" not exist in their present form in a few years.

"We have to see more consolidation in the financial sector before this is over."

On Monday, shares of Fannie Mae fell more than 22%, or $1.76, to close at $6.15. Shares of Freddie Mac fell almost 25%, or $1.46, to $4.39.

'Wrong move'

Shares in Freddie and Fannie first fell sharply last month on fears that they would run out of money to fund their business, forcing the US government to take radical steps to ease the panic.

The two firms are the backbone of the US mortgage market as almost all US lenders rely on them to buy their mortgages in order to access the funds to lend to consumers.

As mortgage guarantors, they must pay out when homeowners default on their loans.

With the housing market across the US crumbling, their finances have come under severe stress.

Problems in the US housing sector prompted the Federal Reserve to slash interest rates to 2% earlier this year.

But Mr Rogoff said the Fed was wrong to cut interest rates as "dramatically" as it did.

"Cutting interest rates is going to lead to a lot of inflation in the next few years in the United States," he added.

QUOTE

WAG THE DOG:
HOW TO CONCEAL MASSIVE ECONOMIC COLLAPSE

Ellen Brown, August 14th, 2008
http://www.webofdebt.com/articles/wag_the_dog.php

"I'm in show business, why come to me?"
"War is show business, that's why we're here."
– "Wag the Dog" (1997 film)

Last week, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac had just announced record losses, and so had most reporting corporations. Unemployment was mounting, the foreclosure crisis was deepening, state budgets were in shambles, and massive bailouts were everywhere. Investors had every reason to expect the dollar and the stock market to plummet, and gold and oil to shoot up. Strangely, the Dow Jones Industrial Average gained 300 points, the dollar strengthened, and gold and oil were crushed. What happened?

It hardly took psychic powers to see that the Plunge Protection Team had come to the rescue. Formally known as the President's Working Group on Financial Markets, the PPT was once concealed and its very existence denied as if it were a matter of strict national security. But the PPT has now come out of the closet. What was once a legally questionable "manipulator" of markets has become a sanctioned stabilizer and protector of markets. The new tone was set in January 2008, when global markets took their worst tumble since September 11, 2001. Senator Hillary Clinton said in a statement reported by the State News Service:

"I think it's imperative that the following step be taken. The President should have already and should do so very quickly, convene the President's Working Group on Financial Markets. That's something that he can ask the Secretary of the Treasury to do. . . . This has to be coordinated across markets with the regulators here and obviously with regulators and central banks around the world." 1

The mystery over what was going on with the dollar the first week in August was solved by James Turk, founder of GoldMoney, who wrote on August 7:

"[T]he banking problems in the United States continue to mount, while the federal government's deficit continues to soar out of control. . . . So what happened to cause the dollar to rally over the past three weeks? In a word, intervention. Central banks have propped up the dollar, and here's the proof.

"When central banks intervene in the currency markets, they exchange their currency for dollars. Central banks then use the dollars they acquire to buy US government debt instruments so that they can earn interest on their money. The debt instruments central banks acquire are held in custody for them at the Federal Reserve, which reports this amount weekly.

"On July 16, 2008 . . . , the Federal Reserve reported holding $2,349 billion of US government paper in custody for central banks. In its report released today, this amount had grown over the past three weeks to $2,401 billion, a 38.4% annual rate of growth. . . . So central banks were accumulating dollars over the past three weeks at a rate far above what one would expect as a result of the US trade deficit. The logical conclusion is that they were intervening in currency markets. They were buying dollars for the purpose of propping it up, to keep the dollar from falling off the edge of the cliff and doing so ignited a short covering rally, which is not too difficult to do given the leverage employed in the markets these days by hedge funds and others."2

Just as central banks manipulate currencies in concert, so gold can be manipulated by massive selling of central bank reserves. Oil and any other market can be manipulated as well. But markets can be manipulated by only so much and for only so long without fixing the underlying problem. There is more bad news coming down the pike, news of such magnitude that no amount of ordinary manipulation is liable to conceal it.

For one thing, roughly $400 billion in ARMs (adjustable rate mortgages) have or will reset between March and October of this year. Assuming 3 to 6 months for strapped debtors to actually hit the wall with their payments, a huge wave of defaults is about to strike, continuing through March 2009 – just in time for the next huge wave of resets, in option ARMs.3 Option ARMs are loans with the option to pay even less than just the interest on the loan monthly, increasing the loan balance until the loan reaches a certain amount (typically 110% to 125% of the original loan balance), when it resets. The $800 billion credit line recently opened to Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac may be not only tapped but tapped out, at taxpayer expense. The underlying problem is little discussed but impossible to repair – a one quadrillion dollar derivatives scheme that is now imploding. Banks everywhere are facing massive writeoffs, putting the whole banking system on the brink of collapse. Only public bailouts will save it, but they could bankrupt the nation.

What to do? War and threats of war have been used historically to distract the population and deflect public scrutiny from economic calamity. As the scheme was summed up in the trailer to the 1997 movie "Wag the Dog" --

"There's a crisis in the White House, and to save the election, they'd have to fake a war."

Perhaps that explains the sudden breakout of war in the Eurasian country of Georgia on August 8, just 3 months before the November elections. August 8 was the day the Olympic Games began in Beijing, a distraction that may have been timed to keep China from intervening on Russia's behalf. The mainstream media version of events is that Russia, the bully on the block, invaded its tiny neighbor Georgia; but not all commentators agree. Mikhail Gorbachev, writing in The Washington Post on August 12, observed:

"What happened on the night of Aug. 7 is beyond comprehension. The Georgian military attacked the South Ossetian capital of Tskhinvali with multiple rocket launchers designed to devastate large areas. Russia had to respond. To accuse it of aggression against 'small, defenseless Georgia' is not just hypocritical but shows a lack of humanity. . . . The Georgian leadership could do this only with the perceived support and encouragement of a much more powerful force." 4

Bruce Gagnon, coordinator of the Global Network against Weapons and Nuclear Power, commented in OpEdNews on August 11:

"The U.S. has long been involved in supporting 'freedom movements' throughout this region that have been attempting to replace Russian influence with U.S. corporate control. The CIA, National Endowment for Democracy . . . , and Freedom House (includes Zbigniew Brzezinski, former CIA director James Woolsey, and Obama foreign policy adviser Anthony Lake) have been key funders and supporters of placing politicians in power throughout Central Asia that would play ball with 'our side'. . . . None of this is about the good guys versus the bad guys. It is power bloc politics . . . . Big money is at stake . . . . oth parties (Republican and Democrat) share a bi-partisan history and agenda of advancing corporate interests in this part of the world. Obama's advisers, just like McCain's (one of his top advisers was recently a lobbyist for the current government in Georgia) are thick in this stew."5

Brzezinski, who is now Obama's adviser, was Jimmy Carter's foreign policy adviser in the 1970s. He also served in the 1970s as director of the Trilateral Commission, which he co-founded with David Rockefeller Sr., considered by some to be the "master spider" of the Wall Street banking network.6 Brzezinski, who wrote a book called The Grand Chessboard, later boasted of drawing Russia into war with Afghanistan in 1979, "giving to the Soviet Union its Vietnam War."7 Is the Georgia affair an attempted repeat of that coup? Mike Whitney, a popular Internet commentator, observed on August 11:

"Washington's bloody fingerprints are all over the invasion of South Ossetia. Georgia President Mikhail Saakashvili would never dream of launching a massive military attack unless he got explicit orders from his bosses at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. After all, Saakashvili owes his entire political career to American power-brokers and US intelligence agencies. If he disobeyed them, he'd be gone in a fortnight. Besides an operation like this takes months of planning and logistical support; especially if it's perfectly timed to coincide with the beginning of the Olympic games. (another petty neocon touch) That means Pentagon planners must have been working hand in hand with Georgian generals for months in advance. Nothing was left to chance."8

Part of that careful planning may have been the unprecedented propping up of the dollar and bombing of gold and oil the week before the curtain opened on the scene. Gold and oil had to be pushed down hard to give them room to rise before anyone shouted "hyperinflation!" As we watch the curtain rise on war in Eurasia, it is well to remember that things are not always as they seem. Markets are manipulated and wars are staged by Grand Chessmen behind the scenes.

Ellen Brown, J.D., developed her research skills as an attorney practicing civil litigation in Los Angeles. In Web of Debt, her latest book, she turns those skills to an analysis of the Federal Reserve and "the money trust." She shows how this private cartel has usurped the power to create money from the people themselves and how we the people can get it back. Her websites are webofdebt.com and ellenbrown.com.

QUOTE

Pictures of Queen Elizabeth taken May 2007 for her State Visit to the U.S.

Note, how dark and dreary all the pictures are... The lights are out. Not a good portent for the future.

user posted image

QUOTE

There's A Law That Takes Away Money If You Leave U.S. Citizenship?

Why Throwing Good Debt After Bad May Be Riskier Than You Think Ed McMahon's PainFul Financial Lessons
http://www.mainstreet.com/theres-law-takes...-us-citizenship

A lot of people probably can't understand why someone would voluntarily give up American citizenship -- but if someone wanted to do that, they'd now incur financial penalties for it.

[b]Congress just passed a new law that will stop your capital -- or at least a good portion of it -- at the border, should you decide not to be a U.S. citizen anymore. Is it, perhaps, in preparation for the possibility that Americans might rebel at the debt and taxes incurred by their government by leaving for lower-tax locales?

You probably didn't notice this little provision inserted into the Heroes Act of 2008, passed by Congress on June 17. The headlines in the press release about the law were about the increased benefits for veterans and families of deceased military.

But Richard Kohan of Price WaterhouseCoopers drew my attention to one section of the act, which states that anyone voluntarily giving up his or her citizenship will be taxed on all of his assets as if he or she had sold them -- paying capital gains on assets that have increased in value, even though they have not been sold.
That's right. While everyone in the media is focused on keeping aliens out of America, Congress has voted to lock its citizens - or at least a good portion of their assets -- into America! Maybe they're thinking that patriotism won't be enough to keep the smart money from recognizing the coming increases in the tax burden.

Patriotism and Debt

We expect our elected leaders to be patriotic, to wear flap pins on their lapels? But how patriotic is it for our elected officials of both parties to drag our country into debt?

This year the Federal budget deficit will be a record $400 billion. That astonishing number will be added to our existing $9 trillion national debt. It's money that our government spends in excess of what it collects in taxes.

[For an instant update on our National Debt go to the moving numbers at www.Truthin2008.org -- a nonpartisan watchdog group on the national debt.]

Government officials say they're shocked at the record number of American consumers who are filing for bankruptcy. Yet those same politicians are spending America into an effective bankruptcy -- building a burden of current debt and promises of future debt that can never be repaid. Now, how patriotic is that?

Patriotism and Taxes

Do you consider it your patriotic duty to pay your taxes? Do you feel unpatriotic because you spend some time trying to figure out how to reduce your tax burden, by maximizing deductions whenever possible?

If that's not unpatriotic for you, is it unpatriotic for wealthy people, or corporations, to try to reduce their tax burden? Where do you draw the line? Perhaps it's most unpatriotic for our elected officials to construct a tax system that doles out benefits to special interest groups, pitting one group of Americans against another.

What's really unpatriotic, in my opinion, is trying to divide Americans through the politics of envy. Our country has moved forward because of our optimism and our belief that any American can build a better financial future. It has been our nature to honor those who have been successful, and seek to emulate them, not to destroy them because they have more assets or income.

Of course, that presupposes that the successful people accept their patriotic responsibility to give back to the society that made their success possible. And the facts show that Americans are the most charitable and generous people on the planet.

Think of Warren Buffett and Bill Gates, literally giving away their fortunes to help humanity. Or think of the people who filled sandbags along the Mississippi this month to save the homes of strangers.

When a government encourages the best in its citizens, by its policies and its example, patriotic citizens rise to the occasion. And when a government burdens its citizens, it inspires dissent and departures.

The Beatles famously left Britain, and Bjorn Borg left Sweden, when their governments raised taxes to such high levels that even these national icons departed. Are American lawmakers preparing for that kind of scenario with this new law?

Now in America, you can love it, or leave it -- but you can't take it all with you. And that's the Savage Truth!

QUOTE

Not being understood by the American people about these events, but well known to all Russians, is that their War Leaders have embarked upon a course leading to Total World War as their only option for survival prior to their economic collapse, and which many economists state is likely to occur before the end of this year*.*

One such economist, Kenneth Rogoff, the former chief economist for the International Monetary Fund, and who states about the American economy that the 'worst is yet to come', has issued a dire warning that one of the United States largest banks is ready to fail 'within months'. -Sorcha Faal; August 21, 2008; http://www.whatdoesitmean.com/index1128.htm

QUOTE

Britain faces 18 months of negative growth, warns top fund manager Peter Hargreaves

By Emma Thelwell
Last Updated: 2:43pm BST 27/08/2008
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/money/main.jhtm.../bcnharg127.xml

The UK economy is staring down the barrel at eighteen months of negative growth, as a recession grips the nation and pushes the FTSE 100 below the 5,000 mark, one of Britain's most respected fund managers has warned.

Peter Hargreaves, one half of the Bristol-based investment management group Hargreaves Lansdown, said the torrid time ahead may see another small UK bank being rescued by a larger rival.

The banks reporting season in March could be the catalyst for further falls in London's leading share index, he added.

Co-founder and chief executive of the group, Mr Hargreaves said: "I think there will be a '4' on the front of the FTSE 100 - by the time all the gremlins have been discovered."

The company, which floated on the London Stock Exchange last May, expects the FTSE to stumble as traders return to the market in the autumn, falling in the run up to Christmas, by which time Mr Hargreaves said there should be a "platform on which to build".

More pessimistic than most, Mr Hargreaves expects the UK economy to suffer six quarters of negative growth - a recession is typically defined as two quarters of negative growth.

He said: "There's no money in the kitty to prime the pump. The bank's haven't got any. Neither has the Government.

"And people are repairing their own balance sheets - negative equity and other debts are scaring them into paying off debts and saving money. They are not paying money into the stock market or into the retail sector."

Mr Hargreaves named the commercial property sector as one for private investors to avoid. He warned that the sector has further to fall, as offices face periods of languishing empty - with public and private sector employers alike hold back on hiring.

Peter Hargreaves: 'There's no money in the kitty to prime the pump.'
For the riskier investor there are a few silver linings amid the misery. Mr Hargreaves said Russia is a "screaming buy". With all the bad news priced in, he said Russian stocks were "very, very cheap and speculative". Gold, the traditional safe haven for private investors, has also come off its recent highs and would be worth picking up, he said.

Mr Hargreaves added: "Equity income funds are looking very cheap - they've bombed out of the market now, but they are paying 4pc dividends which is not bad."

The past 18 months have reminded people of the danger of profligacy, he said, which has helped boost the savings and pensions divisions at Hargreaves.

Despite a 16pc drop in the FTSE All Share in the year to the end of June, the group reported a 9pc rise in assets under management, to £11.1bn.

advertisement
Mr Hargreaves said the company's pre-tax profit rise to £60.9m, up from £24.4m, was "nothing less than remarkable", given the testing time the group has suffered since it came to the stock market.

Looking ahead, Mr Hargreaves said: "Initially money will not be invested in the stock market and investments in which Hargreaves Lansdown specialises, but eventually when there is confidence we shall see investors once again putting a toe in the water."

The company said while investors continue to avoid the equity markets, it will target the SIPP (Self Invested Personal Pension) and corporate solutions markets in its "quest to continue gathering assets".

The group's shares warmed more than 2pc, up 3.5 to 164.25p.

QUOTE

U.S. Says Banks on `Problem List' Rose 30% in Quarter (Update2)

By Alison Vekshin
http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...refer=worldwide

Aug. 26 (Bloomberg) -- The U.S. Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. said its ``problem list'' of banks increased 30 percent in the second quarter to the highest total in five years as more commercial real-estate loans were overdue.

The list had 117 banks as of June 30, up from 90 in the first quarter and the highest since mid-2003, the agency said today in its quarterly report without naming any institutions. FDIC-insured lenders reported net income of $4.96 billion, down 87 percent from $36.8 billion in the same quarter a year ago.

``More banks will come on the list as credit problems worsen,'' FDIC Chairman Sheila Bair said at a news conference in Washington.

Regulators are adding to the list as bank assets, liquidity and other fiscal measures weaken. Nine banks have failed this year, including California-based mortgage lender IndyMac Bancorp Inc., which the FDIC is running as a successor institution, IndyMac Federal Bank FSB.

IndyMac's failure will cost the U.S. deposit insurance fund about $8.9 billion, exceeding a $4 billion to $8 billion estimate, said Diane Ellis, the associate director of financial- risk management. The FDIC discovered additional insured deposits and had time to value the assets, Ellis said.

Second-Lowest Earnings

Second-quarter earnings fell from $19.3 billion in the previous quarter, driven by higher provisions for loan losses, the FDIC said. It was the second-lowest net income reported since the fourth quarter of 1991 behind the $600 million reported in the fourth quarter of 2007, the agency said.

``The results were pretty dismal, and we don't see a return to the high earnings levels of previous years any time soon,'' Bair said.

Funds set aside by banks to cover loan losses more than quadrupled to $50.2 billion from $11.4 billion in the year- earlier quarter.

Loans 90 days or more overdue, deemed troubled by the FDIC, jumped 20 percent to $162 billion from $136 billion in the first quarter, the FDIC said. Real-estate loans accounted for almost 90 percent of the rise in the past three quarters, the agency said.

The deposit insurance fund fell 14 percent to $45.2 billion and the reserve ratio, or balance divided by insured deposits, was 1.01 percent. The FDIC is required to shore up the fund when the ratio falls below 1.15 percent.

Higher Premiums

The agency in October will consider a plan to replenish the account that will likely include an increase in the premiums charged banks, Bair said.

A greater share of the increase will be shifted to ``riskier institutions so that safer institutions won't be unduly burdened,'' she said.

Lenders on the ``problem list'' had assets of $78.3 billion at the end of the second quarter, triple the $26.3 billion in the first quarter, the agency said. The FDIC said IndyMac's assets represented $32 billion of the increase.

Many banks on the list have high levels of commercial real- estate loans, especially in construction and development loans, said John Corston, the FDIC's associate director of large bank supervision. The number of problem institutions will continue to rise, he said.

``Problem institutions continue to be scattered across the country,'' Corston said. ``However, we expect to see some migration to areas experiencing the greatest stress.''

Regulators rate banks based on their asset quality, earnings, liquidity and other fiscal measures. Banks are ranked on a numerical scale, with 1 being the highest and 5 the lowest. A rating of 4 or 5 places a bank on the ``problem'' list.

The FDIC is a Washington-based bank regulator that insures deposits at 8,451 institutions with $13.3 trillion in assets.

To contact the reporter on this story: Alison Vekshin in Washington at avekshin@bloomberg.net.

Last Updated: August 26, 2008 18:09 EDT

QUOTE

Profits plunge at Credit Agricole

Thursday, 28 August 2008 10:17 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7585427.stm

French bank Credit Agricole has reported a 94% fall in second-quarter profits after being hit by a loss at Calyon, its investment banking unit.

Net profit was 76m euros (£61.15m; $112.4m), down from 1.29bn euros in the same period last year, as the credit crunch took its toll on the bank.

The bank was hit by write-downs totalling 1.1bn euros related to the credit crisis and monoline insurers.

Calyon made a second-quarter loss of 855m euros.

Shares in Credit Agricole have fallen by about 40% since the start of the year.

The bank completed a 5.9bn-euro rights issue in July to boost its finances and is also seeking to raise 5bn euros by selling assets.

QUOTE

The Real Rate of Inflation is 13%

The Mogambo Guru
August 27, 2008
http://www.dailyreckoning.com/Writers/Moga...s/MG082208.html

It was when “official government-approved” inflation figures were released that I really lost it last week, as that particular rate of inflation is now a staggering 5.6%. This is - as you can probably tell by the look of panic and terror on my face - Terrible, Terrible News (TTN).

And when you look at what John Williams at shadowstats.com calculates as inflation, according to the time-honored method of actually looking at real prices instead of the “qualified estimates” that are used today, you will see that annual inflation in consumer prices is actually running at over 13%! Some of the worst in American history! We’re freaking doomed!

Anthony Cherniawski of The Practical Investor is not interested in my dour assessment of the situation, and took a look at the Bureau of Labor Statistics’ Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers (CPI-U), which increased a whopping 0.5% (non-seasonally adjusted) in July, which is plenty bad enough for one month, but one’s tongue tries to hide by jumping down one’s throat when one learns that it was not a fluke, and that prices are 5.6% higher than in July 2007! 5.6% annual inflation is the best they can wring from admittedly-doctored statistics? Yikes! I’m screaming my guts out here!

Mr. Cherniawski coolly says that I don’t know the literal half of it, as “The alarming part of this report is the acceleration of inflation in the past 3 months. While the unadjusted rate for the past 12 months was 6.2%, the 3-month annualized rate of increase was 11.9%.” Yikes! We’re freaking doomed!

The report itself noted, without any hint of alarm, that “On a seasonally adjusted basis, the CPI-U advanced 0.8 percent in July, following a 1.1 percent increase in June." Yow!

Some of the terrifying specifics were that the energy index rose 4%, which accounted for "about half of the overall increase in the all items index."

The worse news for people who eat food is that "the food index rose 0.9 percent in July after rising 0.8 percent in June. Indexes for five of the six major grocery store food groups rose at least 1.0 percent." In one freaking month! This is outrageous inflation!

This inflation in food may be why Heraldtribune.com interviewed Vicki Escarra, president and CEO of an outfit called America's Second Harvest, which is "the nation's largest food bank network", and which is a name that they are soon changing to "Feeding America", which seems oddly apropos, considering that in January, they surveyed their 200 food banks and found that "demand was up 20 percent over last year." Wow! What an increase!

"We're seeing more and more people visiting food banks for the first time because they've lost their jobs or they're not getting raises", she says. Yikes! People are reduced to begging for food because they are not getting raises!

Equally alarming is the news from John Williams at shadowstats.com, who says that real inflation in prices, as measured in a subset of the BLS Consumer Price Indexes, the CPI-W, "jumped to 6.2%".

What makes the CPI-W inflation subset so interesting is that, as Mr. Williams explains, "The CPI-W is used for making the annual cost-of-living adjustments to Social Security payments" which would indicate that the federal budget line-item for Social Security, already one of the largest categories in the whole bloated federal budget that is already over $3 trillion a year, will be increasing by a theoretical 6.2%, just by virtue of mandated higher payments!

Then, to make it all worse, the Labor Department reported the latest survey of producer prices for July, the Producer Price Index, which went up by a stunning 1.2% for the month, where the only saving grace is that it is less than the 1.8% increase in June!

As Mark Gongloff so pithily explained in his Ahead Of The Tape column of the Wall Street Journal, "While consumers suffer inflation a the bottom of the pricing pipeline, producers feel it at the top", and that producers will be very keen about passing higher costs along to the consumer as quickly as possible, because "to the extent inflation gets stuck with them, their profits suffer."

And since everybody knows the ugliness of profits suffering, I will not go into it, as it usually means that I am going to be fired soon, and I don't want to think about that right now, other than to say that "profits that suffer" is ugly in the best of times, and it will be Much, Much Uglier (MMU) this time, thanks to seemingly-impossible leveraged investment use of every freaking dime, real or imagined, here or in the future.

Okay, I will say one other thing; if you are not buying gold, silver and oil in a fit of terrified self-preservation, to the exclusion of everything else including back-to-school clothes for your stupid kids that make them look like mental defectives and cost a fortune, then you are almost certainly making the biggest mistake of your life.

Well, maybe the second biggest mistake after deciding to have the damned kids. Or maybe the third biggest mistake after deciding to get married in the first damned place and then having the damned kids in the second place, but you get the point.

QUOTE

FDIC may borrow money from Treasury: report

Wed Aug 27, 2008 9:23am EDT Email | Print | Share| Reprints | Single Page | http://www.reuters.com/article/idUSBNG28670420080827

Federal Deposit Insurance Corp (FDIC) might have to borrow money from the Treasury Department to see it through an expected wave of bank failures, the Wall Street Journal reported.

The borrowing could be needed to cover short-term cash-flow pressures caused by reimbursing depositors immediately after the failure of a bank, the paper said.

The borrowed money would be repaid once the assets of that failed bank are sold.

"I would not rule out the possibility that at some point we may need to tap into (short-term) lines of credit with the Treasury for working capital, not to cover our losses," Chairman Sheila Bair said in an interview with the paper.

Bair said such a scenario was unlikely in the "near term." With a rise in the number of troubled banks, the FDIC's Deposit Insurance Fund used to repay insured deposits at failed banks has been drained.

In a bid to replenish the $45.2 billion fund, Bair had said on Tuesday that the FDIC will consider a plan in October to raise the premium rates banks pay into the fund, a move that will further squeeze the industry.

The agency also plans to charge banks that engage in risky lending practices significantly higher premiums than other U.S. banks, Bair said.

The last time the FDIC had borrowed funds from the Treasury was at nearly the tail end of the savings-and-loan crisis in the early 1990s after thousands of banks were shuttered.

The fact that the agency is considering the option again, after the collapse of just nine banks this year, illustrates the concern among Washington regulators about the weakness of the U.S. banking system in the wake of the credit crisis, the Journal said.

(Reporting by Sweta Singh in Bangalore; Editing by Erica Billingham)

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 01:46 AM (GMT)

The United States of America is the Next Argentina

Darryl R. Schoon
August 27, 2008
http://www.marketoracle.co.uk/Article5990.html

I have a bad feeling about what's about to happen. The Great Depression is the closest that comes to mind. I, like most, was not alive during the 1930s when it happened. Nonetheless, what once was feared in private is now being discussed in public. It's going to be bad. It's going to make high school seem like fun.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA THE NEXT ARGENTINA

This Time is Different: A Panoramic View of Eight Centuries of Financial Crises by University of Maryland's Carmen Reinhart and Harvard's Kenneth Rogoff makes for perfect reading when flying between the US and Argentina.

There is perhaps no better analysis than Reinhart and Rogoff's on the history of sovereign defaults; and, as such, Reinhart and Rogoff's paper was ideal reading material when traveling between the US and Argentina , for the sovereign defaults that happened in the past to Argentina will soon be happening to the US .

But a US default will make Argentina 's debt defaults pale both by comparison and consequence. The US , unlike Argentina , is the world's largest economy, the issuer of the world's reserve currency and the world's largest debtor—and a default by the US on its debt will shake the very foundations of our increasingly fragile global economy.

SOVERIGN DEBT LIQUIDATING AMBITION

The power of ambition is extraordinary. The power of ambition transformed the US from the world's only creditor after WWII into the world's largest debtor in less than fifty years. Wanting to emulate England 's 19 th century empire in the 20 th , the US instead has mirrored England decline in the 20 th century here in the 21 st .

Credit and borrowing fueled America 's ambitions in the 20 th century as it had England 's in the 18 th and 19 th . During the 1980s, to pay for President Reagan expansion of the military, the US quadrupled its national debt in less than a decade by borrowing three trillion dollars during a presidency pledged to balance the budget.

When Reagan took office, US debt totaled one trillion dollars. When Reagan left office, US debt totaled four trillion dollars. Reagan's vaunted slogan of fiscal conservatism was just that—a slogan; and while talk is cheap, the debts now have to be repaid.

Just as the costs of WWI forced England to abandon the gold standard in the early 1900s, post WWII military spending forced the US to suspend the convertibility of the US dollar to gold in 1971; and the consequences, e.g. burgeoning trade deficits and global currency instability, are now putting unsustainable strains on a financial system already in extremis .

Ambition has its price and the bill is now due and owing. The question is: how will the US pay what it owes? In Hyman Minsky's Financial Instability Model, the US is close to "Ponzi status" if not already there since the US is having to roll its debt forward and borrow from others to pay the interest as it can no longer pay down the principle.

In 2006, in an article published by the St Louis Federal Reserve Bank, Professor Laurence Kotlikoff stated the US was “technically bankrupt” as there was no way the US could pay the $65.9 trillion it owed.

Evidently, Professor Kotlikoff was conservative in his estimate or we’re going downhill faster than he knew. Just three months ago, on May 28, 2008 Richard W. Fisher, President and CEO of the Dallas Federal Reserve Bank estimated the obligations of the US to be actually $99.2 trillion, 50 % higher than Kotlikoff’s figures.

Fisher stated: In the distance, I see a frightful storm brewing in the form of untethered government debt . I choose the words—“frightful storm”—deliberately to avoid hyperbole. Unless we take steps to deal with it, the long-term fiscal situation of the federal government will be unimaginably more devastating to our economic prosperity than the subprime debacle and the recent debauching of credit markets that we are now working so hard to correct.

Fisher should know what the US owes and the danger that sum represents. As President and CEO of the Dallas Federal Reserve Bank, Fisher is a part of the Federal Reserve System—the very system that has indebted America into perpetuity when its credit-based money forced out gold and silver based money in 1913.

But in his speech Fisher said nothing about the role the Federal Reserve has played in America ’s fatal dance with debt, warning instead about the increasing costs of entitlements such as Social Security and Medicare.

Fisher is part of a larger effort to now blame America ’s entitlements as the primary cause of our problems, assiduously avoiding the role his own Federal Reserve Bank has played in sinking our once wealthy nation into perpetual indebtedness.

In truth, the entitlement program that poses the greatest threat to America is—and always has been—the Federal Reserve System. Without the Federal Reserve’s credit-based money whose compounding interest (paid to the bankers) is obliged to be paid for by a possibly unconstitutional US income tax [note: the Federal Reserve Act and Federal Income Tax were both instituted the same year in 1913], the US would not be indebted and bankrupt as it is now.

If Ben Bernanke and Richard Fisher et. al. at the privately owned Federal Reserve Bank resigned and stopped plundering the US for their own benefit at the expense of the public in order to line the pockets of their banker friends with public funds, the US might have a chance of successfully getting out of this mess.

But, of course, they won’t and the now privately controlled US government will continue to indebt the American public so insiders can continue to profit immensely at the public trough. But the question still remains, how will the US pay its unpayable debt? The answer is as clear as it is obvious. It won’t because it can’t.

DEBT & DESTRUCTION SOUTH OF THE BORDER

In their well-researched paper, Serial Defaults and Its Remedies , Reinhart and Rogoff write “Cycles in capital flows to emerging markets have now been with us for two hundred years”. If we are to understand the dynamics of serial default, it would do us well to look at these cycles and their relevance to what is happening today.

Serial Defaults and Its Remedies, Section 2. Capital Flow Cycles and the Syndrome of “This Time Is Different” :

..a pattern of borrowing followed by crisis is evident in the string of defaults during 1826-28 in Latin America that come on the heels of the first wave of massive capital flows from Britain into Latin America in 1822-25…A second wave of capital flows from Britain came during the 1850s and 1860s. The cycle ended with the crisis of 1873. The next wave of capital flows into emerging markets coincided with the shift of the financial epicenter of the world from London to New York . Among Latin American countries, the borrowing binge of 1925-28 was [financed] with “cheap” money from New York . Capital flows peaked in 1928, the year before the U.S. Stock market crash ushered in financial and currency crises around the world and eventually an international debt crisis during 1929-33.

Argentina is at the very epicenter of Latin America borrowings and defaults and a cursory judgment may well lay the blame for such on Argentina . But understanding the past is akin to sedimentary sampling and a deeper reading of events reveals far more than the too familiar story of a spendthrift deadbeat nation borrowing more than prudence would otherwise dictate.

The capital flows from England and the US in the last two hundred years to Latin America were flows of credit, not money. The distinction is critical in understanding what has happened during the last two centuries. It explains the basis of the British Empire and current American power. It also explains the exploitation of Argentina .

The British Empire was founded on the central bank invention of credit-based money and the subsequent ability to substitute this new "money" for costly gold and silver; and the issuance of paper money allegedly backed by gold and silver is a critical component in the confidence game of central bankers to pass off their printed coupons as the real thing.

What the private bankers accomplished with the creation of the Bank of England was the government's "legitimization" of the bankers' new credit based coupons, sic paper money—coupons upon which the private bankers could now charge interest just as they had when loaning actual gold (what a wonderful scam). The new coupons were a lot easier to come by, especially when the king gave them a monopoly over its issuance.

The advantage to the king was that the king now had an unlimited supply of "money" that could be used to finance his wars—wars which led to the establishment of the British Empire; the cost of which was transferred directly as a burden to the people as the new counterfeit debt-based money was now an obligation of the state, not of the king.

This was the genesis (genius to the bankers and government) of the modern income tax where the people are forced to pay interest on the credit-based money issued by their own government. This was also the beginning of credit-based markets, deceptively called capitalism in order to closely identify the newly counterfeit credit based economy with the real money it had replaced.

CAPITALISM THE SPREAD OF DEBT IN DISGUISE

The flow of credit from England and then from its surrogate successor, the US, to developing nations such as Argentina was but the flow of printed coupons designed to harness and indebt the wealth and productivity of new lands.

The "capital" was really only credit, thinly disguised debt in the form of paper money originally issued by central banks, the Bank of England in Britain and the Federal Reserve Bank in the US , the twin towers of monetary Mordor.

The wonderfully sounding idea of unfettered capitalism is but a smokescreen for bankers to leverage their coupons in the form of credit and thereby indebt and control the productivity and wealth of others. As such, it has accomplished its goal admirably but its success will now cost the bankers dearly.

Three centuries of indebting nations, businesses, and the citizenry with constantly compounding debt is no longer sustainable. This is why central bankers in London , New York , Paris , and Tokyo are in such distress. Debtors can no longer pay their debts, defaults are on the rise and bankers may actually have to find real jobs if their confidence game continues to disintegrate.

BANKERS' FEARS

Lawrence Summers' credentials as a banker are impeccable. Educated at MIT and Harvard in economics, Summers has served as Chief Economist for the World Bank, US Secretary of the Treasury and President of Harvard University.

Recently, in March 2008, Summers stated:..we are facing the most serious combination of macroeconomic and financial stresses that the U.S. has faced in a generation–and possibly, much longer than that…It's a grave mistake to believe in the self-equilibrating properties of economies in the face of large shocks. Markets balance fear and greed. And when fear takes over, the capacity for self-stabilization is not one that can be relied upon.

On June 29, 2008 the Financial Times quoted Summers:… we are in an economic environment where we have more to fear than fear itself …

Lawrence Summer's fears are not to be taken lightly. They are the banker's equivalent of Jim Cramer's televised fit of fear when interviewed on CNBC last year, see http://www.youtube.com/watch?

While Summers is rightfully fearful of the current economic environment, the rest of us have far more to fear from bankers like Lawrence Summers and others like him. Summer's role in the manipulation of the price of gold is found in his 1988 paper Gibson's Paradox and the Gold Standard co-authored with Robert Barsky, published in the Journal of Political Economy (vol. 96, June 1988, pp. 528-550).

The hubris of bankers such as Summers is stunning. Fixing the price of gold hoping to control interest rates and prices is like fixing the temperature of thermometers hoping to control global warming. Such is the short reach of Summers' considerable intellect.

EVIL BANKERS FACT OR FICTION?

But the real danger of bankers like Lawrence Summers lies not in their untethered intellect but in their cold ambition and selfish greed that sees nations and people as but living fodder to be milked, used and discarded as they and others profit.

In 1991, Summers issued the following memo while serving as Chief Economist at the World Bank:

…developed countries ought to export more pollution to developing countries because these countries would incur the lowest cost from the pollution in terms of lost wages of people made ill or killed by the pollution due to the fact that wages are so low in developing countries…the economic logic behind dumping a load of toxic waste in the lowest wage country is impeccable and we should face up to that.

As the World Bank's Chief Economist, Summer's memo is a chilling reflection of the heartlessness that lies at the core of bankers and banking establishments. The World Bank itself seems to be a favorite watering hole for those of questionable intent.

Robert McNamara, the architect of the Vietnam War was President of the World Bank as was Paul Wolfowitz, the architect of the Iraq War. The current President of the World Bank, Robert Zoellick, is also an ardent supporter of the Iraq War (also on Zoellick's considerable list of "credits" is his service as advisor to Enron, his membership on the Council on Foreign Relations and Trilateral Commission and his attendance at the secretive Bilderberg meetings from 1991 to the present and his role as Senior International Advisor to investment bank Goldman Sachs).

It is no coincidence that those heading the World Bank are closely associated with America 's vast war machine. Bankers have profited from fueling the military ambitions of both England and the US for the past two centuries and continue to do so today.

But perhaps the most damning indictment yet of the World Bank and today's bankers is John Perkins's Confessions of an Economic Hitman (Barrett Koehler, 2004) in which Perkins reveals the hidden intent of the World Bank and US bankers to cold-bloodedly indebt third world countries such as Argentina and profit by their misery.

In their review of Confessions of an Economic Hitman, Russell Mokhiber and Robert Weissman write:

Remember Smedley Butler?

He was perhaps the most decorated Major General in Marine Corps history. In the early part of this century, he fought and killed for the United States around the world. Butler was awarded two Congressional Medals of Honor.

Then, when he returned to the United States he wrote a book titled "War Is A Racket" which opens with the memorable lines: "War is a racket. It always has been."

“I was a high class muscleman for Big Business, for Wall Street and for the Bankers,” Butler said. “In short, I was a racketeer, a gangster for capitalism.”

In a speech in 1933, Butler said the following:

“I helped make Mexico , especially Tampico , safe for American oil interests in 1914. I helped make Haiti and Cuba a decent place for the National City Bank boys to collect revenues in. I helped in the raping of half a dozen Central American republics for the benefit of Wall Street. The record of racketeering is long. I helped purify Nicaragua for the international banking house of Brown Brothers in 1909-1912. I brought light to the Dominican Republic for American sugar interests in 1916. In China I helped to see to it that Standard Oil went its way unmolested.”

Smedley Butler, meet John Perkins.

Perkins has just written a book, “Confessions of an Economic Hit Man” (Barrett Koehler, 2004). It is the War is A Racket for our times. Some of it is hard to believe. You be the judge.

In 1968, after graduating from Boston University , Perkins joined the Peace Corps and was sent to Ecuador . There, he was recruited by the National Security Agency (NSA) and hired by an international consulting firm, Chas. T. Main in Boston.

Soon after beginning his job in Boston , “I was contacted by a woman named Claudine who became my trainer as an economic hit man.” Perkins assumed the woman worked for the NSA.

“She said she was sent to help me and to train me,” Perkins said. “She is extremely beautiful, sensual, seductive, intelligent. Her job was to convince me to become an economic hit man, holding out these three drugs –- sex, drugs and money. And then she wanted to let me know that I was getting into a dirty business. And I shouldn’t go off on my first assignment, which was going to be Indonesia, and start doing this unless I knew that I was going to continue doing it, and once I was in I was in for life.”

Perkins worked for Main from 1970 to 1980. His job was to convince the governments of the third world countries and the banks to make deals where huge loans were given to these countries to develop infrastructure projects. And a condition of the loan was that a large share of the money went back to the big construction companies in the USA – the Bechtels and Halliburtons.

The loans would plunge the countries into debts that would be impossible to pay off.

“The system is set up such that the countries are so deep in debt that they can’t repay their debt,” Perkins said. “When the U.S. government wants favors from them, like votes in the United Nations or troops in Iraq, or in many, many cases, their resources – their oil, their canal, in the case of Panama, we go to them and say – look, you can’t pay off your debts, therefore sell your oil at a very low price to our oil companies. Today, tremendous pressure is being put on Ecuador , for example, to sell off its Amazonian rainforest -– very precious, very fragile places, inhabited by indigenous people whose cultures are being destroyed by the oil companies.”

When a leader of a country refuses to cooperate with economic hit men like Perkins, the jackals from the CIA are called in. Perkins said that both Omar Torrijos of Panama and Jaime Boldos of Ecuador -– both men he worked with – refused to play the game with the U.S. and both were cut down by the CIA -– Torrijos when his airplane blew up, and Roldos when his helicopter exploded, within three months of each other in 1981.

If the CIA jackals don’t do the job, then the U.S. Marines are sent in –- Butler ’s “racketeers for capitalism.”

Perkins also gives lurid details of how he pimped for a Saudi prince in the 1970s, in an effort to get the Saudi royal family to enter an elaborate deal in which the U.S. would protect the House of Saud. In exchange, the Saudis agreed to stabilize oil prices and use their oil money to purchase Treasury bonds, the interest on which would be used to pay U.S. construction firms like Bechtel to build Saudi cities.

For years, Perkins wanted to stop being an economic hit man and write a tell-all book. He quit Main in 1980, only to be lured back with megabucks as a consultant. He testified in favor of the Seabrook Nuclear power plant (“my most infamous assignment") in the 1980s, but the experience pushed him out of the business, and he started an alternative energy firm.

When word got out in the 1990s that he was starting to write a tell-all book, he was approached by the president of Stone & Webster, a big engineering firm.

Over seven years, Stone & Webster paid Perkins $500,000 to do nothing.

"At that first meeting, the president of the company mentioned some of the books that I had written about indigenous people and said –- that's nice, that's fine, keep doing your non-profit work," Perkins told us. "We approve of that, but you certainly would never write about this industry, would you? And I assured him that I wouldn't."

Perkins assumes the money was a bribe to get him not to write the book.

But he has written the book.

You be the judge.

Evil bankers? Fact or Fiction? You be the judge.

DEFAULT OR JUST DEADBEATS

While Reinhart's and Rogoff's work on sovereign default is worthwhile and important, their glaring avoidance of the geopolitical aspect of credit flows from England and the US to Latin America and other developing regions is indicative of the blind eye scholars turn to the activities of those who pay them.

Lawrence Summers was President of Harvard University where Kenneth Rogoff is now employed. It is not likely those who hired the likes of Summers would look kindly upon Rogoff should he begin asking questions whose answers would lead to truths Harvard's trustees would rather not see the light of day.

So instead of dealing with the critical issues raised by John Perkins, Reinhart and Rogoff consider the phenomena of sovereign defaults as an innocent rite of passage much like high school through which developing economies must pass. Perhaps it is so, perhaps not.

But their "trained" eye wanders a bit, even to an untrained eye such as mine. According to Reinhart and Rogoff, the US is a "default virgin", sic the US has never missed a debt repayment or rescheduled on at least one occasion. While this is strictly so, the US is nonetheless at the center of the largest default in monetary history.

In the 1970s, the US defaulted on its gold obligations under the Bretton-Woods Agreement. After overspending the greatest hoard of gold in history, 21,775 tons, between 1949 and 1971, the US had 7,000-8,000 tons of gold left and still owed perhaps over 31,000 tons to others.

In 1973, when the US officially refused to convert US dollars held by other countries to gold, it was the biggest monetary default ever. In that one act, as a consequence the entire global monetary system shifted from a gold-based system to a fiat-paper system.

Of the US default on its gold obligations, Professor Antal Fekete wrote in June 2008:

http://www.professorfekete.com/articles%5C...AGoldCrisis.pdf

Thirty-five years ago gold, symbol of permanence, was chased out from the Monetary Garden of Eden , replaced by the floating irredeemable dollar as the pillar of the international monetary system. That's right: a floating pillar. The gold demonetization exercise was a farce. It was designed as a fig leaf to cover up the ugly default of the U.S. government on its gold-redeemable sight obligations to foreigners. The word 'default' itself was put under taboo even though it punctured big holes in the balance sheet of every central bank of the world, as its dollar-denominated assets sank in value in terms of anything but the dollar itself. These banks were not even allowed to say 'ouch' as they were looking at the damage to their balance sheets caused by the default. They just had to swallow the loss, obediently and dutifully join the singing of the Hallelujah Chorus of sycophants in Washington praising the irredeemable dollar and the Nirvana of synthetic credit.

Debt virgin? Hardly, and whether the US defaulted or not is not just a question of semantics, it is a matter of truth—which, like credit, is now surprisingly hard to come by.

THIS TIME IT'S DIFFERENT

Carmen Reinhart and Kenneth Rogoff's paper, This Time It's Different , refers to the idea that sovereign defaults are a thing of the past. That we have somehow fixed what was wrong and it won't happen again. Reinhart and Rogoff think otherwise.

But this time, in a different way it really is different. This time default will come to both banker and debtor alike. The bankers' system itself is now collapsing under the weight of debt that the bankers' debt-based money has produced.

Banks are finding themselves increasingly bankrupt as are the governments the bankers used to debase the world's currencies. This time, not only will Argentina possibly suffer another sovereign default, so too will its creditor, the US , as will many of the US banks that issued that debt.

The default of the US will remain, however, outside the limited definition of default used by Reinhart and Rogoff. The US will not miss a payment or reschedule its debt. Unlike Argentina , the US prints the currency in which the Argentine and US debt is denominated. The US will print its way out of its debts. Argentina cannot.

Because of the enormity of the US debt, the amount of dollars necessary to print to pay down the debt will lead to the hyperinflation in the US and the destruction of the US dollar. Those who live by the sword sometimes die by the sword—though not often.

In that same article where Professor Kotlikoff estimated US liabilities to be $65.9 trillion, Kotlikoff also wrote:

The United States ..appears to be running the same type of fiscal policies that engendered hyperinflations in 20 countries over the past century.

Maybe this time it isn't different..

DON'T CRY FOR ME ARGENTINA

SAVE YOUR TEARS FOR YOURSELF

In 1976, the Argentine military overthrew the democratically elected Argentine government. The first to recognize the dictatorship was the US . The second was the International Monetary Fund, and within 24 hours of recognizing the soon-to-be most brutal regime in recent history, the IMF arranged a loan to the military junta.

At the time, Argentina 's external debt totaled $7 billion. When the bloody dictatorship ended with the return of democracy six years later, Argentina 's debt totaled $43 billion, a debt owed mainly to US banks.

The common law concept of caveat emptor has particular relevance here, caveat emptor —Latin, "let the buyer beware", is a legal precept that buyers must take responsibility for the conditions under which the sale was made.

If you loan to a dictatorship, don't expect to be repaid if a democracy emerges.

Richard Perle, former US Assistant Secretary of Defense and neoconservative lobbyist

Richard Perle who supported the Iraq War said those words shortly after the US invaded Iraq . While it is doubtful Perle believes the same applies for debts incurred by the US supported dictatorship in Argentina , the truth of Perle's words extend beyond Perle's situational principles or a lack thereof. In a court of law, an illegal contract cannot be enforced—unless, of course, the court has been bought off.

A critical distinction between the debt “owed” by Argentina and the debts owed by the US is that Argentina’s debt was illegally imposed upon Argentina by the IMF, the US and international bankers without the consent of the Argentine citizenry, The US debt, however, was incurred with the consent of the American people—or was it?

That, my fellow Americans, is a $99.2 trillion question.

BANKRUPT BE THE BONDS THAT BIND

Americans with their outstanding obligations now measured in trillions of dollars of outstanding US bonds have much in common with the Argentine people. We have both been enslaved and bankrupted by the same financial system.

While it is impossible for the debt burdened Argentines to do something about US banks, it is not impossible for Americans to do so. The US Federal Reserve Bank—the largest emitter of debt-based money in the world—while not an official US government agency is nonetheless still subject to the rules and laws of our land.

STIRRINGS IN THE ELECTORATE

Dissatisfaction, the beginning of change, is now occurring. The two political polarities are finally awakening to the fact that both have been callously used by those in power. The US has lurched right then left then right again, but it continues to go in the same disturbing direction, a direction now equally distasteful to those on the left and on the right.

In modern democracies, successful politicians must possess two qualities: They must say what the people want to hear and they must do what those in power want done.

It has been easy to manipulate those on the right as well as those on the left. The Republicans and Democrats have done so for years. But where’s the beef? The nation’s finances have been even more badly managed by the Republicans than the Democrats—and Iraq ? Sure, vote for the Democrats and stay mired in a conflict they promised they would end.

Both parties are controlled by the same money, the same money that now controls global governments and institutions such as the World Bank and the IMF, the same money that buys politicians, scholars, the military, lawyers, TV anchors, radio talk show hosts and anyone else whose influence they can use for their own ends.

There is a reason why we are indebted as we are and there is a reason why we are mired in a war that one wants except the few that do, the few that now control our nation and many others. In the midst of this most unreasonable world, there are reasons—whether you want to know them or not.

Humanity now finds itself at the beginning of a profound shift, a shift that will force us—if we are to survive, if we are to triumph—to put aside our differences to accomplish together what we obviously cannot accomplish apart.

The two political polarities must find common ground or they will soon find there is no ground at all. What is happening is bigger than money and power although it involves both. It involves humanity, it involves all of us and unless we find each other we will soon find there will be nothing left to find at all.

We are closer to the end than to the beginning. Keep your own counsel. Buy gold and silver. Keep the faith.

In Argentina , I read in a recent issue of Scientific American that physicists now believe that in the beginning of time the Universe was only one centimeter across. That knowledge heartened me. We have come a long way.

QUOTE

Who Will Suffer Least From Depression?

by John Browne, Senior Market Strategist, Euro Pacific Capital | August 27, 2008
http://www.financialsense.com/fsu/editoria.../2008/0827.html

Though few may have noticed, the past few weeks may be regarded as a global economic turning point. Evidence is mounting that the United States is entering a recession, with increasing signs that it could morph into a depression. While the current Administration appears resigned to bail out or nationalize large tracts of American commerce, the presidential candidates drift towards Great Society era spending proposals. At the same time, America's principal economic rivals appear to be charting courses that are not in line with U.S. interests.

The Russian invasion of Georgia has revived tensions that have not been seen since the most frigid periods of the Cold War. With the Olympic Games over, China can relax and now exert its muscle without risking any politically motivated boycotts. Between them, these global players hold well over a trillion dollars, or 10 % of U.S. government debt, which they can use in as leverage in any strategic, economic or political confrontation with the U.S. There is also evidence that America's economic power is even waning in our own back yard. This week, Honduras, a traditional U.S. ally in Central America, announced that it was throwing its lot in with a Latin American trade bloc dominated by Venezuela and Cuba!

For two years I have warned readers of a severe, real estate led recession and encouraged extreme asset allocations to cash, particularly short-term, hard currency government bonds, and gold. Last year, I urged short positions in financials and U.S. stock markets. Some ridiculed me. The financials are currently down some 84 percent. Apparently, the real estate crash is biting deeper than just about any market "expert" had imagined.

The size of the problem is enormous. A fall of just 20 percent in U.S. house values, (which is confirmed by the latest Case Shiller data release) wipes almost $5 trillion from the wealth of American consumers and businesses. This amounts to more than one third of America's GDP and half of the total U.S. Government debt! How could the fallout be anything less than systemic?

Imprudent lending behavior, inspired by the housing boom, placed the security of banks depositors and shareholders at undisclosed and unprecedented risk. The banking problem is so large that failures cannot be allowed. The government has bent rules regarding financial reporting and the Fed's lending criteria to keep the financial ship afloat.

The main focus for now is on government sponsored lenders Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, who are now understood to be hopelessly undercapitalized. Despite the complete predictability of this outcome, even conservative investors, including many banks, had been persuaded that securities issued by both Fanny Mae and Freddie Mac were risk free. And although shareholders for both entities are likely to be wiped out, corporate bond holders, and those individuals and financial institutions who hold mortgages backed by both the GSE's, correctly assume that the government will back their assets. However, hundreds of billions, perhaps trillions, of Federal dollars will be needed to make whole all who foolishly loaded up on Fannie and Freddie debt. Unfortunately, the Federal cupboards are bare.

This week, the Federal Deposit Incurrence Corporation (FDIC) announced that its problem list had increased from 90 banks to 117. Worse still, the FDIC announced its fund had fallen below its legal deposit ratio, forcing it to increase its levy on member banks. This, just when the net income of its member banks, in desperate need of retained earnings, has fallen by some 86 percent. As more banks begin to fail, the ultimate cost to the Federal balance sheet is hard to imagine.

But, as the old saying goes, 'What's good for the goose is good for the gander.' So, if government financial 'favors' are granted to reckless investment firms (Bear Stearns) and now mortgage borrowers, what about other economically vital 'multiplier' industries like: automakers, airlines, credit card and insurance companies and even corporate real estate lenders? The logical conclusion for this current drift is hyperinflation. In order to make good on its promises the Federal Government will have to resort to the printing press…with a vengeance.

With America facing severe recession, many regions around the world will suffer. So who will suffer least? Nations that have run relatively prudent economic policies and those who 'produce' goods required even in an economically depressed world will continue to prosper increasingly, relative to the U.S.

The differential may become magnified as America's government hyper-inflates. Investors will then increasingly dump dollar paper assets and buy hard currencies, government bonds of 'producer' nations and gold. Investors ahead of this depression curve will likely suffer least!

QUOTE

Darling warns of economic crisis

Friday, 29 August 2008 22:11 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7589291.stm

The UK is facing its worst economic crisis in 60 years, Chancellor Alistair Darling has admitted.

He told the Guardian newspaper that the economic downturn would be more "profound and long-lasting" than most people had feared.

He also acknowledged government failings in its attempt to deal with the worsening situation.

Ministers are expected to announce a package of measures next week to kick-start the moribund housing market.

QUOTE

Economy at 60-year low, says Darling. And it will get worse

In an exclusive interview, chancellor says Labour failing to communicate with voters

Nicholas Watt, chief political correspondent guardian.co.uk, Friday August 29 2008
http://www.guardian.co.uk/politics/2008/au...alistairdarling

Britain is facing "arguably the worst" economic downturn in 60 years which will be "more profound and long-lasting" than people had expected, Alistair Darling, the chancellor, has told the Guardian today.

In the government's gravest assessment of the economy, which follows a warning from a Bank of England policymaker that 2 million people could be unemployed by Christmas, Darling admits he had no idea how serious the credit crunch would become.

Darling's blunt remarks lay bare the unease in the highest ranks of the cabinet that the downturn is making it all but impossible for Gordon Brown to recover momentum after a series of setbacks.

The chancellor, who says that Labour faces its toughest challenge in a generation, admits that Brown and the cabinet are partly to blame for Labour's woes because they have "patently" failed to explain the party's central mission to the country, leaving voters "pissed off".

In a candid interview Darling warns that the economic times faced by Britain and the rest of the world "are arguably the worst they've been in 60 years".

To deepen the sense of gloom, he adds: "And I think it's going to be more profound and long-lasting than people thought."

The economic backdrop presents Labour with its toughest challenge since the 1980s. "We've got our work cut out. This coming 12 months will be the most difficult 12 months the Labour party has had in a generation, quite frankly," he says. But Labour has been lacklustre. "We've got to rediscover that zeal which won three elections, and that is a huge problem for us at the moment. People are pissed off with us.

"We really have to make our minds up; are we ready to try and persuade this country to support us for another term? Because the next 12 months are critical. It's still there to play for."

Darling has some words of comfort for Brown when he predicts there will be no leadership challenge against the prime minister. He also reveals that Brown has no plans to carry out an imminent cabinet reshuffle as he delivers a defiant put down to critics who have said that he could be replaced as chancellor.

"You can't be chopping and changing people that often," he says. "I mean, undoubtedly at some stage before the end of the parliament he will want to do a reshuffle, but I'm not expecting one imminently. I do not think there will be a reshuffle."

Darling does not name names, but says some people want his job and have been trying to undermine him. Many in the Treasury believe that Ed Balls, the schools secretary, has been less than supportive. "There's lots of people who'd like to do my job. And no doubt," he adds, half under his breath, "actively trying to do it."

The chancellor's remarks about the economy - in an interview conducted over two days at his family croft on the Isle of Lewis - highlight the nerves at the top of the government after the loss of Labour's 25th safest seat in Britain in the Glasgow East byelection in July. The Tories are comfortably ahead in polls as leaders return on Monday after the holiday.

Darling, who speaks about how the prime minister is one of his oldest friends in politics, admits Brown has so far struggled to connect with voters. Asked whether Brown can communicate Labour's mission, he says: "Yes, I do think he can. I do think he will."

Asked why Brown has not done so, Darling falters as he says: "Er, well. Well, it's always difficult, you know ... But Gordon, in September, up to party conference, has got the opportunity to do that. And he will do that. It's absolutely imperative."

The interview was designed to show the chancellor in a more personal light after a year in which he shouldered much of the criticism over the collapse of Northern Rock and the loss of discs containing details of half the population.

He said nothing in his interview of his tensions with No 10 after he was reportedly rebuffed by Brown when he pointed out the dangers of abolishing the 10p tax rate soon after he took over as chancellor.

QUOTE

Saturday, 30 August 2008 13:50 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7589739.stm

Darling defends economy warning

Chancellor defends his decision to 'level' with people

The chancellor is standing by his assertion that the UK is facing its worst economic crisis in 60 years.

Alistair Darling told the Guardian newspaper that the downturn would be more "profound and long-lasting" than most people had feared.

Shadow chancellor George Osborne said Mr Darling had "let the cat out of the bag" about the state of the economy.

But Mr Darling told the BBC it was important to explain the "unique" problems faced by the global economy.

The chancellor admitted, in his newspaper interview, that the government had "patently" failed to get its message across that it understood people's concerns about rising living costs and growing job insecurity.

He said that voters were "pissed off" with Labour's handling of the economy, a key issue at the next election, and said it was "absolutely imperative" that ministers communicated their intentions better.

"This coming 12 months will be the most difficult 12 months the Labour Party has had in a generation, quite frankly."

When asked why he had been so frank, the chancellor told BBC News: "It's important I tell people in this country that we, along with every other country in the world, face a unique set of circumstances where you've got the credit crunch coming at the same time with high oil and food prices."

But he said the current government differed from past ones because it is prepared to "take action to help the economy and to help people get through this difficult time".

He cited the rescue package provided for Northern Rock and tax rebates due at the end of next month as examples of assistance offered by the government.

Ministers are expected to announce a package of measures next week to kick-start the moribund housing market.

The chancellor has been criticised for sending contradictory signals over possible measures to assist homebuyers, particularly the prospect of a temporary suspension of stamp duty on home purchases.

In a wide-ranging Guardian interview, Mr Darling said Labour had to rediscover its "zeal" if it wanted to be re-elected for a fourth term.

But he admitted that was "a huge problem for us at the moment".

Mr Darling hinted at tensions within Gordon Brown's Cabinet, saying there were "lots of people who'd like to do my job" and "no doubt, actively doing it", although he appeared to rule out an autumn Cabinet reshuffle.

The chancellor's remarks come after a summer of unremittingly bad economic news.

House prices are falling at their fastest rate in 18 years, leading to fears of a wave of repossessions.

Mortgage lending has slowed dramatically due to the credit crunch while key indicators have suggested that the economy could be poised to go into recession.

The economy showed no growth in the second quarter of the year while building firms and retailers have laid off thousands of staff amid fears that the economy will deteriorate further.

A member of the Bank of England's Monetary Policy Committee said on Friday that radical action was needed to ensure the crisis did not get worse and warned of a sharp rise in unemployment.

Mr Osborne said: "Who is telling the truth at the top of government?

"The prime minister says the economic situation isn't as bad people think and that Britain is well placed to weather the economic storm but the chancellor says we are at a 60-year low.

"Gordon Brown has briefed out stories that he has an economic recovery plan all worked out, meanwhile the chancellor says the downturn will be more profound and long-lasting than people thought.

"It's not clear whether Alistair Darling meant to tell us the truth about the mess 10 years of a Labour government has left our economy in, but he has certainly let the cat out of the bag."

Liberal Democrat Treasury spokesman Vince Cable said the government had been inconsistent with its message.

"Until very recently there was no problem, there was a state of denial, Britain was the strongest country in the western world, any problems we had were from overseas," he said.

"Now suddenly we've lurched into Apocalypse Now, the return of the Great Depression."

The Treasury said the chancellor's comments were "entirely consistent" with his previous statements.

A spokesman said: "These are the same difficult economic circumstances that every other country in the world is having to deal with.

"But with employment levels near record highs, interest rates that are historically low and the past decade of rising incomes and job creation, the UK is well placed to deal with this."

QUOTE

Real Estate Lender Is 10th Bank to Fail This Year

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
Published: August 29, 2008
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/08/30/business...ess&oref=slogin

Integrity Bank of Alpharetta, Ga., on Friday became the 10th United States bank to fail so far this year, hurt by the very business it was built on — real estate lending.

Regions Bank of Birmingham, Ala., is assuming all of Integrity Bank's $974 million in insured and uninsured deposits in 23,000 accounts, and about $34.4 million of the bank's $1.1 billion in assets.

The remainder of Integrity's assets are being retained by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The agency said it estimated that Integrity's failure would cost its deposit insurance fund $250 million to $350 million.

Integrity Bank, which opened for business in November 2000, specialized in real estate lending in the Atlanta area with a self-described "faith-based culture." Throughout the early part of the decade when the housing market was booming, Integrity Bank grew into a billion-dollar publicly traded company — but when the real estate market started faltering, the bank struggled.

A F.D.I.C. spokesman, Rickey McCullough, said late Friday that the bank had failed because of its aggressive pursuit of construction loans, coupled with falling real estate values and "inadequate risk management."

Construction loans were 76 percent of the bank's total loan portfolio. During the quarter ended June 30, the bank posted a net loss of $33.6 million.

Integrity's five branches in Atlanta, which were closed Friday, will open Tuesday as Regions Bank branches. Regions has about $144 billion in total assets.

Integrity Bank is the first Georgia bank to fail since late September of last year, when NetBank — also based in Alpharetta — was closed.

"Despite today's announcement, it is important to emphasize that the overwhelming majority of banks operating in Georgia, 96 percent, are well capitalized and have adequate reserves," the chief executive of the Georgia Bankers Association, Joe Brannen, said.

The number of bank failures has shot up this year amid continuing mortgage defaults.

QUOTE

Is Your Bank About to Implode? The FDIC is Hinting, YES!

By Moe Bedard on August 28th, 2008
http://loanworkout.org/2008/08/is-your-ban...is-hinting-yes/

The lender carnage, death and destruction litter the home page of Aaron Krowne's Mortgage Lender Implode-O-Meter like the beach at Normandy on D-Day. The infamous list has grown from September 2006 when Aaron started the website with approximately 10 failed lenders to a whopping 276 major U.S. failed lending operations today.

That comes out to about one failed lender every two days over the last two years. This is no anomaly- An anomaly is an irregularity, a mis proportion, or something that is strange or unusual, or unique.

Yes, 276 failed lenders are FAR from unique.

If you truly think about what is going on in our country right now and from the actual evidence on the ML-Implode.com website, your will realize that this is really not the "twilight zone" and our banking system is on the verge of complete collapse.

I think the question now is not "if" your bank will fail, but "when" will your bank fail.

Wall Street Journal - Exhibit A is the revelation by Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. Chairman Sheila Bair that her $45 billion deposit insurance fund may not be adequate to pay off account holders as banks continue to fail. This has been inevitable for months, but neither Ms. Bair nor Treasury wanted to admit the truth in public for obvious political reasons. Yet now we learn that the insurance fund shrank by $7.6 billion in the second quarter, bringing its reserve ratio well below the minimum required by Congress.

Quick Fact - The FDIC is a government agency that insures deposits in the U.S. against bank failure; it was created in 1933 to maintain public confidence and encourage stability in the financial system.

The frightening facts are that the US Banking system is in dire straits and our government does not want you to panic and make a run on your bank. It would be the Great Depression all over again in a heartbeat if we were all to take what little cash we Americans have out of these "insolvent" banking establishments and place it under our mattresses.

That would really make them fail and fast. But will our money be safer under our mattress than these banks of cards? Ms. Bair and the FDIC may be hinting to us all, YES!

ML-Implode has listed 276 various lenders that have met their deaths and another 19 on the ailing list of lenders "about" to implode. But only the FDIC truly knows the "true" state of our nation's banks and the hints and news coming from this mighty agency is nothing short of frightening.

Slate - You can add the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. to the list of entities that may be in line for a Treasury Department bailout, the Wall Street Journal reports, following an interview with the agency's chairwoman. The FDIC is a bit cash-strapped these days as it props up failing banks across the country. It announced on Tuesday that 117 ailing banks are now under its care and that the FDIC holds an astounding $78 billion in distressed bank assets, the Guardian points out. And, the New York Times says, the FDIC sees the banking crisis going from bad to worse.

Moe Bedard - America, get your head out of the sand, turn off American Idol, turn off Squawk Box and get a clue to the true state of our economy and failing banking system. Your bank may be next!

One of our country's fathers warned us about the banks and the evil they create over 200 years ago. Yet, here we sit, paying the price for letting these banks run wild for the last couple hundred years.

Thomas Jefferson:

"I sincerely believe… that banking establishments are more dangerous than standing armies, and that the principle of spending money to be paid by posterity under the name of funding is but swindling futurity on a large scale." –Thomas Jefferson to John Taylor, 1816. ME 15:23

Banking institutions, paper money, and paper speculation are capable of undermining the nation's stability and could be a danger in time of war. The Constitution does not empower the Congress to establish a National Bank. Rather than trust the nation's currency to private hands, the circulating medium should be restored to the nation itself to whom it belongs.

"The system of banking [I] have… ever reprobated. I contemplate it as a blot left in all our Constitutions, which, if not covered, will end in their destruction, which is already hit by the gamblers in corruption, and is sweeping away in its progress the fortunes and morals of our citizens." –Thomas Jefferson to John Taylor, 1816. ME 15:18

"The banks… have the regulation of the safety-valves of our fortunes, and… condense and explode them at their will." –Thomas Jefferson to John Adams, 1819. ME 15:224

"The States should be urged to concede to the General Government, with a saving of chartered rights, the exclusive power of establishing banks of discount for paper." –Thomas Jefferson to John W. Eppes, 1813. ME 13:431

A National Bank

"The incorporation of a bank and the powers assumed [by legislation doing so] have not, in my opinion, been delegated to the United States by the Constitution. They are not among the powers specially enumerated." –Thomas Jefferson: Opinion on Bank, 1791. ME 3:146

"It has always been denied by the republican party in this country, that the Constitution had given the power of incorporation to Congress. On the establishment of the Bank of the United States, this was the great ground on which that establishment was combated; and the party prevailing supported it only on the argument of its being an incident to the power given them for raising money." –Thomas Jefferson to Dr. Maese, 1809. ME 12:231

Meeting the Banking Problem

"The monopoly of a single bank is certainly an evil. The multiplication of them was intended to cure it; but it multiplied an influence of the same character with the first, and completed the supplanting the precious metals by a paper circulation. Between such parties the less we meddle the better." –Thomas Jefferson to Albert Gallatin, 1802. ME 10:323

"In order to be able to meet a general combination of the banks against us in a critical emergency, could we not make a beginning towards an independent use of our own money, towards holding our own bank in all the deposits where it is received, and letting the treasurer give his draft or note for payment at any particular place, which, in a well-conducted government, ought to have as much credit as any private draft or bank note or bill, and would give us the same facilities which we derive from the banks?" –Thomas Jefferson to Albert Gallatin, 1803. ME 10:439

"If treasury bills are emitted on a tax appropriated for their redemption in fifteen years, and (to insure preference in the first moments of competition) bearing an interest of six per cent, there is no one who would not take them in preference to the bank paper now afloat, on a principle of patriotism as well as interest; and they would be withdrawn from circulation into private hoards to a considerable amount. Their credit once established, others might be emitted, bottomed also on a tax, but not bearing interest; and if ever their credit faltered, open public loans, on which these bills alone should be received as specie. These, operating as a sinking fund, would reduce the quantity in circulation, so as to maintain that in an equilibrium with specie. It is not easy to estimate the obstacles which, in the beginning, we should encounter in ousting the banks from their possession of the circulation; but a steady and judicious alternation of emissions and loans would reduce them in time." –Thomas Jefferson to John W. Eppes, 1813. ME 13:275

"Bank paper must be suppressed, and the circulating medium must be restored to the nation to whom it belongs. It is the only fund on which they can rely for loans; it is the only resource which can never fail them, and it is an abundant one for every necessary purpose. Treasury bills, bottomed on taxes, bearing or not bearing interest, as may be found necessary, thrown into circulation will take the place of so much gold and silver, which last, when crowded, will find an efflux into other countries, and thus keep the quantum of medium at its salutary level. Let banks continue if they please, but let them discount for cash alone or for treasury notes." –Thomas Jefferson to John W. Eppes, 1813. ME 13:361

"Put down the banks, and if this country could not be carried through the longest war against her most powerful enemy without ever knowing the want of a dollar, without dependence on the traitorous classes of her citizens, without bearing hard on the resources of the people, or loading the public with an indefinite burden of debt, I know nothing of my countrymen. Not by any novel project, not by an charlatanerie, but by ordinary and well-experienced means; by the total prohibition of all private paper at all times, by reasonable taxes in war aided by the necessary emissions of public paper of circulating size, this bottomed on special taxes, redeemable annually as this special tax comes in, and finally within a moderate period." –Thomas Jefferson to Albert Gallatin, 1815. ME 14:356

"Our people… will give you all the necessaries of war they produce, if, instead of the bankrupt trash they now are obliged to receive for want of any other, you will give them a paper promise funded on a specific pledge, and of a size for common circulation." –Thomas Jefferson to James Monroe, 1815. ME 14:228

"Instead of funding issues of paper on the hypothecation of specific redeeming taxes (the only method of anticipating, in a time of war, the resources of times of peace, tested by the experience of nations), we are trusting to tricks of jugglers on the cards, to the illusions of banking schemes for the resources of the war, and for the cure of colic to inflations of more wind." –Thomas Jefferson to M. Correa de Serra, 1814. ME 14:224

"It is literally true that the toleration of banks of paper discount costs the United States one-half their war taxes; or, in other words, doubles the expenses of every war. Now think but for a moment, what a change of condition that would be, which should save half our war expenses, require but half the taxes, and enthral us in debt but half the time." –Thomas Jefferson to John W. Eppes, 1813. ME 13:364

"The State legislatures should be immediately urged to relinquish the right of establishing banks of discount. Most of them will comply, on patriotic principles, under the convictions of the moment; and the non-complying may be crowded into concurrence by legitimate devices." –Thomas Jefferson to Thomas Cooper, 1814. ME 14:190

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 01:55 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

Credit Crisis Financial Armageddon

Aug 31, 2008 - 03:26 AM
By: Christopher_Laird
http://www.marketoracle.co.uk/Article6048.html

Where are we now in the credit crisis, and why isn't the massive Fed and ECB weekly lending working to loosen interbank lending? Why is the credit crisis not really improving? Where is this going next? We describe what may happen next as Credit Crisis II in this article.

Now that the credit crisis that started in 2007 is a year old, there has been a debate about whether the financial system will recover, or will the Western/world financial system end up like the Japanese financial system after the stock and real estate crashes in the 1990's. In that case, the Japanese banks more or less carried their tremendous losses for ten years, and Japan entered a mild but painful decade of deflation. To this day, Japan is battling some of the deflationary forces from that time.

The question now becomes, will the Western financial system recover some normalcy, or are things merely going to get worse and the world end up with a financial malaise lasting ten years like Japan's?

If the second alternative is the case, then the central banks which are merely propping up the financial institutions with their 'temporary' lending will find they are taking the losses off the banks hands, taking them on to their balance sheets, and effectively monetizing the losses. The ECB and the Fed are both hoping to find a way out of having to keep the bad assets they took as collateral. They have lent hugely to financial institutions, taking their bad mortgage bonds, securities, derivatives as collateral. And at the same time, the financial institutions in question are carrying a sum total of $500 billion of losses on their books, the losses they admit so far, while estimates of ongoing losses from these bad assets runs well over $1 trillion. In effect, the Western credit industry is still crippled. Why is it so crippled still?

Either the financial industry earns its way out (will take ten or more years) and drastically pull back credit, or they find enough new investors to pony up new capital infusions, perhaps through stock sales. And new such investors are becoming increasingly hard to find. Hence, the central banks are the only alternative.

A theme now arises where it is becoming apparent that it is impossible to actually purge the escalating losses from the financial system, and that even big public bailouts don't purge the losses because of interlinkages between stocks, bonds and derivatives. If one class or institution is bailed out, the losses of capital merely move to the other class. And the losses are clearly so huge as of now, that they weigh on the currencies themselves and cause a fall in their exchange rates.

It is estimated that the USTreasury/Fed/FHLB has infused a total of $2 trillion and counting since Aug 07 to the various credit infusions to the US financial system, and that the ECB is in at similar levels. And even after $ 4 trillion worth of infusions over the last year has been thrown out by the Fed and ECB, the world credit/financial system is actually getting worse. What will be the outcomes into 09?

Bankrupt en masse

In effect, this means the Western banks, etc are bankrupt en masse. The only thing propping up the entire Western financial system, and its respective stock markets has been massive 'temporary' lending, on an ongoing basis, by the Fed and ECB. Both central banks are beginning to balk at this situation. Even as they are starting to have second thoughts, the Western financial institutions continue to borrow more money than ever on a weekly basis. Why aren't things loosening up?

Can't stop or else

And, if the ECB or the Fed stops the emergency infusions, or even admit who the borrowers are, another round of collapsing banks/bank runs ensues as investors flee and pull their money out. In other words, the central banks have no choice but to continue the weekly $30-50 billion or so of infusions each for the Fed and the ECB, or else face a cascade of bank runs around the world.

…And each week the Fed and the ECB are effectively taking on another $30 or $50 billion of the bad assets from the various and sundry financial institutions scattered across the EU and the US. So, week after grueling week, the Fed and the ECB keep adding another $50 to $100 billion of bad assets to their balance sheets, as 'collateral' and making 'temporary' loans they keep having to roll over and extend the repayment on. Ie, the junk stuff is becoming a permanent resident on the central bank's balance sheets. If either the Fed or the ECB stop the weekly infusions, quite possibly the entire Western financial system stops dead. And we get a massive world stock crash.

The question now becomes, what happens when these two central banks finally decide they have to let go? You are not going to tell me they are going to keep infusing a combined $50 to $100 billion worth of financial bailouts each week forever? This massive temporary lending certainly has to end at some point.

And even with all this new money every week, the credit system is barely functional anyway right now. And this half dead world credit system is dragging economies downward, as there is less and less and less credit. This is a paltry return for all the bailouts and massive temporary lending.

Probably what is happening is that this is a classic case of a parabolic world credit peak, as more and more money is needed each week merely to keep the bubble from collapsing. And the only ones left to infuse this money are the central banks. No one else is willing to step in. Financial institutions won't lend to each other, and investors won't recapitalize the crippled banks. As financial institution's stocks fall, issuing new stock becomes prohibitively expensive.

Parabolic peak

One could say all that is happening is that all financial institutions in the world don't really trust each other, and won't lend to each other. And that an astounding $50 to $100 billion of weekly infusions from the Fed and the ECB is not fixing the situation, and that we are witnessing the final parabolic peak of the world credit bubble that has built up for the 63 years after WW2 ended. That, and the end of the USD and Yen driven credit/asset/finance bubble which ensued from the early 1970's.

So, before we continue, it might be said that the present development of the credit crisis, from August 07 to now, is Credit Crisis I. And the present state of affairs is that the Fed and the ECB have to infuse a weekly $50-100 billion plus into their respective financial regions merely to prevent a world finance implosion.

I also have noticed that the Credit Crisis I has had a one year periodicity of major new developments, ie that if one major sector had a problem on a given month, that the next year the same sector seems to reinvent a new worse manifestation.

I made a graphic to describe the general situation:

So, when the central banks stop this massive weekly lending, what happens? Massive forced deleveraging and probably world financial Armageddon. This would be Credit Crisis II, or Phase II. We will look into Credit Crisis II in a moment.

This is the conclusion we came to here at PrudentSquirrel, trying to ascertain where we are in the big picture on the Credit Crisis now. It is that the Central Banks are desperately trying to stave off Credit Crisis II, and they are losing, and probably knowing this, they will at some point confer together and pick a time to let the credit system implode, and try to weather the stock/financial crashes that will occur at that time. Likely, some currencies can collapse as well, and a great deal of FX (foreign exchange) chaos and restrictions will ensue for several years after the fatal date.

If it is true, as we suspect, that we are at the peak of a credit/financial bubble that started right after WW2 ended, and it is at a parabolic peak and cannot be sustained, then the world's central banks already know this too. They probably are trying to decide when to let go … They all don't have to agree, it only will take one major Central Bank to let go, then the others will be forced to follow.

The central banks in question would be the BOJ, the US Fed and the ECB, and likely the BOC. The Russian central bank is an odd man out and is a wild card, but not as central to the equation. Either all the major central banks listed keep up the same rate of infusions, or the end of the world credit system comes in a week or two after one ‘lets go'.

Now as to the USD strengthening now, and gold's vexing $100 plus volatility, it just seems best to make any protective moves well ahead of the fatal day. Once the situation gets out of control, Credit Crisis II begins, in a week from that point you will find it hard to make any changes. I view gold's present volatility as a total side issue, compared to what would happen if all one's money was tied to the financial system, the USD and so on, and then one's financial situation was frozen if the central banks decide to let go, and world foreign exchange restrictions are instituted. Gold is still one of the best ways to ride out what may come to pass.

Our present state of affairs in Credit Crisis I

Let's look at a few examples of why I am saying the world is at a parabolic credit bubble peak, and why the Central banks are finding they have no choice but to keep pumping out $50 plus billion a week of new ‘temporary' lending, or else face a real financial Armageddon…

The ECB, Spanish banks, and North-South EU dissention

How Spanish banks are creating mortgage securities to get ECB funding is a perfect example of our present financial crisis…and how the ECB seems to have no choice but to continue the short term funding of the entire EU financial system, and it is causing big dissention between the North EU and South.

By Ambrose Evans-Pritchard
Last Updated: 3:06pm BST 21/08/2008

The European Central Bank has issued the clearest warning to date that it cannot serve as a perpetual crutch for lenders caught off-guard by the severity of the credit crunch.

Not Wellink, the Dutch central bank chief and a major figure on the ECB council, said that banks were becoming addicted to the liquidity window in Frankfurt and were putting the authorities in an invidious position.

"There is a limit how long you can do this. There is a point where you take over the market," he told Het Finacieele Dagblad, the Dutch financial daily.

"If we see banks becoming very dependent on central banks, then we must push them to tap other sources of funding," he said.

While he did not name the chief culprits, there are growing concerns about the scale of ECB borrowing by small Spanish lenders and 'cajas' with heavy exposed to the country's property crash. Dutch banks have also been hungry clients at the ECB window.

One ECB source told The Daily Telegraph that over-reliance on the ECB funds has become an increasingly bitter issue at the bank because the policy amounts to a covert bail-out of lenders in southern Europe.

"Nobody dares pinpoint the country involved because as soon as we do it will cause a market reaction and lead to a meltdown for the banks," said the source.

This "soft bail-out" is largely underwritten by German and North European taxpayers, though it is occurring in a surreptitious way. It has become a neuralgic issue for the increasingly tense politics of EMU.

The latest data from the Bank of Spain shows that the country's banks have increased their ECB borrowing to a record €49.6bn (£39bn). A number have been issuing mortgage securities for the sole purpose of drawing funds from Frankfurt.

These banks are heavily reliant on short-term and medium funding from the capital markets. This spigot of credit is now almost entirely closed, making it very hard to roll over loans as they expire.

The ECB has accepted a very wide range of mortgage collateral from the start of the credit crunch. This is a key reason why the eurozone has so far avoided a major crisis along the lines of Bear Stearns or Northern Rock.

While this policy buys time, it leaves the ECB holding large amounts of questionable debt and may be storing up problems for later.

The practice is also skirts legality and risks setting off a political storm. The Maastricht treaty prohibits long-term taxpayer support of this kind for the EMU banking system.
Few officials thought this problem would arise. It was widely presumed that the capital markets would recover quickly, allowing distressed lenders to return to normal sources of funding. Instead, the credit crunch has worsened in Europe…" Bold emphasis is mine Telegraph.co.uk

Fannie and Freddie rescue dilemma- their stocks and debt are held by other banks
Another perfect example of the impossible state of affairs in the world credit crisis is Fannie/Freddie. And that means that if the Fed/Treasury does a bailout, their stocks collapse in value, and all the other financial institutions take losses on that because they hold lots of Fannie and Freddie stock. Of course the stock is already in the tank, but the issue is still there and shows the interlinkages.

Then there is the question of the Fannie and Freddie bonds out. That is another can of worms, and the Chinese just stated this week that a collapse of Fannie-Freddie could lead to an economic catastrophe – their Central Bank advisor Yu Yongding stated. The Chinese hold hundreds of billions ($376 billion mostly in US agency bonds) of Fannie and Freddie debt and stock.
In many respects, because of all these cross holdings of the Fannie Freddie bonds and stocks by banks everywhere, and by Central Banks, it would seem that the losses cannot really be removed from the financial system – ie purged. If Fannie and Freddie are bailed out, their stocks collapse and those losses now translate to all these other banks and central banks that hold them. It's virtually a no win situation.

These cross linkages reveal that it is virtually impossible, even with bailouts, to purge the ever growing $500 billion and counting losses of capital from the banking/financial system. The latest numbers being speculated on are the losses will be over $1 trillion (IMF) and $2 trillion or more (Roubini).

Now, maybe $2 trillion doesn't sound like a lot compared to the entire world economy. The trouble is, that capital is leveraged anywhere from 10 to 50 times by the financial system. Fannie and Freddie have 60 to 1 leverage.

Losing $2 trillion of capital will totally wipe out the entire world financial system for a decade because of the leverage at 60 to 1. Basically, unless those losses can be purged in some way, it has to be earned back over a period of years/decades. That essentially cripples the entire world financial system.

I remember a very well put quote from a banker last Fall 07 about the credit crisis then. (I'm sorry, I don't remember his name.) He stated "The credit deleveraging will not be denied." I think that sums things up very well.

It appears that a relentless unwinding of the world credit/finance bubble with many dimensions and twists and turns cannot be avoided, even if the central banks were willing to try. The issue is the cross linkages and the fact that the capital losses in every corner of the world will not and maybe cannot be purged from the financial system, even with big public bailouts. There is possibly no way to do it other than to allow things to just unwind and try to re earn it all back the hard way.

Even if it appeared the central banks could figure out a way to purge the losses from the financial system, and take them on their books, then their currencies are in danger. The capital losses are there – period. The deleveraging of 60 to 1 credit is happening – period. The financial institutions don't trust each other – period.

The Fannie – Freddie bailout proposals are being discussed in the light that the US government/Treasury can just about double the so called national debt from $9 trillion by possibly adding another $5 plus trillion, as they effectively have to guarantee those GSE bonds. That is now playing into a debate on the US fiscal situation….as if the USD needed another problem.

In short, once again, we see that it appears impossible to purge the effects of so much lost capital to the world financial system. The deleveraging will not be denied. We see this a year after the Credit Crisis I exploded worldwide Aug 07.

End of a huge world bubble

If that is true, then the theory I laid out above, that we are witnessing a peak in a parabolic finance/asset/stock bubble of world proportions, is going to pan out. I think the entire credit crisis can be looked at from that perspective. We are merely witnessing the relentless unwinding of the biggest financial bubble in history. And, ominously, this particular bubble has grown from the end of WW2 to the present. That is one HUGE economic bubble, and this one envelops the entire world. This is not just a bubble in one country's economy.

The point of emphasizing it's from the end of WW2 is that we are not talking merely about a banking crisis, or whatever. We are talking about the deleveraging of the greatest economic/finance bubble in history. Once the level of leverage reached 60 to 1, it becomes impossible to stay ahead of the deleveraging, even for central banks. The implications are staggering. Every major economy in the world is involved. The outcomes of deleveraging this monster bubble, represented by the green oval, will be what I term Credit Crisis II. At 60 to 1 leverage, a loss of 1 to 2% wipes out the capital.

Whether it's the Chinese Central Bank (BOC), the Fed, the ECB, and then all the other world financial institutions of every type, insurance companies, gigantic retirement funds, other banks, you name it, the present losses of capital to the world financial system is pervasive worldwide.
Nobody will escape the wrath of this deleveraging, and that is why I call it Credit Crisis II. Credit Crisis I was only the preliminary round… Credit Crisis II is characterized by the realization that the gigantic losses of capital cannot be purged from the financial system , even with big public bailouts. And that this deleveraging cannot be stopped. There are too many interlinkages. And, without writing a book on this, the next victim when Credit Crisis II unfolds, will be massive world currency instability. This will make any of the banking and currency crises we have seen since WW2 look like child's play. It is not clear when Credit Crisis II begins but it is threatening already.

By Christopher Laird
PrudentSquirrel.com

QUOTE

QUOTE

Scramble for cash as central banks dry up

Patrick Hosking
TimesSeptember 2, 2008
http://business.timesonline.co.uk/tol/busi...icle4656321.ece

British banks soon could be scrambling for short-term funding once more amid reports that supplies from Threadneedle Street and from Frankfurt may be drying up.

The Bank of England explicitly ruled out extending its Special Liquidity Scheme (SLS), while the European Central Bank is reportedly considering tightening its lending criteria.

The two central banks have been huge suppliers of liquidity to British banks. The SLS is thought to have provided £50 billion or more, while the ECB has lent banks €467 billion (£378 billion) - much of it thought to have gone to UK institutions.

Despite pressure from some British banks for an extension, the SLS will be closed to new applications from the week of October 20, the Bank said. UK banks have been campaigning for an extension to the scheme, under which the Bank provides banks with highly liquid government bonds in return for illiquid AAA-rated mortgage-backed securities.

As recently as Friday, Rod Kent, the chairman of Bradford & Bingley, called the SLS “a good idea” and contrasted its temporary nature with the permanence of the ECB liquidity window.

The ECB declined to comment on reports that it would change its rules soon, accepting only higher-quality collateral from borrower banks in exchange for cash. At present it accepts securities with credit ratings as low as A-. It also accepts private securities - instruments created by the banks and not traded on any public market. Some ECB officials are concerned that it has become a “dumping ground” for inferior mortgage-backed securities, according to The Wall Street Journal. The reform could come as early as Thursday, when the governing council meets and the ECB makes its monthly interest-rate decision.

While money market conditions have improved modestly in the past few months, banks are still hoarding cash. Three-month sterling Libor has been trading at 5.75 per cent, three quarters of a per cent above base rate, indicating continuing stress in the money markets. Before the crunch the margin was 0.1 or 0.2 of a per cent.

QUOTE

I had a feeling rather than War this may be just for Economic Collapse procedures. Of course the two can go hand in hand right now. -Craig

Community Support officers could do more police work

Community support officers should do more police work in order to save money, Home Office officials have suggested.

By Jon Swaine
Last Updated: 10:14PM BST 02 Sep 2008
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/2666333/Co...olice-work.html

In a further disclosure from a leaked letter to the Prime Minister from the Home Secretary, it is proposed that police community support officers (PCSOs), who receive less training and are paid less than full police officers, be used as a cost-effective way to fight the increase in crime that it predicts will result from the economic downturn.

A paragraph removed from the later draft of the letter reads: "We have a robust position on expecting the police service to maximise efficiency gains including workforce reforms that will also see changes to workforce mix, of the kind that will reduce cost pressures eg greater deployment for suitable tasks of grades such as PCSOs that are cheaper than Police Officers."

The Conservatives said the latest passage disclosed the true attitudes and priorities of Home Office staff.

Dominic Grieve, the shadow home secretary, said: "While PCSOs have a role to play they are no substitute for real officers. The Government should be cutting red tape so what officers we do have can spend more time on the beat."

Tony McNulty, a Home Office minister, who earlier confirmed it was "blindingly obvious" that crime would rise in an economic downturn, denied that there would be any reduction in police numbers. He said that he would have removed any such suggestion from the letter.

A Home Office spokesman said: "The facts are that PCSOs play a vital role in Neighbourhood Policing teams and are an established and much valued presence in local communities. The Government is totally committed to supporting both PCSOs and police constables now and in the future to build on a decade of crime fighting success."

QUOTE

The David Icke Newsletter, August 31st 2008
http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...showtopic=64003

THE POLICEMAN WAS RIGHT ...

... ONLY 'THE WAR' IS STILL TO COME

QUOTE

Blurring Lines

Sept 5 2008
http://www.urbansurvival.com/week.htm

Before the employment report came out (which we'll get to in a minute) the futures were pointing toward a downward open following the market action Thursday which shaved more than 340-points off the Dow Industrials. That was followed, in almost predictable fashion, by the sinking of markets in Asia, and then Europe, as a follow-on.

One of my colleagues insisted (to the point of making a ceremonial 5¢ bet of the matter) insisted that the decline was simply a great entry point for some of his longs. His thinking was that yes, the US in making some progress in Iraq, the problems of the subprime market fallout may be overblown, and, and besides, no one is going to torpedo the US economy because as goes the US, so goes the world. In other words, the typical Ameri-centric view of things.

For my part, taking the other side of the argument (and wagering the princely nickel) I argued that the reason oil is coming down is that fewer people will be able to afford heat, the predictive linguistics hold not only one more major bank failure, but a financial 'lockdown' condition as the year goes on, and that many companies are 'blurring the lines' a bit when they talk about their sales.

Take for example the question posed yesterday in this column, relative to Wal-Mart's earnings. The underlying 'happy talk' in the MainStreamMedia (MSM) was that WM same-store sales were up prompting headlines like "Discount stores score big in August." Being up to my ears in work, I didn't have time to follow-up with Wal-Mart's investor relations department, but reader DM did (and our thanks for his diligence here) and it got him this admission out of WM's investor relations folks:

"Thank you for your call earlier today. I inquired about the same store sales as reported in our August sales release. According to the Director of Investor Relations, the US sales numbers are the actual numbers as reported each month, and are not adjusted for inflation. I hope this helps. Thanks again for your inquiry."

Helps? You bet!. What this means, when you read further stories like "Wal-Mart sales Climb on Back-to-School Discounts" that you can take the 2.8%/3% same-store sales and back out inflation.

Of course, once we open the "What's Inflation Really Running?" can of worms, things get ugly in a hurry! We could argue for a low of 2.4%, basis the Fed M-1 levels for the past 12-months contained in the most recent H.6 money stocks report. Or, we could argue for 8.8% inflation, based on the more current 3-month M-1 inflation rate (same report). Or, we could bounce over to the Bureau of Labor Statistics and hit the latest CPI numbers, which would argue for an inflation rate of 5.6% higher than it was a year ago.

In all but one of the figures (YoY M-1 from H.6) the Wal-Mart sales figures really reflected a decrease in sales, if you were to look at things from a units perspective, not just the gross dollars involved. Or, because so many companies have been downsizing their packaging, you would have maybe seen just as many boxes of 'whatever', but under it all, the dollars per pound of goods was flat to down.

My point is that lines are blurring. Corporate America is reporting sales that are in many cases, and I don't single out Wal-Mart because it's the current way of doing things generally, reporting sales that are "up" but only so long as you put inflation out of your mind.

But then again, it's that way with the Dow Jones Industrials, too.

I don't want to remind my colleague that on an inflation-adjusted basis, if you put in the Spring 2000 Dow Jones of 11,723 into the Federal Reserve's online inflation calculator, you'll see that in order to have just maintained purchasing power, the Dow would have to be at 14,677.58.

And, worse, since the thrashing in the markets on Thursday, on a purchasing-power (inflation) adjusted basis, the buy and holding of the Dow (excluding dividends, but also excluding commissions, yada yada yada) is down 23.773% since 2000. Of course, if you were a real financial genius, you would have been reading this site back in the fall of 1999 when I posted the paper "Death by Dot Coms: When Barriers to Entry Fail".

Not to put too fine a point on it, but it you'd have sold the Dow and parked your money in an inflation-adjusted Treasury position, you'd be about 20% better off than now, but that's all capital gains under the bridge now, isn't it.

So there's my colleague, hatching out what I expect will be a nickel. And there's me, on the phone to my friend Robin Landry, the best market predictors I know, and I asked him about his take on things after the close Thursday because I had posted a rare special technical note for Peoplenomics readers, (link for subscribers) showing how we had just taken out what looked to my like critical support:

"If this is the third, (under Elliott Wave counts), it is actually the third of the third - and in that action Thursday, we had a one down, two up, and a three down, which does not appear to be complete yet. And, it's initial target is around 10,800. And then we will have a little 4, and then a five, and once we do get that 10,800, if we the panic, because that was the recently low back in July, the targets will be somewhere in the neighborhood of (for the Dow) somewhere in the 10,695 area..

If we break that, then I expect we'll go straight down to the 9,700 area I mentioned in my comments a while back.

The interesting thing about what is happening now is that when we had broken the 200 week moving average, going into the July 15th low, we rallied back up to the 200 week average, recently, and it now turned down again.

Going on down from here, if this leg of the decline is from 13, 136 and you subtract 10,816, that equals 2,320 points. Then if you take the recent high of 11,865 minus 2,320 points, that gives you the 9,545 - which I think is where we're headed right now.

We're in an oversold area and of course, I have told you that crashes happen when the market is oversold. So, does this have the chance to be the Big One? Absolutely! We are now in the timeframe for the major crashes to Occur - which are usually September into October.

I have mentioned to you that the highs are usually seen in August. And so it's following the 'normal' yearly pattern and I suspect that whether it goes beyond the 9,545 to 9,700 levels, in fact we could see 9,,223, one of those little fours will hold for a rally. At what degree? I can't tell you because it will be shaped by the decline ahead.

But, would it surprise me to see a thousand point down day? No.

When you see the action that you saw the action on Tuesday - with a strong rally, that was a failed C wave of Wave 2. (Subscribers: see the earlier technical note this week on the rally set-up-G)

When a wave fails it does so because the momentum in the opposite direction is so great, that it can't reach its normal target. That's like a failed fifth wave on the upside. So all of the things are coming together.

What is particularly bearish is that the 50-week moving average is now going down toward the 200-week moving average. When the 50-week crosses the 200-week moving average, things can really accelerate to the downside. you'll see all kinds of government actions trying to stop it.

They might - for a while - temporarily, but it doesn't change the ultimate outcome.

The other thing that I think is very telling is that since January of 2008, the Dow Jones 50-day moving average crossed through the 200-day moving average and the high in May rallied back up to the 200-day moving average. And then it accelerated down into the low of July the 15th.

This recent rally that's just ended Tuesday on the highs with the reversal, all it could barely do was test the high of the 7th of August or so, and then it accelerated down and broke back through.

Now you have the 50-day below the 200-day moving average and the 50-week is approaching the 200-week moving average.

Many times when they are in this mode, you get your crash, you get a rally, and then you get a test. The crash being the third, rally being the fourth wave, and the test being the 5th.

This time if that happens we want to see bullish divergences. If we do not see bullish divergences, then it means that we're more than likely on our way to the 7,400 area without a subsequent 6-montyh to year rally in-between.

(Note, this would fit like a glove with the predictive linguistics which point toward a financial 'lockdown' in November and lots of bad woo woo through Feb-mar of '09 - G)

In other words, it appears the way things are going that we are lining up for a quicker downside resolution than what I had been anticipating because I thought we would have a decline down to 9,700 area, then a 3-6 month rally, and it could surprise us and set a brand new high.

But, we will learn more in this timeframe between now and the end of the year with the wave structure and the breadth of the decline. That'll give us a clue as to when the subsequent rally goes up, or whether we are in what Mr. Prechter describes as a Grand Super Cycle Decline that will last most of our lifetimes.

The main thing to get from these comments of mine is that if you're in the market, you need to get out as soon as possible. It's better to be aggressive at getting out, and have to go back in, than to sit on the sidelines and watch everything collapse in front of you.

You know the saying "He who takes his chips and walks away, lives to play another day"? I was reminded in my readings Thursday that the best thing an investor can do is turn off CNBC. They are a perfect mirror of what is actually happening. They'll advice do this and this....a few days ago bullish, Thursday bearish - you can't play that kind of emotional roller-coaster and come out alive.

While I have it on, 90 percent of the time I keep it muted and I use it as a sentiment gauge - by who they have on and what charts they put up. It's getting so I can read lips...and you must have a plan and stick to the plan.

So, with such sage words, you might be asking, what are Landry's clients doing - if anything at this stage in the market. His answer:

"We are in short-term treasury ETF's and short the double Dow ETF with 5-10% of our funds."

If we take out that 9,300 kind of area, the next fourth degree down level is what?

"7400."

And then if we step back even further from the chart, what's the next fourth down of a larger degree?

"The next one of larger degree is at 3,059"

And is there one after that?

"777."

(Gulp!) The one after that?

"That'd be the 1933 low - you can look it up."

All of which sets the tone for the real socioeconomic speculation of the morning, which goes something like this:

When the US entered the Great Depression of the 1930's, there was not a lot of linkage between the financial economy and the general economy of the Nation. In other words, paper finance, commodities, the military, and the development of technology were not so intertwined as they are today. The ,falling commodity prices, due to automation of farms, came first.

I would argue that there has been a grand blurring of lines, in order to keep the general economy alive, to such an extent that recovery from a potential crash will be much more difficult than ever before, and thus, the amount of suffering may possibly be greater.

My source in Geneva has put up an interesting page here which contains, among other things, two documents which you might want to take a read through this weekend. One is a strategic view by the UK Ministry of Defence "Development, Concepts and Doctrine Center". The key thing in this report (that I pointed out to subscribers last weekend) is that in the event of a major downturn in the economy, the risks of terrorism and the like might possibly go up dramatically because unemployed people will do many things for money or food. The other papers on the page may be of interest as well. That Treasury paper, for instance.

As the economic lines have blurred, we have seen a return to weekend banking many years back, the move of bankers into investment, again, a blurring of the lines that was a precursor to the Great Depression. And now, we're seeing how finance has become a key tool in State Policy toward terrorist organizations.

We're blurring lines this time around in other areas, too. We didn't have a carry-trade in the 1930's experience and certainly the global inter-market linkages didn't exist.

So we come, over the next year or so to a fascinating point in history which will give us one of two possible outcomes.

The optimistic case is that because of inter-market linkages, the expansion of federal financial strategy toward foreign policy goals and anti-terrorism efforts, and all the like, will add systemic resilient to the point where the Global Economic System will be able to muddle-through a massive periodic correction of past excesses in the credit markets.

The pessimistic outcome is that the excesses in the financial instruments markets have now been spread around so much - touching almost every part of the USA systemically, that a Crash now will not only trash the banksters on Wall Street, but it will trash the Military, Agriculture, Industry, and Services. Each has become so intertwined with the financial system that the systemic decline threatening could essentially take down the whole country, not just the financial core.

We shouldn't have too long to wait. A year at tops. But if you wake up one morning and read headlines about how the U.S. Dollar, currently in a counter-trend rally against other global currencies, has suddenly reversed course and is in decline again -- to the point where ships full of goods for the American market are turned around on the high seas to take their goods back home - then that will finally answer the question of whether expansion of the pool of players with 'skin in the game' really does as systemic stability, or whether it simply crashes the whole country.

Meantime, Russia is committed to a strong ruble policy, spending $4 billion to support it.

Me? Too close to call, I figure. As a student of history, I can see that without 9/11, the WOT and the subsequent Wars and Housing Bubble, the Crash to wipe out malinvestment should have happened in 2001/2002 when the Internet Bubble burst.

The intervening policy decisions (and you can carry that anywhere you will) have kept the game going, but with necessary expansion of participants. To the point where now, we read how fixed income gurus like Bill Gross are saying that the U.S. will have to buy assets to prevent a financial tsunami.

[Linguistic note: The Bloomberg story above is the first use I have seen in the MSM of our word "de-levering" which was introduced as a concept in the Tuesday August 12th report "Who are the "PowersThatBe" - which in turn was coined by my book writing insider source, who is shopping his book on the financial meltdown...]

Does all this blurring the lines change the outcome? I've got a nickel bet that long-term it doesn't and it just postpones the inevitable outcome. But, it sure gives financial writers something to write about.

QUOTE

US Treasury Strategic Directions 2009 through 2011 (July,2008) from the Office of Intelligence and Analysis

PDF FORMAT

UK Ministry of Defence "Development, Concepts and Doctrine Center" http://www.millennium-project.org/millenni...tated-scen.html

QUOTE

U.S. Rescue Seen at Hand for 2 Mortgage Giants

By STEPHEN LABATON and ANDREW ROSS SORKIN
Published: September 5, 2008
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/09/06/business...p&o&oref=slogin

WASHINGTON — Senior officials from the Bush administration and the Federal Reserve on Friday called in top executives of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, the mortgage finance giants, and told them that the government was preparing to place the two companies under federal control, officials and company executives briefed on the discussions said.

The plan, which would place the companies into a conservatorship, was outlined in separate meetings with the chief executives at the office of the companies' new regulator. The executives were told that, under the plan, they and their boards would be replaced and shareholders would be virtually wiped out, but that the companies would be able to continue functioning with the government generally standing behind their debt, people briefed on the discussions said.

It is not possible to calculate the cost of any government bailout, but the huge potential liabilities of the companies could cost taxpayers tens of billions of dollars and make any rescue among the largest in the nation's history.

The drastic effort follows the bailout this year of Bear Stearns, the investment bank, as government officials continue to grapple with how to stem the credit crisis and housing crisis that have hobbled the economy. With Bear Stearns, the government provided guarantees, and the bulk of its assets were transferred to JPMorgan Chase, leaving shareholders with a nominal amount.

Under a conservatorship, the common and preferred shares of Fannie and Freddie would be reduced to little or nothing, and any losses on mortgages they own or guarantee could be paid by taxpayers. Shareholders have already lost billions of dollars as the stocks have plunged more than 80 percent this year.

A conservatorship would operate much like a pre-packaged bankruptcy, similar to what smaller companies use to clean up their books and then emerge with stronger balance sheets. It would allow for uninterrupted operation of the companies, crucial players in the diminished mortgage market, where they are now responsible for nearly 70 percent of new loans.

The executives were told that the government had been planning to announce the decision as early as Sunday, before the Asian markets reopen, the officials said.

For months, administration officials have grappled with the steady erosion of the books of the two mortgage finance giants. A fierce behind-the-scenes debate among policy makers has been waged over whether to seize the companies or let them work out their problems. Even after the companies are put under government control, debates will continue over whether they should be independent and how they should operate over the long term.

The declines in the housing and financial markets apparently forced the administration's hand. With foreign governments increasingly skittish about holding billions of dollars in securities issued by the companies, no sign that their losses will abate any time soon, and the inability of the companies to raise new capital, the administration apparently decided it would be better to act now rather than closer to the presidential election in two months.

Just five weeks ago, President Bush signed a law to give the administration the authority to inject billions of dollars into the companies through investments or loans. In proposing the legislation, Treasury Secretary Henry M. Paulson Jr. said that he had no plan to provide loans or investments, and that merely giving the government the authority to backstop the companies would provide a strong shot of confidence to the markets. But the thin capital reserves that have kept the two companies afloat have continued to erode as the housing market has steadily declined and the number of foreclosures has soared.

As their problems have deepened — and the marketplace has come to expect some sort of government rescue — both companies have found it difficult to raise new capital to absorb future losses. In recent weeks, Mr. Paulson has been reaching out to foreign governments that hold billions of dollars of Fannie and Freddie securities to reassure them that the United States stands behind the companies.

In issuing their quarterly financial statements last month, the two companies reported huge losses and predicted that home prices would fall more than previously projected.

The debt securities the companies issue to finance their operations are widely owned by mutual funds, pension funds, foreign governments and big companies.

Officials said the participants at the meetings included Mr. Paulson, Ben S. Bernanke, the chairman of the Fed, and James Lockhart, the head of both the old and new agency that regulates the companies. The companies were represented by Daniel H. Mudd, the chief executive of Fannie Mae, and Richard F. Syron, chief executive of Freddie Mac. Also participating was H. Rodgin Cohen, the chairman of the law firm Sullivan & Cromwell, who was representing Fannie.

Officials and executives briefed on the meetings said that Mr. Mudd and Mr. Syron were told that they would have to leave the companies.

Spokesmen at the two companies did not return telephone calls seeking comment.

The meetings reflected the reality that senior administration officials did not believe they could wait for some kind of financial tipping point, as happened with Bear Stearns, which was saved from insolvency in March by government intervention after its stock plummeted and lenders withheld their capital.

Instead, Mr. Paulson has struggled to navigate through potentially conflicting goals — stabilizing the financial markets, making mortgages more widely available in a tightening credit environment, and protecting taxpayers from possibly enormous losses.

Publicly, administration officials have tried to bolster the companies because the nation's mortgage system relies on their continued ability to purchase mortgages from commercial lenders and pull the housing markets out of their slump.

But privately, senior officials have been critical of top executives at the companies, particularly Freddie Mac. They have raised concerns about major risks to taxpayers of a bailout of companies whose executives have received huge compensation packages. Mr. Syron, for instance, collected more than $38 million in compensation since he joined the company in 2003.

Although Mr. Syron promised regulators earlier this year that he would raise $5.5 billion from investors, he has failed to make good on that promise — even as Fannie Mae raised more than $7 billion. Mr. Syron was slated to step down from the chief executive position last year, but that was delayed when his appointed successor, Eugene McQuade, chose to leave the company.

With the possible removal of the top management and the board, it is no longer clear who would appoint new management.

Mr. Paulson had hoped that merely having the authority to bail out the two companies, which Congress provided in its recent housing bill, would be enough to calm the markets, but if anything anxiety has been increasing. The clearest measure of that anxiety has been the gradually widening spread between interest rates on Fannie- or Freddie-backed mortgage securities and rates for Treasury securities, making home mortgages more expensive. The stock prices of the companies have also plunged.

After stock markets closed on Friday, the shares of Fannie and Freddie plummeted. Fannie was trading around $5.50, down from $70 a year ago. Freddie was trading at about $4, down from about $65 a year ago.

With Fannie and Freddie guaranteeing $5 trillion in mortgage-backed securities, and a big share of those held by central banks and investors around the world, Mr. Paulson appears to have decided that the stakes are too high to take chances.

The Treasury Department is required by the new law to obtain agreement from the boards of Fannie and Freddie for a capital infusion. The exception is if the companies' regulator, Mr. Lockhart, determines that the companies are insolvent or deeply undercapitalized it could take the companies over anyway.

Charles Calomiris, a professor of economics at Columbia Business School, said delaying a rescue would only increase the risks and costs.

"The last thing you want to do is give a distressed borrower more time, because when people are in distress they tend to take a lot of risks," he said. "You don't want zombie institutions floating around with time on their hands."

QUOTE

FDIC shutters Silver State Bank of Nevada

Son of presidential nominee John McCain was reportedly former board member; closing marks the 11th bank failure this year.

Sept 6 2008
http://money.cnn.com/2008/09/05/news/econo...sion=2008090522

WASHINGTON (AP) -- Regulators on Friday shut down Silver State Bank, saying the Nevada bank failed because of losses on soured loans, mainly in commercial real estate and land development.

It was the 11th failure this year of a federally insured bank.

Nevada regulators closed Silver State and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. was appointed receiver of the bank, based in Henderson, Nev. It had $2 billion in assets and $1.7 billion in deposits as of June 30.

Andrew K. McCain, a son of Republican presidential nominee John McCain, sat on the boards of Silver State Bank and of its parent, Silver State Bancorp, starting in February but resigned in July citing "personal reasons," corporate filings with the Securities and Exchange Commission show. Andrew McCain also was a member of the bank's audit committee, responsible for oversight of the company's accounting.

The younger McCain, who is the chief financial officer of Hensley & Co., the beer distributorship of which Cindy McCain is chairwoman, is the Arizona senator's adopted son from his first marriage.

Andrew McCain's position on the Silver State board and departure were first reported Friday by The Wall Street Journal online.

Silver State Bank ran into difficulty because of a substantial amount of "poor-quality loans primarily related to real estate development" in southern Nevada and other distressed markets, FDIC spokesman David Barr said.

"When the housing market slowed down, people who bought raw land to build new homes didn't need that land so they couldn't do anything with it and repay their loans. So those loans went bad," Barr said.

Silver State Bancorp recently reported a net loss for the second quarter of $73.2 million, or $4.84 a share, compared with net profit of $6.2 million, or 44 cents a share, in the same period last year.

Construction and development loans have been the fastest-growing category of troubled loans for U.S. banks, and many banks have heavy concentrations of them in their lending portfolios, according to the FDIC. Some small banks are considered especially vulnerable. Delinquent loan payments and defaults by commercial and residential developers have surged to the highest levels since the early 1990s - the latter part of the savings and loan crisis.

The FDIC said Silver State Bank's insured deposits will be assumed by Nevada State Bank of Las Vegas. Its branches will reopen Monday as offices of Nevada State Bank in Nevada and National Bank of Arizona in Arizona.

The agency said depositors of Silver State Bank will continue to have full access to their deposits.

The 11 failures so far this year compare with three for all of 2007, and federal banking officials have said that more banks are in danger of collapse.

Silver State Bank has operated 13 branches in the greater Las Vegas area and four in the greater Phoenix-Scottsdale area of Arizona as well as loan offices in Nevada, Utah, Colorado, Washington, Oregon, California and Florida.

The FDIC estimated its resolution will cost the deposit insurance fund between $450 million and $550 million.

Regular deposit accounts are insured up to $100,000.

There were about $20 million in uninsured deposits held in roughly 500 accounts at Silver State that potentially exceeded the insurance limit, the FDIC said.

Concern has been growing over the solvency of some banks amid the housing slump and the steep slide in the mortgage market. The pressures of tighter credit, tumbling home prices and rising foreclosures have been battering many banks, large and small, across the nation.

The largest bank failure by far this year has been that of savings and loan IndyMac Bank, which was seized by regulators on July 11 with about $32 billion in assets and deposits of $19 billion.

The seizure of Pasadena, Calif.-based IndyMac, which was the largest regulated thrift to fail in the United States, prompted hundreds of angry customers to line up for hours in Southern California to demand their money. IndyMac also was the second-largest financial institution to close in U.S. history, after Continental Illinois National Bank in 1984.

The FDIC has been operating the bank, now called IndyMac Federal Bank, under a conservatorship.

The FDIC plans to raise insurance premiums paid by banks and thrifts to replenish its reserve fund after paying out billions of dollars to depositors at IndyMac. The fund, currently at $45 billion, is expected to take a hit from IndyMac of $4 billion to $8 billion.

Federal officials expect turbulence in the banking industry to continue well into next year, and more banks to appear on the FDIC's internal list of troubled institutions.

Of the 8,500 or so FDIC-insured banks in the country, 117 were considered to be in trouble in the second quarter -- the highest level in about five years and up from 90 in the first quarter. The agency doesn't disclose the banks' names.

Silver State Bank customers with accounts exceeding $100,000 can contact the FDIC at 1-800-523-8177 to set up an appointment to discuss their deposits.

QUOTE

Shiller: House Price Decline Could Be Worse than Depression

Friday, September 05, 2008 | 12:30 AM http://bigpicture.typepad.com/comments/200...er-house-p.html

[dohtml]<embed height="219" width="292" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" src="http://cosmos.bcst.yahoo.com/up/fop/embedflv/swf/fop_wrapper.swf?id=9591776&autoStart=0&prepanelEnable=1&infopanelEnable=1&carouselEnable=0" allowscriptaccess="always"></embed>[/dohtml]

Shiller's main points:

• Home price declines are already approaching those in the Great Depression, when they plunged 30% during the 1930s. With prices already down almost 20%, it's not a stretch to think we might exceed that drop this time around.

• There are about 10 million homeowners whose debt is higher than their home value, which has broad implications for how Americans feel about their wealth and spending habits (read: more pressure on consumer spending).

• The current hopeful consensus -- that house prices will bottom soon and then begin to recover -- is most likely a dream. Housing markets don't usually have "V-shaped" recoveries. And even if house prices stabilize in nominal terms, after adjusting for inflation, most homeowners will continue to lose money.

QUOTE

friday the stock marker was propped up artificially much as before 911 - 2001 as sell offs took record tolls on the market ... seems some insider trading could be getting ready for 911 - 2008 ... jim mccanney

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 01:56 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

Best Quotes of August 2008

9/4/2008
by John Rubino
http://www.dollarcollapse.com/iNP/view.asp?ID=74
Gene Arensberg, Resource Investor

Everyone can look at the data and form their own conclusions. But when silver is in short physical supply, commanding injuriously high premiums and difficult to locate; when investors are piling into the silver ETF in droves, a 40% silver price plunge is not only not warranted, it smells.

It is difficult to imagine a legitimate reason that two U.S. banks could quickly and systematically amass a net short position on the COMEX which amounts to over a quarter of the entire action on that bourse. It will not be surprising at all if we learn that these two U.S. banks are taken to task by regulators for their actions. It will be even less surprising to learn that they have become the target of multi-billion dollar class action lawsuits by hungry lawyers representing silver investors everywhere.

Futures markets are supposed to answer the actual physical markets, not the other way around. In other words, futures markets are supposed to be a place where producers or large holders of a commodity can lay off price risk to speculators and thereby hedge against unforeseen adverse movements in the price of the commodity. Futures markets are definitely not supposed to be a place where a couple of well connected and well funded entities can bully the market with their own heavy handed trading.

If silver really was just taken down by a couple of very big U.S. banks to irrationally low levels, it won't be long before the laws of supply and demand reassert themselves. Got silver?

Frank Barbera, Gold Stock Technician
Even more to that point, we wonder at what point does an institution such as the Fed lose its credibility? At what point does an institution become irrelevant? The answer to that question is when events have taken on a life of their own, and when their words no longer have any real impact. We have fortunately not reached this point yet, but for all appearances seem to be heading in this direction at a rapid pace. The socialization of financial market bad debts has forced the Fed to act as the lender of last resort, placing its own balance sheet on the line for the ineptitudes which were sewn over so many years of the Greenspan Fed. How dare Mr. Greenspan comment on perils of the current collapse when he was the chief architect of the events now unfolding each and every week.

Bob Chapman, International Forecaster
Why should gold go down if the dollar goes up? If the dollar goes up substantially, that means the euro is going down substantially, so gold should be exploding in the Euro Zone. If anything, a weaker euro should be more supportive of gold than a weaker dollar as there are just as many euros out there as there are dollars now, and because the people of Europe are far more attuned to the uses and purposes of precious metals than are their US counterparts. We sure hope the people in the Euro Zone loaded up on precious metals, which are now skyrocketing in their currency as the euro has gone from 1.60 dollars to 1.50 dollars in rather rapid succession. All fiat currencies will continue to lose against gold, including the dollar, so it is time to load up on the bargains you have been so graciously gifted with by your evil government and the Wall Street fraudsters!!!

Another scheme that financial companies have employed during the crisis is to regularly reclassify assets from Level 2 to Level 3 and vice versa. Level 3 assets have no market so values have to be guessed. Level 2 assets are 'marked by model according to tangible data.' Ergo if you have a beneficial model you move assets from Level 3 to Level 2 to generate better marks and earnings.

Which leads us to JP Morgan – For most of the US financial crisis the media and pundits hailed JP Morgan as having a 'fortress-like balance sheet' even though it has over $80 trillion of derivatives. JP Morgan CEO Jamie Dimon has been portrayed as the Financial Wizard of Oz.

So for the past several months most investors and people assumed that JP Morgan somehow managed to avoid all the crappy paper and ancillary problems that plague the industry. One group that thought otherwise averred that the Bear Stearns bailout was engineered to help JP Morgan obfuscate its problems and borrow massively from the Fed without public concern.

But the revelation of a relatively miniscule $1.5B write-down has destroyed the illusion of JP Morgan's imperviousness to the financial mess. This has led analysts, investors and wise guys to re-examine JPM.

One disconcerting JPM fundamental is the amount of its Level 2 assets. An astute money manager alerted us that, "The market is obsessed with Level 3 assets levels but forgot to notice that of JPM's total $1.775 trillion in assets, $1.575 trillion are Level 2 or mark to model. The whole loan, MBS and Level 2 are what presents the real danger when the raters finally get there."

Gary Dorsch, Global Money Trends
Trading in foreign currencies is akin to judging a reverse beauty contest, and suddenly, the US-dollar's was looking a little less ugly than its peers.

Ambrose Evans-Prichard, Telegraph UK
My guess is that political protest will mark the next phase of this drama. Almost half a million people have lost their jobs in Spain alone over the last year. At some point, the feeling of national impotence in the face of monetary rule from Frankfurt will erupt into popular fury. The ECB will swallow its pride and opt for a weak euro policy, or face its own destruction.

What we are about to see is a race to the bottom by the world's major currencies as each tries to devalue against others in a beggar-thy-neighbor policy to shore up exports, or indeed simply because they have to cut rates frantically to stave off the consequences of debt-deleveraging and the risk of an outright Slump. When that happens - if it is not already happening - it will become clear that the both pillars of the global monetary system [the dollar and the euro] are unstable, infested with the dry rot of excess debt.

Gold bugs, you ain't seen nothing yet. Gold at $800 looks like a bargain in the new world currency disorder.

Bill Fleckenstein, Fleckenstein Capital
In any case, if we saw (as it appeared) heavy selling or short-selling in the futures market while demand for gold in the physical world was rising, that historically would be a very bullish development.
What does seem quite clear is that some portion of gold's weakness has been a function of the dollar's strength. The dollar's violent rally owes to folks' beliefs that the economy is improving in the U.S., that the Federal Reserve intends to raise interest rates and that the rest of the world economy is slowing down.

The rest of the world may in fact be slowing down. But our economy is not about to get better, and the Fed is not about to tighten rates. Just the thought of the Fed increasing rates is laughable.

Eric Janszen, iTulip
The current recession is more serious than all previous recessions since the early 1980s. This time inflation, unemployment, and a credit crunch are cutting into demand. Demand, in the economic sense, is the combined desire of consumers to spend and the availability of the cash they need to act on that desire. Recessions with declining demand tend to be self-reinforcing as falling demand leads to falling consumption leading businesses to reduce labor costs by laying off employees, leading to falling incomes and further reductions in demand.

Another unusual aspect of this recession is that traditional Keynesian techniques to stimulate demand by expanding credit through interest rates cuts is hobbled by a moribund housing market; housing has for decades been the primary mechanism for transmitting interest cuts to consumers by reducing a household's primary interest expense, their mortgage. The freed up money acts much like tax cut. Now, however, interest rates are rising, especially for those homeowners who took Greenspan's advice in 2005 and took out an adjustable rate mortgage when fixed rate mortgages were at 40 year lows, and tightening lending standards are cutting off home mortgage refinancing for millions.

Finally, a weak dollar since 2001 means "oil prices drive up the cost of everything that requires oil to grow, be dug up, blown, packed, scrubbed, crushed, shaken, warmed, cooled, pickled, packaged, processed, or moved – that is, everything on God's green earth including your own hair and the hot water you used to wash it this morning." The only way to reduce that impact short term is to use less oil. A recession will help, as long as the dollar doesn't fall faster than oil demand.

Jack Lifton, Resource Investor
As the 2008 political season nears its quadrennial crescendo and rock stars and war heroes are vying to be selected for the most militarily powerful job in the world it would seem that no one, certainly no politician, is willing to admit that America's world economic-leadership is eroding at an almost perceptible daily rate. Candidates, and office holders, remind us that each of the U.S. Navy's 12 carrier battle-groups is, by itself, more powerful than any other single nation's entire navy! Yet they fail to mention that we cannot build armoured ships or vehicles, small arms, artillery, armour piercing ammunition, missile guidance, night vision equipment, computers, displays, or, believe it or not, nuclear propulsion systems, or aircraft of any kind, civilian or military, without minor metals, such as the rare earths. Most of which we are now, 100%, dependent on nations unfriendly to America, which, notwithstanding their being unfriendly, already practice resource nationalism. Some of them, such as China, have already openly begun to restrict the export — or utilization for items for export—of key industrial minor metals, so as to reinforce their own self sufficiency in these materials.

Bob Moriarty, 321Gold
Homestake declined about 21% from the crash in late October 1929 through the end of that year, but through the entire decade of the 1930s Homestake was the highest gaining stock on the New York Stock Exchange. So, it's entirely possible the market could crash and gold stocks go up. At some point in time, people are going to recognize the precious metals stocks, not all metal stocks, are the safest place to be.

Doug Noland, Prudent Bear
It is not the nature of dislocated markets to let fundamentals get in the way of price movement. Markets, after all, live on fear and greed. Sinking energy prices and a short squeeze ignited U.S. stocks this week. And surging stock prices always entice the optimistic viewpoint, with many viewing runs in stocks and the dollar as confirmation that the worst of the financial and economic crisis is behind us. The bursting of the so-called Energy/Commodities Bubble is also viewed in positive light.

Yet if the key dynamic is instead a Bursting Leveraged Speculating Community Bubble, entirely different dynamics are now in play. Enormous short positions have built up, the vast majority as part of "market neutral," "quant" and myriad risk hedging strategies. If today's dislocation develops into a significant unwind of these positions, the market immediately then becomes vulnerable to a disorderly "melt-up" followed almost inevitably by a sharp reversal and disorderly decline. The unwind of bearish speculations and hedges would be a most problematic market development, unleashing a final bout of speculative excess and disorder that would set the stage for a major market crisis.

It is now clear that many within the leveraged speculating community have suffered huge losses over the past few weeks. For a "community" that was already suffering a difficult year, blowups in the popular energy, commodities and short dollar trades were a decisive backbreaker. Huge rallies in heavily shorted stocks and sectors have added further pain. One can now expect major redemptions at quarter and year-ends, a dynamic that likely ensures recent near-chaotic market conditions become the norm for awhile.

Jim Puplava, Financial Sense
The US Mint has suspended the production of US Eagles. I was told by one dealer this morning, checking with him, they're telling people delivery dates for silver Eagles won't be till January, February of next year. One dealer I was talking to said that they can't even get the plates – so what they were doing is they were ordering thousand ounce bars and they were melting the bars down to make one ounce coins because most people are buying either silver rounds – and I was told delivery dates right now are two months out. So this is August, probably late October. That's how scarce it is. So, the other thing is get your physical metals because there is a gross discrepancy and divergence between trying to drive down the paper market price of silver. One dealer told me in July his sales were up four fold last year; and this month alone, his sales are up eight fold. One dealer was telling me today that he had never seen anything like this in his lifetime. On this Friday I just bought a ton of silver and I've been told it's going to take two months to take delivery on that ton. And if the price goes lower, I'll buy another ton. I've got a couple of dealers who store my bullion for me until it's shipped overseas.

James Quinn, Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania
We have outsourced our savings to the emerging economies, along with our manufacturing jobs. The Chinese are saving the money we've paid them for flat screen TVs and the Middle Eastern countries are saving the money we've paid them for oil. You need savings in order to increase investment. The emerging markets are making the vast majority of the investments in the world. While the U.S. endlessly debates drilling and construction of nuclear plants (none built in U.S. since 1987) and oil refineries (none built in U.S. since 1977), China brought four oil refineries online in 2008 and plans to build 30 nuclear reactors in the next twelve years. The Asian Century has begun, but the U.S. has tried to keep up by using debt. It will not work. If anything, this has accelerated the shift of power to Asia.

Nouriel Roubini, RGE Monitor
Barron's: Unfortunately for the rest of us, you have a pretty good track record. How much more misery lies ahead?

Roubini: We are in the second inning of a severe, protracted recession, which started in the first quarter of this year and is going to last at least 18 months, through the middle of next year. A systemic banking crisis will go on for awhile, with hundreds of banks going belly up. The taxpayer's bill is going to be huge. I estimate this financial crisis will lead to credit losses of at least $1 trillion and most likely closer to $2 trillion. When I made this analysis in February everybody thought I was a lunatic. But a few weeks later the International Monetary Fund came out with an estimate of $945 billion, Goldman Sachs (GS) estimated $1.1 trillion and UBS (UBS) $1 trillion. Hedge-fund manager John Paulson recently estimated the losses would be $1.3 trillion, and late last month Bridgewater Associates came up with an estimate of $1.6 trillion. So, at this point $1 trillion isn't a ceiling, it's a floor. And the banks, as I've said, have written down only about $300 billion of subprime debt. I think $2 trillion is too high, but the number will definitely be huge.

Franklin Sanders, Money Changer
Either this is the greatest silver and gold buying opportunity of all time, or the end of a bull market.

But it is NOT the end of a bull market. Time alone argues that. A bull market runs 10 - 20 years, and this one has run only 7, since 2001. Those who think silver & gold have fallen into the "bursting of the commodity bubble" completely misunderstand what drives them in the first place. Silver & gold are not commodities; they are money. When investors pile into silver & gold, it's not any commodity bubble forcing them there, but monetary demand. They aren't buying metals because they think all the Indian ladies are going to be wearing two nose rings instead of one this season, or that the American bourgeoisie will suddenly begin stockpiling sterling silver forks again.

They are buying metals because -- listen to this, get it straight once & forever -- they distrust fiat central bank currencies (or if you prefer, national currencies). The dollar is trash, the yen is trash, the euro is trash; all are equally insolvent, equally unbacked by anything expect a politician's or central banker's promise, which is not nearly as good as that of any madame at any bordello anywhere.

The dollar is rising? So, why? Did it become better, acquire more gold backing, solve its chronic balance of payments deficit last night? Come on. Did the euro get worse overnight? The yen? How much worse could it get? You are seeing competitive devaluations, all very much worked out collegially in advance by central bankers. Fundamentally meaningless.

What is NOT meaningless is that the Great Alternative Currencies, silver & gold, have long been advancing against ALL national currencies. All markets swing like pendulums, too far one way, then too far the other. Silver & gold prices became overbought -- a lot of people short dollars were long silver & gold. The dollar rallied, oil & commodities fell, sucking down silver & gold money. Look at the numbers. Even with gold down to $787.50 today, that's only a 21.5% correction, while always more volatile silver is down 37.4%. Friends, these are normal, not outlandish, corrections. Sober up.

Julian D. W. Phillips, Gold Forecaster
The huge gap between the value of gold and the value of money must narrow. Whether it is through the rise in the value of gold and silver or through the fall of the value of money dictates the future of the financial system. Either way, gold and silver will prove to be the safe-haven it has been since money was part of man’s world. And the second half of this year is likely to be as dramatic as the first half but with a golden or silver sheen to it.

Steve Saville, Speculative Investor
Many people will be asking the question: why is the US$ rallying when its fundamentals are so terrible? From our perspective, however, a more reasonable question is: why has it taken so long for the US$ to rally against the euro given that the US$ is extremely under-valued relative to the euro and the euro's fundamentals are just as bad?

The answer, we think, is that the currency market has believed that the US Federal Reserve would be as 'easy' as it needed to be to help the banking system through its crisis, while the ECB would continue to focus on minimizing currency depreciation. We think the market was/ is right to believe that the Fed will do whatever it takes to maintain the solvency of the major banks, but traders now appear to be coming around to the view that the ECB will also be loosening the monetary reins. Take away the interest-rate 'prop' and the euro suddenly becomes free to fall under the weight of its own over-valuation.

Mike Shedlock, Mish’s Global Economic Trend Analysis
It's NEVER "practical" for the Fed, the SEC, Banks, CEOs in general, the FDIC, Congress, the Treasury Department, or the President to tell the truth. This is what it all boils down to: Somehow it's never "practical" to stop a drunken credit-financed orgy, yet when the party ends, it's never "practical" to discuss the consequences. In this case, the credit orgy lasted so long, and there were so many players, that the most important truth right now that needs open, honest discussion is that the entire US Banking System Is Insolvent.

Government stupidity is the most liquid of all assets, spreading everywhere at the slightest provocation. Look for more of it and you won't be disappointed.

James Turk, Freemarket Gold and Money Report
The time-bomb is ticking. The federal government is liquid because as its consolidated accounts state, it has “the power to print additional currency.” And print it will for one simple reason. The federal government is insolvent. Its debt obligations far exceed its financial capacity to repay those debts without debasing the dollar. Eventually it will take one ounce of gold or so to buy the Dow Jones Industrial Average. At that time I will recommend selling gold and buying the DJIA to ride the next cycle. But the DJIA still has to lose about 90% of its price in terms of gold for that to happen.

Christopher Whalen, Institutional Risk Analyst
We're not sure who's going to win the presidency in November, but we are very sure that the safety and soundness of the nation's banking system is going to be an issue in this election - perhaps as prominent an issue as energy prices. Indeed, we think that the president-elect will be forced to meet with President George Bush and both men will ask the Congress to move on providing funding and new legal authority to backstop the FDIC. In the near-term Uncle Sam is going to be forced to get even more involved to head off a catastrophic contraction in the availability of credit to the private economy.

Jim Willie, Hat Trick Letter
The US banks are fast approaching the early warning season in early to middle September. They are required (Wall Street firms excluded) to come forward and provide guidance on their earnings, their balance sheet damage (called impairment, since sounds better), and their profits (nonexistent, as in extinct). Wall Street firms have almost no stock or bond issuance, no private equity packaging, so business is largely dominated by management of their demise, along with management of their propaganda messages that seem shrill lately. The US banks will in my estimation announce bigger Q3 losses than Q2. Their BS-stories continue since they are actively seeking cash to shore up balance sheets. Their mortgage related losses will be ongoing, but now those losses will be joined by prime mortgage losses, commercial loan losses, car loan losses, credit card losses, and more. The USGovt can claim the economy is in good shape, that exports are booming, but a grand disconnect has occurred. Something like 460 thousand jobs have been lost this year, and most job gains are on paper, from the Birth Death Model nonsense. More paper deception, this of the labor market. Consumers might spend less if they were keenly aware of US-based unemployment running over 14%. The steep decline in USGovt tax receipts testifies to a recession. Most statistics testify to recession, like the Leading Economic Indicators. Reverse gear for the USEconomy is bad news for the USDollar. And all the horrendous disasters coming from Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac acid pits cannot be good.

QUOTE

House prices 'to reduce by 25%'

http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7604894.stm

"I think before we really get to the NEW WORLD, whatever that is, I think we will be into 2010."

EMPHASIS is mine.

Is it just wild speculation, or is this guy delivering a selected line - whether he knows what it means or more likely doesn't - as a piece of predictive programming?

QUOTE

Last Call: Lehman tumbles as uncertainty grows

Associated Press 09.08.08, 4:57 PM ET http://www.forbes.com/feeds/ap/2008/09/08/ap5401401.html

NEW YORK - Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc. shares tumbled Monday amid investor uncertainty about how the nation's fourth-largest brokerage will find much-needed capital to help shore up its balance sheet.

There remains intense speculation that Lehman Chief Executive Richard Fuld might be forced to sell off its Neuberger Berman asset management division to help buoy the investment bank's ailing balance sheet. Analysts believe such a sale would generate between $7 billion to $8 billion.

A spokesman for Lehman declined to comment.

The most likely deal would be to sell Neuberger Berman to its top management, according to analysts. However, an outright sale of the prized asset has been seen as harmful to both Lehman's revenue stream and debt ratings.

Brad Hintz, a former Lehman Brothers (nyse: LEH - news - people) chief financial officer who is now an analyst at Sanford C. Bernstein, said he believes the company should spin off Neuberger and sell some of its real estate businesses. He also projects the company will write down $4 billion to $5 billion in risky mortgage securities when it posts results later this month, and those losses could be offset by the Neuberger deal.

There also have been reports that Fuld will split the company into two separately listed firms - creating what analysts call a "good bank" and a "bad bank." The investment bank's $32 billion portfolio of risky mortgage securities would be allocated to a new company supported by new debt and equity.

That would free up the fixed-income and investment banking side of Lehman Brothers to operate without the problems caused by the mortgage portfolio. The split would also be funded through a major equity investment, most likely from a Korean or Japanese bank, according to several media reports.

Lehman shares closed down $2.05, or 13 percent, at $14.15, having earlier dipped as low as $13.03. The stock has traded within a 52-week range of $12.02 to $67.73.

QUOTE

Bank Failure Count: 2008's 11th bank fails, McCain's son was director

Posted Sep 6th 2008 10:05AM by Peter Cohan
http://www.bloggingstocks.com/2008/09/06/b...ns-son-was-dir/

In what I feared might become a regular feature here, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) arranged for the takeover of the 11th failed bank of 2008 on Friday. As I posted, the FDIC likes to close banks on Friday after hours so they can reopen as branches of the acquiring bank on the following Monday morning. According to the Associated Press, the bank in question is Nevada's Silver State Bank.

Nevada State Bank of Las Vegas will take over the insured deposits of Silver State -- which had $2 billion in assets and $1.7 billion in deposits at the end of June. AP reports that "[Silver State's] branches will reopen Monday as offices of Nevada State Bank in Nevada and National Bank of Arizona in Arizona."

John McCain's son, Andrew, who is also CFO of his mom's beer distributorship, "sat on the boards of Silver State Bank and of its parent, Silver State Bancorp, starting in February but resigned in July citing 'personal reasons.' Andrew McCain also was a member of the bank's audit committee, responsible for oversight of the company's accounting," according to AP.

The failure -- which was caused by "poor-quality loans primarily related to real estate development" -- will cost the FDIC deposit insurance fund between "$450 million [and] $550 million," according to AP. Silver State's motto was "When the casinos treat you poorly, let Silver State treat you like a valued customer," according to its website.

Although AP reports he was adopted by McCain and his first wife, Andrew is following in his father's footsteps. John McCain protected Charles Keating from government regulators because he had arranged a real estate deal for his second wife, Cindy. The failure of Keating's S&L cost taxpayers $3.4 billion. Taxpayers got off relatively cheaply bailing out Andrew's former colleagues.

So if you have money in a riskier bank -- one that is losing money and charging off large volumes of loans -- consider moving it into a bank whose profits have been growing this year. And congratulations to Andrew McCain for bailing out of Silver Lake before the FDIC took it over.

craig-oxley - September 14, 2008 05:34 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

Fed holds emergency meeting on market developments

Published on 13-09-2008 Email To Friend Print Version
http://www.reuters.com/article/americasReg...234695720080913

WASHINGTON - The Federal Reserve Bank of New York held an emergency meeting on Friday evening with top financial market representatives to discuss recent market developments, a Fed official said.

"Senior representatives of major financial markets met at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York Friday evening to discuss recent market developments," a Fed official told Reuters.

The official said New York Fed President Timothy Geithner, U.S. Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson and Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman Christopher Cox were among the participants in the meeting.

Financial markets have been on tenterhooks over the future of Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc (LEH.N: Quote, Profile, Research, Stock Buzz) and whether the struggling investment bank, whose stock value has collapsed, may or may not be able to find a buyer. The talks at the New York Fed took place as discussions between Lehman and other parties continued.

The Treasury and Fed have been involved in talks regarding Lehman's future. Earlier on Friday, a source familiar with the thinking of Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson said Paulson was "adamant" no public funds be put on the line to help facilitate a sale. (Reporting by Glenn Somerville; Writing by Tim Ahmann; Editing by Gary Hill)

QUOTE

Cramer: 'Dysfunctional' Banking System Puts U.S. 'Totally' at Risk of 'Great Depression No. 2'

CNBC host promotes taxpayer-funded federal bailout and Fed interest rate cut to stem financial problems.

By Jeff Poor
Business & Media Institute
9/11/2008 5:44:29 PM
http://www.businessandmedia.org/articles/2...0911172659.aspx

The fragility of the U.S. banking system puts the country in a more dire position than many people realize according to CNBC "Mad Money" host Jim Cramer.

Cramer, in his September 11 "Stop Trading" segment on CNBC's "Street Signs" told host Erin Burnett the situation puts the United States in danger of "Great Depression, No. 2."

Burnett questioned Cramer's assertion that banks should be bailed out by the federal government, in turn passing the cost off to the taxpayer. "It's obvious the bank system is falling apart," Cramer said. "Let's save it before it goes to zero."

Here is the blow by blow:

[dohtml]<embed src="http://www.eyeblast.tv/public/FlashPlayerLight.swf" flashvars="videos=http://media.eyeblast.org/resources/35537.flv&xmlfile=http://www.eyeblast.tv/Public/xml/NoThumbs.xml&thumb=Http://media.eyeblast.org/thumbs/7978.jpg&auto=0" width="450" height="350" wmode="window" allowscriptaccess="sameDomain" allowfullscreen="true" type="application/x-shockwave-flash"></embed>[/dohtml]

BURNETT: But, what I'm writing down is some numbers here – more broadly for the state of, of, of bailouts. You had the Bear [Stearns] bailout and they guaranteed the first $30 billion. We don't know what the costs will be. Fannie and Freddie – numbers are all over the map, no one knows – $50 billion to $500 billion.

CRAMER: We don't want a Great Depression, what's the matter with that? We don't want a Great Depression.

BURNETT: But OK, then you look at a Washington Mutual, you have a few hundred billion dollars in assets here. You got all these deposits. You've got to go borrow the money …

CRAMER: That was run by morons.

BURNETT: But my point is – you've got to go borrow the money to fulfill your FDIC insurance to $100,000.

CRAMER: Well, no, you just transfer – you close it one day, like my bank was…. I was banking at Crossland. The next day it opens as another bank, what do I care? My $100,000 was insured.

BURNETT: But, you care because taxpayers are the ones who's going to be the paying you back for the ones who borrowed it.

Cramer argued it was necessary because otherwise, the U.S. would go into a depression:

CRAMER: We don't want a Great Depression. I mean, we just don't want one.

BURNETT: But, are we really at risk of a Great Depression? Most people would argue that we're not in a full-blown recession.

CRAMER: Totally, totally. John Stumpf [president] from Wells Fargo said it was the worst since the Great Depression.

BURNETT: In housing, but that's not everywhere.

CRAMER: If I wanted clean hands, if I wanted to be Andrew Mellon, I would call for – I would just say, "Listen, let's just let the Great Depression, Number Two, happen. But, that's where we are. That's, we've been like that for a while. So, let's try to avoid it if we can.

Burnett argued the economy was still growing. After one quarter of negative gross domestic product (GDP) at the end of 2007, the economy has rebounded with two positive quarters. But Cramer said there was a difference between the economy and the banking system.

"Well, one is the difference between the economy and the banking system," Cramer said. "The economy really picked up in 1936 to '38 because of armament orders, and World War II turned around the U.S. economy entirely, but there was still, the banking system was still very frail throughout the '30s."

Cramer told Burnett he was disappointed in Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke, who has studied the Great Depression. Cramer added there is a need for another interest rate cut at the upcoming Federal Reserve Board meeting on September 16.

"But you know, look – I hear you on the jobs, I hear you on the economy," Cramer said. "I don't really care. I'm talking about a dysfunctional banking system. We don't want Citi (NYSE:C) to go out of business. We don't want AIG (NYSE:AIG) to go out of business."

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., September 11 mentioned the possibility of another rescue package – this one for beleaguered investment bank Lehman Brothers (NYSE:LEH), based on its impact on the credit markets.

Great Depression references have been used liberally by the media in 2008. Networks have made endless connections to the Great Depression – more than 70 times in the first six months of the year and that's just on the three broadcast networks..

craig-oxley - September 15, 2008 11:57 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

Lehman Bros files for BANKRUPTCY

Monday, 15 September 2008 12:22 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7615931.stm

The fourth-largest investment bank in the US, Lehman Brothers, has filed for bankruptcy protection, amid a growing global financial crisis.

Lehman had incurred losses of billions of dollars in the US mortgage market.

The move threatens to deal a further blow to the global financial system, as banks unwind their deals with Lehman.

Merrill Lynch, also stung by the credit crunch, has agreed to be taken over by Bank of America in a dramatic weekend of events for Wall Street.

Its impact is being felt around the world:

Stock markets and the US dollar have tumbled in reaction to Lehman's collapse, with banking shares hardest hit; UK bank HBOS saw its shares plummet 30%.
Central banks have moved to reassure markets. The US Federal Reserve has broadened its emergency lending scheme and the UK and European central banks have injected a total of $39bn (£22bn; 28bn euros) into the financial system.
There are fears AIG, once the world's largest insurer, could also face collapse. It is taking steps to raise money amid reports it is seeking a $40bn emergency loan from the Fed.
Bank of America's move to buy Merrill in a $50bn deal means that three of the top five US investment bank have fallen prey to the sub-prime crisis within six months.
In the UK, accountants PricewaterhouseCoopers have been appointed as administrators for Lehman.
Anxious markets

Stock markets in Europe and Asia dropped sharply and the dollar tumbled against the yen, the euro and the Swiss franc as Lehman's failure raised fears about the strength of the global financial system.

The FTSE 100 index of leading UK shares was down 271 points, or 5%, at 5145.3 by midday. Banking shares have been particularly badly affected with HBOS down almost 30%.

Wall Street is also expected to open lower in what is likely to be a tense day of trading.

The Bank of England and the European Central Bank said they were monitoring developments and had pumped £5bn and $30bn respectively into money markets to help stabilise them.

Talks collapse

The chance that Lehman Brothers could collapse increased sharply after the strongest potential buyers pulled out at the weekend.

Barclays and Bank of America had been in talks to rescue the bank but negotiations faltered when it became clear that the US Treasury was strongly opposed to using government money to help clinch a deal.

The Treasury had given $30bn backing to Bear Stearns in order to secure its sale to JP Morgan in March.

Greg Wood, the BBC's North America business correspondent, said that police had cordoned off the bank's headquarters in New York and staff were leaving with cardboard boxes as onlookers gathered to watch the bank's demise.

"I think the whole history - 150 years of effort and hard work - that's the most saddening part for me," said one Lehman employee as she left the building.

The bank, which employs about 25,000 staff worldwide, including 5,000 in the UK, was founded in 1850 by three brothers.

'Extraordinary 24 hours'

Lehman Brothers said it intended to file for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection, which allows a company time to reorganise and devise a plan to pay creditors over time.

It said that its broker-dealer division and asset management division Neuberger Berman Holdings would not be included in the filing.

The accounting firm PriceWaterhouseCoopers said the UK operations of Lehman Brothers have been placed under administration, and the business would be wound down in an orderly fashion.

Bank of America said it had agreed to buy investment bank Merrill Lynch for $50bn (£28bn), in a deal that will create the world's largest financial services company.

Three of the top five US investment banks have now fallen victim to the credit crunch. Lehman and Merrill join Bear Stearns, which was sold to JP Morgan for a knockdown price in March.

The BBC's business editor, Robert Peston, said that it had been Wall Street's most extraordinary 24 hours since the late 1920s.

He said that Merrill's sale was almost as shocking as Lehman's demise.

"The global financial economy has never in recent years been tested by quite such a combination of accidents and jolts to confidence," he said.

Insurer in trouble

In addition to Lehman and Merrill Lynch, problems at AIG, once the world's largest insurer, are also mounting.

Reeling from losses on its exposure to real estate, AIG has sought $40bn from the Federal Reserve to shore up its finances, the New York Times has reported.

To help prevent panic on financial markets, the Federal Reserve said for the first time it will accept stocks owned by banks as collateral for short-term cash loans, broadening its emergency lending programme.

Also 10 of the world's biggest banks on Sunday agreed to establish a $70bn emergency fund, with any one of the banks able to able to tap up to a third of it should they face any liquidity problems.

QUOTE

Rogers: Dollar To Lose World Reserve Status

Paul Joseph Watson
Monday, September 15, 2008
http://www.infowars.com/?p=4548

With the greenback plummeting after the news of Lehman Brothers' bankruptcy, top investor Jim Rogers predicts that the dollar will lose its status as the world reserve currency status and has resolved to buy more gold despite a recent fall in the price of the commodity.

Rogers, who correctly predicted China's resurgence as an economic superpower back in the 80's as well as crude oil surpassing $100, says the global economy is in a recession that is going to get much worse while inflation will continue to skyrocket.

"Some countries lie about it. But, inflation in all countries is going to get worse. The next decade is going to see lot more inflation, which is not good," Rogers told the India Business Standard.

"Frequently, since the prices of the commodities go up before the inflation numbers, one can stay ahead of inflation. But, if you get it wrong you might do worse. So, investing in those commodities, which are going to go up first or selecting the right commodities, is the key to stay ahead of the inflation and make a lot of money."

Turning to the dollar, Rogers dismissed the greenback as a "flawed currency" that would continue to deteriorate for two to three decades, adding that he would seek to use the dollar's recent rally as an opportunity to get out of the currency completely.

"I do not want to own any US dollars. Also, I would not urge you to buy US dollars. (The) dollar is going to loose its status as world reserve currency," said Rogers.

"Some of the OPEC countries have already started and no longer take dollar, like Venezuela no longer accepts the dollar. Other countries are already looking and may be taking a package of basket of currencies instead of the dollar. I am not the only one who knows the dollar is in trouble. Anybody who watches the TV knows that the dollar is in trouble," he added.

Rogers also said that the bull market in oil has at least another ten years to run and that oil prices will only go higher.

Speaking on the subject of commodities, Rogers recommended sugar, coffee and cotton and also said that he would be buying more precious metals.

"I am trying and want to buy some gold. However, whether this is the low in the gold, I have no idea, but if gold goes lower, I will add some more. Gold is something I do not plan to sell. Gold is something I will gift to my children," concluded Rogers.

QUOTE

Global banks pledge 70 billion dollars to ease credit crunch

15 Sept 2008
http://afp.google.com/article/ALeqM5jBgwgR...uIcbnntmxnxr93g

WASHINGTON (AFP) — A consortium of 10 global commercial and investment banks announced plans Sunday to provide 70 billion dollars to help offset a credit squeeze amid an anticipated collapse of Wall Street giant Lehman Brothers.

Bank of America, Barclays, Citibank, Credit Suisse, Deutsche Bank, Goldman Sachs, JPMorgan Chase, Merrill Lynch, Morgan Stanley, and UBS, said in a joint statement they "initiated a series of actions to help enhance liquidity and mitigate the unprecedented volatility and other challenges affecting global equity and debt markets."

They agreed to create a "collateralized borrowing facility" of 70 billion dollars, with each bank contributing seven billion dollars, to help ease access to credit.

They also said they would work together "to help facilitate an orderly resolution" of the derivatives exposures between Lehman Brothers and its counterparties.

"These actions reflect the extraordinary market environment," the statement said.

"The banks are committed to continuing to work closely with one another as well as the US Treasury Department, the Federal Reserve, the Securities and Exchange Commission, governments and regulators around the world, and other market participants, to ensure the industry is doing everything it can to provide additional liquidity and assurance to our capital markets and banking system."

The 10 banks would be able to tap this facility, with any bank eligible for up to one-third of the fund. The amount may be expanded if more banks join the program.

The announcement came moments after the Federal Reserve announced new steps to ease access to emergency credit for struggling financial companies, by broadening the collateral to be used for central bank loans.

The unusual Sunday moves came as financial markets braced for a possible collapse of Lehman Brothers, a Wall Street giant whose failure could have wide-ranging implications for the financial system.

While there was no official news on Lehman's fate, analysts expected a bankruptcy filing that could affect a range of companies dealing with the Wall Street giant, with a potential to worsen the global credit crunch.

QUOTE

A.I.G. Allowed to Borrow Money From Subsidiaries

By MICHAEL de la MERCED and GRETCHEN MORGENSON
Published: September 14, 2008
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/09/15/business...ECjc/VG5UjxzOOw

Gov. David A. Paterson of New York said on Monday that the state would allow the American International Group, a big insurance company, to lend itself $20 billion to bolster its capital as it faces potentially disastrous credit downgrades.

Shares in A.I.G. tumbled more than 60 percent on Monday morning as investors grew concerned that the firm lacked capital to withstand cuts to its debt rating. But Mr. Paterson reiterated the state's support of the firm and declared A.I.G. "financially sound."

The firm approached the state for help, Mr. Paterson said, and government officials worked closely with the firm throughout the weekend. He vocally supported A.I.G.'s efforts to seek help from the Federal Reserve.

A.I.G. has sought a $40 billion bridge loan from the Federal Reserve as a lifeline, as the three-part rescue plan it had devised appeared to crumble, a person briefed on the matter said.

Mr. Paterson argued that New York taxpayers would not be put at risk by the state's involvement.

The announcement appeared to help arrest the decline in A.I.G.'s stock. Trading below $4 shortly before noon, the shares recovered to about $6 in the next half-hour — still a loss of almost 50 percent from their Friday close.

Ratings agencies had threatened to downgrade the insurance giant's credit rating by Monday morning, allowing counterparties to withdraw capital from their contracts with the company. One person close to the firm said that if such an event occurred, A.I.G. might survive for only 48 hours to 72 hours.

A.I.G. has already raised $20 billion this year. But even that amount of capital has not averted a crisis.

The firm's sickly financial health was a prominent topic in weekend talks among Wall Street chieftains who gathered at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York to discuss the potential collapse of the investment bank Lehman Brothers. A.I.G. had become one of the biggest underwriters of complex debt securities known credit default swaps, used as insurance for a wide range of products, including the mortgage instruments that have been the bane of Wall Street for the past year and a half.

Eric Dinallo, the New York state insurance superintendent, has been deeply involved in discussions about A.I.G.'s survival, this person said.

J. C. Flowers & Company, a buyout firm focused on financial services firms, offered $8 billion for a stake in the business that would have given it an option to buy all of A.I.G. down the road. Kohlberg Kravis Roberts and TPG also said they would bid.

But all three withdrew at the last minute, citing anxiousness over the company's precarious financial health.

A.I.G.'s extraordinary move of reaching out to the Fed for help may spur other noninvestment banks to try a similar move. Companies ranging from General Electric to GMAC have been hurting badly and would desperately love the liquidity that the Fed would provide.

It is not clear whether the Fed will acquiesce to A.I.G.'s request.

Before seeking a lifeline, the firm had earlier been reported to be interested in selling its aircraft leasing business, the International Lease Finance Corporation. Founded in 1973, the business has nearly 1,000 planes in its fleet. But people briefed on the matter said that unit bore special tax advantages that A.I.G. had decided would be lost on any other owner.

Investors, afraid that A.I.G. would have to absorb further write-downs in its already damaged mortgage securities and collateralized debt obligations, have driven down the company's shares in recent days. The stock closed Friday at $12.14 a share, a decline of 46 percent for the week.

A.I.G.'s problems are not new. The company lost $13.2 billion in the first six months of 2008, largely owing to declining values in mortgage-related securities held in its investment portfolio and collateralized debt obligations it owns.

But the company's outlook grew grimmer last week when Standard & Poor's warned that it was considering downgrading the company's debt as a result of further write-downs it might have to take.

As the credit storm has raged in recent months, insurance companies like A.I.G. have been better positioned than the nation's banks and brokerage firms to weather it because accounting rules do not require insurers to mark the investments held in their long-term portfolios to market. Insurance companies like A.I.G. can hold their investments until they mature, riding out the ups and downs in the market for those assets.

But the moment it began trying to raise capital, A.I.G. had to open its books to potential investors who were likely to take a sharp pencil to the company's portfolio values, analysts said. And with Lehman Brothers last week providing investors with a valuation for the same types of assets held by A.I.G., subprime and Alt-A mortgage securities, the investment bank's marks can now be applied to the big insurer's books.

As of the most recent quarter, for example, A.I.G. had $20 billion of subprime mortgages marked at 69 cents on the dollar and $24 billion in Alt-A securities valued at 67 cents on the dollar.

But Lehman officials on a conference call with investors last week said it was valuing similar subprime mortgage securities to those held by A.I.G. at 34 cents on the dollar; its mark on the Alt-A holdings was 39 cents. Those valuations suggest almost a $14 billion decline in A.I.G.'s holdings, after taxes, an amount representing 18 percent of the company's book value.

Additional write-downs may also be required in A.I.G.'s collateralized debt obligations, which the company does mark to market because they are held in a short-term account known as available for sale. The company valued $42 billion in high-grade holdings at 75 cents on the dollar, while it marked another $16 billion in lower-rated obligations at 70 cents.

A spokesman for A.I.G., Nicholas J. Ashooh, said it was inappropriate to compare the markdowns of Lehman Brothers' securities with those at A.I.G.

"We don't think that's valid, to look at somebody else's portfolio markdowns and then infer what A.I.G.'s might be, because there's so many variables," Mr. Ashooh said, "what kind of risk is in the portfolio, what kind of collateral there is, and how the marks were calculated. We think we use a very thorough and conservative approach that includes third-party input and input from the rating services."

A.I.G., which is based in New York, has also been under pressure from the derivatives contracts that its London-based financial products unit sold in connection with complex debt securities. Those contracts, called credit default swaps, acted as a type of insurance on the debt securities, making them more attractive to buyers. The swaps also gave speculators an opportunity to bet on the debt securities' overall creditworthiness, which has declined in response to the turmoil in the housing markets.

When A.I.G.'s financial products unit sold the credit default swaps, it effectively promised to compensate buyers of the debt securities if the mortgages underlying them got into trouble. At the time, the securities were rated AAA, so it seemed at first that A.I.G. was not taking on inordinate risk.

But that picture changed as the housing crisis took hold and homeowners began to default. A.I.G. wrote down the value of its swap portfolio by $25 billion, telling investors that the markdowns did not represent a cash loss of that magnitude. It estimated possible cash payouts on the swaps of between $5 billion and $8 billion.

But because the debt securities covered by the swaps are so complex and opaque, it has been hard for investors to verify A.I.G.'s numbers on their own, and investors have grown impatient as A.I.G. reported big losses they did not expect in the last two quarters.

A.I.G. also said recently that it might have to post collateral to its swap counterparties, heightening concerns that the company would have to raise capital in tight markets. A.I.G. said in a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission that if its own credit were downgraded one notch by Moody's and Standard & Poor's, its swap contracts would require it to post collateral of about $13 billion.

In addition, A.I.G. said some of the contracts gave counterparties the option to terminate their swaps, which would cost A.I.G. between $4 billion and $5 billion. A.I.G. said that it did not expect all of its counterparties to exercise that option, however.

As a result, when S.& P. announced a negative outlook for A.I.G.'s credit on Friday, investors understood the company might soon have to produce up to $18 billion

QUOTE

Bailout Hide and Seek

Published: September 13, 2008
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/09/14/opinion/...tml?ref=opinion

On Friday, less than a week after the government took control of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, the White House announced that there is no reason at this time to account for the companies in the federal budget.

That is great news for officials who prefer to hide the cost of the bailout since it is due, in large part, to their failure to adequately regulate the financial markets and steward the economy. But it is an insult to taxpayers, whose money is at risk, and it is a reckless gambit.

The Congressional Budget Office reported on Tuesday that the government's finances are deteriorating rapidly: the budget deficit for this year is expected to reach $407 billion, more than double last year's shortfall, and to exceed $500 billion in 2009. The takeover of Fannie and Freddie, necessary though it is, will add to the deterioration. Airbrushing that away will only open the door to uninformed — or negligent — decisions on spending and tax cuts.

The White House says that the extent of the government's control of Fannie and Freddie does not warrant including the companies' operations in the budget. That is absurd. The government has seized the companies, firing their executives and installing new ones, offering to invest up to $200 billion in the companies if necessary, and most significant, making an ironclad promise to pay their trillions of dollars in obligations, if need be.

The White House also claims that the risk to taxpayers is not yet serious enough to require that the costs be shown in the budget. But there is a very real cost to guaranteeing the obligations of Fannie and Freddie, even if the government never has to cough up a penny. The taxpayer is on the hook while the guarantee is outstanding — and the Treasury says that will last past Dec. 31, 2009, when its bailout authority officially ends.

The Congressional Budget Office has said that it will calculate the cost of taxpayers' risk and include it in its version of the budget, which is separate from the White House version of the budget.

Having conflicting budgets is hardly a good way to restore confidence in the government's financial management. But the C.B.O. accounting will prevent the White House from saying, in effect, "yes, bondholders, your investments are fully guaranteed, but you, dear taxpayers, don't worry, it costs you nothing."

As the government (read: taxpayers) assumes additional risks, it is more important than ever to get the accounting right. Accurately reflecting the budget cost of the Fannie and Freddie bailout would not lead to an explosion in public debt. Prudent accounting, accurately applied, would limit the amount that must be counted against the nation's overall debt ceiling. Accurately accounting for risk would limit the cost of making good on the companies' obligations to a figure that reflects the likelihood of taxpayers actually having to pay up.

No one yet knows the ultimate cost of the bailout, but it is already more than zero.

QUOTE

Wilbur Ross: Possibly a Thousand Banks Will Close

Sept 15 2008
http://www.cnbc.com/id/26710362

In an exclusive interview with CNBC.com, Wilbur Ross, chairman and CEO of WL Ross & Co., says he sees possibly as many as a thousand bank closures in the coming months. And this will create opportunities for investors.

"I do think a lot of the regional ones will (close), just as they did in the last savings and loan crisis in the 1990s," Ross said. (Watch the full CNBC.com exclusive interview with Wilbur Ross on the left)

Ross says he will be looking to pick up smaller distressed institutions. "There will be opportunities, but we will need federal assistance in them, because what we're mainly looking for is stable sources of deposits, not so much the loan portfolio."

Ross feels that there will be too many people willing to provide capital to the large financials, which makes them less of a bargain than smaller banks.

When asked about his views on Bank of America's [BAC 27.40 -6.34 (-18.79%)] purchase of Merrill Lynch [MER 19.20 2.15 (+12.61%)], Ross said that he didn't think that Merrill was in that dire a position.

"I think people in general felt better about Merrill's situation than about Lehman. I think ever since John Thain came in, he's done a wonderful job trying to fix what was a very difficult situation," Ross said.

He also noted that this was really now the second successful turnaround for Thain. "He (Thain)saved Merrill, went into BoFA ... Temasek, for example, went into something like a $5 a share profit out of this. So it's not a tragic ending."

"It will be very interesting to see where Thain ends up in the Bank of America hierarchy," Ross added.

QUOTE

Chinese economists warn of the "biggest adjustment" in 30 years

By John Chan
12 September 2008
http://www.wsws.org/articles/2008/sep2008/chin-s12.shtml

While last weekend's bailout of Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae received plaudits from Wall Street, it was also warmly welcomed by the Chinese government. Most immediately, Beijing was concerned about the tens of billions of dollars in bonds that Chinese banks hold from the two mortgage giants. At the same time, China's manufacturers are desperate for any sign that the US will emerge from the subprime crisis, which has sapped consumer spending and therefore purchases of Chinese exports.

Several leading economists in China have begun to warn of major difficulties flowing from the economic slowdown in the US, Europe and Japan. After the expansion of the economy on the basis of selling cheap consumer goods to the US and other Western markets in the 1990s, a sharp decline in demand could lead to mass unemployment and provoke widespread social unrest.

In an interview with the First Financial Daily published on September 1, Li Xiangyang, deputy director of the World Economic and Political Research Department of the official Chinese Academy of Social Sciences (CASS), admitted that the subprime meltdown was a rude awakening for Chinese economists, who had long understated the risk of major global crises.

Li was referring to the fact that many Chinese economists adapted to Western neo-liberal theories in the 1990s, believing that the global recession in the 1970s and the Great Depression of 1929 were events of the past. "This conception has been dominating China's economic circles for years," Li said, adding that it had weakened an awareness of the emerging global downturn.

Since the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) regime turned to the capitalist market in 1978, the official Stalinist ideologues and academics have all but dropped their "socialist" window dressing and now openly serve the new capitalist elite. Dismissing the Marxist theory of capitalist breakdown as "outdated," they claim that world capitalism has learned to regulate its contradictions and that the economic depressions, social revolutions and imperialist wars of the first half of the twentieth century will never return. Such arguments are now looking seriously flawed.

Li admitted China was facing the "the most serious external shock in the 30 years of reform and opening up". China was a closed economy throughout the mid-1970s period of world stagflation—a combination of economic stagnation and high inflation. Its market reforms only began in earnest in 1978. Even during the Asian financial crisis in 1997-98, China escaped most of the impact because the developed economies in North America and Europe were largely unaffected. China still had a closed capital market, unlike today when hundreds of billions of dollars in "hot money" or speculative capital has flooded into the country. Li warned that it was now impossible for China to "decouple" from the global economic crisis.

The restoration of capitalism in the former Soviet Union in 1991 and China's transformation into a vast sweatshop following the crushing of protests in Tiananmen Square in 1989 provided a much-needed boost to world capitalism. The low-cost goods made in China enabled US economic policy makers to maintain a cheap credit policy without the fear of inflationary pressures. Low interest rates formed the basis of the housing bubbles and debt-driven consumption in the US over the past decade, which in turn provided a huge market for Chinese goods.

Now this process is coming to an end. Li explained: "The subprime crisis was actually a 'correction' to years of debt-driven consumption in the US, marking the end of unsustainable economic growth based on 'spending tomorrow's income today'. However, the cost of this 'correction' was borne by the rest of the world. Within the US economy, the 'spend tomorrow's income today' debts of private companies were socialised. The savers paid the bill for the lavish spenders, through government interventions. Meanwhile, American debts were globalised: global savers paid the bill for American consumers, through inflation and devaluation of the dollar. This is the privilege of being the holder of the world currency."

The comments reflect a certain bitterness among the capitalist elite in China, which now confronts declining global demand and rising commodity prices, while the giants of US finance capital are being bailed out. Li called for China to develop its own transnational corporations, rather than simply remain an assembly line for Western multinationals.

Rising debts and insolvencies

Andy Xie, a former chief Asia analyst for Morgan Stanley, also warned in the financial magazine Caijing on September 1 that China was facing its biggest challenge in three decades. He pointed out that for the first time in 30 years, Europe, Japan and the US were contracting simultaneously, creating enormous difficulties for Chinese exports. In addition, a huge inflow of speculative capital had created unstable asset bubbles in China. Many companies and local governments confronted a crisis of insolvency if the bubbles burst.

More fundamentally, rising production costs were undermining the entire basis of China's economic expansion as a platform for cheap manufacturing. Exports accounted for 40 percent of China's gross domestic product (GDP) and contributed 4 percent of the country's total annual growth. Xie said problems with exports could be traced back to 2004, when global commodity prices started to rise. Rising prices led to demands for wage increases. As a result, large numbers of labour-intensive firms, which had always operated on thin profit margins, had been pushed to the edge.

Xie pointed out that the sentiment among entrepreneurs was that things would get better. As a result, firms kept their production plans and attempted to maintain export growth over the past three years. Now, with the danger of a downturn in major markets, many exporters faced serious problems. Export corporations listed on the Hong Kong stock market had seen their share values fall by 50-80 percent in the past two years, raising fears of a collapse in the export industry.

Corporate debt had grown as manufacturers turned to real estate and share markets, only to suffer more losses. So far this year, China's share markets had plunged by 59 percent, wiping out $US2.86 trillion in value. Local governments, which were dependent on selling land rights and taxing real estate transactions, were also heavily indebted.

Xie predicted that non-performing loans would increase substantially in the next 12 months as the property boom flattened out. "The problem is very serious," he warned. According to one official estimate, some 65,000 small and medium firms went bankrupt in the first half of this year, throwing 20 million people out of work. Many employers simply fled without paying wages to workers or debts to the banks.

Xie, a staunch advocate of the market, opposed any government assistance for ailing enterprises. Instead, he called on the government to prevent bankrupt businessmen from fleeing with their assets and creating major difficulties for banks. "[T]he action of local officials to spend money to rescue them is very stupid. The money could be stolen. To protect China's financial security, the most effective policy is to ban heavily indebted entrepreneurs from leaving China," he wrote.

Xie's solution to China's problems is another round of economic restructuring—as was carried out in the aftermath of the Asian financial crisis a decade ago. At that time, Beijing implemented sweeping privatisation of state enterprises and public housing, joined the World Trade Organisation (WTO) and built a national highway network. Tens of millions of jobs in the state sector were destroyed, even as the costs of housing, education and health care skyrocketted due to the lack of public funding. According to Xie, these draconian "market reforms" laid the basis for the boom of the past 10 years.

Xie's proposals to address the current crisis include developing Chinese transnationals, investing more in infrastructure and further deregulating the state-controlled financial system. Such a perspective is in line with calls by many economists in recent years for China to reduce its reliance on exports and expand the domestic market. But the transformation of a cheap labour platform into a consumer-driven economy inevitably confronts obstacles.

The domestic market

The Wall Street Journal on September 2 pointed to some of the difficulties in expanding domestic consumption in China. Far from increasing, consumption in China has declined as a proportion of GDP from around 50 percent in the 1980s to just 37 percent. Fixed asset investment accounts for 45 percent of the GDP, which has led to massive overcapacity. "Behind China's macroeconomic imbalances lies a political calculation," the newspaper explained. "With 10 million job seekers migrating into urban areas every year, China had to provide lots of jobs to avoid mass unemployment and social unrest. Because consumer income and spending were so weak, the government felt it had no choice but to pump up capital investment and exports."

Huge vested interests oppose any shift to domestic consumption and higher wages. For local officials, jobs are already becoming harder to create. In the past decade, China has eliminated an estimated 20 million manufacturing jobs due to improvements in productivity. High wages are the last thing that provincial and local governments want as they confront growing competition for investment, not only within China, but from Vietnam and India.

Other methods of putting money into the pockets of consumers also face opposition. The government could lift interest rates on consumer deposits, but businesses would oppose any increase in their loan repayments. Further appreciation of the yuan would increase domestic purchasing power for imported goods but at the expense of export competitiveness. The government could reduce personal income tax but if that meant increased corporate taxes, it would be resisted by the powerful business elite.

A new labour law was introduced this year mandating employers to provide pensions, social insurance contributions and other benefits for workers. As is the case with other regulations in China, many businesses simply flout the law and enforcement is weak. China could increase domestic consumption by investing in public schools, healthcare and unemployment compensation, so that workers and the rural poor would not have to save in case of illness or job loss. But as the Wall Street Journal explained: “These measures are opposed by many local governments that often prefer to spend money on building roads and bridges. That behavior may boost GDP more quickly, but it also provides more opportunity for corruption and payoffs.”

So far, the economic slowdown has been gradual. But there are danger signs. The Chinese finance ministry recorded a 13.8 percent annualised growth in tax revenues in July—almost a fifth lower than the rates in the same month last year and the first half of this year. The announcement raised concerns that China has little room for stimulatory policies such as tax cuts to compensate for falling growth rates.

While it is still growing at around 10.4 percent, the Chinese economy is riddled with internal contradictions that could rapidly produce an economic, not to mention political and social, crisis should it be hit with a major external shock. That is why Chinese economists are nervously watching events in the US where a further financial meltdown could not only cause huge losses for Beijing, which holds hundreds of billions in US investments, but end the flood of foreign investment that has sustained the so-called Chinese miracle.

QUOTE

Why The Fed Allowed Derivatives Trading on a Sunday

Published on 15-09-2008 Email To Friend Print Version
http://georgewashington2.blogspot.com/2008...trading-on.html

In an unprecedented move, the Fed and the International Swaps and Derivatives Association allowed derivatives trading today, on a Sunday, to "reduce risk associated with a potential Lehman . . . bankruptcy."

Lehman holds $ 800 billion in derivatives.

As the very even-keeled and level-headed chief executive of Pimco, the world's biggest bond fund, said:

"This is an extremely, and I stress extremely, rare event. It also speaks to the more general notion that, in today's highly disrupted financial markets, the unthinkable is thinkable."
What is the "unthinkable" he's referring to?

Another great depression. Perhaps even a world-wide depression.

To see why derivatives are the key to the financial crisis in the U.S. and the world, and why the Fed allowed derivatives trading today, read this.

Update: Bloomberg today writes:
"Bond-default risk soared worldwide as the collapse of Lehman Brother Holdings Inc. sparked concern than the $62 trillion credit-derivatives market will unravel."

QUOTE

The Crash of Western Capitalist Civilization?

Sep 14, 2008 - 11:54 AM
By: Richard_C_Cook
http://www.marketoracle.co.uk/Article6259.html

"Train-wreck" doesn't even begin to describe what is starting to happen to the U.S. today with the financial crisis, an onrushing depression, and the failure of George W. Bush's war policy as he is faced down by Iran and the Russian bear.

But in an even broader sense, the West, as a civilization, after a century of world war and the utter failure of global finance capitalism, may have reached its limits.

Those with a vested interest in the status quo dismiss any suggestion that something is wrong. This includes Donald Luskin, author of an article in the Washington Post on Sunday, September 14, titled: "A Nation of Exaggerators: Quit Doling Out That Bad Economy Line."

Luskin writes, "The relentless drumbeat of pessimism in the media and on the campaign trail" is "a virus."

He continues: "Sure, there are trouble spots in the economy, as the government takeover of mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, and jitters about Wall Street firm Lehman Brothers, amply demonstrate. And unemployment figures are up a bit, too. None of this, however, is cause for depression -- or exaggerated Depression comparisons."

Continue reading, and you find out who Luskin is: a campaign adviser to John McCain.

We know that "where you stand depends on where you sit"—and who pays you for advice. So is a catastrophic meltdown coming?

If so, probably a majority of the people in the world are thinking: "Serves them right." For the last 500 years, the West has been striding across the globe, armed to the teeth with firearms, warships, bombers, and—more recently—depleted uranium, enforcing the "white man's burden" by enslaving nations and peoples and confiscating everything of value—ranging from art objects to gold to oil—that can be carried away.

The financiers behind it all have also used the diabolically clever practice of creating money "out of thin air" to put the natives everywhere into debt, and, when that has proven insufficient, of doing the same to their own populations.

All this is rationalized by various brands of racism, cultural superiority, social Darwinism, historical determinism, "dominion of the Elect," "God's chosen people," etc. Or, simply, "might makes right."

Some call it "The New World Order."

So today, we Americans, denizens of the "land of the free and the home of the brave," victors in two world wars, bearers of "democracy" to Afghanistan and Iraq, allies of the brave Israelis who hold high the banner of Judeo-Christian values among the ungrateful Palestinians—well, we Americans owe our own bankers almost $70 trillion at most recent count. With the government takeover of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, we owe holders of bad housing loans, including the governments of China, Korea, and Japan, another few trillion.

The bluster of Kissinger, Brzezinski, the Kristols, the Christian fundamentalists, and their paid-off politicians and media millionaires notwithstanding, America—indeed, the entire West—has been found out, perhaps even checkmated on the world stage.

The Bush/Cheney wars in Afghanistan and Iraq have blackened America's name forever. Iran has called our bluff. In Israel the gap between rich and poor is increasing as much as in the U.S. According to an article by Ian S. Lustick, the Palestinians have stood up to the Israelis to the point where more Jews are emigrating from that country than are moving in, and where those who remain are increasingly huddling around Tel Aviv as a safe haven. (Ian S. Lustick, "Abandoning the Iron Wall: 'Israel and the Middle Eastern Muck'," Middle East Policy , Vo. XV, No. 3, Fall 2008.)

In the 1990s, the European bankers used U.S. and NATO forces to dismember Yugoslavia so George Soros and the Rothschilds could gobble up Balkan resources. But that strategy is failing in the Caucasus, where the Russians fought back against the genocidal attack by Dick Cheney's poodle, Mikheil Saakashvili, the New York-trained attorney the CIA got elected as the president of Georgia.

And now the people of Ukraine, the "Little Russians," realizing what the West has in store for them, are rushing back into the Slavic fold and may be only a year or so away from reuniting with their "Great Russian" cousins across the border.

What is telling is to watch the Western financier press, chiefly the Washington Post and the New York Times , fume about Russian prime minister Vladimir Putin and his "authoritarian" manner. An example is the article by Times correspondent Ellen Barry on Putin's September 11 press conference in Moscow. She wrote, "In three-and-a-half hours, in tones that were alternatively pugilistic and needy, Vladimir V. Putin tried to explain himself."

I'm sorry, Ms. Barry. You and your editors may think your writing is cute, but Vladimir Putin is the foremost figure on the world stage today. He will remain so after George W. Bush leaves the White House disgraced.

Putin is heir to an epochal movement of patriots who began in the 1970s to take back Russia from within. It started with a base of operations within the KGB and the Orthodox Church, led to Gorbachev's glasnost in the 1980s, and culminated in the Second Russian Revolution of 1991. At that point, the Western financiers gleefully rushed in to support an assault from the Russian “oligarchs” who were looting Russia of everything it owned.

The oligarchs were the shock troops of a financier assault that had already begun to overlap in the West with the Russian Mafia. Cheered on by the Washington Post and aided by academic advisors from places like Harvard, this international syndicate nearly destroyed Russia during the 1990s. But when Putin was appointed interim president by Boris Yelstin in 1999, and after winning the presidential election of 2000 in his own right, he began to fight back.

From the mid-1970s to today, thousands of Russian gangsters, along with many hard-line Bolsheviks/Stalinists, were allowed to emigrate. Many settled in the U.S. and are here today, and many more settled in Israel. In fact, one reason the price of condos in New York, Miami, Tel Aviv, and elsewhere has inflated so much reportedly is the flood of cash from racketeering.

The crooks have allied themselves with the Colombian drug cartels and have heavily infiltrated the world's financial systems, even setting up their own banks for laundering money and speculating in the commodities markets.

Today, Putin is cleaning out the remaining gangster class. His efforts reached a milestone in January with the arrest in Moscow of Semion Mogilevich, called “the world's most dangerous man.”

Putin has declared that the world will not be governed in a “unipolar” manner; i.e. by the U.S. military as the police force for the global financiers. This does not mean Russia has to be our enemy. In fact the world would be much better off, and much safer, if we joined with Russia as allies in keeping the peace.

But to do that our system would have to change, because finance capitalism is far too unstable to coexist with other nations as equals. It must either grow or die, because it always needs new victims to pay the interest on its usury practices and to finance its speculative balloons. As a last resort, it needs the kind of financial institution bailouts being engineered by Secretary of the Treasury Henry Paulson, where the only remaining stopgap is borrowing from public funds and adding to the national debt.

Once economic growth stops, as has now happened, and all the bubbles to restart it have blown up, as has also happened, the end really is nigh. Especially if the host—the U.S.—is bankrupt.

What is coming at us today isn't just another downturn. If people like McCain adviser Donald Luskin doubt it, maybe, instead of writing campaign propaganda, they should ask the fired CEOs of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, the stockholders of Lehman Brothers, whose shares have dropped ninety percent in less than a year, and the millions who are losing their homes.

Presidential candidates Barack Obama and John McCain are calling for “change.” Well, if I were standing on a beach with a 100-foot tsunami roaring in my direction, I would call for change too. Except I would not be standing around arguing about the meaning of the words “lipstick on a pig.”

By Richard C. Cook
http:// www.richardccook.com

Copyright 2008 by Richard C. Cook

Richard C. Cook is a former U.S. federal government analyst, whose career included service with the U.S. Civil Service Commission, the Food and Drug Administration, the Carter White House, NASA, and the U.S. Treasury Department. His articles on economics, politics, and space policy have appeared on numerous websites. His book on monetary reform entitled We Hold These Truths: The Hope of Monetary Reform will be published soon by Tendril Press. He is also the author of Challenger Revealed: An Insider's Account of How the Reagan Administration Caused the Greatest Tragedy of the Space Age , called by one reviewer, “the most important spaceflight book of the last twenty years . ” His Challenger website is at www.richardccook.com . A new economics website at www.RealSustainableLiving.com is upcoming with partner/author Susan Boskey. To get on his mailing list, for questions and comments, or to pre-purchase copies of his new book, please write EconomicSanity@gmail.com .

QUOTE

WaMu Rating Lowered to Junk by S&P on Mortgage Losses (Update3)

By Ari Levy
http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...h_cl&refer=home

Sept. 15 (Bloomberg) -- Washington Mutual Inc., the biggest U.S. savings and loan, had its credit rating cut to junk by Standard & Poor's because of the deteriorating housing market.

S&P reduced its rating on Seattle-based WaMu to BB- from BBB-, leaving it three levels below investment grade, the ratings firm said today in a statement.

``Increasing market turmoil and the related impact from managing its concentrated mortgage franchise in this troubled housing and credit cycle led to the downgrade,'' S&P wrote. S&P cut its rating on the subsidiary bank to BBB- from BBB.

S&P followed similar announcements last week from Moody's Investors Service and Fitch Ratings. WaMu, which has reported $6.3 billion of losses in the last three quarters because of soured mortgages, said on Sept. 11 that it expects a third- quarter loan loss provision of $4.5 billion.

WaMu tumbled 73 cents, or 27 percent, to $2 at 4 p.m. on the New York Stock Exchange. The shares dropped another 20 cents, or 10 percent, to $1.80 in extended trading. They've lost 94 percent of their value in the past year.

``On a more positive note, we recognize that WaMu's holding company liquidity position is currently solidly positioned to meet all of its fixed obligations through 2010,'' S&P said. ``The bank is operating with adequate capital positions from a regulatory perspective and has demonstrated funding resilience as the deposit franchise has remained stable.''

WaMu slid 36 percent last week alone, a record decline. The lender ousted its chief executive officer and disclosed that its main regulator has told it to boost risk management and compliance. The bank on Sept. 11 said in a statement that retail balances at the end of August, of $143 billion, were ``essentially unchanged'' from the end of 2007.

WaMu's $1 billion of 5.125 percent notes due in 2015 fell 11 cents to 34 cents on the dollar today, according to Trace, the bond-price reporting system of the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority. The debt yields about 27.9 percent, or 24.5 percentage points more than similar-maturity Treasuries, Trace data show.

To contact the reporter on this story: Ari Levy in San Francisco at alevy5@bloomberg.net.

Last Updated: September 15, 2008 17:47 EDT

QUOTE

Will government bailouts spell end of dollar?

Posted: September 12, 2008
http://www.worldnetdaily.com/index.php?fa=...ew&pageId=75119

We have seen, in the dead of night, three major government bailouts in the last year, none of which had more than a few days' positive effect on the markets. Each was done by powerful men in powerful places in the wee, small hours. At the end of the next day, a few were made rich while the many were handed the bill.

First there was Bear Stearns. Then IndyMac bank. Fannie and Freddie followed rapidly. All engineered on Sundays while the markets were closed.

How many more bailouts have to occur before someone asks the questions no one wants to ask? Is this a systemic problem and where does it end?

It is no surprise to those of us who warned about the drunken credit binge on Wall Street that the day of reckoning would come. What we never anticipated was the reward in store for the gluttons who caused the damage.

Bear Stearns was sold to JPMorgan on March 17; billions of equity was transferred to the balance sheet of one of the top five banks in America while the liabilities were guaranteed by the government (a.k.a. the taxpayers). Through the use of very complicated devices the government moved to save the system. The executives of Bear walked away with bonuses and severance packages. Disaster temporarily averted.

On July 11, IndyMac was taken over by the government due to a "run on the bank" which depleted deposits literally overnight. With $100 million leaving each day, the feds had no option other than to shut the doors. The $52 billion FDIC rescue fund was tapped for $4 billion-$8 billion to pay off depositors and 4,000 employees lost their jobs overnight as IndyMac became runnerup to the largest bank collapse in history (Continental Bank in 1984). Net result: The banking system is saved for the time being.

Fannie and Freddie were seized by regulators Sunday after weeks of speculation that both were suffering losses far beyond their ability to cover. Voices like Bill Gross from PIMCO, with $800 billion in bonds, made clear their intention to stop buying bonds unless the Treasury acted to provide an implicit guarantee for all Fannie and Freddie obligations.

By Monday morning, Gross and his firm are $8 billion richer and the American taxpayers take on potentially $200 billion-$700 billion in losses. I guess the slogan "E pluribus unum" took on a whole new meaning as 300 million of us (the many) united, involuntarily, to give PIMCO (the one) a whole lot of money.

This is not unusual. The market rallied 300 points only to give it back the next day. But Fannie and Freddie did not fail – in the technical sense.

Is the system broken? And if so, who benefits as a result? Did Paulson and Gross identify a weakness and capitalize on it?

If the problems we are now witnessing are systemic and can potentially develop into a far worse crisis than anyone expected, what level of loss should the public be responsible for? Should we the people be on the hook for an unlimited amount of liability while not participating in any of the reward? At its face that seems very unfair, but as I was told at an early age, life is not always fair.

There is an even bigger question in all of this. How many commercial banks, investment banks and mortgage guarantors can the government take over before we as a country are forced to create money to meet all the obligations represented by these takeovers? It is not as if the government has surpluses from which to draw all the needed capital to meet these obligations. We will have to borrow or print it.

What if General Motors, Ford and Boeing need to be bailed out? What about airlines, drug companies, insurance companies ... shall I go on? We cannot and should not adopt a bailout mentality without first considering the long-term ramifications for the country as a whole.

Currently we are running about a $500 billion dollar annual budget deficit. This will be added to the national debt which currently stands at $9.6 trillion. Will we just run the national debt to $15 trillion, $20 trillion? And that doesn't even take into account the off-budget debt, reflected in future Medicare and Social Security obligations, which now exceeds $50 trillion. At what point will the U.S. dollar have any value if we can never pay any of it back?

The U.S. dollar has always been the currency the world turns to when there is trouble. The dollar has always represented safety, but can it maintain that trust if we just continue to print, borrow and move dollars around from balance sheet to balance sheet ad infinitum?

I have asked a number of questions so at this point it is appropriate to offer some answers.

We cannot continue employing the broken business model our current financial system represents. It doesn't work. We cannot leverage, inflate and deflate forever. There comes a day of reckoning when people will not tolerate the abuse of a system to enrich a few while decimating many.

I see vulnerability in America that must be addressed and time is of the essence.

For the first time in the post-World War II era, the American dollar is susceptible to competition from a currency based in an identifiable and universally accepted value. A currency that cannot be created out of thin air. Is such a currency available? Not yet. But you know the old saying, "Necessity is the mother of invention."

Right now the world has three very strong and prosperous countries competing on the world stage with huge amounts of capital, natural resources and gold that could easily, if they so chose, create a currency much like Europe did in the euro. But this time it could be backed with oil and gold.

Russia, China and the Arab nations are sitting on an enormous amount of oil, gold and U.S. dollars. What if those nations forged agreements (much like NATO, WTO, etc.) and offered an "ARC" dollar fully backed by gold or oil? (The holder of the currency could actually exchange the currency for a specified amount of gold or oil.)

A note is a promise to pay. For years in America a Federal Reserve Note (currency) was a promise to pay gold and silver at the Treasury. Today it is a note to pay debt. Debt that is exploding and can apparently be wiped away by the Fed overnight or, worse yet, transferred to the backs of American workers in the form of tax on future labor. But what if a group of nations offered a currency that had no recurring liability attached to it but actual "money" in the form of the ultimate currency (gold) or the ultimate natural resource (oil)?

In the past I would have viewed such a prospect as preposterous. Today it may well become a reality. Currently talks are under way with the Gulf Monetary Authority for just such a system.

If we think the government is capable of bailing everything and everyone out of every financial mess that may occur then we are fools. And perhaps we are being viewed as such by very hostile nations that would welcome the deterioration of our position on the world stage and would not flinch at our total demise.

In short, we have fattened our hearts in the day of slaughter and now is the time to acknowledge and accept that each of us is solely responsible for our own future. Not the government. The time of discussing the problems has come and gone. Now is the time to devise a plan and put it into action.

With gold and silver trading at levels 10 percent below stupid, it is time to put 10-20 percent of total assets into tangibles. Understand that the only answer to avoiding a meltdown is either a new currency or runaway inflation. To quote Harry Shultz, "If Bush bails them all out, the die will be cast for inflation unseen in the West since 1923 Germany. If no bail:1929. Gold helps you out either way."

You can either ignore the obvious or act upon it.

Ignorance is produced in ignoring the facts. It makes one ignorant. Acting upon the facts makes one wise, which is wisdom. This will be a time when many will prefer to deny what they see around them and hope against hope that the system will fix itself.

It will not.

The best analogy I can give is a person (the system) having a massive heart attack, a heart attack resulting from years of abuse of the victim's own body. He is rushed to the hospital where the doctors (the Fed) work feverishly to save his life. They are successful and the patient lives. The doctors then sit the patient down and explain that while they saved his life, without major lifestyle changes the patient will have another heart attack and die. He must immediately stop smoking, eliminate fatty foods and exercise daily. The patient refuses.

Thus is our system. This is not the first crisis. It will not be the last. The system is not willing to do what is necessary to get better.

craig-oxley - September 15, 2008 11:31 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

America 's Financial Apocalypse Heralds Decade Long Depression

Sep 14, 2008 - 04:28 AM
By: Mike_Stathis
http://www.marketoracle.co.uk/Article6256.html

Despite attempts made by Greenspan and Bernanke, there is no way to avert the payback period that has been building for over two decades. Over this stretch, America has consumed much more than it has produced. As a result, both consumer and federal debt have ballooned to record levels. And now, the payback period is upon us. The bailout buffet won't end with Fannie and Freddie. There's a lot more where that came from because the “Fed's food court” remains open, as does that of the U.S. Treasury. In fact, the autos are in the process of being bailed out with $50 billion in “loans.” I expect the airlines to also receive some form of a bailout as well.

Washington 's Three Stooges

But Greenspan and Bernanke have not been alone in what will surely be remembered as America 's Financial Apocalypse - the eventful period ushering in a decade-long depression, as predicted in my 2006 book by the same title. Certainly, President Bush did not create these trends. But his financial irresponsibility has accelerated their magnitude. In less than eight years, he has managed to increase the national debt by 90%. As the data shows, not only has he led the worst recovery since the post-WWII era, he has also positioned his successor with budget shortfalls for many years to come due to Part D Medicare, the Iraq War, and his tax cuts for the wealthy.

Combined with the staggering deficits for Medicare and Social Security , America 's economy will be in the gutter for many years to come even after the banking and real estate troubles cool down. No one else is talking about these issues because they're wrapped up in the daily drama. But save this article and others I've written because I've been mentioning the longer-term problems ever since writing my book. In a few years, more people will begin to address these issues once they are transformed into daily drama.

President Bush's attempts at a recovery have been so horrendous they've actually led to the current recession, which will turn out to be the worst in decades. I would venture to guess he is desperately pleading with officials to come up with even more gimmicks to hide the full realities of the economy so the worst will be reported only after he leaves office. But I will guarantee you if Washington and the Fed continue this reckless game of applying band aids instead of letting things play out, we will see a much bigger crisis down the road, similar to what happened after Greenspan tried to mitigate the dotcom collapse. You can bet this is going to happen because Washington does not understand the meaning of preemption.

Altogether, we have had eight years of no gains in real median wages, flat stock market returns, and minimal net new jobs. Despite what you have heard, after adjusting for debt spending, population growth and realistic adjustments to the GDP deflator, there have only been 3 or 4 quarters of GDP growth since 2005. If you adjust for military, government and minimum wage positions – i.e. jobs funded by tax payers and jobs that don't pay anything - there have been absolutely no net new jobs. Bush's largest gains have been with inflation, oil and food prices, debt, trade deficits, bankruptcies, foreclosures, and healthcare costs. If an assembly of the world's leading economic strategists were to design the most destructive economic disaster possible, they could not match the results of Bush's tenure. Even the most loyal Bush supporters will admit he has been an absolute disaster – that is if they're being honest. America is now more dependent on foreign nations than ever – not only for oil, but also credit and manufactured goods.

America 's “Resilient” Economy

Many of the pundits flood the propaganda networks with repeated denials of the problems, boasting how resilient the U.S. economy is. You know who they are. I'm not quite sure what they've been smoking. But it appears to be some sort of hallucinogen because they seem to expect Superman to bend the economy back into shape. Ladies and Gentlemen, in case mommy never told you, there is no Santa Claus and there is no Superman. And if you think Bernanke's printing presses have an endless supply of ink and paper, just wait until the real crisis appears. So you had better get ready because it's coming. It is virtually inescapable. And it's going to cause devastation around the globe. Of course I'm taking about the likely implosion of the CDS market.

Let's take a look at America 's “resilient economy.” Let's see…the entire financial system is in the process of blowing up. Already there have been over $500 billion in bank losses, with over $1 trillion more to come. Over one dozen banks have failed, with hundreds on deck. A handful of large hedge funds have blown up, with hundreds more on the way. Already, over $1 trillion has been transferred from the Fed to the banking cartel. But I estimate another $1.5 trillion will be needed to maintain liquidity as banks de-leverage over the next few years. Unemployment is now over 6% and inflation is over 5%, even with Washington 's manipulation of the data. Virtually every metric in the housing market is at multi-decade lows, except for foreclosures which are hitting new highs.

Taxpayers are now on the hook for billions of dollars of potentially worthless debt held by Fannie and Freddie. It's now official. America 's free market economy is really a socialist system for corporations. One could argue this to be a form of Fascism. My best estimate for losses due to the Fannie and Freddie taxpayer bailout are between $200 to $500 billion. The worst case scenario would be $800 billion. If this economy is resilient, I can't wait to see how it magically bounces back. When Superman fails to show up, Washington might consider giving David Copperfield a call. But this would be one illusion he won't be able to pull off. Get the popcorn ready.

The Economy Under a Microscope

Let's take a closer look at the economy. America imports oil, credit, and manufactured goods, while exporting jobs, junk bonds and inflation (via the dollar-oil link – see http://www.marketoracle.co.uk/Article5414.html for an explanation). That doesn't sound like the type of trade policy that would support claims of a superpower, unless you're only counting the number of nukes. Surely Washington is beginning to wonder how much longer Asia and Europe will continue fueling America 's credit bubble. They've already faced massive losses from sub-prime securities with much more carnage to come.

China holds about $1.4 trillion in U.S. Treasuries, but only due to their its surplus with the U.S. It can't dump Treasuries yet because the Yuan remains greatly undervalued. China pegged it to the dollar back in 2001, knowing the dollar would plummet so they'd lure dollars from U.S. consumers looking for bargains. What most people don't realize is that China 's support for U.S. Treasuries helps finance Bush's irresponsible spending sprees. By financing up to 90% of each annual deficit, China helps keep interest rates low in the U.S., which facilitates credit expansion for consumers to buy more imports - mainly from China (due to the low cost items created by China's currency peg).

Hidden Imports

Keep in mind when you buy that Dell computer or Fossil watch, you're really buying imports. Dell and Fossil actually resemble distributors more than manufacturers because virtually all of their products originate overseas. The same is true for most U.S. companies that sell branded goods. In many cases, the same is also true for the service segment of the economy. Many American IT and software development firms outsource projects to India , Canada , and other nations so they can escape the costly retirement and healthcare benefits Americans expect.

By no means does it end there. For several years, U.S. banks, tax providers, telecommunications and several other industries have outsourced to Asia - so much for the “strength” of America 's service economy. If this service economy is so “strong” someone explain to me how Asia has been able to increase its living standard by leaps and bounds in such a short period. Before you answer, keep in mind that income and wealth are finite over short periods since they are limited by human and natural resources. Make sense? If not, let me know and I'll do a write-up explaining it next time.

Corporate America 's new trend is to outsource even lower on the food chain to nations like Argentina , as a way to find more desperate workers to enslave at a lower cost. While these jobs seem like a Godsend, foreign workers will soon see the longer-term effects of corporate globalization. Already, many U.S. corporations have finessed themselves into the hip-pocket of foreign politicians and other officials to discourage unions, ensuring wages remain low and benefits never materialize.

?? (See Ya' Later) Yankee

As the economy continues its downward spiral, it remains to be seen how much longer China keeps its currency undervalued once it realizes U.S. consumers have no more money to buy their goods. Once the verdict is out, China could begin to focus on internal growth as the recession spreads globally. The global effects are already surfacing, with inflation soaring, real estate plummeting and foreign banks scrambling as they wait for the next Bear Stearns. The Chinese government could encourage its consumers to spend domestically. This would prove as a great strategy to buoy its economy since Chinese have amble savings (they save 25% of household income). Thus, once China is convinced U.S. consumers are finished, there is a good chance it will begin a gradual sell-off of U.S. Treasury securities. And this is going to be a huge problem.

The Middle East also has a huge trade surplus with the U.S. But unlike China , it has no incentive to hold U.S. Treasuries. Instead, Middle Eastern investors use their petrodollars to buy hard assets – commercial real estate like the Chrysler building, businesses and other critical U.S. assets. Yet, they still can't seem to find enough things to buy, so many Middle Eastern cities are being gutted and turned into modern architectural wonders. In the recent past when U.S. banks have begged for mercy, Dubai , Kuwait and Saudi Arabia have handed over billions from their sovereign “oil extortion” funds. But they've learned their lesson, so I wouldn't expect anymore bailout money anytime soon. Never fear! The Fed and the U.S. Treasury are here!

The Federal Reserve Disaster

The Fed needs to let a real recession run its course to clear out the trash so the economy can begin a real recovery and expansion. They've been playing this boom-bust game for several years now. And all we have seen are illusions of growth followed by the realities of mismanagement and excess consumption. Running the printing presses in overdrive won't get America out of this mess. It hasn't helped in the past and it's not going to now. In fact, using the money supply to hold off a recession and prevent bank failures ensures there will an even more devastating crisis down the road . Greenspan tried the same move in response to the Internet meltdown. And as we all know, this led to the current real estate bubble and banking crisis.

But even shutting down the Fed's printing presses is insufficient for a lasting and real recovery. Washington absolutely must restructure free trade so that the playing field is level for all participant nations. This implies that America structure a universal healthcare system. And America 's badly broken free market system must be repaired, because as it stands today, it represents socialism for the wealthy.

As a result of the combined actions of Washington 's Three Stooges, the harsh effects of this corrective period will send America into its worst recession in several decades. Thereafter, a silent depression will persist for many years as Americans struggle to keep pace with inflation, job quality continues to decline and opportunities for the working class vanish into thin air. While U.S. living standards have been in decline for over two decades, the silent depression will accelerate and make these declines more permanent.

It's highly unlikely the rest of the world will be able to escape the pain caused by Washington 's Three Stooges because the dollar-oil link is used to hold every nation financial hostage. China will feel the effects as will India ; and yes, even Brazil . Unlike America 's fate, these developing nations will mount a full recovery. And the lessons learned could strengthen the pressure to dethrone the dollar as the universal currency. But don't expect Washington to take this lying down. In fact, it might eventually lead to a major war.

Perhaps the only region that will have some insulation from the meltdown will be select oil-rich nations in the Middle East . But they aren't likely to walk out of this completely unscathed due to contained oil demand. But let's not forget that OPEC has control over pricing. The payback period is going to affect virtually everyone. And for those who think they will avert the payback – namely those most responsible for this mess - like Washington 's Three Stooges and bank CEOs - their payback will last eternity because their role in America 's Financial Apocalypse will be recorded in history books.

By Mike Stathis
mike@apexva.com

QUOTE

UK Bank customers urged not to panic

All comments (1) Miles Brignall guardian.co.uk, Monday September 15 2008 http://www.guardian.co.uk/money/2008/sep/15/banks.savings

Bank customers in the UK were today urged not to panic about the safety of their savings as bank shares took a hammering in the wake of the collapse of American firm Lehman Brothers.

The investment bank was forced into bankruptcy after rescue talks failed, sparking fears that the credit crunch may claim more victims before it ends.

The news is likely to concern savers, and comes almost exactly a year since news of the Bank of England's emergency funding led to a run on Northern Rock.

However, Angela Knight, chief executive of the British Bankers' Association, moved to reassure UK savers their money is safe.

"Undoubtedly this is a momentous day, but it's important to note that Lehman's was an investment bank, and as such it's impact will not be felt directly by bank customers over here.

"Over the last year, the UK's banks have been recapitalised and are now on a sound footing. These events are once again closely allied to the US housing market - there is no need for anyone to start withdrawing their money, and we are not expecting anyone to do so," she said.

Despite her comments, market traders continued to offload banking shares, with HBOS - which owns Halifax and the Bank of Scotland - taking the biggest hit.

By mid-morning its shares were down 36% as traders speculated who would follow Lehman, Merrill Lynch and the insurance giant AIG into serious financial difficulties. Royal Bank of Scotland shares were down 14%.

A spokesman for HBOS said: "Like all the other banks we've been caught up in the fallout from Lehman's collapse. We are a very strong financial institution and one of the country's largest savings providers with a very strong capital position, something that was borne out last week when Goldman Sachs said we had the highest core equity tier ratio of any UK bank. There is no need for savers to panic."

Last week, Nationwide building society stepped in to save both the Cheshire and Derbyshire building societies after it emerged they didn't have sufficient funds to carry on trading. Other societies are though to be similarly at risk and could also seek help over the coming months.

The Building Societies Association declined to comment this morning.

Since the Northern Rock crisis the government has sought to shore up the Financial Services Compensation Scheme (FSCS), offering protection to 100% of the first £35,000 held by customers in savings accounts, and consulting on increasing the level to £50,000.

Consumer confidence in big companies has been severely tested in recent weeks. While many consumers have grown inured to the post-credit crunch banking crisis, the collapse of the holiday firm XL group has added to growing concerns about the state of the economy.

QUOTE

As America collapses U.S.Government Secret Plans Revealed

A secret meeting of Congress discusses immanent martial law.

B.A. Brooks
The United American Freedom Foundation
March 13, 2008
http://dprogram.net/2008/05/21/as-america-...ed/#comment-986

On March 13th 2008 there was a secret closed door meeting of The United States House Of Representatives in Washington. In the history of The United States this is only the fourth time a secret meeting was held by the house. Even though Representatives are sworn to secrecy by House Rules XVII, some of the members were so shocked, horrified, furious, and concerned about the future of America by what was revealed to them inside the secret meeting, that they have started to leak this secret information to independent news agencies around the world. The mass media said almost nothing about the secret meeting of the House, mentioning only one of the items being discussed. (The new surveillance techniques that are going to be used by the U.S. Government to watch all American citizens). The story was first released in a newspaper out of Brisbane, Australia revealing the contents of the secret U.S. Government meeting and plans for America including all of it's citizens. Shortly there after, David J. Meyer from Last Trumpet Ministries found it and made it more available for the world to see.

Here is what was revealed:

- The imminent collapse of the U.S. Economy to occur sometime in late 2008
- The imminent collapse of the U.S. Government finances sometime in mid 2009
- The possibility of Civil War inside the United States as a result of the collapse
- The advance round-ups of "insurgent U.S. Citizens" likely to move against the government
- The detention of those rounded up at The REX 84 Camps constructed throughout the United States

- The possibility of public retaliation against members of Congress for the collapses

- The location of safe facilities for members of Congress and their families to reside during massive civil unrest

- The necessary and unavoidable merger of The U.S. with Canada and Mexico establishing The North American Union

- The issuance of a new currency called the AMERO for all three nations as an economic solution.

Except for a few hundred thousand U.S. Patriots, most Americans have no clue what has really been going on within The United States over the past 100 years, and the sad thing is that most do not want to know the truth. The further you look into the rabbit hole, the deeper it gets. Go to any currency conversion site and convert U.S. dollars to Euros so you can see for yourself the massive decline of the dollar. Look at how much money is and has been spent on the Iraq War to date, ($12 billion per month). Look at our currency and when it stopped being backed by gold.

The Federal Reserve is not federal but a private bank who does not have Americans best interests at heart. We no longer have any manufacturing really based out of America and there is no way that our economy can survive this incredible strain very much longer. The IRS strong arms every American yearly with income taxes, yet there are no laws saying an income tax is to be paid.

The CIA is involved in everything from global drug trafficking and covert military missions, to assassinations around the world and including U.S. Soil. Look at JFK for instance. It did not take long after JFK announced that he was going disband the CIA that he was shot in Texas. America's new StasiThe Department Of Homeland Security is and has been slowly eradicating our rights for a few years now. based organization called House Bill H.R. 1955/S-1959 was read by the senate and then sent to DHS for some reason, but is now back and sure to pass. Once passed, this bill introduced by Jane Harman (D/CA), will be the proverbial last nail hammered into every American patriots coffin. H.R. 4279 or the Prioritizing Resources and Organization for Intellectual Property Act of 2008 which was recently passed by the U.S. House of Representatives, will give the government draconian powers to do just this. This legislation gives the government the power to seize property that facilitates the violation of intellectual property laws. The legislation also mandates the formation of a formal Intellectual Property Enforcement Division within the office of the Deputy Attorney General to enforce this insanity…

It has been revealed that F.E.M.A. has been building internment camps all over America granting Halliburton a massive $385 million dollar construction contract to make this happen. Most of these sites only need refurbished because they are mostly closed prisons, old WW2 internment camps still intact and other facilities taken over by the government. Some people have referred to them as F.E.M.A. Death Camps where the infamous Red list/Blue Lists will be used to decide who goes where.

Whether you believe that The NWO/Illuminati/Globalization is real or not, there is a lot of proof that exposes definite plans or plots by the rich, political and religious elite to bring on an era of the end times. It is almost like some individuals are trying to make bible prophecy come true in their own sick and twisted ways. Not to mention that the world only has about 10 to 15 years of drinking water left before the wars fought for oil today will be fought for water in the near future. It has been said that these powers want to depopulate the planet of over 30% of it's human inhabitants in the coming years. Examine all of the executive orders that have been signed into place allowing the president to basically become dictator in control of all government from tribal to federal in the event of any national emergency.

If you did not know, In late 2006, Congress revised the Posse Comitatus Act and the Insurrection Act to make it far easier for a president to declare martial law. Those changes were repealed at the end of this January as part of Public Law 110-181 (HR 4986), the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2008 (signed into law by President Bush on January 28, 2008). Unfortunately it is not the great victory in which one might think because of the total militarization of all local and State police forces all across America.

Will there be martial law? Is martial law coming soon to America? When you see law enforcement being armed with automatic weapons, bullet proof vests and riot gear in small towns that have not had a murder or crime in years, then you have to ask yourself why.

The United States has more people locked up in prisons today than Russia and China combined. It comes out to one in every hundred Americans is behind bars. Our once great country that our ancestors fought and died for has become exactly the tyrants they were fighting. Fascists! When has America ever used words like Homeland? Never!

If you spend a few weeks reading all the info, watching the videos and following the links at The U.A.F.F., you will then have a better understanding of what has led to The Decline And Fall Of America. Remember that Knowledge is power! Learn, look, listen, read, share, prepare, train, stock up on food and water supply for one year.

Fill your pantry with non perishable foods, medicines, cooking oils, tinned meats and veggies. Flour, oats dried corn peas, beans and lentils.. Teach your self how to preserve food for storage. Check out your local potable/ drinking water supplies, non perfumed chlorine bleach is a good sterilizer for water, about 2 teaspoons full per 2 gallon bucket, stirred well and allowed to stand for at least 24 hours with a lid on it or until it no longer smells of bleach. Boiling water helps but it is not always enough to kill off the bacteria which can resist high temperatures.

Americans have been warned for years of the things to come, but have blindly looked away from the truth, which has been available for all to see. There are no more excuses not to prepare for the possible future. The time to act is now before it is too late. Check The United American Freedom Foundation for daily updates and news you won't see in the mainstream media.

QUOTE

Is the Illuminati Provoking Economic Collapse?

by Henry Makow Ph.D. – Sept. 15, 2008

(Remembering Svali's Words)

We may be on the verge of a stock market crash reminiscent of 1929.

I was watching CNBC when the news came across that Moody's had downgraded the Insurance giant AIG (American International Group.) This company was already on the ropes Monday when its stock crumbled to $4.75 from $11, %60 in one day. It was down from a $70 52-week-high. The company had gone to the Fed for a bailout. It was estimated it needed $40 billion.

Because of the Moody's downgrade, it emerges that it will need alot more money to avert bankruptcy. This is a massive company that holds the pensions of millions of employees. A money manager estimated that a trillion dollars would be lost if AIG declares bankruptcy. The whole world financial system could be taken down. He said banks in the Far East were already acting like this is inevitable, and the collapse already has been set in motion.

As you can imagine, the CNBC commentators were frantic. One demanded to know how the Fed can allow this to happen. "We know they print money," he said. Another wondered if the States whose pension funds were held by AIG could organize a bailout. Not enough time, he was told.

The bottom line is that Tuesday and the rest of this week could be ugly so be prepared. The second bottom line is that this Depression like the last appears to be caused by a deliberate contraction of credit. House prices are falling because banks don't have the money to lend to house buyers. As a result, portfolios holding mortgage backed securities are tumbling, taking banks with them. The Fed, after bailing out Fannie May and Fredie Mack, have let Lehman Brothers fail. AIG appears to be next and the dominoes will continue to fall.

At this time, it is important to remember that an Illuminati defector known as "Svali" said <>she was taught that the "end of the world" scenario<> involved an economic collapse. Remember the Illuminati is a Masonic cult founded and funded by the central bankers who own the Fed. Here is her full testimony given about ten year ago.

"Want to hear the end of the world scenario the Illuminati taught me? It was cult propaganda, but this is how they believed the New Order would be ushered in:

There will be continued conflict in the Mideast, with a severe threat of nuclear war being the culmination of these hostilities. An economic collapse that will devastate the economy of the US and Europe, much like the great depression.

One reason that our economy continues limping along is the artificial supports that the Federal Reserve had given it, manipulating interest rates, etc. But one day, this won't work (or this leverage will be withdrawn on purpose) and the next great depression will hit.

The government will call in its bonds and loans, and credit card debts will be called in. There will be massive bankruptcies nationwide. Europe will stabilize first,and Germany, France and England (surprise) will have the strongest economies, and will institute through the UN an international currency. Japan will also pull out, although their economy will be weakened.

Peacekeeping forces will be sent out by the UN and local bases to prevent riots. The leaders will reveal themselves, and people will be asked to make a pledge of loyalty during a time of chaos and financial devastation.

Doesn't sound pleasant, does it? I don't know the exact time frame for all of this, and wouldn't want to even guess. The good news is that if a person is debt-free, owes nothing to the government or credit debt, and can live self sufficiently, they may do better than others. I would invest in gold, not stocks, if I had the income.

Gold will once again be the world standard, and dollars will be pretty useless (remember after the Civil War? Our money will be worth about what confederate money was after the collapse).

All this said, it could just be cult propaganda taught to me and others to frighten us. It may be that none of this will happen. I sincerely hope not. I also strongly believe that God is able to stay the hand of the wicked, and to take care of our nation and others, if we turn to Him."
http://giuli.com/svali/EssentialSvali.pdf

That noted, let's remember the words of Denis Healey, former British Defence Secretary and Secretary of the Exchequer: "World events do not occur by accident: They are made to happen, whether it is to do with national issues or commerce; and most of them are staged and managed by those who hold the purse strings."

I think we are in for a recession, maybe even a Depression but I don't think the Illuminati is ready to declare their New World Order just yet. However, this could be part of a larger scenario leading to World War Three, similar to the role the Great Depression played as a precursor to World War Two.

The Illuminati goal is to torture the human race until we cry out to them for world government, anything to stop the pain.

Henry Makow Ph.D. is the author of "Cruel Hoax: Feminism and the New World Order." (www.cruelhoax.ca) His articles can be found at his web site www.henrymakow.com He enjoys receiving your comments, some of which he posts on his site using first names only.
hmakow@gmail.com
www.henrymakow.com/is_the_illuminati_proviking_a.html

QUOTE

China may cut its dollar holdings - CICC(China Daily)

Updated: 2008-09-12 07:32 Comments(39) PrintMail http://www.chinadaily.com.cn/china/2008-09...ent_7020656.htm

China, which holds a fifth of its currency reserves in Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac debt, may cut the portion held in US dollars, according to China International Capital Corp (CICC), one of the nation's biggest investment banks.

The US government this week seized control of the two mortgage-finance companies, which account for almost half of the home-loan market in the world's biggest economy, to prevent defaults from crippling them. China holds up to $400 billion in the two firms' debt, CICC Chief Economist Ha Jiming said in a report Thursday.

"The crisis has made Chinese officials realize it's a bad idea to put all their eggs in one basket," wrote Hong Kong-based Ha. "This will likely lead to greater diversification of foreign exchange reserve investments."

China held $447.5 billion of US agency bonds as of June 2008, according to the CICC calculations using disclosures by the US Treasury. It is likely to reduce the portion of reserves in dollar assets from the current 60 percent by purchasing more non-dollar assets with new reserves, he said.

Countries in Asia have stockpiled foreign exchange reserves since the 1997-98 financial crisis to act as a cushion against a run on their exchange rates. That in turn has increased pressure on policymakers to ensure higher returns from more than $4 trillion in assets.

China will expand its investments in corporate bonds and equities, according to Ha. Treasury and agency bonds account for 50 percent and 40 percent of total dollar assets held by the central bank, he wrote.

QUOTE

Greenspan: This Is The Worst Economy I've Ever Seen

Sam Stein
Huffington Post
September 14, 2008

Former Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan offered a woeful outlook of America's economic situation on Sunday, saying the crisis with the country's financial institutions was as dire as he had ever seen in his long career, and predicting that one or more of those institutions would likely collapse in the near future.

"Oh, by far," Greenspan said, when asked if the situation was the worst he had seen in his career. "There's no question that this is in the process of outstripping anything I've seen and it still is not resolved and still has a way to go and, indeed, it will continue to be a corrosive force until the price of homes in the United States stabilizes. That will induce a series of events around the globe which will stabilize the system."

[dohtml]<embed src="http://admin.brightcove.com/viewer/federated_f8.swf?flashId=flashObj0&servicesURL=http%3A%2F%2Fservices.brightcove.com%2Fservices&viewerSecureGatewayURL=https%3A%2F%2Fconsole.brightcove.com%2Fservices%2Famfgateway&cdnURL=http%3A%2F%2Fadmin.brightcove.com&videoId=1785366164&autoStart=false&preloadBackColor=%23FFFFFF&wmode=transparent&width=486&height=412&playerId=1443726225&externalAds=false&sendReports=false&buildNumber=986&ranNum=295859" base="http://admin.brightcove.com/viewer/" quality="high" bgcolor="#FFFFFF" allowscriptaccess="always" name="flashObj0" wmode="transparent" seamlesstabbing="false" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" swliveconnect="true" pluginspage="http://www.macromedia.com/shockwave/download/index.cgi?P1_Prod_Version=ShockwaveFlash" width="486" height="412"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

Appearing on ABC's This Week, Greenspan would not definitively say whether the government should come to the rescue of Lehman Brothers, which has been forced to consider a possible sale after its stock shares plunged drastically this past week. Instead he called the situation surrounding the investment bank — and the bailout that occurred this past spring of Bear Stearns — as a "once in a half century, probably once in a century type of event."

The circumstances for Lehman may, as Greenspan noted, be different. Bloomberg News reported on Friday: "Rising speculation that Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc. may fail is generating less concern among investors than when Bear Stearns Cos. imploded in March."

Much of the issue, Greenspan added, was the trouble in the housing market, which he predicted would become stabilized by next year. Pressed by host George Stephanopoulos as to whether another major financial institution — such as the struggling Washington Mutual, American International Group, or Merrill Lynch — would fail in the interim, the former Fed chair responded in the affirmative.

"I suspect we will [see one fail]," he said, "but in and of itself that does not need to be a problem. It depends on how it's handled and how the liquidations take place. And, indeed, we shouldn't try to protect every single institution. the ordinary cost of financial change has winners and losers."

In light of these dynamics, Greenspan noted that the government was left with tough decisions: which institutions are "so fundamental to the functioning" of society that they demanded a federal safety net? Earlier in the week, the former fed chairman noted that such choses extended to tax policy as well. In an interview with Bloomberg Television, Greenspan argued that the country couldn't afford the tax cuts being proposed by John McCain without an equally massive reduction in spending.

"I'm not in favor of financing tax cuts with borrowed money," he said. "I always have tied tax cuts to spending."

QUOTE

Run On The Bank? Americans Could Lose Their Deposits

You know it's bad when Yahoo.com features a story about fiscal armageddon

Paul Joseph Watson
Tuesday, September 16, 2008
http://www.propagandamatrix.com/articles/s...se_deposits.htm

You know things are bad when Yahoo.com, the most trafficked website in the world and usually a purveyor of mindless celebrity gossip, cooking tips and dating advice, features a top story about how Americans could lose their bank deposits following the collapse of Lehman Brothers.

For the Internet giant to prominently report that there is already a "slow motion run on banks" is indeed a landmark event, and precludes even the most ignorant American from claiming they were not forewarned about the unfolding economic catastrophe.

The article points out that although the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. guarantees individual accounts up to $100,000, the FDIC fund only has about $50 billion to "insure" about $1 trillion in assets across the nation's financial institutions.

When Americans realize the fact that banks are "going to run out of money", the article nonchalantly states, a run on the banks will accelerate.

The warning comes from top economist Nouriel Roubini, of NYU's Stern School and RGE Monitor, who correctly predicted the severity of the credit crunch. Roubini says there is already a "slow-motion run on retail banks" occurring nationwide.

He advises that people with accounts over $100,000 in value should at least spread them out among different firms.

The use of such inflammatory language like a "run on the bank," especially from the most visited website on the entire planet, is phenomenal and other news websites as well as financial advisors have been cautious to use such terms in an effort to prevent panic.

For example, we read in today's Seattle Post Intelligencer that, "Sara Hasan, an analyst with Seattle's McAdams Wright Ragen Inc., said she didn't even want to use the word "run" -- as in "run on a bank" -- during an interview, because "these are very touchy times."

Other advisors are more up front with their warnings.

"First off, go ahead and make a run on your banks. If you have money with a brokerage firm or bank that is in trouble, get your money the heck out of there!" writes Joe Ponzio.

"In reality, I don't want to cause a run on the banks; but, I won't prevent one by saying that everything is fine and that you should wait until it is too late. My recommendation: Move your important savings and checking accounts to banks that have a higher likelihood of weathering the storm," he adds.

QUOTE

> QUOTE
>
> SECOND DAY IN A ROW: RUSSIAN STOCK MARKET SHUT DOWN AFTER CRASH
>
> Today, Wednesday, September 17, 2008, the Russian Stock Market was again shut down after stocks crashed for the second day in a row. Yesterday the Russian market lost seventeen percent (17%) of its overall value, today it lost another ten percent (10%) of its overall value.

Trading in Russian shares halted

Wednesday, 17 September 2008 15:22 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7620528.stm

Trading on Russia's main stock exchanges has been suspended following steep falls in shares prices this week.

The shock developments on Wall Street this week spurred a sell-off in Russian shares, which on Tuesday sank to levels not seen since December 2005.

Following a plunge of 6%, the dollar-denominated RTS index halted trading on Wednesday until further notice. It is down almost 60% since its May peak.

Trading on the rouble-denominated Micex was also suspended.

This comes after shares on the Micex slumped by almost 18% on Tuesday to 888.17 points - its largest one-day decline since Russia's financial system collapsed in 1998.

"There is certainly a level of fear about the risks to the Russian economy not seen since the crisis of 1998, but the driving forces now are quite different," said Tom Mundy, a strategist at Renaissance Capital in Moscow.

Ebbing confidence

Russia's stock market, one of the best performing for the past few years, has been buffeted by a combination of events in the past few months.

With about 75% of the indexes made up of commodity firms, the decline in oil prices from a peak of $147 a barrel in late July has spurred investors to take profits.

Confidence was shaken further by Russia's invasion of Georgia last month with billions of dollars of foreign capital pulled out of the country in August alone.

Adding to this there have been mounting worries over the global credit markets, particularly after the demise of US banking giant Lehman Brothers and problems at insurer AIG this week.

While shares in emerging markets have been hit by the problems on Wall Street, Russian shares have borne the brunt of the sell-off.

Liquidity squeeze

Analysts said local banks had been affected by the global aversion to risk and had virtually stopped lending to each other.

The Russian central bank has been injecting extra funds into its money markets to ease liquidity problems at domestic banks, offering a record 361 billion roubles at its daily auction on Tuesday.

But despite this, lending between Russian banks continued to fall as the interest rate which they charge each other to borrow money overnight jumped to 11%.

This prompted the Kremlin to take additional steps on Wednesday to reassure investors about the stability of Russia's financial system.

The Finance Ministry said it would loan 1.13 trillion roubles ($39bn; £21bn) to three of the country's biggest banks to boost liquidity.

The money will be offered to Sberbank, VTB Group and Gazprombank for a period of three months to make it easier for them to lend to smaller banks at affordable rates.

"These are market-making banks capable of insuring the liquidity of the banking system," the Finance Ministry said in a statement.

QUOTE

QUOTE

Wednesday, September 17, 2008
http://halturnershow.blogspot.com/

GRAVE NEWS: "SAFE" MONEY MARKET FUND HAS "BROKEN THE BUCK"

The world financial crisis took a new and dangerous turn today as RESERVE PRIMARY FUND, the oldest money market fund in the United States and considered completely safe, "broke the buck" by valuing its deposits at 97 cents on the dollar.

This means instead of earning interest and profiting from their money market account, people who put their money in that money market fund now have only 97 cents of each dollar!

This is very, very serious news because when folks realize (tomorrow) that not even money market accounts are safe, they will try to pull their money out and . . . . . surprise surprise . . . . the money market won't have the cash on hand to give them their money back. Investors will be told they must wait a week, two weeks, perhaps even longer to get anything at all from their accounts. This will cause a panic and . . . . . you know the rest.

Money market fund 'breaks the buck' on Lehman IOUs

4:37 PM, September 16, 2008
http://latimesblogs.latimes.com/money_co/2...redit-cris.html

The credit crisis has taken a new and dangerous turn: Shares of a large money market mutual fund have "broken the buck" -- fallen below the standard $1 a share -- because of losses on IOUs from brokerage Lehman Bros. Holdings Inc.

The Reserve Primary Fund in New York, which had $65 billion in assets at the end of August, said it cut its share price to 97 cents after marking down the value of $785 million in Lehman debt securities, following the brokerage's filing for bankruptcy court protection on Monday. Read the fund's statement here.

The Reserve Primary Fund's situation apparently was exacerbated as big investors have fled in the last two days, forcing the fund to sell other securities. Assets have dived by more than 60% since Sunday, Bloomberg News reported.

The fund, apparently seeking to dissuade other investors from leaving while it sorts out the situation with its Lehman IOUs, today said it would take up to seven days to meet investors' redemption requests. Normally, money funds redeem investors' shares immediately on request.

The fund also said it had valued the Lehman IOUs at zero for the moment. That, too, could be a move to discourage redemptions, because it's conceivable the securities have some value.

The woes of Reserve Primary Fund -- the nation's oldest money fund -- are sure to set off a public relations blitz by other mutual fund companies to forestall an investor panic.

"The whole money fund industry is going to be out there trying to assure people," said Pete Crane, head of Crane Data, which tracks the industry.

Crane said the Reserve Primary Fund lacked a "deep-pocketed" parent company that could step in and buy out the Lehman IOUs. A number of other money funds have been caught with dicey debt over the last year as the credit crisis has deepened, but their parent firms have chosen to purchase the securities to keep shareholders whole.

Crane noted that the Evergreen Funds said on Monday that parent Wachovia Corp. agreed to back up Lehman debt in three Evergreen money funds. See the announcement here.

Money market funds, which hold a record $3.5 trillion, have long been considered relatively safe because they're supposed to limit their investments to high-quality, short-term securities. The funds don't guarantee that they can keep their share prices steady at $1, but before today only one other fund has broken the buck -- and that was a small institutional fund, in 1994.

Money funds overall have taken in $400 billion in fresh cash this year alone as nervous investors have sold stocks, bonds and other assets and sought a haven where they believed their principal was protected.

Reacting to the Reserve Primary Fund's bomb, the Investment Company Institute, the trade group for mutual funds, said that it was "working closely with its members and with regulators, including the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Federal Reserve, to maintain open communications about market conditions and their impact on funds."

There's high irony in the Reserve Primary Fund's troubles: The fund's founder is 71-year-old Bruce Bent, who is considered to be the father of the money fund industry, which dates back to the early 1970s.

Just last week Bent was quoted in a Wall Street Journal story saying that "the purpose of [a] money fund is to bore the investor into a sound night's sleep."

A call to the company's offices in New York wasn't returned.

QUOTE

Gold Jumps + $90 per ounce in one day!

Biggest single increase in history!

http://halturnershow.blogspot.com/

The price of Gold shot up by more than $90 per ounce today in vigorous trading, to hit $870.90, the largest single day increase in history. Gold later closed at $850 per ounce, still a $70 increase.

This is the final act in the economic collapse of the United States, as "those-in-the-know" get out of the stock market and out of the banks and buy up all the gold and silver they can before the final, total, economic collapse.

By the end of this week, Gold will once again hit all-time highs of more than $1030 per ounce as more and more people seek a safe haven for what little money they have left.

To put this is terms that even a moron can understand, the USA is now akin to the Titanic.

In December, 2006, I was on lookout and saw the iceberg dead ahead when the federal reserve announced it would cease publishing the M3 data in 90 days. I warned that without the M3 being reported, there would be no way that anyone could possibly know how much "one dollar" was actually worth because no one would know how many dollars existed in the world.

Even though I - and others - sounded this warning, no one even bothered to try steering us away from the iceberg.

We struck the iceberg in March 2007 when the Fed did, in fact, stop publishing the M3 data (amount of cash printed and put into circulation).

By June 2007, foreign investment into the US was down ninety percent with many not only refusing to buy US debt, but also removing what funds they had here. The USA, like the Titanic, was going down by the head.

With cash being pulled out of the US at enormous rates, the Banks started having "liquidity problems" in September of last year. They had loaned out all their deposits and didn't have enough on hand to fill customer demands to get money out.

By March 2008, the "sub-prime mortgage crisis" hit with full impact. There were so many non-performing loans and so many others pulling their money out that banks and brokerage houses couldn't even hide their lack of cash anymore.

This was sort of like the nose of the Titanic being underwater and the ass end of the ship having risen into the air - and that's a really BIG ass.

The hull (banking system) was never designed to take that kind of stress and so it began splitting apart -- with the collapse of Bear Stearns, then Lehman Brothers, the urgent sale of Merrill Lynch to Bank of America and so on.

As the splitting of the hull finished, the head of the Titanic was still underwater, but the ass end was once again level and above water. People on the back of the ship thought things were safe again. Boy were they wrong.

The ass end of the ship - our retail economy including retail banking - are now grinding slowly to a halt -- filling up with water. Very soon, the ass end of the ship will rise back into the air then, finally and dramatically, sink.

Nothing could save the Titanic and nothing can save the United States.

We have been spent into oblivion by our own federal government and allowed to go so far over our heads by the greedy jew bankers that nothing can stop it.

The end isn't far off. Those with gold and silver are sort of like the Titanic passengers with life jackets after the ship sank. Those with life jackets (gold and silver) at least have some hope of surviving or being rescued. The others will all drown.

The stock market is sort of like the Band playing on the deck of the Titanic as the ship sinks; it provides entertainment but its fate is also sealed.

That is the fate of the United States we see unfolding before our very eyes.

Those images will be in my mind as I and men like me, take revenge upon those responsible for this calamity.

QUOTE

FDIC INSURANCE FUNDS INSUFFICIENT TO MEET RATIO SET BY CONGRESS

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) which insures citizen bank deposits up to one hundred thousand dollars, is running out of money due to all the bank failures this year.

According to a Senior Vice President of Risk Analytics, "We've got a ... retail bank run forming in this country."

Hal Turner Commentary: I have repeatedly warned all of you about this dire financial mess and repeatedly told you to prepare for a financial crisis worse than the Great Depression. In this story, they are openly telling us they may not have enough money in the FDIC to protect all depositors in banks that fail.

I urge you to get your money out of the Stock Market and perhaps even your bank immediately. It is your choice if you allow things to sit where they are, but don't be surprised if you wake up one morning and find yourself destitute.

QUOTE

GET OUT NOW! DON'T WAIT.

http://halturnershow.blogspot.com/

My advice to those of you who failed to heed my earlier warnings is simple: Get out of the markets right now. Don't wait. There is no hope for the markets. They will not be coming back.

Yes, you're going to take a big loss but at least you'll have something left after the dust settles.

As of today, out of the top five U.S. Brokerage houses, only two remain: Goldman Sachs and Morgan Stanley.

Over one thousand U.S. Banks are going to fail including, I am told, UBS and Citibank.

The FDIC is already scrapping into reserves long thought sufficient, to bolster depositors for the eleven Banks that have failed so far this year. What are they going to do when 1,000 Banks fail? Where will they get the money from? The short answer: they won't.

Buy small denominations of gold and silver. Take physical delivery of the metal and hold on to it.

We are in for a financial collapse far worse than "the great depression" and there is no way at all to avoid it.

craig-oxley - September 17, 2008 09:57 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

September 17, 2008 posting ... regarding the past week's "banking" problems ... this is all about a broken system called "fractional reserve lending" ... or otherwise known as creating money out of thin air ... banks lending 20 times the money they had to lend ... banks loaning air to other banks and those banks re-lending this air to other banks ... phony money (debt money) ... phony wars ... phony taxes ... phony stock values ... etc etc etc ... companies selling stock as in the 401K programs and putting the money directly into top shareholders pockets before the month was out ... this is the failure of not obeying ancient law ... the ancients had laws regarding rules of charging interest ... this culminates the complete failure of the fractional reserve banking empire ... loaning more money than you have ... charging interest on phony debt ... only a banker could dream up that scheme !!! as i noted this was outlawed in ancient laws and texts and these people would be imprisoned for life according to ancient law ... the new national solution ... place this inflated bag of air debt onto the american pulbic ... enslavement for all future time as they take over the paper that shows ownership to your homes ... you pay and pay and pay but never ever will own ... PLANNED ECONOMIC ENSLAVEMENT ... european banker style ... the only issue is that this has been done many times in the past ... and now you are seeing it here ... only through the control of the media and "education" through the public schools could such a criminal system become entrenched and honored as the backbone of our national monetary system ... jim mccanney

QUOTE

Collapse Goes Global AND Unnoticed

17 sept 2008
http://urbansurvival.com/week.htm

And so it goes that this morning we have an attack on the US Embassy in Yemen, which has left 16 people dead. Attention and headline grabber for sure. That oughta keep the BIG story in finance off the lead at the news channels and keep the money honeys distracted.

Being a long-time news reporter I ask myself "Gee, what is really going on in the background that is being swept under the rug with a flashier headline, about a terrorist attack here?

Ah! Here we go: "Panic as Russian Market Suspended"

The Russian stock markets closed on Tuesday after losing what would be the equivalent of 1,836 Dow points.

So, why are we not hearing about this meltdown in Russia? You want to table a guess as to why? Because the MainStreamMedia in America has no interest in letting the cat out of the bag that a global economic Depression's second leg down is now gathering momentum.

Just like they didn't tell you leg one down was when the Internet Bubble burst and (coincidentally) was swung into two wars overseas immediately after 9/11.

I mention this as extremely important stuff because 1) we have our 'hot date' from the predictive linguistics team showing a 'prequel;' event around September 27th and then a big 'wham' along about October 7th. As you may remember, I've been worried about another 'terrorist attack' (besides AIG's accessing public money) for a number of months. And, if the Dow slips under 10,000 here in the next 19 days, I reckon the odds are extremely high.

And of course, the timing will be coincidental.

My commodity broker JB called yesterday to ask if I'd seen where foreign investment outflows from the US had gone negative to the tune of $25.6 billion in the latest Treasury TIC report.

Maybe some folks overseas have figured out the obvious: This ends badly. So they're lightening up on buying U.S. paper products, if'n you know what I mean.

Golly - you thought Boeing or Grains were our biggest export? LMAO hell no. It's Paper Debt!

QUOTE

Bush suddenly scraps comments on financial markets

By BEN FELLER
17 sep 2008
http://ap.google.com/article/ALeqM5gH8vjAe...cqOD8QD9382T000

WASHINGTON (AP) — With little explanation, President Bush on Tuesday scrapped a statement he planned to give on the tumultuous financial markets, abandoning any press coverage of his meeting with key economic advisers as more developments roiled Wall Street.

As announced by the White House, Bush was scheduled to make comments to a pool of reporters after huddling with a key financial working group led by Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson. Its members include Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke and other key government figures in the field of commerce.

Yet after the session began, the White House told the press never mind. Spokesman Tony Fratto said only: "We decided it would be best to limit public comment about markets today." He declined to offer any explanation about why limiting Bush comment would be best, or why on this particular day.

The meeting went on as planned.

After the session, White House press secretary Dana Perino offered only a one-sentence description of the session. She confirmed that Bush had been briefed by his working group on financial markets and said the president appreciated "their work to strengthen and stabilize the markets."

Bush's sudden no-comment came on a day when the turmoil on Wall Street came to seize the presidential campaign.

In a blitz of interviews, Republican presidential candidate John McCain on Tuesday blamed Wall Street's financial turmoil on unchecked corporate greed. His Democratic opponent, Barack Obama, dismissed McCain's call for a high-level commission to study the economic crisis as "passing the buck."

Meanwhile, Wall Street ended another chaotic day with a big gain, ending up 141, partly recovering from a horrendous day. The Dow Jones industrials on Monday slid 500 points in their worst point drop since the 2001 terrorist attacks. Investors remain worried that financial sector troubles are far from over.

Beyond canceling his statement, Bush twice brushed off chances on Tuesday to comment on the market conditions on many people's minds.

Touring Hurricane Ike recovery efforts in Texas, he declined to answer a question about the financial markets in Houston. Then in Galveston, a reporter shouted a question about the teetering state of insurance giant American International Group Inc., the latest Wall Street worry.

"We're here talking about the people of Galveston, Texas," he said tersely. Regardless of topic, the president often opts not to answer shouted questions.

The White House said that Bush's comments of a day earlier still held. He told reporters on Monday that financial market adjustments can be "painful," but reiterated his standard message — that in the long run, capital markets are resilient and the economy will bounce back.

QUOTE

Moscow tries to stem market panic

Thursday, 18 September 2008 11:47 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7622944.stm

Moscow's stock markets are to remain closed until Friday, as the government tries to stem a plunge in share prices and restore confidence in the economy.

Finance Minister Alexei Kudrin said 60bn roubles (£1.3bn) would be pumped into Russia's three largest banks to help bolster the financial markets.

President Dmitry Medvedev said supporting the financial system was the government's "most important priority".

The crash has brought back memories of Russia's financial crisis of 1998.

Then the rouble was devalued, the country defaulted on its debts, and many banks failed.

While the country's economy as a whole is now in far better shape, there is still great uncertainty over what is around the corner, leading to a collapse in confidence, says the BBC's James Rodgers in Moscow.

Investors flee

Financial regulators halted trading on Wednesday after stocks fell to the lowest level in nearly three years.

Russia was not alone. Markets around the world have dived this week as several big banking names have gone under due to the effects of the credit crunch.

But it has shocked a stock market which was hitting record highs as recently as May this year, helped by an economy riding high on record oil and gas prices.

While the global turmoil and a slide in the price of Russia's abundant oil are some of the causes, analysts also point to investors fleeing Russia in the aftermath of its war with Georgia.

About £20bn has been pulled out of Russia since early August, Reuters estimates.

The executive board of Micex, one of Russia's two main exchanges, called the situation "extraordinary".

In a bid to support the banking sector, the finance ministry has pledged billions of dollars of loans.

Facing a liquidity squeeze, central bank officials on Thursday cut the reserves banks were allowed to hold, forcing them to release billions of roubles.

QUOTE

China accuses US of financial WMD

Thu, 18 Sep 2008 08:22:02 GMT
http://www.presstv.com/detail.aspx?id=6980...ionid=351020404

Markets across Asia tumbled as a result of the Wall Street crisis.
Chinese state media has blamed the US for unleashing financial "weapons of mass destruction" and sparking a global market "tsunami".

China's official People's Daily warned on Wednesday that the US had set off a "financial tsunami" by allowing Wall Street lenders to trade in subprime debts and unstable financial derivatives.

In response to market turmoil, China's central bank cut interest rates for the first time in six years, from 5.85% to 5.31% signalling Beijing's intent to maintain economic growth and employment.

Regional stocks tumbled across East Asia on Thursday due to panic-selling brought on by fears of a financial meltdown on Wall Street.

The MSCI Asia Pacific Index of regional shares fell 4.1% on Thursday as traders in Hong Kong, Japan and China fled equity markets to safer investments such as gold, government bonds and currencies such as the Yen.

Thursday trading saw Japan's Nikkei 225 Stock Average falling 3.6% while the broader Topix index skidded 3.9%. Japan's central bank also pumped another Y1.5 trillion into money markets to fund banks increasingly wary about lending to each other.

Hong Kong's Hang Seng Index now stands at its lowest level in over two years after dropping 7.3% on Thursday and 15.2% in the previous six sessions. HSBC holdings and China Mobile, two of the biggest and most influential stocks on the Hong Kong market, lost 7.4% and 4.6% respectively.

The Shanghai Composite index in China crashed 5.8% while the Taiex in Taiwan sank 3.6%. South Korea's Kospi index dropped 3.9% after hitting an 18-month low on Tuesday.

Signs of panic spread also spread to consumers with policyholders at troubled insurance giant AIG flocking to regional offices to terminate agreements despite an $85 billion US government bailout.

Asian markets have been hit hard all week after the collapse of investment bank Lehman Brothers and the forced discount sale of brokerage firm Merrill Lynch.

QUOTE

The Line Is Drawn: Stop the Nation-Killing Bailout Now!

John Hoefle – Executive Intelligence Review September 19, 2008

Immediately upon hearing of the action by Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson to have the United States government assume the liabilities of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, Lyndon LaRouche declared the move "tantamount to treason."

"This is an un-Constitutional fraud," he said, adding, "We're going to hold these people accountable for this 'tantamount to treason' action." If they do this, he said, "they are going to jail."

For the past year, we have been warning that Paulson, Fed chairman Ben Bernanke, and the Plunge Protection Team were engaged in a systematic bailout of the bankrupt U.S. financial system, and, in doing so, were bailing out the global Anglo-Dutch Liberal system. Despite all the spin about "protecting homeowners," this is a plan to save the parasites by transferring their losses to the taxpayers.

How did such a travesty of justice occur? The policy itself comes from the core of the Anglo-Dutch Liberal financier oligarchy, which is determined to protect itself and its parasitic system at all costs. Organizing for the policy in the U.S. was a fifth column of oligarchic stooges, centered around creatures like Felix Rohatyn, George Soros, the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the Rockefeller Foundation, and others, with considerable help from the whorish U.S. media. Implementing the plan were corrupt public officials who turned this policy into law, to the detriment of the welfare of the people. This list includes Paulson, Bernanke, Senate Banking Committee chair Chris Dodd (D-Conn.), House Banking Committee chair Barney Frank (D-Mass.), Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.), and a host of others, who have consistently done the bankers' bidding and consistently blocked LaRouche's reform proposals. Paulson's action was specifically authorized by H.R. 3221, the deceptively named Housing and Economic Recovery Act of 2008, also called Dodd-Frank after its main sponsors.

These actions, far from saving the United States, will destroy it. Said LaRouche: "Once the American people figure out what Paulson, Dodd, Felix Rohatyn, 'Bailout Barney' Frank, and House Speaker Pelosi have done, they will be out for blood. I wouldn't want to be in the shoes of any member of Congress who signed their name onto the Dodd-Frank bill."

Tens of Trillions

To understand what this scheme is, and how it works, you have to step back and view it from the larger perspective of a bankrupt financial system: The devil is in the intent, not the details. As LaRouche has repeatedly declared, the global financial system died in the Summer of 2007; it has not come back, and will not come back. It is dead. The problem facing the banks, is that they still have trillions of dollars of bad paper on their books, paper whose real value ranges from zero, to pennies on the dollar. They can't afford to write it off, and they can't sell it. Despite their financial reports, they are bankrupt, and the bigger they are, the more bankrupt they are.

These big banks are zombies, walking dead, keeping their doors open only through thoroughly cooked books and a corrupt regulatory system. There is nothing they can do to save themselves.

This is the problem Paulson is trying desperately to solve, and the only way he sees to solve it is to bail out the banks by having the U.S. government buy the paper. He intends to save the financial system from bankruptcy by bankrupting the U.S. government, our economy, and our people.

No one knows what this will ultimately cost, because the financial system is still hemorrhaging as the effects of the death of the system work their way through the balance sheets of the commercial and investment banks, hedge funds, pension funds, money-market funds, insurance companies, and other speculators in the quadrillion-dollar-plus global financial casino. The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that the scheme will ultimately cost the government $25 billion, but that estimate is based upon a bailout of Fannie and Freddie, not the bailout of the financial system itself. LaRouche estimates that the bailout will cost tens of trillions of dollars, something the U.S. government cannot possibly pay, even with big tax hikes, and even bigger cuts in essential services. This plan will kill what is left of the U.S. economy, and, effectively, the nation itself.

Savage Downsizing

It is useful at this point to define just what is meant by "bailout" under such circumstances. Even the dumbest among the bailout circus crowd realizes that saving every commercial and investment bank, every fund, every speculator, is neither possible nor desirable. Many people who thought they were major players are already gone, thrown overboard as expendable. Bear Stearns is gone; Lehman Brothers appears on the verge of joining them; Wachovia is now run by a former top member of the Plunge Protection Team; and the FDIC is expanding as fast as it can to handle the failures it sees coming. Some of these dramas are being played out in the press, soap-opera style, to keep the focus on individual institutions and not the system itself.

Again: Pull back and look at the system as a whole. During the heyday of the bubble, the debt machine was taking in mortgages, credit-card receivables, corporate debt, and related items, and spitting out even larger amounts of securities on the back end. In 2005, for example, this securitization game took in $1 trillion in new mortgages, and turned it into $3 trillion in mortgage-related securities. This game of turning piles of debt into even larger piles of assets spun off huge amounts of cash, and as the pyramid scheme grew, the banking system grew with it. Then, suddenly, the music stopped, and Wall Street, the City of London, and other major financial centers found themselves with far more capacity than business, far too much expense for the suddenly reduced income. Suddenly these over-leveraged behemoths were struggling just to survive, their assets vaporizing, and no way to make the money they needed to cover the bills.
Regardless of what the bankers try to do, the system must inevitably shrink until it finds equilibrium, and that is a long way down. The best they can do, from their standpoint, is to try to protect the system itself, saving as much of the core as they can. That means lots of bank failures, and lots of mergers, many of them with government assistance. The big banks will try to survive by gobbling up the little ones, aided by Federal life support. The government has already shown it will do as much as it can to protect the money and the parasites, while throwing the taxpayers, and the rest of the economy, to the wolves.

Stop It, Now!

This bailout must be stopped now, before it really gets rolling. Paulson must be stopped, and Dodd-Frank repealed.

"This bill must be immediately ripped up," LaRouche demanded. "It flagrantly violates the U.S. Federal Constitution, which specifically defines the general welfare as the law of the land. This bailout of speculators, at the expense of current and future taxpayers, is illegal."

This bailout scheme is a nation-killer, as the ultimate authors of the policy understand. If carried out, it will bankrupt the U.S. economy, and destroy the dollar. It will impose trillions of dollars in illegal taxes upon the public, bleeding us until we are dry.

Forget the legalistic nonsense being pumped out by Washington, and the hosannas being sung by those who think they are being saved. The Constitution is clear on the subject: The government's responsibility is to protect the General Welfare is paramount, and that is the law of the land. Neither Paulson, nor Dodd-Frank, can change that.

There can be no compromise here. Either we stop this travesty of justice, or the United States gets gobbled back up by the imperial system from which we fought a revolution to escape. It is time to rise up and fight!

johnhoefle@larouchepub.com www.larouchepub.com/other/2008/3537stop_killer_bailouts.html

QUOTE

Up To 500 Bank Closures Could Absorb FDIC Funds

Paul Joseph Watson
Thursday, September 18, 2008
http://www.infowars.com/?p=4627

Mark Patterson, chairman of private equity fund MattlinPatterson, told an audience of financial experts at New York's Waldorf-Astoria this week that the U.S. could suffer up to 500 bank closures and that the chances of a new great depression are now as high as 25 per cent.

Following the collapse of Lehman Brothers, Patterson warned that 300 to 500 U.S. banks are set to fail over the next three years and as a result absorb all of the FDIC's pool of funds.

Financial conditions are "probably more challenging than at any time since 1929," Patterson said, speaking at Dow Jones' Private Equity Analyst Conference this week.

"We're not in normal times. If you don't accept that there is at least a 20 to 25 percent chance of a financial markets led depression you're fooling yourself," he cautioned, adding that "Saharan-like" credit markets are overwhelming companies.

Following the collapse of Lehman Brothers, Patterson warned that 300 to 500 U.S. banks are set to fail over the next three years and as a result absorb all of the FDIC's pool of funds.

As we reported on Monday, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which guarantees individual accounts up to $100,000, only has about $50 billion to "insure" about $1 trillion in assets across the nation's financial institutions.

This has led top economists like Nouriel Roubini, of NYU's Stern School and RGE Monitor, to openly warn that a "slow motion run on the banks" is already occurring nationwide as individuals move their deposits to safer havens.

Patterson put the figure at 300-500 bank failures presuming that other well known investment banks survive, something he said "was not such a good assumption."

"Who could blame him for such a negative outlook?" writes Marc Raybin of HedgeFund.net. "The markets are still reeling from the Dow Jones Industrial Average plummeting more than 500 points on Monday on the one-two-three punch of Lehman Bros. declaring bankruptcy, Merrill Lynch being acquired by Bank of America and American International Group, the world's largest insurer with $1 trillion on its balance sheet, on the verge of filing for bankruptcy protection itself."

QUOTE

Nobel Prize Winning Economist: Crisis As Bad As Great Depression Or Worse

Steve Watson
Wednesday, Sept 17, 2008
http://www.infowars.com/?p=4622

Describing the current situation as a “top down crisis”, Stiglitz also cited the $3 trillion cost of the Iraq war as a key factor in the economic downturn, saying it has increased the budget deficit and consumed resources that would otherwise promote growth.

Two time Nobel-prize winner and former chief economist of the World Bank, Joseph Stiglitz has warned that the current financial crisis will continue for at least another eighteen months and in many ways represents a worse situation than the one faced by Americans during the great depression of the 1930s.

“You can paper things over for a while but eventually you have to face reality.” Stiglitz told the nationally syndicated Alex Jones show yesterday.

“This is clearly the most serious problem since the great depression and in some ways worse in terms of the financial institutions.” Stiglitz commented, referring to the fact that lenders are unwilling to take risks to finance each other because they no longer have complete access to their own undertakings let alone those of other institutions.

“The reason, in part, is that while some of the same problems that occurred during the great depression and have occurred since, such as excessive leverage, pyramid schemes, bubbles, have happened before, the so called innovation of Wall Street, the financial innovations, that were supposed to manage risk, created a kind of non transparency that is now so great that no one knows exactly the magnitude of the risk they face.”

“It is particularly bad because our financial institutions are based on trust, you put the money in the bank and you trust that you can get your money out, so trust is absolutely essential for the functioning of our financial markets and the functioning of our economy.” he continued.

“The problem is that much of the news on what is going on in the financial markets comes from those who are making money out of the financial markets. So if you were one of the people involved with Lehman Brothers or AIG, you’re going to be talking up the economy. The head of Lehman Brothers was quoted last April as saying we have turned the corner, the economy is on the uptick. And the same thing goes for the president and the secretary of treasury.”

“The fact is that they are involved in salesmanship.”

Describing the current situation as a “top down crisis”, Stiglitz also cited the $3 trillion cost of the Iraq war as a key factor in the economic downturn, saying it has increased the budget deficit and consumed resources that would otherwise promote growth.

“This is the first war in American history that has been totally financed on the credit card… For the last five years as the war has gone on we have been a debt economy. It is the first war since the revolutionary war that we have had to turn to foreigners to finance, 40% of our national debt is now being financed by foreigners… Even as we went into the war we had a big deficit, and yet the president called for tax cuts for upper middle class Americans.” he said.

“And there is another level of trust, those in other countries have to have trust that the American economy is working well, they have to trust that when the president says everything is going well, it is. This administration has really burned that trust, the president said there is no problem, there’s just a few too many houses been built. Well if that is the level of analysis the Untied States is giving about the nature of its economic problems, no wonder everybody around the world is losing confidence. “

Stiglitz is no stranger to positioning himself in opposition to the establishment on the economic front. In October 2001 he caused controversy when he exposed rampant corruption within the IMF and blew the whistle on their nefarious methods of inducing countries to fall under their debt before stripping them of sovereignty and hollowing out their economies.

“It is clear that the Bush administration is not responding to these problems, partly because the problems are of their own making.” Stiglitz asserted.

Over the next twelve months, Stiglitz predicts that house prices will continue to fall, more mortgages will go into foreclosure and more financial firms will be put into crisis.

“I am particularly worried about what I call the ‘real economy’. Basically when the financial system starts getting weak, it is not in a position to provide credit, to provide loans, to provide mortgages and that means in turn that housing prices are going to fall further, businesses are going to contract, unemployment is going to grow and it is a downward vicious cycle… I don’t want to be obsessively pessimistic but you have to be in fantasy land to say that everything is fine, and even to say that we have turned the corner. We’re still in the downward phase of this economic cycle. We should not anticipate emerging from this for a year and a half or longer.”

In a long term prediction 22 months ago, Stiglitz told listeners of the Alex Jones show that he believed a global economic crash would occur within 2 years. With major financial institutions now folding every week, others touting mergers just to stay afloat and stocks continually plummeting on a daily basis it seems that prediction is coming to pass.

Stiglitz stressed that in order to emerge from the crisis, the economy needs a stimulus, that really works, consisting of increased aid for local government, stronger unemployment insurance and more investment in infrastructure.

"I would take advantage of this particular time in order to stimulate our economy in ways that provide the basis of our longer term economic growth. If our economy is growing then we will be better able to manage some of this financial turmoil." he concluded.

Listen to the interview below:

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/TLkWvFbXBhw&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/TLkWvFbXBhw&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/T7JaPb5Xq4g&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/T7JaPb5Xq4g&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

Wednesday, September 17, 2008
http://halturnershow.blogspot.com/2008/09/...k-to-close.html

 URGENT ****

Washington Mutual Bank To Close on Friday!

I have just learned from a previously reliable source that Washington Mutual Bank - the sixth largest bank in the USA, has failed and will close this Friday.

Please spread the word immediately.

QUOTE

October 2008, US Economy and Global Conflict

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/eB-nizPuOU8&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/eB-nizPuOU8&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

Voice of the White House September 19, 2008

TBR News.org – September 19, 2008

"The terrible pending financial collapse is being frantically addressed by terrified members of Congress and the President, mainly because most of them are deeply in the pockets of the Wall Street types and also because a serious recession at this time is unthinkable because of the pending presidential elections.

Their solemn statements at ad hoc press conferences (seen on all the major networks) will certainly be reflected in the media with cries of joy and exaltation "Joy! The Crisis is over! Stocks soar on News Of Assistance!" will echo throughout the land.

This will result in a brief flurry of upwards activity on the market but in the end, the damage is so severe that the collapse will continue its inexorable slide downwards to mass destruction (The American media is not independent. For example, the once-respectable Chicago Tribune is now owned by a big real estate tycoon who is highly unlikely to publish devastating comments about the collapsing real estate market.)

The Dow rose more than 400 points. Gold was up $46 at the close of the day. The dollar is falling...oil is holding steady. Our Congressmen now are going to ban short selling of financial stocks. The SEC issued an emergency edict prohibiting "abusive" short selling.

The pre-election saviors have solemnly announced a program of coordinated intervention...with $250 billion to be made immediately available to the financial industry to cover its bad debts, and with a future direct cost to American taxpayers of half a trillion dollars!

Bush and his right wing Republicans are directly and personally responsible for the deliberate removal of stock market and financial institution safeguards, put in place decades ago by Congress specifically to prevent what is now happening.

None of this activity was by accident but it was, has been and is now in progress because it is the stated Republican policy to stop any government control over American capitalism. Capitalism, if left uncontrolled, has a distinct propensity to large surges and even large collapses as any student of American business can attest.

Finally, after the terrible 1929-1938 disaster, Congress installed regulations to prevent these surges and collapses but Wall Street, which connived at Bush's fake election in 2000, wanted to benefit from the surges and so this corrupt administration has eagerly rushed to comply.

Now, we see the fruits of their labors.

The American housing market has collapsed and the collapse is still in progress.

We see that many Americans, who have good credit and pay their mortgage bills on time, are in a terrible situation. As long as they keep their homes, all is well and good but if and when they want to sell them, then there is trouble.

The collapse of the American housing market means that while a homeowner may have a mortgage on a house once worth $200,000, this house now only can be sold for $125,000.That means that if the house is sold, the bank, holder of the mortgage, is now owed $75,000.

The banks are not going to walk away from so much money, so either the homeowner stands pat and continues to pay his mortgage, he signs an interest-bearing note for the $75,000 for the bank or he walks away from the house, has his credit ruined and leaves the mortgage holder to eat the house and the mortgage.

I ought to advise those of you being forced into foreclosure of an interesting situation.

The person who owns the house can be forced into foreclosure but in court, they have the right to confront the mortgage holder.

Let me tell you all something: Given all the slicing and dicing and resales the criminally greedy banks and lending agencies indulged in, at this point, no one in any lending institution knows who holds the actual mortgage and, believe this, they can never find them.

Just a little gift from me to you.

Tell your lawyer this and watch the other side twist and squirm! And not bring the holder into court as they must.

Your Mr. Harring has prepared a clear, uncluttered and accurate chronology of the background of this Republican-sponsored disaster. Be sure to remember who is to blame for your hiked up credit card payments and other delightful things come November next."
www.tbrnews.org/Archives/a2876.htm

QUOTE

12th U.S. Bank Failure

09-20-2008
http://money.cnn.com/2008/09/19/news/compa...sion=2008091920

Ameribank Inc. was shut down on Friday by the Office of the Thrift Supervision, making it the 12th bank this year to go under.

The Northfork, West Virginia bank had total assets of $115 million and total deposits of $102 million, according to a statement on the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Web site.

The FDIC was named receiver and announced that it entered into purchase and assumption agreements with Pioneer Community Bank, Inc., Iaeger, West Virginia, and the Citizens Savings Bank, Martins Ferry, Ohio, to take over all of Ameribank's deposits.

Ameribank has five branches located in West Virginia and three branches located in Ohio. Branches in West Virginia will reopen on Monday and Ohio branches will reopen on Saturday.

All customer accounts were automatically transferred to the two new banks and the full amount of their deposits will automatically be insured, the FDIC said.

Customers of the banks can still access their money over the weekend by writing checks or using ATM or debit cards, according to the statement by the FDIC.

A year of bank failures
This year 12 banks have been forced to close their doors. In July IndyMac was closed down marking the largest collapse of an FDIC-insured institution since 1984. The Pasadena, Calif.-based bank failed because it backed risky home loans. With the special Alt-A home loan that IndyMac offered, a home buyer had to show little evidence of income and assets.

When IndyMac was shut down, it had assets of $32 billion and deposits of $19 billion. While the FDIC protected most of IndyMac customer's assets, some customers lost some of their deposits.

The FDIC insures the assets held by the 8,451 institutions with a total of $13.4 trillion.

QUOTE

[dohtml] September 22, 2008<o:p></o:p>

Russia-China Prepare Massive Gold ‘Shock’ For Global Economy <o:p></o:p>

By: Sorcha Faal, and as reported to her Western Subscribers (Traducción al Español abajo)<o:p></o:p>

A visibly angry Prime Minister Putin addressing the media during his visit with French Prime Minister Francois Fillon in <st1:City w:st="on">Sochi</st1:City> blasted the <st1:country-region w:st="on"><st1:place w:st="on">United States</st1:place></st1:country-region> plans for dealing with the collapse of the Western Banking system by stating, “We all need to think about changing the architecture of international finances and diversifying risks. The whole world economy cannot depend on one money-printing machine”.

Putin’s warning, however, has fallen upon deaf ears in the United States as that financially beleaguered Nation prepares to further implode their economy by injecting a staggering $1 Trillion into their stock and banking markets by doing nothing more than printing up more money as they have completely bankrupted themselves, and which has brought them to this latest crisis. <o:p></o:p>

Not being explained to the American people, in the millions of words currently assaulting them by their propaganda media about their economic collapse, is the almost childlike equation that their Nations debt is virtually worthless on the World markets as the US Dollar has no real value as their US Federal Reserve System is broke, and as we can read from their own statement, but in much more convoluted terms designed to completely confuse their own people:<o:p></o:p>

“The Federal Reserve has announced a series of lending and liquidity initiatives during the past several quarters intended to address heightened liquidity pressures in the financial market, including enhancing its liquidity facilities this week. To manage the balance sheet impact of these efforts, the Federal Reserve has taken a number of actions, including redeeming and selling securities from the System Open Market Account portfolio.<o:p></o:p>

The Treasury Department announced today the initiation of a temporary Supplementary Financing Program at the request of the Federal Reserve. The program will consist of a series of Treasury bills, apart from Treasury’s current borrowing program, which will provide cash for use in the Federal Reserve initiatives.<o:p></o:p>

Announcements of and participation in auctions conducted under the Supplementary Financing Program will be governed by existing Treasury auction rules. Treasury will provide as much advance notification as possible regarding the timing, size, and maturity of any bills auctioned for Supplementary Financing Program purposes.”<o:p></o:p>

In simple terms: When the US Federal Reserve System announced it was broke, the US Treasury turned on its printing presses to create new Treasury Bills which have no value whatsoever, except giving the illusion of liquidity to the unsuspecting American public so they will cease withdrawing their dollars from their crashing banks and stock markets prior to their savings becoming completely worthless.

To the astounding plan unveiled by the US Government to address their financial collapse, one could justifiably be confused to if they are reading a pronouncement from the old Soviet Politburo, instead of the largest capitalistic economy system in the World, and as we can read as reported by the Bloomberg News Service:

“The Bush administration sought unchecked power from Congress to buy $700 billion in bad mortgage investments from financial companies in what would be an unprecedented government intrusion into the markets. <o:p></o:p>

Through his plan, Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson aims to avert a credit freeze that would bring the financial system and the world's largest economy to a standstill. The bill would prevent courts from reviewing actions taken under its authority. <o:p></o:p>

“He's asking for a huge amount of power,'' said Nouriel Roubini, an economist at New York University. ``He's saying, `Trust me, I'm going to do it right if you give me absolute control.' This is not a monarchy.'"<o:p></o:p>

As we had reported in our September 20th report, ‘Seven Days That Shook The World’: Democracy In America Dies, US Senator Jim Bunning was, indeed, correct when he stated, “The free market for all intents and purposes is dead in America. The action proposed today by the Treasury Department will take away the free market and institute socialism in America.”

But, to the fullest extent of this <st1:country-region w:st="on"><st1:place w:st="on">US</st1:place></st1:country-region> financial crisis we can read as reported by the Washington Post News Service:

“What we are witnessing may be the greatest destruction of financial wealth that the world has ever seen -- paper losses measured in the trillions of dollars. Corporate wealth. Oil wealth. Real estate wealth. Bank wealth. Private-equity wealth. Hedge fund wealth.
Pension wealth. It's a painful reminder that, when you strip away all the complexity and trappings from the magnificent new global infrastructure, finance is still a confidence game -- and once the confidence goes, there's no telling when the selling will stop.<o:p></o:p>

But more than psychology is involved here. What is really going on, at the most fundamental level, is that the United States is in the process of being forced by its foreign creditors to begin living within its means.”<o:p></o:p>

And, what the American economy, and its people, are not even close to being prepared for is how both <st1:country-region w:st="on">China</st1:country-region> and <st1:country-region w:st="on"><st1:place w:st="on">Russia</st1:place></st1:country-region> are going to be dealing with the new “Peoples Republic of Wall Street” in demanding their debts be paid immediately in full.

One particularly crushing response to the United States current crisis circulating in the Kremlin today, written by Alexander Dugin, described as the "New sage of the Kremlin", advocates the combining of both Russia's nearly $500 billion and China's 20,000 tons [est.]gold reserves to back a new gold-backed Eurasian Currency modeled on the Euro, and which if implemented would 'shock' the American dollar to such an extent that it would cease exist on International markets.

This report further notes that the United States is already preparing for such a response from Russia and China by this past weeks invoking of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 by the US Government in a desperate move to protect their money markets for the first time since the Great Depression, and of which the vast majority of Americans remain oblivious to the fact that their personal gold holdings can still be confiscated by their officials at anytime of their choosing despite the 1975 laws allowing these people to own gold again.

In all of these events, and as we have mentioned many times before, the greatest enemy of these American people appears to be their own ignorance as they, seemingly, have absolutely no idea on how to protect themselves, but which even Russian schoolchildren knows is the exchanging of a collapsing currency for one that is doing better, and which millions of ordinary Russians did during the collapse of the Soviet economy by purchasing American Express Travelers Cheques in US Dollars and British Pound Sterling.

To whatever becomes of these American people entering what is, in essence, a Third World Economy, it remains a main fact that they continue to ignore the many warnings from outside their country of the many catastrophes still to come, even to their false bravado of laughing these warnings off as they plunge into the abyss. [/dohtml]

QUOTE

The Potential End Of America's Government

Wednesday, September 17. 2008
Posted by Karl Denninger at 16:06
http://market-ticker.denninger.net/archive...Government.html

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/kqtAzRNhTTY&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/kqtAzRNhTTY&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

Watch that video.

Watch it twice, three times if you have to. Go look at the other video, and the other Ticker referenced in there.

Now understand that there is no solution to this fast and vicious destruction of America's financial markets and financial companies until and unless the lying stops.

It has NOT stopped and in fact has gotten materially worse.

Folks, this meltdown will not stop until either:

ALL financials mark everything to the market, ALL OTC derivatives are traded on an exchange or declared void, and ALL balance sheets are transparent so we can determine who is broke and who is not.
OR

The market has completely imploded with every financial stock worth zero as the hedge funds and others short each in turn into the ground, forcing each to be bailed out in turn.
Those are the ONLY TWO CHOICES.

Nothing else HAS WORKED and nothing else WILL WORK. With each bailout you simply give people another target and a new way to kill the next company in line. This process will proceed from firm to firm until NONE ARE LEFT and credit availability in the economy is ZERO.

The Fed has expended more than half of their balance sheet, in excess of four hundred billion dollars. It has not stopped the cascade.

The Government has spent nearly a trillion dollars we do not have in bailouts and other miscellaneous nonsense. It has not stopped the cascade.

Indeed, all that has happened is that the velocity of the crash has accelerated dramatically.

There is NO WAY to fix this through adding "more liquidity" - the problem IS AND HAS BEEN THE LIQUIDITY in that this allows BANKRUPT companies to continue to operate and LIE instead of forcing them into the open where they can be liquidated under Chapter 11.

We are here precisely because of the intentional provision of far TOO MUCH liquidity by Alan Greenspan and now by Ben Bernanke.

You cannot solve someone's drinking problem by giving them another bottle of whiskey!

THE LIQUIDITY SWAMP MUST BE DRAINED.

We cannot have a "financial system" that is based on fraud and theft. We cannot have "financial institutions" that claim to be solvent when they in fact are not unless they are able to make up values that are much higher than the REAL value for their so-called "assets".

Wayne Angell was on "Fast Money" tonight claiming that the balance sheet of The Fed is "infinite" and that "they can't be downgraded."

Wayne, you need to be charged with treason for spewing that crap on national television.

Sure, "in theory" The Fed's balance sheet is infinite - they can coordinate with Treasury to print as much money as they want.

So was Weimar Germany's.

The word for what Wayne was promoting on Fast Money this evening is HYPERINFLATION where you find that a wheelbarrow is worth more than all the $100 bills you can stuff into it.

Does anyone remember how hyperinflation worked out for them? I seem to remember a gentlemen with the first name of "Adolf" that the world got out of that little exercise of an "infinite balance sheet."

Why does this path inevitably lead to political failure? Because as soon as lenders discern that this is occurring they shut off credit entirely.

Think about it - you have $1,000 to lend out. You detect that the government is printing and intentionally devaluing your money. If you lend it out at 10% interest but the government is hyperinflating at 100% a year, you lose about half of the money's value every year! So if you lend me that $1,000 when I pay you back you can only buy half as much as you could before! For obvious reasons you're not going to allow that - you will instead immediately spend your $1,000 on something of physical value such as land before it can be debased.

Hyperinflation kills all credit availability instantly for this reason and any credit-based economy immediately implodes. This results in enormous and immediate mass unemployment and a resulting rupture of the social and political fabric of a nation.

As for not being able to be downgraded, you obviously didn't hear S&P today, which stated quite clearly that the United States "AAA" credit rating is not a right and must be earned. Can't be downgraded eh? Oh yes The Fed can be - along with everything else.

Folks, we require over $2 billion a day in foreign investment in order to pay our bills.

This is what came out from China today:

"BEIJING, Sept 17 (Reuters) - Threatened by a "financial tsunami," the world must consider building a financial order no longer dependent on the United States, a leading Chinese state newspaper said on Wednesday.

"The eruption of the U.S. sub-prime crisis has exposed massive loopholes in the United States' financial oversight and supervision," writes the commentator, Shi Jianxun.

"The world urgently needs to create a diversified currency and financial system and fair and just financial order that is not dependent on the United States."

"Infinite Balance Sheet" eh? See what foreign governments think of that sort of garbage?

Please understand - if foreign governments withdraw their support of our government funding via either scaling back their Treasury purchases or outright refusal to buy (or worse, they dump them on the market into this "fear spike" we're seeing now), we are absolutely and instantaneously screwed.

Michael Bloomberg, one of the few intelligent commentators out there (and a billionaire by his own hand) said exactly the same thing today:

"WASHINGTON (AP) — New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg is warning a 'next wave' of financial pain may come when foreign entities stop buying U.S. debt.

The billionaire mayor is speaking to an audience at Georgetown University, telling them it's not clear who is going to continue buying U.S. debt as financial firms try to cope with a crisis of confidence on Wall Street."

Mr. Bloomberg sees the same thing I do, but he's a bit more polite than I am about it.

Then there was S&P which made this quite clear as well:

"The $85 billion bailout of AIG on Tuesday by the U.S. Federal Reserve "has weakened the fiscal profile of the United States," S&P's John Chambers told Reuters in an interview.

"Lack of a pro-active stance could have resulted in further financial stress and put pressure on the U.S. triple-A rating," Chambers said. "There's no God-given gift of a AAA rating, and the U.S. has to earn it like everyone else."

Is that clear enough?

Congress MUST ACT RIGHT DAMN NOW.

Congress MUST stop The Fed and Treasury from printing any more money. The institutions that are insolvent must be forced into the open and put through bankruptcy.

We CANNOT wait until the next Congress and the election to stop this nonsense; that's five months in the future. By then The United States could easily be quite literally broke and forced into a hyperinflationary spiral!

Debt that cannot be paid must be defaulted.

Yes, this is painful.

Yes, it will hurt.

But as you can see it is already hurting plenty; the "alternative" isn't working and CAN'T WORK, as I've been pointing out for over a year!

We CANNOT get a true value on the market until this occurs.

It is NOT POSSIBLE.

In the BEST CASE if we do not act NOW, take your salary and assets and cut them by 30%. Everything else - cost of food, gas, electricity, etc - remains the same.

Worst case? Divide your salary and assets by three, but again, your costs remain the same.

If you are in the lower income echelon, you will go broke and become homeless.

If you are middle class, you will be living in a tenement or trailer. If you're lucky. If you currently own a home, you won't any more.

If you are upper-middle class, you will fall to lower-middle class, and all your luxuries will disappear. No more Lexus or nice vacations.

If you are "well off", you will be living in a modest home, what we now call "middle class", and some of you will go broke outright

craig-oxley - September 23, 2008 12:04 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

MARKETS WERE 500 TRADES FROM A MELTDOWN

By MICHAEL GRAY
September 21, 2008
http://www.nypost.com/seven/09212008/busin...ddon_130110.htm

The market was 500 trades away from Armageddon on Thursday, traders inside two large custodial banks tell The Post.

Had the Treasury and Fed not quickly stepped into the fray that morning with a quick $105 billion injection of liquidity, the Dow could have collapsed to the 8,300-level - a 22 percent decline! - while the clang of the opening bell was still echoing around the cavernous exchange floor.

According to traders, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, money market funds were inundated with $500 billion in sell orders prior to the opening. The total money-market capitalization was roughly $4 trillion that morning.
The panicked selling was directly linked to the seizing up of the credit markets - including a $52 billion constriction in commercial paper - and the rumors of additional money market funds "breaking the buck," or dropping below $1 net asset value.

The Fed's dramatic $105 billion liquidity injection on Thursday (pre-market) was just enough to keep key institutional accounts from following through on the sell orders and starting a stampede of cash that could have brought large tracts of the US economy to a halt.

While many depositors treat money market accounts as fancy savings accounts, they are different. Banks buy a variety of short-term debt, including commercial paper, with the assets. It is an important distinction because banks use the $1.7 trillion commercial-paper market to fund their credit card operations and car finance companies use it to move autos.

Without commercial paper, "factories would have to shut down, people would lose their jobs and there would be an effect on the real economy," Paul Schott Stevens, of the Investment Company Institute, told the Wall Street Journal.
Cracks started to show in money market accounts late Tuesday when shares in one fund, the Reserve Primary Fund - which touted itself as super safe - fell below the golden $1 a share level. It had purchased what it thought was safe Lehman bonds, never dreaming they could default - which they did 24 hours earlier when the 158-year-old investment bank filed Chapter 11.

By Wednesday, banks sensed a run on their accounts. They started stockpiling cash in anticipation of withdrawals.

Banks, which usually keep an average of $2 billion in excess reserves earmarked for withdrawals, pumped that up to an astounding $90 billion by Wednesday, Lou Crandall, chief economist at Wrighton ICAP, told The Journal.

And for good reason. By the close of business on Wednesday, $144.5 billion - a record - had been withdrawn. How much money was taken out of money market funds the prior week? Roughly $7.1 billion, according to AMG Data Services.
By Thursday, that level, fed by the incredible volume of sell orders pouring in from institutional investors like pension funds and sovereign funds, had grown to $100 billion. It was still not enough to stem the tidal wave.

The banks knew something drastic had to be done. So did Paulson.

The injection of capital into the market was followed up by calls from Treasury Secretary Hank Paulson to major money market players like Bank of New York Mellon and State Street in Boston informing them that federal money was in the market and they should tell their clients the Feds would be back with a plan to stem the constriction in the credit market.

Paulson knew the $105 billion injection was not a real solution. A broader, more radical answer was needed.

Hours after Paulson made his round of calls to calm the industry, word leaked out that an added $1 trillion bailout of banks was being readied. Investors cheered. At about 3 p.m., news of the plans was filtering up and down Wall Street, fueling a 700-point advance in the Dow Jones industrial average through 4 p.m. Friday.

By that time, Paulson had announced the plan. It included insurance on money market accounts, a move that started in quiet Thursday morning, when the former Goldman Sachs executive saved the country from a paralyzing meltdown.
mgray@nypost.com

QUOTE

Sunday, September 21, 2008
http://halturnershow.blogspot.com/

VINDICATED AGAIN: NY Post confirms economy was 500 stock trades away from "Armageddon"

I must confess that I never, in my wildest imagination, thought the government would take on another TRILLION in debt to allay fears and delay the financial meltdown I had warned about.

So what do all the nay-sayers who smeared and belittled my projections have to say now that I was proved 100% right?

Incidentally, this is not over; not by a long shot. In fact, the "bail out" plan is not only going to fail, it is going to make the failure even worse.

The reason the US Treasury came up with a "bail out plan" is because the US Federal Reserve is broke; our central bank has no money at all to lend. They needed the Treasury to step-in to PRINT the Trillion dollars they need for the bail out.

The printing presses are already cranking out cash but the rest of the world is not fooled. They now realize that all U.S. Government debt (Bonds etc) is totally worthless because the US has been reduced to a banana republic that prints money to pay its bills.

In the not-so-distant future, the value of the US dollar will suddenly and dramatically plummet against world currencies as one or more governments finally decide to dump the US dollars they hold and reject the Dollar as a currency. Once that happens, and it WILL happen, the rest of the world will dump dollars and that will be the end.

The US Treasury will then be left with no choice but to "de-monetize" the dollar, making all dollar assets instantly worthless. Everyone who has "dollars" in any type of account or stock, will instantly find all their holdings are not considered "money" anymore. They will be instantly destitute.

As the country reels from the shock, the government will explain why the only way to salvage anything at all is to introduce new money "THE AMERO" and merge the U.S. with Canada and Mexico creating a new nation called the North American Union.

The citizens of those three nations, in hope of salvaging their life savings, will embrace the merger as "the only solution" and America as we know it will be gone forever.

Want to thwart their plans? Buy small amounts of gold and silver bullion and take delivery of the metal.

Also, open foreign bank accounts and wire transfer some of your cash to those accounts, to be held in the LOCAL currency: British Pounds, Swiss Francs, German Deutschmarks but NOT "The EURO."

The EURO is a totally worthless fiat currency backed with nothing and by no one.

Between the gold, silver and foreign currencies you hold, you may avoid being totally destitute when the big shots pull the plug on the Dollar.

QUOTE

Celente Trend Alert - Economic 911 - Depression Next

9-18-8

"In 2008, Americans will wake up to the worst economic times that anyone alive has ever seen. And they won't know what hit them." -- Gerald Celente, 17 December 2007

As Predicted, Economic 9/11 Hits Wall Street:
Depression Next, Trend Seer Says

RHINEBECK, NY 18 September 2008 -- In 2007, Trend forecaster Gerald Celente predicted that an "Economic 9/11" would hit Wall Street in 2008.* As the world knows, on 9/15 it did.

The financial world is in free fall and very few saw it coming. As the The New York Times wrote, "A year into the financial crisis, few dreamed that the situation would spiral down, so far, so fast." (NYT, 15 September 2008.)

Celente was one of those "few", accurately predicting both the speed and the spiral.

Even now, in the midst of the chaos, Wall Street, Washington and the media, are in damage control mode, still unwilling to acknowledge the dire implications of the acknowledged facts.

According to Celente, the worst is yet to come, and it's going to go global. He said, that the old adage, 'when America sneezes the rest of the world catches pneumonia,' holds truer than the newly minted "de-coupling" theory that global growth can be sustained absent a strong US marketplace. "Equity markets worldwide have collapsed and there is nothing in place that will support them," said Celente.

"Lehman's Brother's was the biggest bankruptcy in United States history and it won't be the last. There will be many more 'too big to fails' and there won't be enough money to bail them all out. First it was Bear Stearns; then it was Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae, A.I.G.; tomorrow there will be others," said Celente, Director of the Trends Research Institute.

"And the failures will extend beyond the financial sector," he predicted. "In the coming weeks, months and years, we'll see a steady stream of banks, giant retailers, consumer product companies, manufacturers, leveraged buyout firms and home builders going under. The next economic shoe to drop will be in the commercial real estate sector," he said.

Asked how he was able to see what others could not, Celente marveled, "How could they not have seen it coming? Virtually every day since July 24, 2007, when the Dow took a 226 point dive, we've been bombarded with a steady stream of dire economic news and depressing data."

When asked if the stock market has now bottomed, Celente said "don't ask me, ask Cramer." The CNBC Mad Money guru, Jim Cramer, asserted on July 29 that the market bottomed from "the panicked lows it hit on July 15. "

"It's black comedy," said Celente, "I don't know whose bottom he was talking about. Even now, when you turn on the business news, the "experts" who didn't see the panic coming are still telling us the market has 'capitulated' and a 'bottom' is being formed.

"But I wouldn't be surprised if the Dow sinks to 8,000. When you add up the data it equals Depression," said Celente, who also accurately predicted the 1987 stock market crash, the Asian currency crisis, the last two recessions and the dot.com bust, to name a few of his major calls.

Celente has been alerting subscribers, clients and audiences worldwide, for over a year, of the severity of the crisis and what to do about it. "Our bold forecast for gold to hit $2000 and the dollar to dive gained credence yesterday when gold had its biggest one day gain ever and the dollar plummeted.

"We've made scores of rock-solid recommendations on how to preserve capital and prepare for the turbulent times ahead. But despite the hard evidence and loud warning bells, many people are still in denial. They hear what they want and hope against hope. Conventional wisdom holds that the financial turbulence will pass and the long-term fundamentals are sound. They are not. Empire America is collapsing and neither the Fed, Congress, the President nor the Presidents-in-waiting will be able to do anything substantive to reverse the course.

To schedule an interview with Gerald Celente or to contact the Trends Journal reporter for this story e-mail: <mailto: Dskriloff@trendsresearch.com>Dskriloff@trendsresearch.com

*(See "Economic 9/11, Escape Plan," Trends in the News, 12 November 2007; "Economic 9/11," Top Trends 2008, Trends Journal, Winter 2008.)
Trends Research | P.O. Box 660 | Rhinebeck, NY 12572

http://e2ma.net/go/1346377379/1224694/4477...ndsresearch.com

QUOTE

Withdrawals hit Bank of East Asia

Wednesday, 24 September 2008 13:31 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7633468.stm

The Bank of East Asia has denied rumours that it is in financial trouble, after thousands of customers queued to withdraw their savings.

After weeks of global market turmoil, lines of people quickly formed outside the bank's branches in Hong Kong.

In a statement, the bank said the rumours were malicious and untruthful, and they had informed the police.

The speculation was believed to have been spread by mobile phone, and drove the bank's share price down by 11%.

The rumours started earlier this week and customers descended on branches on Wednesday, despite bank staff handing out leaflets to the crowds denying that the bank was in financial difficulty.

'Sound and stable'

"The management of Bank of East Asia hereby states in the strongest possible terms that such rumours have no basis in fact" said the statement.

"The management further confirms that the bank's financial position is sound and stable," it added.

It also said that its total outstanding exposure to US bankrupt bank Lehman Brothers was HK$422.8m (£29m), and to US insurer AIG was HK$49.9m (£3.5m).

On Friday, Moody's Investors Service changed its outlook on the Hong Kong bank's credit rating from stable to negative, citing a recent insider trading case that exposed "lacklustre internal controls" at the bank.

Last week, the bank revealed a trading loss of HK$93m (£6.5m) that it says was incurred by a rogue equity derivatives trader who "manipulated" valuations to hide losses.

The discovery forced the bank to revise down its earnings for the first half of the year.

'Rumours are unfounded'

The Hong Kong Monetary Authority also dismissed the speculation and said the banking system as a whole was "safe and sound."

"I can confirm, categorically, that these rumours are unfounded," said Joseph Yam, the authority's chief executive.

"It is a very sound bank", he added.

QUOTE

Tuesday, September 23, 2008
http://halturnershow.blogspot.com/

 URGENT  TREASURY SECRETARY AND FEDERAL RESERVE CHAIRMAN "TICKED-OFF" AT OBSTINATE CONGRESS; WILL PLAY HARDBALL BY REFUSING FURTHER INTERVENTION

 BREAKING NEWS ***

Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson and Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke departed Capitol Hill Tuesday allegedly quite perturbed at the "obstinate" attitude of Congress over their $700 Billion financial bail-out request!

Both men answered scores of questions in front of the Senate Banking Committee and both reportedly felt as though Congress refused to acknowledge the urgency of the situation.

I am told the real fireworks took place after the public hearings, behind closed doors in the Senate. According to one senate staffer who claims to have witnessed the exchange, Senator Chris Dodd allegedly ripped-into Henry Paulson asking who the hell he thought he was dealing with by demanding Congress just fork-over hundreds of billions of dollars in under a week?

Paulson allegedly replied, "do whatever you want but as for the Treasury, we will not be intervening any further in the markets. When the markets crash, the banks crash and the economy goes under - and they will - the voters will blame you and dump all of you this November!"

Senator Dodd allegedly got so furious at this reply that his face turned beet red and he started roaring curses at Paulson with phrases along the lines of "you fucking Wall Street douchebags. . . ." The senate staffer said Dodd and Paulson almost came to blows!!

If Paulson and Bernake do as is alleged, and refuse to further intervene into the markets, things will go downhill very fast - maybe by the end of this week. Stay tuned and spread the word: Get out of the markets now. Don't wait.

QUOTE

Wednesday, September 24, 2008
http://halturnershow.blogspot.com/

Money Markets In Absolute Turmoil Wednesday; Described by experts as being "seized up"

As I warned yesterday, the markets are not safe and today's turmoil in the Money Markets proves me right.

Banks are not lending to each other and in the rare case that they do, the rates they are charging are exorbitant. Credit is almost completely unavailable now.

If this persists, and it is likely to do just that, the economy will simply stop as businesses are unable to fund payrolls, fund raw materials for manufacturing, fund inventory re-stocking.

We are so close to absolute financial collapse that I cannot tell you strongly enough: GET OUT NOW.

QUOTE

Financial and Economic Collapse has Begun!

Sep 23, 2008 - 01:46 PM
By: David_Vaughn
http://www.marketoracle.co.uk/Article6425.html

I believe I remember vividly that I wrote at the beginning of this decade around 2002 or 2003 that it would be under President George Bush's watch that the financial collapse would begin in earnest.

It is a historical fact that the few years following 1929 witnessed the addition of 10,000 or so new millionaires in the US . I suppose these were those out of debt and who had prepared for the events of those days. Those days are now repeating themselves once again in our humble generation. Our nation today is definitely hurtin' for certain. And the blood is running in the streets!

“Gold posted a record two-day rally, topping $US900 an ounce, on surging investor demand for a haven from credit-market turmoil.” “Central banks in the US , Europe and Japan led a global plan to pump $US247 million into auctions to ease the worst crisis facing financial markets since the 1920s.” "The world's financial system is under assault. It's going to take a long time to repair. People are full of Treasuries, and gold looks like another logical place to go." "There's been a shift in market psychology,' said Ralph Preston, a futures analyst at Heritage West Futures.

"This is pure momentum buying. We'll see gold at $US1000 next week." “Since the second quarter of 2007, banks worldwide have posted $US518.1 billion in losses and write downs related to investments in subprime mortgages. The Federal Reserve has orchestrated takeovers for Bear Stearns, American International Group and Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac. Lehman Brothers filed for bankruptcy this week.” businessday.com, September 19, 2008

Remember the story of Yertle the Turtle? Of course you do. An old Dr. Seuss classic. In the story this one little turtle in his small little pond made the decision that he would become the richest turtle of all. Not content with merely catching flies with his tongue and enjoying the cool and clear water.

“It's a shame that greed and stupidity aren't illegal” Voices.kansascity.com, 9-19-2008

Most other turtles in the pond were happy but that greed from ole' King Turtle was infectious. And who were those first little turtles who first began to bear the pain?

“Six months behind on their mortgage, Dave Evans and his wife, Suzie, packed the contents of their modest blue house here into a rented truck one day in July. The move came after weeks spent alternately crying and searching in a frenzy for somewhere to go. "At the end, it was so close we could have wound up on the streets," Dave Evans says.” usatoday.com

Generally, the folks at the very bottom of the food chain are those who begin to hurt first. And the poor middle class turtles at the very bottom of the stack carrying the greatest weight on their backs are the first to cry out.

“…Yertle (banks & financial institutions), the king of them all, decided the kingdom he ruled was too small.” Dr. Seuss

Now you tell me if the above line doesn't sound like the banker and financial elite of the past 20 years? And the mentality of today's financial market makers? Already wealthy as King Midas yet they are still not content. They want more. Much, much more. They want the world and beyond. Greed, greed, greed…

“President Bush asked Congress on Saturday for the authority to spend as much as $700 billion to purchase troubled mortgage assets and contain the financial crisis.” “…would be the most sweeping economic intervention by the government since the Great Depression…” ccn.com, 9-20-2008

Wow! This crisis sounds for real! How about a further and real dramatization of the real time events of this past week or so.

“SLAM. Slam. Slam. Slam. Like a scene from a gathering of Mafia dons, the doors of 30 black Lincolns slammed shut as their besuited occupants stepped out into a Manhattan downpour – and into a global financial storm.” “That storm broke yesterday, with stock markets tumbling around the world.” “The collapse effectively began at 6pm last Friday. The place: the offices of the New York Federal Reserve. The occasion: an emergency meeting of the most powerful figures in American banking and finance aimed at staving off a massive bank collapse.” “Cookies and coffee arrived. Then ghoulish crowds began to gather, reminiscent of those that had assembled in Wall Street 80 years ago as the stock market crashed.”

“The United States is now in the throes of its biggest banking crisis in 70 years, stirring terrible memories of panics, bank failures, bankruptcies and mass unemployment. First Bear Stearns had to be rescued. Then the government had to take over Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, the two largest US mortgage providers. Now Lehman Brothers.” “Indeed, just ahead of the market collapse, Lehman underwrote more mortgage-backed securities than any other firm.” “They may have driven their banks – and their shareholders – into enormous losses. But the former Masters of the Universe will never know what it's like to live in a subprime home.” "I think the least we are going to have to learn from this is that the whole of the financial sector simply cannot return to where it was before.” "It is terrible. Death. It's like a massive earthquake. It's final. Everybody is just finishing up." thescotsman.scottsman.com, 9-16-2008

And to sum up real well just what has happened this past week or so?

Ian L. Cooper, Gold World, 9-20-2008 - “…we learn that as much as $1 trillion could be needed to avoid an imminent meltdown.” “Worse, let's not forget these legendary institutions... each completely blown out of the water:

• Lehman Bros. and Bear Stearns... gone.

• Freddie and Fannie... now government-owned.

• Morgan Stanley and Goldman Sachs... their legs cut out from under them.

• Washington Mutual... their grave is being dug at this very moment.

“All in the last 3 weeks... “ “And if Washington Mutual fails, it'll need billions from the FDIC to cover depositors.” Ian L. Cooper, Gold World, 9-20-2008

And as I stated before all of this has centered around greed, greed, and more greed

“I'm ruler…of all that I see. But I don't see enough. That's the trouble with me.” “If I could see high, how much greater I'd be! “I'd be ruler of all I could see!” Dr. Seuss

So ole' Yertle commanded all the other turtles in the pond to stand on one another's back with Yrtle on top.

“Turtles! More turtles!” He bellowed and brayed. And the turtles ‘way down in the pond were afraid. They trembled. They shook. But they came. They obeyed.” Dr. Seuss

And what is happening to the majority of these poor ol' turtles who seem caught squarely in this massive financial mousetrap?

"It's all hands on deck," says Richard Yamarone, director of economic research at Argus Research. "Any and every entity, Treasury, the Fed and all central banks around the world are being summoned to right the potentially sinking ship. It's in everyone's interest that the financial, banking system is kept afloat." Usatoday.com

And all these castles made of sand with the first drop of a gentle ocean surf and returning tide begin to fade away back into the sea.

“Came a groan from that plain little turtle named Mack.” “Your majesty, please… I don't like to complain, but down here below, we are feeling great pain.” “That plain little turtle below in the stack. That plain little turtle whose name was just Mack, decided he'd taken enough. And he had. And that plain little lad got a little bit mad. And that plain little Mack did a plain little thing. He burped!” “And his burp shook the throne of the king (banking industry).” Dr. Seuss

And what is becoming the final outcome of many of these financial and banking institutions who watch as their kingdoms grind in the dust?

They become “…king of the Mud.” Dr. Seuss

“Stock markets around the globe plummeted again Wednesday after the U.S. government's surprise US$85-billion bailout of the world's largest insurer reignited fears of further fallout that could deepen what is being called the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression.” “As investors bailed out of stocks on Wednesday, they put money into safe havens including cash, gold and treasuries. Gold, considered a secure investment in times of turmoil, recorded its biggest one-day gain to date, surging more than US$90 an ounce.” "Everybody is worried that the financial system is grinding to a halt," Hugh Johnson, a stock market strategist and chairman of Albany, N.Y.-based Johnson Illington Advisors, told the National Post. "The worry is that another shoe is going to drop from this centipede.”

"The question is how worried should people be," he added. "Nobody has a good answer to that question." “Morgan Stanley and Goldman Sachs Co., the only two Wall Street investment banks still standing now that the Lehman, Merrill and Bear Stearns Cos. names are disappearing, saw their stocks get hammered on Wednesday amid fears they would be the next victims to fall because of their exposure to risky mortgage portfolios.” “Saddled with a portfolio of bad home loans, Washington Mutual Inc., the largest savings and loan company in the United States , is being forced to shed assets or put the entire company on the auction block.” financialpost.com

And even the humble insurance company and humble money market fund seem to be caught in this horrendous web.

“A firestorm raged anew in world markets Wednesday after a huge US bailout of insurer AIG failed to quell anxiety about the health of the global financial system and sparked fresh political controversy.” “Fears mounted that the US Federal Reserve's 85-billion-dollar (60-billion-euro) loan to rescue American International Group might not be sufficient to shore up wobbly financial markets.” “…markets quickly reversed course as investors stampeded into gold, oil and safe short-term US Treasury bills.” “Around the world, nervous traders flocked to gold and …” newsyahoo.com

Well, our money is at least safe in the old tried and true and trusted money market account?

“Friday the Federal Reserve and Treasury announced separate but complementary moves to shore up what was turning into a exodus from the $3.4 trillion pool of money market funds.” usatoday.com

Oh come on now! The conservative time honored mutual money market fund is at risk? Isn't this the place we have for years been told to park our cash in times of financial uncertainty?

``I have never seen anything remotely like this. The money market was typically the one thing that always worked,'' said Luca Jellinek, head of interest-rate strategy in London at Royal Bank of Scotland Group Plc. ``It's the cardiovascular system of the financial body. When this happens, it's like a heart attack.'' Bloomberg.com

And now the pied piper is coming to collect its children.

"In their bold response to the deepening financial trauma, the Federal Reserve and U.S. Treasury Department appear to have tossed aside the playbook that guided official thinking on the economy for three decades. As a wounded financial system teeters on the edge of the abyss, the economic consequences of allowing major financial institutions to take their market lumps became apparent." usatoday.com

Don't forget to email.

By David Vaughn
Gold Letter, Inc.
David4054@charter.net

QUOTE

BUSH CRIME CARTEL FOOLS THE WORLD'S LEGISLATORS AND BANKERS !

.....BUSH IS ATTEMPTING TO SUSPEND THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION AND THE MEDIA ON CNN HASN'T THE GUTS TO TELL YOU! .....

.....More To Be Found In The Cloak's Archives .... Join Below:

BUSH ATTEMPTS TO EXTEND HIS PRESIDENCY WITH FINANCIAL SHOCK & AWE!

THE FEDERAL RESERVE ARTIFICIALLY CREATED FINANCIAL CRISIS ON SEPT. 11, 2008.

Attack On Wall Street Orchestrated By The Same Criminal-Gang
Who Attacked The World Trade Center On Sept. 11, 2001!
There Is No Financial Problem Merely A Manufactured Crisis!

craig-oxley - September 29, 2008 11:30 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

The PRE-PLANNED Financial/Economic 911 of 2008

T. Anthony Michael – September 24, 2008

WHAT: A pre-planned collapse of the US (and global) financial and economic systems.

WHO: The same characters who perpetrated the original 911.

WHERE: New York City & DC, of course. Plus a sideshow in Washington state.

WHEN: The days surrounding September 11, naturally.

HOW: Instead of painted drones, missiles with fins and fake airplanes, they used the much more stealthy short seller.

WHY: To remake the economic/financial order of the world.

WHY Really: Think about it! And then ask yourself, "Cui bono?"

The 911 blueprint worked so magically for the world controllers that they were compelled to use virtually the same playbook. "If it ain't broke, don't fix it."

So, what's the real deal here?

By analogy, let's take a quick look at the 911 timeline and stack it up against the new 2008 Financial "911", as it began to unfold earlier this year.

The Bear Stearns collapse that began in March, 2008 is analogous to the 1st World Trade Center bombing in 1993. Just a warm up. This was preceded by a little failure back in January featuring Countrywide – the largest US mortgage lender.

The nationalization of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac marks the beginning of the new 911. Both in the DC area, they were the first to come down this time. Just as they struck at the heart of the military complex, this time they went for the jugular of the national real estate market. Remember – this is a financial 911.

Next came this year's version of the twin towers, building 7 and other assorted NYC landmarks in the form of Lehman Brothers, AIG, Merrill Lynch, as well as Morgan Stanley and Goldman Sachs in their "new & improved" form. Basically took out the whole of American investment brokerage, heh?!

And, of course, we still have Washington Mutual out there in the boonies just like the one that "crashed" in a PA farm field.

The 700 trillion dollar Bailout Plan is just like the Patriot Act, isn't it? Only this time it's maybe a 1 or 2 page document that confers absolute authority on the Executive Branch to do just about anything they want with the taxpayer's money. And they want it rubber stamped now. Not tomorrow. NOW!!! Without discussion, or unnecessary congressional debate. Talk about Shock & Awe being used against the American people, and their elected representatives!?!

Now we know we can expect further gyrations, panics and precipitous declines in the market and elsewhere, just as we had anthrax attacks in the Capital, beltway snipers in Maryland in October of '02, the 3/11/04 train bombings in Madrid, and the 7/7/05 bombings in London. Not to mention the 50 or so other synthetic terror events staged throughout the world to enforce compliance and create distraction.

The sudden and dramatic downfall of NY Gov Eliot Spitzer can also now be seen in its proper light. Having left the reservation one too many times, he simply could not be trusted to go with the flow. He had their numbers, their signatures, their addresses – the whole ball of wax, as well as his own reputation to burnish. The elimination of John O'Neil, Head of Security at the WTC, is quite similar, except that John O. – a great patriot – died on 911 having just been given the job.

To date, the most obvious and glaring example of this manipulated takedown is the case of a NY Senator. His letter to the FDIC contained confidential information that triggered the IndyMac bank collapse in July. California AG Jerry Brown was called to review the entire affair after the OTS Director explicitly blamed the letter for causing a run on the bank (3rd largest bank failure in US history). This episode is eerily reminiscent of Larry Silverstein's order to, "Pull it." just prior to the expertly controlled demolition of Building # 7on 911.

Just as 911 was perpetrated as a cover for: inaugurating the War on Terror, overtly advancing the NWO regime globally (in contrast to this previously covert operation), imposing a police state (Homeland Security) in the US (by gutting the US Constitution), UK and elsewhere, dominating and securing oil/gas reserves in the Middle East and Cacaucus (to include running energy pipelines through Afghanistan and stealing Irag's oil wealth via military invasion), jump starting the Afghan opium trade, etc., the ECO/FIN 911 of '08 is a cover for many of these same agenda items. However, there is one little item that is particularly high on the current agenda. And that concerns the derivatives market, which in its totality approximates somewhere between 500 trillion and 1 quadrillion dollars of instruments as of 2008. In fact, the sub prime mortgage defaults are just a tip of the tip of the iceberg when compared to the real megilla – DERIVATIVES. This is what they're really worried about, and having to cover for. Except this is a quadrillion dollar megilla that can't be covered without unraveling the entire capitalistic system, and its fascist corpocracy and kleptocratic oligarchy.

And then there is the teenie, weenie matter concerning the Federal Reserve, and its collection agency – the IRS. The man standing behind this curtain has a lot at stake, especially in the form of mountains of evidence that will indict, and convict, the entire system. Lots of evidence was destroyed during and after 911, as will happen after many of these Wall Street firms are taken over, nationalized, liquidated, merged and disappeared. The veil, however, has already been lifted.
Does anyone see a pattern here?!

The real lesson to be gleaned from this analysis is that events of such enormity and consequence are rarely spontaneous and unchoreographed. Especially when they happen just weeks from an era defining presidential election. They have obviously been planning this one for a long time, and it has been fastidiously engineered to have a very definite effect and desired outcome – a permanent planetary plantation (PPP).

The execution, thus far, has been flawless. Even for those of us who stood there on the 1st 911, and knew it was a fraud while the buildings were coming down, this one is exceedingly more difficult to penetrate. However, penetrate we will, until every last conspirator is sitting before the TRUTH AND RECONCILIATION COMMISSION spillin' the beans. The ultimate and lasting effect of these inquiries will be a New World Order of our making, not theirs. The only remaining, $64,000 question will undoubtedly be, "What do we do with them when we head them off at the pass?"

For the uninitiated, it may take quite a lot to wrap your mind around this extremely complex and convoluted plot, but, please, just be patient. As this drama plays out, the true intentions of the primary perpetrators will become manifest as they unwittingly reveal themselves by their handiwork. As Eliot Spitzer, no - Eliot Ness, nee – Sherlock Holmes once alluded to – a fingerprint inadvertently left as evidence is impossible to erase.

You see, the short sellers, unlike the "airplanes", are still with us. Each one had a target to take down which they did with amazing speed and dexterity. And the myriad transactions that converged to topple their prey are all preserved somewhere, in some huge database, with multiple backups to serve as confirmation of trades of staggering amounts. AHHH! Nothing like computers, especially when they're not confiscated and shipped off to China for permanent disposal.

May all financial wizards and economic soothsayers, henceforth, be inspired to stare into their crystal ball and divine the upcoming financial and economic events of global proportions with the keenest of acumen and sleuthing. As we shine the LIGHT of our collective awareness on these rapidly unfolding schemes, we will serve as beacons of revelation, and hope to the world.

Remember – we now know the script. We know the major players involved. We are able to watch the crimes being committed in real time.

Each of us has now been thusly notified, and empowered, to serve as a vector of dissemination of this vital and critical information. So -----> LET'S GET BUSY ! ! !

T. Anthony Michael 9/22/08

QUOTE

"In fact, they (Credit Default Swap Profits) can be so large that one might well wonder if the whole subprime fiasco was not set up just to allow speculators to profit wildly on its collapse..." --- Ben Stein Mon/Sept 22/2008

QUOTE

WaMu seized and sold to JPMorgan

By Henny Sender, Francesco Guerrera, Julie MacIntosh, Joanna Chung and Saskia Scholtes in New York
Published: September 25 2008 22:33 | Last updated: September 26 2008 15:02
http://www.ft.com/cms/s/0/7647d4d4-8b33-11...?nclick_check=1

JPMorgan Chase has acquired the banking operations of Washington Mutual which was seized by US regulators on Thursday night in the biggest bank failure in US history.

On Friday morning JPMorgan said it had sold $10bn in common stock to finance its acquisition - 25 per cent more than had been expected. Shares in JPMorgan were off about 3.4 per cent at $41.98 in the first half hour of New York trade; WaMu shares had lost nearly all their value.

Under the deal, which was brokered by government, JPMorgan will pay $1.9bn to the banking regulator, and acquire all insured and uninsured deposits, assets and some of the liabilities of WaMu's banking operations, including its troubled mortgage portfolio.

JPMorgan will not acquire claims by equity, subordinated and senior debt holders, said the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, which facilitated the transaction.

The intervention by regulators follows months of intensifying pressure on WaMu, the latest to be brought down by the mortgage crisis.

Shares in WaMu, which specialised in providing home mortgages, credit cards and other retail lending products, have lost nearly all their value in recent months.

An outflow of deposits began on September 15 2008, totalling $16.7bn, making WaMu "unsafe and unsound" to transact business, according to the Office of Thrift Supervision, WaMu's main regulator, which closed the bank on Thursday night.

Sheila Bair, chairman of the FDIC, said: "For all depositors and other customers of Washington Mutual Bank, this is simply a combination of two banks."

"For bank customers, it will be a seamless transition. There will be no interruption in services and bank customers should expect business as usual come Friday morning."

The FDIC's deposit insurance fund, which has been under growing strain amid the increasing number of bank failures this year, will not suffer any losses as a result of the transaction, the regulator said.

The FDIC held the bidding process on Wednesday that resulted in the acquisition by JPMorgan Chase, which has long coveted WaMu's branch network on the West Coast and the south-east US.

WaMu had assets of $307bn and total deposits of $188bn and its failure far surpasses that of $40bn Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Company, which closed in 1984 during the savings and loan crisis.

The acquisition by JPMorgan creates the largest US depository institution, with over $900bn of customer deposits.

But the deal is a rare setback for TPG, the private equity firm that led a group that bought a minority stake in WaMu in April, with a $7bn capital infusion.

WaMu's share price on Thursday fell 57 cents to $1.69. At Thursday's price, WaMu's market value had fallen to about $2.9bn – or about 15 per cent of its tangible book equity of $18.8bn – as of the second quarter of 2008.

The WaMu sale comes at a time when Congress is deciding the fate of the Treasury's proposed $700bn rescue plan for the financial sector.

JPMorgan said it would take a $31bn writedown in line with the bank's estimate of remaining credit losses related to the impaired loans.

It said it would acquire $31bn of net assets from WaMu that will cover that write down, but JPMorgan also plans to raise $8bn of common equity capital on Friday in what the bank called an "offensive capital raise."

"This deal makes excellent strategic sense for our company and our shareholders," said Jamie Dimon, chief executive of JPMorgan, during a conference call.

"Increasing our regional banking presence not only strengthens our retail business, but also benefits other business lines across our firm, including our commercial banking, business banking, credit card, and asset management groups."

"We had about 75 people at JPMorgan involved in looking at the data and in conversations with the company," said Mr Dimon. "This was probably one of the most thorough things we have ever done."

QUOTE

China banks told to halt lending to US banks-SCMP

Wed Sep 24, 2008
http://www.reuters.com/article/marketsNews...K16693720080925

BEIJING, Sept 25 (Reuters) - Chinese regulators have told domestic banks to stop interbank lending to U.S. financial institutions to prevent possible losses during the financial crisis, the South China Morning Post reported on Thursday.

The Hong Kong newspaper cited unidentified industry sources as saying the instruction from the China Banking Regulatory Commission (CBRC) applied to interbank lending of all currencies to U.S. banks but not to banks from other countries.

"The decree appears to be Beijing's first attempt to erect defences against the deepening U.S. financial meltdown after the mainland's major lenders reported billions of U.S. dollars in exposure to the credit crisis," the SCMP said.

A spokesman for the CBRC had no immediate comment. (Reporting by Alan Wheatley and Langi Chiang; editing by Ken Wills)

QUOTE

China banks told to HALT lending to U.S. banks

http://halturnershow.blogspot.com/

It had to happen sooner or later and China had to be first because they hold so many "dollars" in their national reserves. Folks, this is the clearest sign yet that the financial plug is being pulled on the United States.

Through its rampant deficit spending, our government has ruined this nation. They have run up over nine trillion dollars in national debt.

Through its politically-correct mandates to lend to minorities without checking their credit, verifying their employment or other normal credit vetting, the government caused the sub-prime mortgage crisis.

Governments around the world know our government is bankrupt. They know our government has little chance of paying off its debt. Now one such government, China, has told its banks to halt lending to U.S. banks. This will cause other countries to do the same.

With lending cut off, the United States will succumb.

QUOTE

Money Markets In Absolute Turmoil Wednesday; Described by experts as being "seized up"

http://halturnershow.blogspot.com/

As I warned yesterday, the markets are not safe and today's turmoil in the Money Markets proves me right.

Banks are not lending to each other and in the rare case that they do, the rates they are charging are exorbitant. Credit is almost completely unavailable now.

If this persists, and it is likely to do just that, the economy will simply stop as businesses are unable to fund payrolls, fund raw materials for manufacturing, fund inventory re-stocking.

We are so close to absolute financial collapse that I cannot tell you strongly enough: GET OUT NOW.

QUOTE

FDIC May Need $150 Billion Bailout as More Banks Fail

By David Evans
http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...id=amZxIbcjZISU

Sept. 25 (Bloomberg) -- Deborah Horn tugs on the handle of the glass-paned entrance of the IndyMac Bancorp Inc. branch in Manhattan Beach, California. The door won't budge. The weekend is approaching, and Horn, 44, the sole breadwinner in a family of three, needs cash.

A small notice taped to the window on this Friday afternoon in mid-July tells her why she's been locked out. IndyMac has failed, the single-spaced, letter-sized paper says; the bank is now in the hands of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

``The Receiver is now taking possession of the Bank,'' the sign says.

``I'm physically shaking,'' says Horn, an academic tutor, as she peers into the bank. Inside, an FDIC examiner is talking to six stone-faced IndyMac employees. ``I don't know when I'm going to be able to get my money,'' Horn says. ``I'm a single mom. This is the money I live on.''

Don't worry about Horn. She'll be all right, as will most of Pasadena, California-based IndyMac's 200,000-plus customers.

That's because the FDIC, created in 1934, insures all accounts up to $100,000 at its member banks, and it has never failed to honor a claim. The people to worry about are U.S. taxpayers.

The IndyMac debacle is taking a large bite out of FDIC reserves, and if scores of other banks fail in the year ahead, the fund will be depleted. Taxpayers will have to step in.

Worst Wave

Americans had gotten used to the idea that bank failures were as rare as a category five hurricane. No banks went bust in 2005 or 2006. Seven collapsed in 2007 as the credit crisis began to exact a toll. So far in 2008, 12 more, with total assets of $42 billion, have fallen -- that's the worst wave of bank failures since 1992.

IndyMac, which had $32 billion in assets when it went into receivership, is the most expensive bank failure the FDIC has ever covered. And that record may not stand for long.

By the end of 2009, about 100 U.S. banks with collective assets of more than $800 billion will fail, predicts Christopher Whalen, managing director of Institutional Risk Analytics, a Torrance, California-based firm that sells its analysis of FDIC data to investors.

``It's not going to be Armageddon,'' says Mark Vaughan, a financial economist at the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, Virginia and a senior lecturer in economics at Washington University in St. Louis. ``But it's going to be bad.''

FDIC's Secret List

The FDIC knows which banks are at risk; it has a watch list with 117 institutions. The agency won't disclose their names because doing so could cause depositors to panic and pull out all of their funds.

It won't take many more failures before the FDIC itself runs out of money. The agency had $45.2 billion in its coffers as of June 30, far short of the $200 billion Whalen says it will need to pay claims by the end of next year. The U.S. Treasury will almost certainly come to the rescue by lending money to the FDIC.

Regardless of who wins control of the White House and Congress in November, no politician is likely to vote in favor of leaving federally insured depositors out in the cold.

A taxpayer bailout of the FDIC would come on the heels of intervention by the U.S. Treasury Department and Federal Reserve to save investment bank Bear Stearns Cos., mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac and the world's largest insurer, American International Group Inc.

Uninsured Deposits

Emergency federal lending to the FDIC could swell the cost of government rescues of failed financial institutions to more than $400 billion -- not including the $700 billion general Wall Street bailout now under discussion in Congress. Under federal statute, the FDIC must pay back any loans from the Treasury.

That number would be even higher if the government were on the hook for uninsured deposits -- which amount to $2.6 trillion, 37 percent of the total of $7 trillion held in the U.S. branches of all FDIC member banks.

The subprime crisis -- which started in the suburbs of California and Florida and migrated through the alchemy of securitization to Wall Street investment banks -- has come almost full circle, spreading its toxins to the very lenders who first extended those teaser-rate, no-document mortgages to homeowners.

In 2006, IndyMac was the largest provider of mortgages that didn't require borrowers to provide proof of their incomes. And as of mid-September, investors were worried that Washington Mutual Inc., the biggest thrift in the U.S., would be the next bank to go belly up.

A federal takeover of Washington Mutual, which has assets of $310 billion, could cost taxpayers $24 billion more, according to Richard Bove, an analyst at Miami-based Ladenburg Thalmann & Co.

Slower To Hit

The reckoning that has run through Wall Street, claiming investment banks Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc. and Bear Stearns among its victims, has been slower to hit Main Street. In mid- 2007, Wall Street firms began disclosing losses on their packages of securitized home loans.

From August 2007 to September 2008, banks worldwide wrote down more than $500 billion. Regional banks, by contrast, have waited to write off their bad mortgages, hoping the housing market would improve and defaults would level off. Instead, they've risen.

FDIC-insured banks charged off $26.4 billion of bad loans in the second quarter of 2008, the most since 1991.

U.S. lenders, in their embrace of subprime lending, committed the same analytical fallacy as their Wall Street counterparts. When it came to assessing risk, they relied on the recent past to predict the near future.

Living in the Past

They were blinded by years of rising home prices and low mortgage default rates.

The FDIC fell into the same trap. As recently as March, an internal FDIC memo estimated the cost to cover bank collapses in 2008 would be just $1 billion, dropping to $450 million in 2009. It wasn't even close.

The IndyMac failure alone, which happened four months after that memo was circulated, will cost the FDIC $8.9 billion -- and the bill for all 12 collapses will be about $11 billion, the FDIC says.

FDIC Chairman Sheila Bair says the agency's forecast was based on models using data from the past 20 years, which included long periods with few bank failures.

``Given the change in economic conditions, we need to weight the more recent data more heavily,'' Bair says. ``You also need a good dose of common sense.''

Bair says depositors shouldn't fret about their banks. ``We do have a handful with some significant challenges,'' she says. ``Overall, banks are quite safe and sound.''

Bair is duty bound to say that, says Joseph Mason, an economist who worked for the Treasury from 1995 to 1998. Part of the FDIC's job is to reassure the public and prevent runs on banks. Mason says Bair's rhetoric masks the agency's inability to grasp the scope of the coming crisis.

`Ignoring the Problem'

``The FDIC and the banking regulators are ignoring the problems, hoping they'll go away,'' he says. ``They won't.''

The quake that shook markets in September may make the FDIC's task more complicated and expensive. With investment banks in eclipse, deposit-taking institutions will now play a larger role in financing the economy.

Earlier this month, Bank of America Corp. agreed to buy Merrill Lynch & Co. for $50 billion, and Wachovia Corp. and Morgan Stanley were in talks about a potential merger.

'Would Be Miraculous'

From 2002 to 2007, U.S. lenders made a total of $2.5 trillion in subprime mortgages, according to the newsletter Inside Mortgage Finance. ``Given the magnitude of the bad loans still on bank balance sheets, it would be miraculous for the FDIC to squeak by with losses of less than $200 billion," Whalen says.

On Sept. 18, in yet another stunning turn of events, Paulson proposed a plan that would cost the government, if not necessarily the FDIC, hundreds of billions of dollars more.

The Treasury secretary says the government will purchase toxic mortgage debt from banks in an effort to cleanse the financial system. In an unprecedented move, the Treasury also pledged $50 billion to insure nonbank money market funds.

Bair says Paulson's plan won't reduce the number of banks on the FDIC's watch list.

One reason the rolling financial crisis is hitting regional banks later than it walloped Wall Street is because the very system that is meant to protect depositors -- federal insurance -- has also served to prop up weak lenders. So has the ready supply of credit extended to banks by another government-chartered group, the Federal Home Loan Banks.

Because all deposits up to $100,000 are insured, most savers can be agnostic about where they put their money. They don't have to know -- or care -- whether a bank is making sound or foolish loans.

Unlike buyers of stocks or bonds, people who put their money in banks rarely do research about the soundness of the institution. That makes it easy for banks -- both prudent and reckless ones -- to raise cash.

Brokered Deposits Loophole

Banks have taken the FDIC's protection and run with it, thanks to the phenomenon of brokered deposits -- and a giant loophole in federal regulations.

As of June 30, Whalen says banks held $644 billion from brokers who offer customers a way to gain FDIC insurance for multiple accounts.

Promontory Interfinancial Network LLC, an Arlington, Virginia-based company founded in 2002 by former federal officials --including some from the FDIC itself -- has figured out how to help wealthy clients insure as much as $50 million each by putting their money into separate accounts at 500 different banks.

While the law does limit insurance to $100,000 per account, it places no ceiling on the number of different banks where an individual can hold accounts -- a loophole Congress failed to close even after the savings and loan debacle of 1984-1992.

Missing Discipline

Bair says brokered deposits can provide quick cash but also create potential danger.

``It is quite easy to get brokered deposits, and there's not a lot of market discipline with the brokered deposits," she says. ``When there's excessive reliance on them, particularly to fuel rapid growth on the balance sheet, that's definitely a high-risk factor."

The other big source of money for banks is the FHLB, an under-the-radar network of 12 regional banks created by Congress in 1932 to help lenders finance mortgages. Lenders had borrowed a total of $840.6 billion from the FHLB system as of June 30, up 38 percent from $608 billion in the same period a year earlier.

Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson, in a little-noticed action on Sept. 7, the day after he announced the bailout of Fannie and Freddie, extended a secured credit line to the FHLB to provide an emergency source of funding if needed.

FHLB Advances

Vaughan says credit from the FHLB is keeping some sick banks afloat and postponing the inevitable.

`What's going to happen," he says, ``is that weak banks will use FHLB advances to avoid discipline from funding markets. In some cases, that will keep their doors open longer than they otherwise would, all-the-while offloading more and more potential losses onto the FDIC and taxpayers."

Normally, the FDIC is no more than four initials customers see when they walk into their banks. In recent years, the agency hasn't had to close many banks, as it collected small amounts of insurance premium payments.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed the law creating the FDIC in the middle of the Depression. As part of the New Deal, Congress created a system of federal insurance to end bank runs by reassuring the public that depositing money in banks was safe. All banks paid the same rate for insurance.

Wave of Failures

The FDIC shares regulatory authority with other agencies. The Office of Thrift Supervision oversees federally chartered savings and loans, the Comptroller of the Currency monitors national banks, and state banking regulators review state- chartered banks.

The FDIC is the only one of these agencies that insures deposits.

By and large, the government's insurance system worked until the 1980s, when thrifts went on a commercial real estate lending binge, triggering a wave of failures and consolidation that lasted from 1984 to 1992.

In 1991, Congress changed the way FDIC premiums were assessed, requiring banks to pay rates based on how well capitalized they were for the risks they faced. As bank failures subsided to less than a dozen a year by 1995, the FDIC's reserves began to swell.

As a result, the agency cut to zero the premiums it charged to the 90 percent of the banks deemed safest. That free ride continued for 10 years.

`No Good Way'

In 2006, Congress increased insurance payments for most banks, averaging $5-$7 per $10,000 of deposits.

The insurance premiums imposed by the FDIC on the riskiest banks -- running as high as $43 per $10,000 -- are still far below the rates private insurers would charge, says Sherrill Shaffer, former chief economist of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

At the same time, charging struggling banks a fair price for insurance premiums may drive them into insolvency, he says.

``That can be destabilizing,'' says Shaffer, who's now a professor of banking at the University of Wyoming in Laramie. ``There's really no good way around that. It's an issue that policy makers and analysts have wrestled with for decades.''

Bair says the FDIC is gearing up for the coming wave of bank failures. She says she's developing a plan to raise insurance premiums.

The agency's Division of Resolutions and Receiverships has boosted authorized staffing levels by 48 percent, to 331, this year. It has hired 178 new financial specialists and called up 65 retirees for temporary service under a special program.

Bair vs. Enron

Bair, 54, an attorney who graduated from the University of Kansas School of Law, has challenged financial institutions as a regulator for more than a decade. President George W. Bush nominated her as chairman, and she was sworn in on June 26, 2006.

She replaced Donald Powell, a former Texas banker. In 1992, as a member of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, Bair cast the lone vote against Enron Corp.'s effort to exempt certain energy contracts from the agency's anti-fraud and anti- market manipulation enforcement powers.

Nine years later, Enron blew up in one of the biggest financial scandals in U.S. history.

As assistant secretary of the Treasury for financial institutions in 2002, Bair criticized abusive subprime mortgage brokers.

``Lenders have made loans with little or no regard for a borrower's ability to repay and have engaged in multiple refinance transactions that result in little or no benefit to a borrower,'' she told the Pittsburgh Community Reinvestment Group on March 18, 2002.

`Rock and Brock'

Bair has published two children's books. One of them, ``Rock, Brock, and the Savings Shock'' (Albert Whitman, 2006) is a tale of two twins -- Rock the Saver and Brock the Spender

To contact the reporter on this story: David Evans in Los Angeles at davidevans@bloomberg.net

Last Updated: September 25, 2008 19:54 EDT

QUOTE

“I believe that banking institutions are more dangerous to our liberties than standing armies. If the American people ever allow private banks to control the issue of their currency, first by inflation, then by deflation, the banks and corporations that will grow up around [the banks] will deprive the people of all property until their children wake-up homeless on the continent their fathers conquered. The issuing power should be taken from the banks and restored to the people, to whom it properly belongs.” -Thomas Jefferson 1802[/SIZE][/SIZE]

QUOTE

Asia Needs Deal to Prevent Panic Selling of U.S. Debt, Yu Says

By Kevin Hamlin
http://bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=2060108...Qi60&refer=home

Sept. 25 (Bloomberg) -- Japan, China and other holders of U.S. government debt must quickly reach an agreement to prevent panic sales leading to a global financial collapse, said Yu Yongding, a former adviser to the Chinese central bank.

``We are in the same boat, we must cooperate,'' Yu said in an interview in Beijing on Sept. 23. ``If there's no selling in a panicked way, then China willingly can continue to provide our financial support by continuing to hold U.S. assets.''

An agreement is needed so that no nation rushes to sell, ``causing a collapse,'' Yu said. Japan is the biggest owner of U.S. Treasury bills, holding $593 billion, and China is second with $519 billion. Asian countries together hold half of the $2.67 trillion total held by foreign nations.

China, Japan, South Korea and others should meet soon to seal a deal, said Yu, a former academic member of the central bank's monetary policy committee. The talks should involve finance ministers, central bank governors and even national leaders, he said.

``Whether some kind of agreement between them to continue to hold Treasury bills is viable, I'm not sure,'' said James McCormack, head of sovereign ratings at Fitch Ratings Ltd in Hong Kong. ``It would be unusual. If it became apparent that sovereigns in Asia were selling Treasuries the market would take that quite badly, it's something to be avoided.''

The global credit crisis, triggered by a housing slump in the U.S., has saddled financial companies with more than $520 billion in writedowns and losses, collapsing Bear Stearns Cos. and Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc. in the process. Insurer American International Group Inc. and mortgage giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac also were rescued by the government.

`Grave Threats'

U.S. Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson is urging Congress to pass a $700 billion plan to remove devalued assets from the banking system. Federal Reserve Chairman Ben S. Bernanke said Sept. 24 that the U.S. is facing ``grave threats'' to its financial stability.

China's huge holdings of U.S. debt means it must bear a large proportion of the ``burden of sorting things out'' in the U.S., Yu said. China is not in a hurry to dump its U.S. holdings and communication between the two nations every ``couple of days'' is keeping Chinese leaders informed and helping to avoid a potential panic, he added.

``China is very worried about the safety of its assets,'' he said. ``If you want China to keep calm, you must ensure China that its assets are safe.''

Currency Manipulator

Yu said China is helping the U.S. ``in a very big way'' and added that it should get something in return. The U.S. should avoid labeling it an unfair trader and a currency manipulator and not politicize other issues, he said.

``It is not fair that we are doing this in good faith and are prepared to bear serious consequences and you are still labeling China this and that, accusing China of this and that,'' he said. ``China knows what to do. We don't need your intervention.''

The U.S. financial crisis had taught China a lesson and that was: ``Why are we piling up these IOUs if they may default?'' China's economic expansion strategy, which emphasizes export growth that has led to trade surpluses and the accumulation of $1.81 trillion in foreign-exchange reserves, is the main problem, said Yu.

``Our export-growth strategy has run its natural course,'' he said. ``We should change course.''

China should stop intervening in the foreign currency markets and thus allow rapid appreciation of the yuan, he said. While this would cause pain for exporters, China could ease the transition by using its strong fiscal position to aid those who lose their jobs. It also should stimulate domestic demand to offset lower income from overseas sales.

Without yuan appreciation, China will continue to accumulate foreign reserves, which means further accumulating ``IOUs from the U.S.,'' said Yu. ``This is paper and it may default and it will not increase China's national welfare.''

If China doesn't allow the yuan to appreciate and continues to promote export-led growth it will lead to confrontation with the U.S. and Europe, Yu said.

To contact the reporters on this story: Kevin Hamlin in Beijing at khamlin@bloomberg.net

Last Updated: September 25, 2008 01:45 EDT

QUOTE

French leader says markets neared catastrophe

By GREG KELLER
26 Sep 2008
http://ap.google.com/article/ALeqM5hTwUAvQ...KIQLbQD93DVBQG1

PARIS (AP) — French President Nicolas Sarkozy said Thursday the world came within "a whisker of catastrophe" during the recent financial crisis and that those responsible for the crisis must be identified and held accountable.

In his first major public address since the start of the crisis, Sarkozy also criticized "abuses and scandals" involving executive pay, and pledged to intervene to halt these practices unless executives come up with their own solution.

"Self-regulation as a way of solving all problems is finished. Laissez-faire is finished. The all-powerful market that always knows best is finished," Sarkozy said.

"The world came within a whisker of catastrophe. We can't run the risk of it happening again," Sarkozy, a conservative, said in an address in the southern Mediterranean port city of Toulon.

Sarkozy warned that the ongoing crisis "will have consequences in the coming months on growth, on unemployment and on spending power."

"The crisis is not finished ... its consequences will be lasting," Sarkozy said.

The president said the crisis made it necessary to accelerate his labor and fiscal reforms, to improve France's competitiveness and help small businesses. He said the ranks of the country's huge corps of civil servants would be shaved by 30,600 next year, not replaced as they retire.

Speaking a day before the French government presents its 2009 budget to Parliament, Sarkozy promised not to impose an "austerity plan" that would, according to him, "deepen the recession."

France's economy shrank by 0.3 percent in the second quarter, but French government ministers including Prime Minister Francois Fillon and Finance Minister Christine Lagarde have denied the country was in recession, saying it was only a slowdown.

In a wide-ranging speech that touched on both the global economy and France's domestic economy, the president said, "We must identify those responsible for this disaster and they must be punished, at least financially."

Saying there had been "too many abuses and scandals" involving executive pay, Sarkozy warned business leaders that "either they agree on acceptable practices, or the government will regulate it before the end of the year."

The president said executives' pay "should be indexed to the real economic performance" of their companies.

Executive pay has emerged as a hot button issue in the crisis, with the U.S. Congress forcing the administration to accept limits on Wall Street pay packages as part of its proposed $700 billion bailout of the American banking system.

QUOTE

American Dollar Total Collapse worth less than toilet paper

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=4ItC_nT4rS8

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/4ItC_nT4rS8&rel=0&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/4ItC_nT4rS8&rel=0&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

Friday, September 26, 2008
http://halturnershow.blogspot.com/

MONDAY: ALL HELL TO BREAK LOOSE

Those of you who have been following my former radio show and now, this blog, know that I have a very good track record of telling you what's coming in the markets and when.

Tonight, as I write, it is Friday, September 26 at 7:05 PM and I regret to tell you that Monday all hell is going to break loose.

The reason President Bush, Treasury Secretary Paulson and Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke pushed so hard for Congress to act this week was because they knew that the last hour of trading last Friday was a "quadruple witching hour." During that hour, contracts for stock index futures, stock index options, stock options and single stock futures (SSF) all expire.

Quadruple witching hours occur only four times a year, on the third Friday of March, June, September and December.

Bush, Paulson and Bernanke knew that if a solution was not found by close of business today, they could not hold off the rest of the world any longer. The markets would start plummeting in Asia on Sunday night (East coast time) because with all the options and futures having now expired, the market is free to "correct" itself.

Congress has now failed to act, the quadruple witching hour has taken place and there is no bailout.

If Congress does not get a Bill passed by Sunday night, we should expect all hell to break loose when Asian markets open and the "correction" hits. Look for a severe, fast, downward spiral.

I'm talking about worldwide economic calamity beginning Sunday in Asia and spiraling out of control within a week or so. Two weeks tops.

If I am right (and I hope I am not) the world will see a financial catastrophe that will make "the great depression" look like a walk in the park.

Here's what you need to do this weekend

If you haven't taken my advice and gotten out of the markets already, you're too late. The only thing you can try to do now is prepare for the fallout of the worldwide economic collapse.

Go out and get yourself canned foods; enough to feed your family for a month or two.
In addition to canned foods, go out and buy 50lb bags of rice and oatmeal. You can use the rice as a bed for the canned foods for lunch and dinner and the oatmeal for breakfast. You may want to grab some honey and / or brown sugar to put on the oatmeal. You should also have dry milk powder to be able to mix with water to make milk.

If you do not yet have a gravity-fed water filter, go get one.

If you do not yet own guns to protect yourself and your family, try to buy one over the weekend. If you already own guns, get ammunition.

The reason you'll need the weapons is because civil unrest is likely to begin very quickly.

With economic collapse, supermarkets will run out of food fast. Roving bands of savage beasts will quickly realize they're hungry and come for your food. If you cannot protect yourself, they will kill you to get it.

The police will be totally overwhelmed rather quickly, so 911 won't be any help for you.

The cities will become nightmares within days and once the cities are emptied of food, the savages will have to come to the suburbs to get more. Rest assured, they will come.

Get together with your neighbors to form neighborhood defense teams. Get Family Radio Service walkie-talkies or CB radios and have them on a set channel for your neighborhood. If trouble comes, EVERYONE in the neighborhood must respond and use all deliberate force to restore order.

I hope this information helps.

Hal Turner

QUOTE

Voice of the White House September 26, 2008

TBR News – September 26, 2008
http://www.tbrnews.org/Archives/a2878.htm

"After 9/11, George Bush decided to put some hair on his sunken chest and fight a nice big war. The oil people and the Neocons whispered into his hairy ears that he could invade Iraq, save Precious Israel from an enemy and get all kinds of oil for the both of them. George is a nasty piece of work and as crooked as they come so he jammed an Imperial War Decree through a terrified Congress with ease. Now, with other friends of his, the crooked slimeball bankers, in danger of imminent meltdown due to their thievery, George has tried to jam another Imperial Decree through Congress. This one would give him huge amounts of money, unsupervised as to use, and make the docile American people eat the bill. This time a thoroughly discredited Bush has failed in his efforts on behalf of his friends and the American public has become aroused and infuriated to the point where another terrified Congress is refusing to heed the thoroughly discredited Bush. What will eventually happen, no one knows, but we now see that the Bush/Rove Might Republican Machine has run out of gas by the side of the highway and its crew of rodents are fleeing into the nearby woods for protection.

And may I give you several pieces of what I consider sound advice? First, if you have any extra money in one of the bigger banks, take it out and put it in a shoe box in your closet. If these banks start to collapse suddenly, which they are very likely to do, even the Government can't supply them and their branches with enough paper to cover deposits. The second thought is to take some extra money, assuming you have any, and buy gold with it. Get this from a reputable coin dealer and buy older European gold coins like British Sovereigns and Half Sovereigns, French or Swiss francs. Keep away from weird gold from small countries…very hard to sell if you need to….and never, never buy gold and let some big company help you out by insisting they will store it in their "safe vaults." Hah! And off to Aruba with them for sun and fun and their loot into Lichtenstein banks. Keep the money where you can get at it. Banks can no longer be trusted as we have found out the hard way."

QUOTE

Wed 9.17 SPECIAL PROGRAM
Steve and Guest Host Hawk join for an emergency broadcast, topics: Banking Issues and The Escalating Tensions Between Russia and the US Listen

http://www.stevequayle.com/qf_september_17_2008.mp3

QUOTE

The Real Reason for the Rush?

September 26, 2008
http://www.financialarmageddon.com/2008/09...setser-ext.html

One of the questions that has come up in connection with this week's scramble to pass a $700 billion bailout package for the beleaguered financial sector is: Why the rush? Why not take some time to fully explore the risks, discuss the financial, economic and political ramifications, and figure out ways to minimize the cost to taxpayers?

Although those in charge have attributed their sense of urgency to fears of an imminent seize-up in financial markets, it is conceivable that policymakers could have applied a few more of the band-aids they have been using prior to now so that the issues and prospective outcomes could be examined more fully in the harsh light of day.

Unless, of course, there is more to it than what our leaders are admitting to. In "Brad Setser: Extraordinary Times," the London Banker blog suggests the pressure for a rapid-fire solution stems from the precarious financial position of the rescuer-in-chief: the Federal Reserve.

Brad Setser has a fascinating insight to offer in his newest post, Extraordinary Times:

In the last two weeks — if I am reading the Federal Reserves' balance sheet data correctly — the Fed has:

Increased "other loans" to the financial system by around $230 billion (from $23.56b to $262.34b);

Increased its "other assets" by about $80b (from $98.67b to $183.89b);

Increased the securities it lends out to dealers by $60b (from $117.3b to $190.5b);

That works out to the provision of something like $370b of credit to the financial system in a two week period. And that is just what I saw on a cursory glance.

The most that the IMF ever lent out to cash strapped emerging economies in a year?

$30b, in the four quarters through September 1998 (i.e. the peak of the 97-98 crisis).

The most the IMF ever lend out over two years?

$40b, in the eight quarters through June 2003 (this covered crises in Argentina, Brazil, Uruguay and Turkey)

This is a very real crisis. The Fed's balance tells a story of extraordinary stress. I never would have expected to see the Fed lent out these kinds of sums over such a short-period.

My response:

Excellent and timely, Brad. I've been speculating all week that the pressure being used on the Congress to pass the Paulson Plan is the threat of Fed illiquidity. As of two weeks ago, the Fed had lent out more than $600 billion of its $800 billion balance sheet Treasuries against crap MBS collateral.

The Paulson Plan would have allowed the banks to unwind the repos putting the Treasuries back in the Fed, get cash for the crap MBS, and get more Treasuries from the issues financing the $700+ billion funding of the Plan. As a bonus, the Paulson mark-to-maturity price becomes the implicit Level 3 price for capitalisation of all the firms and banks in the system, giving them some breathing room to stay in business. Everyone wins except the poor American taxpayer.

The Fed is very close to being illiquid. That is the fear factor we are seeing at work, and the reason no one will discuss why the bailout is needed - only emphasise the urgency.

QUOTE

We Are Under Martial Law! As Declared By The Speaker Last Night! Rep Burgess

September 28, 2008 C-SPAN http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=l7B4laX1E70

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/l7B4laX1E70&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/l7B4laX1E70&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

Nonsence about McCain -Craig

Oct.7th 2008 Predicted for Total Financial Meltdown in U.S

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=wzuqG3h2HUA

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/wzuqG3h2HUA&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/wzuqG3h2HUA&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

Stock Market Crash is Inevitable!

Sep 29, 2008 - 01:41 AM
By: David_Vaughn
http://www.marketoracle.co.uk/index.php?na...rticle&sid=6512

We've heard that before, huh? But this time it is real.

"The US stock market could suffer a devastating crash with shares losing a third of their value this week…" "…a meltdown of 1929 proportions…" "Officials close to Paulson are privately painting a far bleaker portrait of the fragility of the global economy than that advanced by President George W Bush…" "…the message from government officials is that "the economy is dropping into the john."

"…We could see falls of 3,000 or 4,000 points on the Dow…" "That could happen in just a couple of days." "We're looking at catastrophe, huge, amazing catastrophe." "It's going to be really, really nasty." "This has the potential to make 1929 look like a walk in the park." telegraph.co.uk/finance

Below is an email I received this last week from a reader.

“Mike M. – “You see I am the person you were talking about. I have lived in a 1200 square foot home for 31 years and I served in the military for 4. I drive a truck for a living, 31years and still going. I live below my means and try to always watch what I spend money for. In the end these people and every single government figure will be held accountable. I wish to God I could put each one of them in the electric chair and just pull the level down for full power. I would personally laugh as each one of them…fried. You say damn this man is crazy; no I am not crazy I just believe in vengeance and fairness. I am sick and tired of a crooked government and a crooked system.”

And what is the average sentiment of our congressional leaders at this moment?

“For the most part, it seemed lawmakers were afraid to vote for the bill, yet afraid to vote against it.” usatoday.com, 9-25-2008

We witnessed a few years ago Enron, WorldCom, and other CEOs with failed companies. But those fellows were small potatoes to AIG, Meryl Lynch, Lehman Brothers. These large banking and insurance institutions understood the measure of the risk they were taking on these past 5 years. Or are we to understand that these Ivy League whores are just stupid?

“Lehman Brothers Chief Executive Richard Fuld…took the blame for the company's staggering second-quarter loss…” "This is my responsibility…" aol.co.nz, 6-17-2008

And how was Lehman Brother's CEO rewarded for his admitted responsibility?

“…Fuld (Lehman Brothers CEO), a 30-year veteran of the once-venerable Wall Street investment bank that filed for bankruptcy protection…was awarded $22 million…” forbes.com, 9-15-8

And a few years back?

“In the 40 years that Richard S. Fuld, Jr., 60, has been with Lehman Brothers, he has seen the Firm undergo many changes…” “…Fuld's leadership abilities stand out.” "Real leaders earn the right to lead," Fuld said…” “…Fuld was named to Barron's "World's Most Respected CEOs" list in 2006…” harbus.org, 10-16-2006

And what can we say about the largest US bank failure?

“Washington Mutual collapses in biggest bank failure in U.S. history” haaretz.com/hasen, 9-26-2008

Were there any internal warnings within Washington Mutual sending out red flags a few years ago?

“… Washington Mutual was careless, analysts say. The company failed to integrate a number of rapid acquisitions fully and didn't build sufficient room into its financial plan to weather an expected drop-off in mortgage lending…” “…that's meltdown time ." marketwatch.com/news/story/failure-heed-rate-warnings, 6-24-2004

But, hopefully, the CEOs were being prepared financially so that they personally would not experience Washington Mutual's coming failure! Thank the good Lord as this seems to be the case!

“Washington Mutual, the largest U.S. savings and loan, reduced Killinger's (Washington Mutual CEO) total compensation…$5.25 million from $14.2 million in 2006.” “Killinger's salary remained the same at $1 million last year to maintain the tax deductibility of his full salary…” in.reuters.com/article/governmentFilingsNews

Let's hear now about the new CEO who has replaced outgoing Killinger and how much this new dude will make at Washington Mutual as the new CEO.

“Golden parachute for Washington Mutual CEO” “ Washington Mutual's new CEO Alan Fishman -- who had been on the job a measly 17 days -- was paid nearly $20 million in the last month .” “That includes a $7.5 million bonus when he was hired Sept. 8. And it includes a mind-blowing $11.6 million cash severance now that the company has gone under. That's on top of his base salary -- a cool $1 million a year. Plus, he was eligible for annual bonuses worth up to 365 percent of his base pay.” “ All this while the company was posting billions in losses. (Yesterday, it became the biggest bank failure in U.S. history…) “ Read over all that again -- and explain to me why something doesn't need to be done about CEO compensation .” dallasmorningviewsblog.dallasnews.com, 9-26-2008

Why isn't the general public and lawmakers automatically jumping and demanding President George Bush's 700 billion recovery plan? For over 20 years the American public has been trained to always look for that magic silver bullet. Folks, there are no more silver bullets.

“How did things go so badly? The simple answer: greedy, fat cat investment bankers who used these complicated derivatives no one could understand to leverage themselves, make tons of money at the expense of the typical mortgage holder, and who will never experience any down side from their profligacy.” economist.com, 9-23-2008

These “Masters of the Universe” that created this chaos will ultimately down the road profit in some way off of the very mess they created. It always works that way.” “Despite steep decl

craig-oxley - September 29, 2008 11:33 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

The extremely low percentage point drop in the DOW reveals Bush's Hoax on the America people. Had there been a real and true emergency the DOW would have dropped at least 30 percentage points rather less than 8 percentage points. Someone somewhere ensured that not all of Congress was fooled by Bush this time as they were on 9/11/01.

Bush's Financial 9/11 Hoax could not fool all of Congress today.

Yours
Lenny Bloom

www.cloakanddagger.ca www.cloakanddagger.de

Note Ron Paul's words:

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/lFh6PU6qM9Q&rel=0&color1=0x2b405b&color2=0x6b8ab6&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/lFh6PU6qM9Q&rel=0&color1=0x2b405b&color2=0x6b8ab6&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - September 30, 2008 03:30 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

IT'S NOT A BAILOUT, IT'S A GLOBAL HEIST

The people behind the $10-$20 billion 9-11 insurance fraud are Maurice Greenberg, Henry Kissinger, Pete Peterson, Larry Silverstein. Documentation of the how and the when. Compiled from sources still available in 2004.

AIG is not bankrupt but has trillions of dollars in black funds from global narcotics trafficking and other global crimes through its controllers at perpetrator home in Denver, Colorado. The so-called Bailout of AIG at the taxpayers' expense is a foul trick to prevent any documentation from leaking out into the public. It was the same with the notorious CIA front Nugan Hand Bank in Australia: When no more needed, the bank building with all documentation fortuitously "burned down".

That's what's going on in America today as candidates are going at each other throats to win a blackmail contest called an election. EXCLUSIVE UPDATES FROM STEFAN GROSSMANN

READ GROSSMANN'S PDF documentation, 81 pages, 2 MB.... http://cloakanddagger.de/_Grossmann/911_Sc...eport_App_D.pdf

QUOTE

Russia suspends markets as shares slide

Sept 30 2008
http://edition.cnn.com/2008/BUSINESS/09/30....markets.close/

Both exchanges -- the main RTS index and the MICEX currency exchange -- reopened later in the day, the indices said.

Financial regulators ordered the suspension after the RTS plunged more than 8 percent in the first few minutes of trading. The Federal Financial Markets Service (FFMS) also suspended the MICEX in the first few minutes of trading in anticipation of big losses.

The turmoil in the Russian markets stems from concern over global growth following the recent instability in financial markets around the world.

The RTS is Russia's main index and is dominated by commodities, including oil. Russia's economy is essentially founded on the price of oil, which has been hit hard in recent months.

Oil prices have plunged around 35 percent since a high of $147 per barrel in July.

State-owned oil major Rosneft fell 8.2 percent and oil firm Lukoil lost 7.2 percent as oil prices dipped overnight below $100 a barrel. Mining company Norilsk Nickel plunged 8.6 percent and state-controlled VTB bank declined by 5.5 percent.

Investors also increasingly view Russia as a risky place to invest, in part because of the standoff between Russia and the West and the military conflict between Russia and Georgia in August.

And a sharp fall on domestic exchanges earlier this month -- resulting in a two-day shut down of trading -- led to a major loss of confidence among lenders.

Since then, the Russian government has poured in billions of dollars into the banking system in an effort to ease liquidity concerns.

"Globally, investors are running from risk," Moscow-based UralSib bank said in a note to investors, according to The Associated Press.

"With the price of crude crashing back ... plus worries about the outlook for stability within the country's financial system, Russia is firmly in that category."

QUOTE

Code Red Emergency: Survival Measures Required

9-29-8

RHINEBECK, NY 29 September 2008 -- The Greatest Depression has begun. Conditions will drastically deteriorate. We urge you to consider taking proactive and protective measures to secure your future before it's too late.

The "Panic of '08" that has gripped the financial markets is but one symptom of a much greater crisis. Empire America is collapsing. The crash is under way. Those in denial refuse to see it. Others pin their hopes on politicians, bankers and brokers to miraculously repair the irreparable.

There is no denying the economic facts and figures. While there is no turning back, there will be short-term respites. Use them wisely.

Every day the news is more dire than the day before. And it's not only America that's crashing. As the giant falls, the earth trembles. Economic chaos, social upheaval, political strife ... global markets are melting down. There are runs on banks. Wars - hot and cold - rage and simmer. The proof is everywhere.

Too Big to Drown

In America, political insiders and the economic high and mighty know the ship is sinking. As they ready the lifeboats to save themselves, they keep assuring the worried masses they know what to do to keep the ship of state afloat.

Do you believe the captain? Do you believe the crew? These are the people that ignored the warning signals and willfully charted the course toward destruction. Are they going to save you? Us?

Will Washington put your interests above their special interests? Who do you look up to with a greater mind than yours? Bush, Paulson, Bernanke, McCain, Obama, Dodd, Reid, Pelosi, Frank, Laurel, Hardy?

By their deeds you shall know them. They are committed to saving the "too-big-to-fails" while leaving the "too-small-to-save" to save themselves.

Know where the exits are. Make sure you can find your way to the lifeboats. Understand that at a certain point, the hatches will be closed, and under the "rules" of government, only first class passengers will have guaranteed seats.

Psychotic September

The pillars of America's financial system were destroyed when the Twin Towers were toppled on 9/11.

The foundation of America's free market capitalism were destroyed when an Economic 9/11 took out Merrill Lynch, Lehman Brothers and A.I.G. ... the world's largest investment banks, brokerages and insurance companies. Yet, despite the deafening sound, when the biggest bank failure in US history happened several days later, it barely made the headlines that Washington Mutual, with 2,300 branches and $310 billion of assets, had gone under.

As we write this, Wachovia, the sixth largest bank in the US, is being gobbled up by the imperiled Citigroup.

Do you need more proof?

Today the Dow plunged 778 points.

We are facing a crisis of unparalleled proportions. You must also rely on your own wits and good judgment. No one will save you but yourself.

Trendpost: We do not provide financial advice. We are trend forecasters. We forecast many more bank failures occurring across the United States and around the world. We forecast a high probability for the government to call a bank "holiday," at which time withdrawals will be drastically limited. Thus, while deposits will be FDIC insured, restrictions will be imposed on withdrawals.

We forecast gold will hit our predicted $2000 mark. Absent draconian government measures, similar to the 1933 Emergency Banking Relief Act which gave the Secretary of the Treasury the authority to "relieve" (confiscate) the gold of private citizens, prices will surpass $2000.

Gerald Celente
Founder/Director, The Trends Research Institute
Publisher, The Trends Journal
E-mail: <mailto:gcelente@trendsresearch.com>gcelente@trendsresearch.com
Website: http://e2ma.net/go/1368276962/1246858/4578...dsresearch.com/

© MMVIII The Trends Research Institute ®

QUOTE

Billion-Dollar Fund Manager: Gold To Hit $2,000, Dow To Sink To 5,000

Paul Joseph Watson
Wednesday, October 1, 2008
http://www.infowars.com/?p=4994

Billion dollar fund manager Mark Tice says that the Federal Reserve's ceaseless printing of dollars could cause gold to surge past $2,000 an ounce, while the Dow could fall below 5,000.

Tice, who manages the $1.1 billion Prudent Bear Mutual Funds from the Virgin Islands, told Bloomberg TV anchor Carol Massar yesterday that the time scale of his forecast will be determined by how quickly foreigners lose confidence in the dollar.

"Bernanke has essentially been known as, you know, possessing the printing press, etc. and, you know, it depends a lot on foreigners as far as how quickly they lose confidence in the dollar and what happens throughout the world as well," Tice said.

"Our currency's going to be diminished even though gold has been very, very volatile – down $250 just over a few months," he added. "I think it's going to head to $2,000 eventually and it will protect you. And I do think less equity investments make sense," said Tice, advising that owning precious metals was a way of reducing equity exposure.

Warning that the pain was far from over, Tice said, "We think that we're going to have to pay for the excesses of really the last five to 10 years of this excessive credit growth with a dramatic slowdown in the economy, dramatically lower markets. We're still above 10,000. We think we're going to, you know, fall below 5- or- 6,000 on the Dow and we think we're going to have to readjust the U.S. economy towards less consumption – where we pay for goods with goods."

Despite a recent SEC ban on the short selling of nearly 800 financial stocks, Tice advised that traders should still short the market, arguing that it's a legitimate trading practice.

QUOTE

The REAL REASON For The Bailout (Hint: FOREIGNERS)

30 Sep 2008
http://uk.youtube.com/watch?v=GqIFoBXGizc

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/GqIFoBXGizc&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/GqIFoBXGizc&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - October 2, 2008 06:30 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

Zurichers Say UBS `Won't Go Bankrupt' Like Swissair (Update3)

By Christian Baumgaertel and Antonio Ligi http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...LZwk&refer=home

Oct. 2 (Bloomberg) -- Hartmuth Wetzel stood in front of UBS AG's headquarters in Zurich, watching a flat-panel screen through a window for signs of a rebound in the Swiss bank's shares.

``UBS won't go bankrupt,'' said the 65-year-old industry consultant, who was debating the financial crisis in a crowd of mostly middle-aged men nervous about the fate of Switzerland's largest bank. Wetzel said the stock had already fallen too much for him to sell it, and besides, he has his cash in the bank. ``That's my hope.''

Writedowns of $44 billion, the most by any European lender, helped cut 70 percent off UBS's market value from last year's peak and eroded confidence in the country's third-largest private employer, which traces its roots back more than 150 years. UBS, which says the three keys in its corporate logo signify confidence, security and discretion, this year reported the first outflows of client assets in almost eight years, driven by Swiss customers.

Chairman Peter Kurer, 59, told investors today that the company will post its first profit in more than a year in the third quarter after reducing holdings of mortgage-related securities, sending shares up 8.1 percent. UBS has had to raise $27.4 billion from investors, more than a third of it from the Government of Singapore Investment Corp., to replenish capital.

``For the Swiss, it was a shock to see how much UBS has suffered,'' said Manuel Ammann, a professor of banking at the Swiss Institute for Banking and Finance in St. Gallen. ``If there were to be a grounding of UBS, which I don't see, it would be worse than Swissair.''

`Difficult Times'

The failure of Switzerland's national carrier in 2001 was a traumatic event in a country that prizes itself on efficiency. The story of what led to the airline's collapse has since become the subject of a popular movie.

``These are difficult times, this was a difficult quarter,'' Kurer said in an interview today. ``Some of our clients are nervous, but overall, our clients believe we are a good and rock- solid bank, by-and-large our clients remain with us.''

Under former Chairman Marcel Ospel, UBS pushed into investment banking, increasing its total assets to 2.27 trillion Swiss francs ($2 trillion) at the end of last year, more than four times the size of the Swiss economy. The bank expanded its subprime exposure at the height of the U.S. housing market, leading to the writedowns. Former CEO Peter Wuffli was ousted last year, and Ospel resigned in April.

`Everybody Is Panicking'

Kurer said today UBS will further curtail risk-taking and he forecast that 2009 will be a profitable year. UBS, which set a target of cutting the investment bank's balance sheet to 1.75 trillion francs by the end of the year, reached that goal ahead of schedule and plans to bring down assets by even more, he said.

``There has been too much speculation by the banks,'' said Andreas Bai, 56, a tram driver eating a bratwurst in front of UBS's headquarters on Bahnhofstrasse. ``Now everybody is panicking,'' he said, adding that he sold his shares in UBS a couple of years ago.

UBS plans to eliminate about 1,900 jobs in investment banking, equities and fixed income, two people with knowledge of the matter said earlier this week, adding to 7,000 reductions already announced.

While Kurer didn't give any figures, he said the bank plans to ``aggressively'' reduce costs and the potential for losses. Writedowns in the third quarter will be limited by the fact that the bank has reduced risks already. After two capital increases, UBS is ``well positioned to weather the storms,'' he said.

``No, UBS won't go bankrupt, Singapore is still there,'' said Peter Lampart, a 58-year-old mailman who had stopped his yellow motorbike in front of UBS to look at the share prices. ``Certain gentlemen were a bit greedy, but they haven't forgotten banking.''

To contact the reporter on this story: Christian Baumgaertel in Zurich at cbaumgaertel@bloomberg.net.

Last Updated: October 2, 2008 12:55 EDT

QUOTE

RE: The real reason for the bailout videos.
That man says it is to help foreigners who made bad bets. This video [dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/Gl27UziYXjE&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/Gl27UziYXjE&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Gl27UziYXjE goes into what those bets were. It related to the predatory lending that Spitzer blew the whistle on and was then politically assassinated for it. His conscience got the better of him and he paid.

QUOTE

October 1, 2008

U.S. Ships 800 Billion "AMEROS" to China; prepares to De-Monetize U.S. Dollar

http://halturnershow.blogspot.com/2008/10/...s-to-china.html

The US Secretary of the Treasury has informed the China Development Bank that the US has shipped $800 Billion of a new currency called the Amero, which is to be based upon the merging of the economies of The United States, Mexico and Canada into what is termed as The North American Union.

The current American debt obligation to China, currently based on the US Dollar, is now estimated to be the staggering sum of $2.5 Trillion, and which this new Amero will be exchanged for $400 Billion of this debt as the current American currency is set to be devalued by 50 percent before the end of the year.

Virtually unknown to the American people is that their current leader of the US Department of Treasury, Henry M. Paulson, Jr., has been tasked by President Bush to lead the efforts to join the economies of the US, Canada and Mexico and is also the head of the North American Development Bank, the bi-national financial institution established by the United States and Mexico to further the merging of their economies, and the leader of the Border Environment Cooperation Commission (BECC), the organization created by the governments of the United States and Mexico to further the implementation of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA).

This is important to note as the final provisions of the NAFTA Agreement were implemented on January 1, 2008, leaving only the final merging of the economies of the US, Mexico and Canada into a North American Union to be accomplished, of which we can read:

“President Bush is pursuing a globalist agenda to create a North American Union, effectively erasing our borders with both Mexico and Canada. This was the hidden agenda behind the Bush administration's true open borders policy.

Secretly, the Bush administration is pursuing a policy to expand NAFTA politically, setting the stage for a North American Union designed to encompass the U.S., Canada, and Mexico. What the Bush administration truly wants is the free, unimpeded movement of people across open borders with Mexico and Canada.

President Bush intends to abrogate U.S. sovereignty to the North American Union, a new economic and political entity which the President is quietly forming, much as the European Union has formed.”

It is also interesting to note that American economists have been warning about the replacing of the US Dollar with the Amero, due to pressure from China, for nearly two years, and as we can read in this December, 2006 report titled Analysts: Dollar collapse would result in 'amero', and which says:

“As WND reported earlier this week, in an unusual move, the Bush administration is sending virtually the entire economic "A-team" to visit China for a "strategic economic dialogue" in Beijing Thursday and Friday. Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson and Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke are leading the delegation, along with five other cabinet-level officials, including Secretary of Commerce Carlos Gutierrez. Also in the delegation will be Labor Secretary Elaine Chao, Health and Human Services Secretary Mike Leavitt, Energy Secretary Sam Bodman, and U.S. Trade Representative Susan Schwab.

But Chapman doubts the trip will help the Fed to engineer a slow dollar slide.

“The Chinese are going to do what the Chinese want to do, not what we want them to do," he said. "I believe the Chinese are going to send Treasury Secretary Paulson and Fed Chairman Bernanke home packing, with little or nothing to show for the trip."

How severe will the coming dollar collapse be?

"People in the U.S. are going to be hit hard," Chapman warned. "In the severe recession we are entering now, Bush will argue that we have to form a North American Union to compete with the Euro."

"Creating the amero," Chapman explained, "will be presented to the American public as the administration's solution for dollar recovery. In the process of creating the amero, the Bush administration just abandons the dollar.”

The prophetic warnings of these American economists are, indeed, coming to pass as during the month of September alone, 10 years worth of gains on US stock markets have been wiped out in their entirety and bank runs are now occurring in the United States for the first time since the days of the Great Depression leading to the failure of 13 banks, some of their largest, and the imminent failure of 117 more forecasted by the US government.

US Treasury Secretary Paulson, however, continues leading the charge attempting to force upon the American people the 'final peg' to their own demise by completely bankrupting the United States leaving no other choice but to completely discard the almost totally worthless US Dollar and its replacement with the Amero.

It goes without saying that the American people will greatly resist the replacement of their Dollar, but this cannot be said when tens of millions of them are without jobs and their life savings have become worthless leaving them with no other choice but accept what their own leaders have planned for them all along.

For myself, I think that the day such an announcement of the Amero replacing the Dollar is made, is the day I may be left with no choice but to start killing the people involved in destroying my nation.

Posted by HalTurnerShow.com at 10/01/2008 06:25:00 AM

QUOTE

Hawk's Emergency Alert

October 3, 2008
Hawk
http://www.stevequayle.com/News.alert/08_M...Hawk.alert.html

The following information updates pertain to Hawk's Emergency Alert of 10/2 re. the possibilities and probabilities of a "Bank Holiday" Economic Emergency and Martial Law declarations. With the gravity of such operations and the potential for very near time frame of their occurrence.....It is imperative to be vigiliant.

UPDATES

1. VERY DETAILED REPORTS FROM MULTIPLE OBSERVORS OF HIGHLY DISCIPLINED ORIENTAL TROOPS IN HUMMVEES, TRUCKS, AND WITH BLACK HAWK HELO AIR SUPPORT IN THE VICINITY OF EVERETT, WASHINGTON .

COLUMN MOVED TOWARD EVERETT AREA MILITARY HARBOR WHERE TWO LARGE TRANSPORT SHIPS OFFLOADED ADDITIONAL EQUIPMENT AND SUPPLIES TO THESE TROOPS. THEIR BILLETING ARRANGEMENTS ARE UNKNOWN THOUGH SOME ANCILLARY INFORMATION FROM ANOTHER SOURCE MAY POINT AT POSSIBILITY OF USE OF OLDER BUILDINGS PERHAPS UNDER HUD CONTROL FOR THEIR BILLETING.. NO CONFIRMATION OF THIS HAS BEEN MADE BUT THESE TROOPS ORIGINATED FROM OUTSIDE MIL BASE AREAS AND DROVE TO MIL PORT FACILITIES PER THE ORIGINAL FORWARD OBSERVOR. ANY ADDITIONAL CONFIRMATIONS OR ANCILLARY INFORMATION IS NEEDED ASAP.

NOTE: CLINTON'S OMNIBUS CRIME BILL IN THE 1990'S DID PROVIDE FOR THE HIRING OF 50,000 FORMER BRITISH COLONY HONG KONG POLICE. CONTRACTS FOR UPDATING THEIR SIDE ARMS WERE LET AND INCLUDED TRADE INS OF .38 CALIBER REVOLVERS OF THESE POLICE FOR SEMI AUTO PISTOLS. INCIDENTS INVOLVING ALLEGED CHINESE HONG KONG POLICE WERE REPORTED REGARDING TRAINING OF SAME POSSIBLY UNDER FEMA COG AUSPICES.

INSIGNIA ON UNIFORMS AND TRANSPORT OF ALLEGED FEMA HK TRAINEES WERE REPORTED DURING UNUSUAL ENCOUNTERS IN RURAL AREAS WITH HIGHLY DISCIPLINED ORIENTAL TROOPERS IN BOTH VEHICLES AND IN AN UNUSUAL LANDING OF A BLACK HELO ON A ROADWAY WHERE TROOPERS GOT OUT OF HELO AND MADE AN UNUSUAL TRAFFIC STOP ON A LONE VEHICLE.....FEMA TRIANGLE WAS REPORTED BY JIM KEITH AND OTHERS AT THE TIME.

ADDITIONALLY, AN UNSUAL MURDER INCIDENT BETWEEN TWO CHINESE ON AN INDOOR GUN RANGE IN KANSAS... UNOFFCIALLY WAS REPORTED AS A FORMER HK POLICEMAN ENGAGING IN A PISTOL DUEL WITH AN ALLEGED RED CHINESE AGENT (STUDENT)AND KILLING SAID ALLEGED AGENT. OFFICIAL REPORTS WILL PROBABLY BE UN- OBTAINABLE THOUGH NEWS ACCOUNTS DID COVER THIS INCIDENT WITH OFFICIAL STATEMENTS BUT SKETCHY DETAILS.

2. REPORTS OF COMMUNCIATIONS BY UNUSUAL UNITS INSIDE CONUS SPEAKING CHINESE OR OTHER ORIENTAL LANGUAGE FOR BRIEF PERIODS OPERATING ON THE 40 METER HAM BAND BRIEFLY HAVE BEEN VERIFIED FROM A FEW DAYS AGO.

3. NEW UNUSUAL RADIO NEXUS POINT OPERATION FOR ACTING AS A RELAY OF SOME FOREIGN SPEAKING COMMUNCIATIONS INTO THE U.S. MIL NETS...SEEMS TO SUPERCEDE AND TAKE PRECEDENCE OVER SOME NATIONAL MIL COMSTAS.....WHO ARE THEN BEING TOLD TO REPEAT.... SOME SURPRISE, IRRITATION, AND AGITATION IS EVIDENT U.S. MIL OPERATORS VOICE INFLECTIONS .

NEW RADIO OPERATORS OF THIS TRANSLATION/RELAY NEXUS ARE REPORTED TO BE CORECT IN MANNER AND PROCEDURE .....BUT ARE NOT U.S. MILITARY IN NATURE AND ARE EITHER PRIVATE CONTRACTORS, FEMA , OR EXPERT ENGLISH SPEAKERS OF SOME FOREIGN CONTINGENT. THESE COMMUNICATIONS SEEM TO BE ORIENTED TO PACIFIC NORTHWEST REGION, THOUGH GROUND STATION OF THE NEW HF NEXUS COULD BE ANYWHERE CONUS. THIS CODE NAMED RADIO NEXUS HAS BEEN ESTABLISHING HF COMM WITH THE SPECIAL UNITS IN #2 ABOVE.

4. MULTIPLE COAST GUARD PORTABLE COMAND AND CONTROL MODULES HAVE LEFT MISSISSIPPI HEADING WEST ON TRANSPORT, BUT FINAL DESTINATION UNKNOWN PER KNOWLEDGEABLE FORWARD OBSERVOR.

5. DISCUSSION OF THREATS OF MARTIAL BEING DISCUSSED ON THE U.S HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FLOOR BETWEEN MEMBERS WAS CITED BY REP. SHERMAN AND CAN QUOTES CAN BE SEEN IN AN LA TIMES BUSINESS SECTION ARTICLE ONLINE AND APPARENTLY ON THE C-SPAN ARCHIVES.

APPARENTLY DURING THE WHIP ACTIVITIES DURING THE HOUSE VOTE ON THE BAIL OUT BILL, THREATS AND SCARE TACTICS BEING USED UPON UNSURE AND NAY VOTING MEMBERS.....INCLUDED SPECIFIC REFERENCE.... IF THE BILL FAILED THAT MARTIAL LAW IN U.S. WOULD OCCUR.

RECALL THE REPORTS OF THE CLOSED DOOR MEETING IN THE HOUSE BACK IN THE SPRING WHERE DISCUSSIONS OF IMPENDING FINANCIAL CRISES AND POSSIBLE MARTIAL LAW WERE ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN DISCUSSED AT THAT TIME.

6. ADDITIONAL INFORMATION PUBLISHED IN THE 321 GOLD HAT TRICK NEWSLETTER ...DETAILS POSSIBLE NOTIFICATION OF BANK OF AMERICA BRANCH MANAGER RE. "BANK HOLIDAY" POTENTIALS AND WAS COMMUNICATED APPARENTLY BY ONE OF THOSE BRANCH EMPLOYEES KNOWN BY THE AUTHOR OF THAT NEWSLETTER.

7. REPORTS EARLIER IN WEEK OF U.S. MARINE COLUMN MOVING ON LONG ISLAND NEW YORK ....." ALL IN FULL BATTLE RATTLE" ACCORDING TO THE FORWARD OBSERVOR. DESTINATION UNKOWN AND CURRENT BILLET OR MISSION UNKOWN.

8.RECENT COMPLETE CONSOLIDATION OF MILITARY COMMAND STRUCTURES IN U.S. AND REALTIONSHIP OF A U.S. MARINE CORPS GENERAL AS ONE THE CURRENT NATO HONCHOS TO THIS CONSOLIDATION WERE POINTED OUT IN INFORMATION SENT TO STEVE QUAYLE ON THURSDAY 10/2/2008 BY A VERY ASTUTE AND MILITARY KNOWLEDGEABLE SOURCE.

THERE ARE NUMEROUS OTHER REPORTS BEING RECEIVED ESPECIALLY RE. MIL AIRCRAFT MOVEMENTS AND USEAGE OF OLDER AIRFIELDS WHERE THESE AIRCRAFT NORMALLY DO NOT OPERATE AT ALL (PARTICULARLY IN THE SOUTH EAST CONUS).....AS MORE SPECIFIC INFORMATION COMES IN IT WILL BE REPORTED IN ADDITIONAL UPDATES IF NEEDED.

THERE IS SOMETHING HIGHLY UNUSUAL GOING ON INSIDE CONUS WITH MILITARY UNITS NOW.....AND AS THOSE WHO KNOW.....THERE ARE FACTIONS AT WAR WITH EACH OTHER.....MORE LUCIFERIAN NAZI ORIENTATED GROUPS VS. THOSE WHO ARE CONSTITUTIONALLY ORIENTED AND WITH FAITH IN THE LORD.

THERE IS POWER IN THE BLOOD OF JESUS.

Hawk

craig-oxley - October 5, 2008 03:23 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

Rothschilds need to save "The System" BBC - October 2nd

October 2008

Crawling out the woodwork , a rare appearance from a Rothschild and the need for the bailout to happen. It's a done deal. We have got to save thier system for them. Wake up - the deal is NOT done yet - nor should it be.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=YOy5HNIKVFs

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/YOy5HNIKVFs&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/YOy5HNIKVFs&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

800 Billion Amero Sent To China

http://uk.youtube.com/watch?v=fMS8ojFlSxE

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/fMS8ojFlSxE&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/fMS8ojFlSxE&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

01 October 2008

US Sends $800 Billion In New Amero Currency To China

FAIR USE: This video is posted for the purpose of education.

Short clip from Sean David Morton's appearance on Coast to Coast AM with George Noory in March, 2008.

When you watch this video, don't jump to conclusions. Do the research and think for yourself.

Resource: Sorcha Faal, and as reported to her Western Subscribers (Traducción al Español abajo)

A chilling report circulating in the Kremlin today states that the US Secretary of the Treasury has informed the China Development Bank that the US has shipped $800 Billion of a new currency called the Amero, which is to be based upon the merging of the economies of The United States, Mexico and Canada into what is termed as The North American Union.

The current American debt obligation to China, currently based on the US Dollar, is now estimated to be the staggering sum of $2.5 Trillion, and which this new Amero will be exchanged for $400 Billion of this debt as the current American currency is set to be devalued by 50 percent before the end of the year.

Virtually unknown to the American people is that their current leader of the US Department of Treasury, Henry M. Paulson, Jr., has been tasked by President Bush to lead the efforts to join the economies of the US, Canada and Mexico and is also the head of the North American Development Bank, the bi-national financial institution established by the United States and Mexico to further the merging of their economies, and the leader of the Border Environment Cooperation Commission (BECC), the organization created by the governments of the United States and Mexico to further the implementation of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA).

This is important to note as the final provisions of the NAFTA Agreement were implemented on January 1, 2008, leaving only the final merging of the economies of the US, Mexico and Canada into a North American Union to be accomplished, of which we can read:

President Bush is pursuing a globalist agenda to create a North American Union, effectively erasing our borders with both Mexico and Canada. This was the hidden agenda behind the Bush administration's true open borders policy.

Secretly, the Bush administration is pursuing a policy to expand NAFTA politically, setting the stage for a North American Union designed to encompass the U.S., Canada, and Mexico. What the Bush administration truly wants is the free, unimpeded movement of people across open borders with Mexico and Canada.

President Bush intends to abrogate U.S. sovereignty to the North American Union, a new economic and political entity which the President is quietly forming, much as the European Union has formed.

It is also interesting to note that American economists have been warning about the replacing of the US Dollar with the Amero, due to pressure from China, for nearly two years, and as we can read in this December, 2006 report titled Analysts: Dollar collapse would result in 'amero', and which says:

As WND reported earlier this week, in an unusual move, the Bush administration is sending virtually the entire economic "A-team" to visit China for a "strategic economic dialogue" in Beijing Thursday and Friday. Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson and Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke are leading the delegation, along with five other cabinet-level officials, including Secretary of Commerce Carlos Gutierrez. Also in the delegation will be Labor Secretary Elaine Chao, Health and Human Services Secretary Mike Leavitt, Energy Secretary Sam Bodman, and U.S. Trade Representative Susan Schwab.

But Chapman doubts the trip will help the Fed to engineer a slow dollar slide.

The Chinese are going to do what the Chinese want to do, not what we want them to do," he said. "I believe the Chinese are going to send Treasury Secretary Paulson and Fed Chairman Bernanke home packing, with little or nothing to show for the trip."

How severe will the coming dollar collapse be?

"People in the U.S. are going to be hit hard," Chapman warned. "In the severe recession we are entering now, Bush will argue that we have to form a North American Union to compete with the Euro."

"Creating the amero," Chapman explained, "will be presented to the American public as the administration's solution for dollar recovery. In the process of creating the amero, the Bush administration just abandons the dollar

QUOTE

Lehman Cash Crunch Caused by Lender JPMorgan, Creditors Say

By Linda Sandler and Jeff St.Onge http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...itck&refer=home

Oct. 4 (Bloomberg) -- Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc.'s main lender and clearing agent, JPMorgan Chase & Co., caused the liquidity crisis that led to Lehman's collapse, creditors said.

JPMorgan had more than $17 billion of Lehman's cash and securities three days before the investment bank filed the biggest bankruptcy in history on Sept. 15, the creditors committee said in a filing Oct. 2 in bankruptcy court in Manhattan. Denying Lehman access to the assets on Sept. 12, the bank ``froze'' Lehman's account, the creditors claimed.

JPMorgan, the biggest U.S. bank by deposits, financed Lehman's brokerage operations with daily advances, while money market funds and other short-term lenders provided overnight loans, according to bankruptcy court documents. When JPMorgan shut Lehman off from funds, Lehman ``suffered an immediate liquidity crisis that could have been averted by any number of events, none of which transpired,'' according to the filing.

The creditors asked the judge in charge of the case to let them interview a witness and request relevant documents from JPMorgan and to pursue possible legal claims. U.S. Bankruptcy Judge James M. Peck is scheduled to hold a hearing Oct. 16 on that request, the creditors said.

Harold Novikoff, a lawyer for JPMorgan at Wachtell Lipton Rosen & Katz, declined to comment, saying he didn't see the filing until midnight. He previously said in court hearings that the bank continued to finance Lehman's brokerage after its parent went into Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceedings.

$23 Billion Claim

Brian Marchiony, a spokesman for New York-based JPMorgan, declined to comment. Creditors' lawyers at Quinn Emanuel Urquhart Oliver & Hedges didn't return calls seeking comment.

Once the biggest U.S. underwriter of mortgage-backed securities, Lehman was stuck with the assets as their values fell and it searched unsuccessfully for a merger partner.

Lehman had surplus cash of $15 billion when it announced preliminary third-quarter results on Sept. 10, even after taking an estimated net loss of $3.9 billion and marking down assets by $7.8 billion, the creditors said in the filing.

The stock of the investment bank was increasingly targeted by short sellers after Moody's Corp. said that same day it might lower its ratings for Lehman unless it reached a ``strategic'' merger with a stronger partner, according to the filing.

Lehman seemed to have enough liquidity to meet its obligations on Sept. 12, the Friday before its bankruptcy filing, creditors said, referring to the cash and collateral at JPMorgan. In addition, the bank held ``highly liquid'' securities bought with secured financing amounting to $188 billion from banks and other lenders, they said.

Funds Frozen

The ``freezing'' of Lehman's account meant it no longer had funds to support its operations, they said.

Explaining Lehman's collapse to the judge after the bankruptcy filing, company executives and lawyers said the $188 billion pool of loans mostly financed the bank's least liquid assets, subprime mortgages and structured financial instruments.

``Secured financing fell out of reach'' because of the devaluation of assets securing the loans, forcing Lehman to deplete its cash to continue trading, said lawyer Shai Waisman of Weil Gotshal & Manges in a Sept. 16 court hearing. ``This began the stranglehold on Lehman,'' Waisman said.

JPMorgan is Lehman's largest secured creditor, with an estimated claim of $23 billion, according to a Sept. 25 court filing. Unsecured creditors have claims on Lehman that might be worth 15 cents on the dollar or less, according to analysts including Peter Plaut of Imperial Capital LLC.

$87 Billion Advance

After Lehman's filing, JPMorgan advanced the company $87 billion on Sept.15 and $51 billion the next day to pay short- term lenders and settle trades, according to court documents.

``There was a great amount of concern, and that concern was expressed as well to us by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York'' that ``we would be creating market havoc had we not made an advance at that time,'' JPMorgan lawyer Novikoff said in court Sept. 16 as he asked for ``comfort'' that the bank's post- bankruptcy loans would continue to be secured.

The bank's collateral was valued in court at $17 billion, including almost $7 billion in cash and a claim on the assets of Lehman's brokerage, by Weil Gotshal.

Lehman, once the fourth-largest U.S. investment bank, filed for bankruptcy with debt of $613 billion as of May 31.

The creditor panel, reconfigured yesterday, includes Bank of New York Mellon Corp. and Wilmington Trust Co. as trustees for bondholders owed about $127.6 billion, according to court papers. Vanguard Group Inc., Shinsei Bank Ltd., Mizuho Corporate Bank Ltd. and MetLife Inc. also are members of the committee, which acts for thousands of unsecured stakeholders in the bankrupt securities firm.

Lehman Brothers Commodity Services Inc., sued by Bank of America Corp. last month for failing to return collateral provided for derivative transactions, filed yesterday for bankruptcy in New York, along with affiliated units. Bank of America was seeking the return of $500 million from three of the units.

The case is In re Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc., 08-13555, U.S. Bankruptcy Court, Southern District of New York (Manhattan).

To contact the reporters on this story: Linda Sandler in New York at lsandler@bloomberg.net; Jeff St.Onge in London at jstonge@bloomberg.net.

Last Updated: October 4, 2008 00:01 EDT

QUOTE

October 04, 2008 posting ... just a quick rap up on wall street today as stocks plummeted after the bush signing of the bail out bill minutes after the house voted it in by a large margin ... i understand that the 400 meter dash world record time now belongs to the attache' that ran the papers from the house floor the the white house oval office for the bush signing ... this far reaching legislation was ram prodded through in record time and everyone got bribed and coerced with candy coated additions that they could not refuse ... but wall street should have gone wild with buying the last hours of the day today friday ... BUT IT DID NOT !!! why one might ask ??? well it now stands to reason that 1) all the money went to foreign investors holding the bad paper sold to them by the crooked american banking cartel and 2) the morons on wall street who all favored the bail out thought that the stock market would become stable long enough SO THAT THEY COULD GET THEIR MONEY OUT !!! their greed was only overshadowed by their stupidity ... so instead of stabilizing the economy the stock market did a mini crash as selling dominated the closing hours of the day ... wait until next week until the real selling panic begins ... remember that this same scenario is what kicked off the depression and run on the banks in the 29 stock market crash ... sponsored by your friendly local federal reserve ... why heck gosh darn it folks ... we are even set to have a good ole fashioned dust bowl and mass starvation to go with it ... only this time the USA will not recover ... jim mccanney

QUOTE

Voice of the White House October 2, 2008

TBR News – October 2, 2008

“There is a very serious aspect to the current economic collapse that no one wants to discuss, neither the economic pundits, the media or the scared politicians. This concerns an aspect of the subprime scams and, basically and stripped of euphemistic words and propaganda phrases, is that very large amounts of money from various banks and financial institutions and the owners and controllers thereof were, and are being, sent outside this country to a secure area. I am speaking most specifically of American business frantically sending, electronically, huge amounts of money to banks in Israel. The three banks that are getting most of the stolen money are: Hapoalim group, Bank Leumi group, Discount Bank group. It is not necessary to mention that the senders are all Jewish and it should be noted that Israeli banking concerns practice strict banking security (see their Protection of Privacy Law, 1981 [PPL]) Under the PPL, “an infringement of privacy is, inter alia, a violation of an obligation to maintain secrecy regarding a person’s private affairs, established by explicit or implicit agreement.” The bank’s obligation of secrecy extends not only to the details of the client’s account but also to all transactions related to the account. In other words, if the US authorities want to know about this, they can bend over while the Israeli bankers drive them home. And if the sticky-fingered ones decide to make a quick flight to Israel ahead of FBI investigators, like their new accounts, they are entirely safe. Note here that Israel does not extradite its citizens. But it does allow prosecutions in its own courts for crimes committed abroad. None of this information is really secret but is well-known to investigative bodies such as the Department of State and the FBI. Currently,U.S. law-enforcement personnel and prosecutors, who fear that Israeli-oriented economic criminals will use the Jewish state as a refuge.
www.tbrnews.org/Archives/a2880.htm

craig-oxley - October 5, 2008 04:24 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

LaRouche: No Bailout ! "They Will Kill You !

What the Americans will do to those, who try to push a dictatorship down their throats.

http://uk.youtube.com/watch?v=Jd5uaScAUSQ

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/Jd5uaScAUSQ&hl=en&fs=1"></ param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/Jd5uaScAUSQ&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

[dohtml]
Is America "On Final Approach" to Financial Collapse?

"Ladies and gentlemen: Please return your financial seatbacks and tray tables to their upright and locked position as the Captain reports we have lost an engine and may experience a difficult landing. In the interest of safety, please assume the survival position outlined in the safety card located on the web site in front of you.. Please make sure the aisles are clear and that all IRA's and retirement plans have been stowed in the investments front of you...."

A number of readers have asked for a special update this weekend on the free
www.UrbanSurvival.com and mirror

www.IndependenceJournal.com web sites because of the gravity of this week's economic conditions. So, I've put writing this weekend's www.Peoplenomics.com report ("Are Depressions All Bad?") on hold for an hour or so while I run through some of the permutations for next week, remembering that October 7th at 7:10 UTC is the center on the scatter plots of our "hot date" which has been peeking out of the www.HalfPastHuman.com predictive linguistics for more than a year.

This is the same bleeding-edge processing of internet language change that has enabled us to get things like the China
Quake right within 2 days earlier this year, caught big events like 2001's 9/11 attacks more than 2-months in advance and captured the essence of other major 'news' events with extreme emotional content very much in advance including the regime change/revolutionary change in Pakistan on August 18th - arguably they were off only 36-hours on that one, having pegged the change at August 17th. (*In deference to their reports, I referred to this as coming back in our Friday May 16th report well in advance of events...")

So we look forward to the balance of this weekend and as late as Thursday/Friday of next week with a heightened state of awareness/concern/trepidation (or 'fear lite') because of predictive elements that go to the idea of:

A major event which could dramatically impact 2, 2.2, or 22-million Americans.

This 'impact' could be the range of something fairly minor like "My bank card doesn't work anymore" to a 'blinding flash from a terror attack' on US soil.

This latter is somewhat supported by references early in the data to 'attack on US interests" and the fact that al Qaida has a nasty habit of trying to influence outcomes of elections, such as was the case with the Spanish train bombings a few years back.

The 'events' of next week will linguistically be characterized by about a 20% natural disaster/earth related component, a 40'ish percent impact that will be 'military' in nature and a 40% (or higher) impact that will be 'economic' in scope.

While we can't give much more than that (plus last week's Peoplenomics report which asked the question "How would you cope with going camping for the rest of your life?" the main thing we've advocated in personal financial structuring so that you become - to as great a degree as possible - downside resistant.

There are plenty of good reasons to have taken our advice to 'prepare for at least 6-months of chaos - and I mean besides the linguistic shifts that are a looming present concern.
There are US government web sites that advise people to have a couple of months of preparations and plans to cope with extreme disruptions from elements such as the Bird Flu (www.pandemicflu.gov) but they would work just fine for financial disruptions, too.
Thus, any reasonable preparation for a disruption of modern life seems less reactionary than prudent, sorry to say.

The way I look at it, having a bit of food, a couple of dollars of cash on hand, maybe some precious metals, and a mutual assistance plan for your neighborhood all prepped and in place is not paranoia, so much as a reasoned response to a growing threat list that is not only beyond personal control but also likely beyond government control except in reaction to it.

That the U.S. Army's NorthCom now has a (never before done) active unit inside the U.S. which is serving as a ready response unit should it be overlooked - someone in government sees a high risk period to civil order, too. (High bandwidth video capsule).

We have to salute Representative Brad Sherman for outing the potential for this coming Monday for martial law - and how the PowersThatBe we selling fear like crazy in the back rooms of the House of Representatives. I won't even start to review the potential illegality of the Senate originating a spending Bill, because that'll just Executive Ordered away. So much for the Constitution as the ultimate source of authority, eh?

---
 Because Cliff and Igor are continuing to work on processing of linguistic data even now, ,we've arranged to be guests on the Jeff Rense radio program on Monday night- from about 11 PM Monday Eastern to 1 AM (Tuesday) Eastern, or 8-10 PM Pacific to recap and get into anything new that comes our of this weekend's processing.

For subscribers to the actual ALTA (Asymmetric Language Trend Analysis) reports, Part Four of the current predictive run should be posted later today with a preliminary 'event horizon' extending out to the 7-th lunar cycle of 2009 - about mid-summer, which by the way, continues to evolve as a "Summer from Hell" based on the changes in language which appear over the next six months and depict a rapidly declining standard of living, rationing and further restrictions on travel, not to mention shortages galore, here in the U.S.

However, remember, this is only speculative and is based on a still-developing science which is off in a just-being-discovered area of science; an offshoot of radical linguistics. There's nothing we'd like more than to be dead wrong. But I'm not betting that way.

I don't expect us to be - but that is a possibility.
So if you prep and nothing happens, just enjoy having good stocks of goods on hand and use them as rotating inventory allowing you to shop bargains in the future and reduce the operating cost of your family/household.

Nevertheless, THE most important bit of news to have handy in the early going next week once we move into the 'event window' could be the NYSE/stock market circuit breaker levels.

You'll want to print these out and keep them by your computer for the balance of the year, I expect:

--- section to print --- <blockquote>
"NYSE
Announces Fourth-Quarter 2008 Circuit-Breaker Levels

NEW YORK , September 30, 2008 --
The New York Stock Exchange will implement new circuit-breaker collar trigger levels for fourth-quarter 2008 effective Wednesday, October 1, 2008. Circuit-breaker points represent the thresholds at which trading is halted marketwide for single-day declines in the Dow Jones Industrial Average (DJIA). Circuit-breaker levels are set quarterly as 10, 20 and 30-percent of the DJIA average closing values of the previous month, rounded to the nearest 50 points.
In fourth-quarter 2008, the 10,
20 and 30-percent decline levels, respectively, in the DJIA will be as follows:
Level 1 Halt A 1,100-point drop in the DJIA before 2 p.m. will halt trading for one hour; for 30 minutes if between 2 p.m. and 2:30 p.m.; and have no effect if at 2:30 p.m. or later unless there is a level 2 halt.
Level 2 Halt A 2,200-point drop in the DJIA before 1:00 p.m. will halt trading for two hours; for one hour if between 1:00 p.m. and 2:00 p.m.; and for the remainder of the day if at 2:00 p.m. or later.
Level 3 Halt A 3,350-point drop will halt trading for the remainder of the day regardless of when the decline occurs.
Background:
Circuit-breakers are calculated quarterly. The percentage levels were first implemented in April 1998 and are adjusted on the first trading day of each quarter. In 2008, those dates are Jan. 2, April 1, July 1 and Oct. 1.
</blockquote>

--- end section to save and print ---

Thanks to my friend Robin Landry, an independent (and like thinking) broker in Shawnee, Oklahoma, for sending that along.
You may recall that I told you Robin move most of his managed accounts into cash about 2,000 points above this week's closing levels back in June or July.

I spoke with Robin after the close on Friday and his outlook for the market is similar to mine: We could see the market continue its decline next week with the potential to drop in the area of 9,700 on the Dow, OR we could see the bottom collapse there and continue down to Dow 7,400. From there, we might then see a highly inflationary B Wave return to the kind of levels we are at now, but in that wave, Landry says he wouldn't be surprised to see gold and silver, along with energy stocks, do extremely well.

---

OK, so here's my personal take on what I've planned for going forward.

I anticipate that early next week, the stock market will decline to under the 10,000 level and that, in turn, may spur already nervous (and un-prepared!) people to panic and begin bank runs. That phrase has been popping up a fair amount lately with stories about how "Wachovia faced 'silent' bank run; FDIC forced sale" this week, an opinion piece in Forbes this week from Nouriel Roubini says expect: "Next:
The Mother of All Bank Runs?"

Against the background of a $350-billion Fed move this week and a $700-billion banker bailout by the CONgress, for a total of $1-trillion dollars spent - or about 7% of U.S.A. GDP in a single week, the NY Times News Service carried in today's Idaho Statesman understat3es thing by saying "Crisis could be at Global Tipping Point", which is exactly what the predictive linguistics have been screaming at us for more than a year now - hence my advice to friends and readers to 'flee paper assets' and get properly defensive in posture, spreading risk between banks, precious metals, physical goods, and a TreasuryDirect account, in order to maximize personal lifestyle retention potential through this period.

I anticipate that on Monday or Tuesday something will act as the 'kindling effect" and will lead to a massive stock market decline. I've been putting a list of potential 'sparks' together that could set off the conflagration so here's my 'short list' to which you can add your own:

Fannie and Freddie assets issues come to the fore again on Monday and if there's a collapse there, things could steam-roller with the financial snowball already underway.

Virtually no one in the US media is reporting what happened this week in Greece, which was forced to issue government guarantees to banks after "panic withdrawals" on Wednesday - a euphemism for 'bank runs' broke out.

Public workers in the State of California may be facing insolvency because short-term lending has dried up .
In warning that a $7-billion injection from the government may be needed, governor Schwarzenegger says "California and other states may be unable to obtain the necessary level of financing to maintain government operations and may be forced to turn to the federal treasury for short-term financing."

My personal pick is that what will happen on Monday will be that the derivatives market will drive a stock market collapse. Let me explain why:

First, you need to understand how the general "settlement day" issues will work, and the Financial Times has a good summary of the issues here.

A note from a very well informed source at the UN Geneva sent me a terse note today that simply says
"There will be fewer banks standing in Euroland on Monday morning." That will compound/confound things if right.

What no one is reporting (so why don't we?) is that even investment houses that think they have a clean derivatives book could find that they sudden have huge cash calls on Monday which could trigger panic selling of stocks and other assets. The reason is this:
When certain kinds of instruments fail, the current owner is presented with a settlement demand. But, if that first/current owner is not able to meet the settlement demand, then there is the potential fore recourse back to a previous owner. And then, if that owner doesn't have money, another layer of the onion may be peeled back, such that I honestly expect that the unintended consequences will be a cascading collapse next week. What's worse? The Bailout Bill passed on Friday will not be able to stop it because the mechanisms for Treasury and the Fed to bail is not spelled out. My term for it is "Crashcading Collapse" - when people who thought they were good have to suddenly have a fire sale of assets to raise cash.

Once a meltdown of the stock market gets underway, I expect that the contagion would likely spread into the general public with panic withdrawals from US banks beginning, and that in turn, could trigger banking restrictions.
This is the worst-case scenario. (Next to a terrorist attack, of course).

Next, in order to maintain public order during those kinds of events, I expect the Bush Administration argue the need to 'enforce public order' and thus, some of the rumors of pending 'martial law' that have come from both the Internet and some Congresspersons, could come to pass. It will be argued on the one hand that the events really do fit into a conspiratorial mold on the one hand, but a logical sequence and response by government on the other.

<p style="mso-element: frame; mso-element-frame-hspace: 1.8pt; mso-element-wrap: around; mso-element-anchor-vertical:

paragraph; mso-element-anchor-horizontal: column; mso-height-rule: exactly; text-align: left; margin: 0">
Then, on about October 15th, we get some other kind of 'military' aspect to the events about to unfold, and if I recall right, another such thing around October 25-27 - someplace in there.

<p style="mso-element: frame; mso-element-frame-hspace: 1.8pt; mso-element-wrap: around; mso-element-anchor-vertical:
paragraph; mso-element-anchor-horizontal: column; mso-height-rule: exactly; text-align: left; margin: 0">
Then we get a break of a few weeks, although just as people think "Ha! Things are getting back to normal..." then wham, along with come more or less a lock-down of financial systems in November (around the 27th/Thanksgiving period if memory serves right.

<p style="mso-element: frame; mso-element-frame-hspace: 1.8pt; mso-element-wrap: around; mso-element-anchor-vertical:
paragraph; mso-element-anchor-horizontal: column; mso-height-rule: exactly; text-align: left; margin: 0">
And then, just as we get through that, we anticipate (again, remember this is all based on some pretty far-out linguistic concepts here) the 'double earthquakes of December which may (or may not) be impacting on the US mainland. There's some drift in the data in the more recent processing.

<p style="mso-element: frame; mso-element-frame-hspace: 1.8pt; mso-element-wrap: around; mso-element-anchor-vertical:
paragraph; mso-element-anchor-horizontal: column; mso-height-rule: exactly; text-align: left; margin: 0">  <p style="mso-element: frame; mso-element-frame-hspace: 1.8pt; mso-element-wrap: around; mso-element-anchor-vertical:
paragraph; mso-element-anchor-horizontal: column; mso-height-rule: exactly; text-align: left; margin: 0">
So, come the end of January of next year, I wouldn't be at all surprised to see the markets down around 7,400 on the Dow and then for Robin Landry's hoped-for "B" wave to begin, although it would likely peak in mid 2009 as the "Summer of Hell" breaks out thanks to continuing/record foreclosures on homes and continuously rising unemployment, which will be used by government for a further expansion of its powers over citizens, instead of what the Framers had in mind - government that was responsive to (and smaller than) the general population. That ship sailed long ago, eh? <p style="mso-element: frame; mso-element-frame-hspace: 1.8pt; mso-element-wrap: around; mso-element-anchor-vertical:
paragraph; mso-element-anchor-horizontal: column; mso-height-rule: exactly; text-align: left; margin: 0">
---
<p style="mso-element: frame; mso-element-frame-hspace: 1.8pt; mso-element-wrap: around; mso-element-anchor-vertical:
paragraph; mso-element-anchor-horizontal: column; mso-height-rule: exactly; text-align: left; margin: 0">
I don't know about you, but when the stock market collapses 157-points into the close, as it did on Friday after a trillion dollars was promised this week, I do get a little anxious about events to come next week, especially when we've been talking about that date for months and months based on the work of our learned colleagues with the linguistic time machine.
<p style="mso-element: frame; mso-element-frame-hspace: 1.8pt; mso-element-wrap: around; mso-element-anchor-vertical:
paragraph; mso-element-anchor-horizontal: column; mso-height-rule: exactly; text-align: left; margin: 0">  <p style="mso-element: frame; mso-element-frame-hspace: 1.8pt; mso-element-wrap: around; mso-element-anchor-vertical:
paragraph; mso-element-anchor-horizontal: column; mso-height-rule: exactly; text-align: left; margin: 0">
All we can do now is watch with a kind of emotional detachment, having taken what seem like reasonable steps in order to be insulated to some extent from what could turn into panic. <p style="mso-element: frame; mso-element-frame-hspace: 1.8pt; mso-element-wrap: around; mso-element-anchor-vertical:
paragraph; mso-element-anchor-horizontal: column; mso-height-rule: exactly; text-align: left; margin: 0">  <p style="mso-element: frame; mso-element-frame-hspace: 1.8pt; mso-element-wrap: around; mso-element-anchor-vertical:
paragraph; mso-element-anchor-horizontal: column; mso-height-rule: exactly; text-align: left; margin: 0">
Cliff and Igor are always pointing out the value of eating pie.
I, on the other hand, not being as relaxed about ;'living the news twice' probably over-prepare and over-react in advance of events. For me, a double-shot of rum or vodka on the rocks works better. Admittedly pie's better for you.  <p style="mso-element: frame; mso-element-frame-hspace: 1.8pt; mso-element-wrap: around; mso-element-anchor-vertical:
paragraph; mso-element-anchor-horizontal: column; mso-height-rule: exactly; text-align: left; margin: 0">  <p style="mso-element: frame; mso-element-frame-hspace: 1.8pt; mso-element-wrap: around; mso-element-anchor-vertical:
paragraph; mso-element-anchor-horizontal: column; mso-height-rule: exactly; text-align: left; margin: 0"> Nevertheless, this morning's report is a summary of my expectations based on how I read the data leaking through from the future. Just as the "A" wave down in the markets was the opening of the Great Depression, and he "B" wave (bounce) lasted until the onset of the secondary depression in 1937, which all set the stage for a Kondratiev long wave trough war in the form of World War II, I expect think there's a chance that the events out around 2011-2014 could very easily be seen as that Big Ending that's in religious texts.

Either that, or as we go through the galactic ecliptic out there somewhere, various realities start to leak into our from other dimensions. Along the way, UFO's and disappearances should rise because if there are really other beings who are "not-from-here" we're now in a period of intensely interesting activity here on Ant Farm Earth.

---

Drop by Monday morning for our usual dose of cynicism and humor as we continue to read the linguistic tea leaves and do our dead-level best to play Nostradamus Lite walking a thin line between Chicken Little ("The sky is falling!") and the Boy Scout creed "Be Prepared!" here in what I've concluded is no longer the America of my upbringing (admitted a half century ago).

"Welcome to chaos in the Checkbook Republic, we'll be touching down in January-February 2009. Have your seat belts securely fastened...."

[/dohtml]

QUOTE

Next: The Mother Of All Bank Runs?

Nouriel Roubini 10.02.08, 12:01 AM ET http://www.forbes.com/opinions/2008/10/01/...002roubini.html

It's plain that the current financial crisis is worsening in spite of--or perhaps because of--the Treasury rescue plan.

The strains in financial markets are becoming more, rather than less, severe in spite of the nuclear option of a $700 billion package: Interbank spreads are widening and are at a level never seen before; credit spreads are widening to new peaks; short-term Treasury yields are going back to near-zero levels as there is flight to safety; credit default swap (CDS) spreads for financial institutions are rising to extreme levels as the ban on shorting of financial stock has moved the pressures on financial firms to the CDS market; and stock markets around the world have reacted very negatively to this rescue package.

Financial institutions in the U.S. and in advanced economies are going bust. In the U.S., the latest victims were Washington Mutual (nyse: WM - news - people) (the largest U.S. savings and loan) and Wachovia (nyse: WB - news - people) (the sixth largest U.S. bank). In the U.K., after Northern Rock (other-otc: NHRKF.PK - news - people) and the acquisition of HBOS by Lloyds TSB (nyse: LYG - news - people), you now have the bust and rescue of Bradford & Bingley; in Belgium you had Fortis (other-otc: FORSY.PK - news - people) going bust and being rescued over the weekend; in Germany, Hypo Real Estate, a major financial institution near bust, has also needed rescue.

So, this is not just a U.S. financial crisis. It is a global crisis hitting institutions in the U.K., the Euro-zone and other advanced economies (Iceland, Australia, New Zealand, Canada etc.).

The strains in financial markets--especially short-term interbank markets--are becoming more severe in spite of the Fed and other central banks having injected $300 billion of liquidity in the financial system last week alone, including massive liquidity lending to Morgan Stanley (nyse: MS - news - people) and Goldman Sachs (nyse: GS - news - people).

In a solvency and credit crisis that goes well beyond illiquidity, no one is lending to counter-parties as no one trusts any counter-party (even the safest ones), and everyone is hoarding the liquidity that is injected by central banks. And since this liquidity goes only to banks and major broker-dealers, the rest of the shadow banking system has no access to this liquidity as the credit transmission mechanisms are blocked.

After the bust of Bear and Lehman, and the merger of Merrill with Bank of America (nyse: BAC - news - people), I suggested that Morgan Stanley and Goldman Sachs should also merge with a large financial institution that has a large base of insured deposits so as to avoid a run on their overnight liabilities. Instead, Morgan and Goldman took a cosmetic approach, converting themselves into bank holding companies as a way to get further liquidity support--and regulation as banks--from the Fed and as a way to acquire safe deposits.

But neither institution can create, in a short time, a franchise of branches, and neither one has the time and resources to acquire smaller banks. And the injection of $8 billion of Japanese capital into Morgan and $5 billion of capital from Warren Buffett into Goldman is a drop in the ocean, as both institutions need much more capital.

Thus, the gambit of converting into banks while not being banks yet hasn't worked, and the run against them has accelerated in the last week: Morgan's CDS spread went through the roof on Friday to over 1200, and the firm has already lost over a third of its hedge-fund clients together with the highly profitable prime brokering business (this is really a kiss of death for Morgan). And the coming roll-off of the interbank lines to Morgan would seal its collapse. Even Goldman Sachs is under severe stress: Most of its lines of business (including trading) are now losing money.

Both institutions should stop playing for time, as delay will be destructive: They should merge now with a large foreign financial institution, as no U.S. institution is sound enough and large enough to be a solid merger partner. If John Mack and Lloyd Blankfein don't want to end up like Richard Fuld, they should do a John Thain today and merge as fast as they can with other large commercial banks. Maybe Mitsubishi (other-otc: MSBHY.PK - news - people) and a bunch of Japanese life insurers can take over Morgan.

The only institution sound enough to swallow Goldman may be HSBC (nyse: HBC - news - people). Or maybe Nomura in Japan should make a bid for Goldman. Either way, Mack and Blankfein should sell at a major discount before they end up like Bear and are offered, in a few weeks, only a couple of bucks a share for their faltering operation. And the Fed and Treasury should tell them to hurry up, as they are both much bigger than Bear or Lehman, and their collapse would have severe systemic effects.

When investors don't trust even venerable institutions like Morgan Stanley and Goldman Sachs, you know that the financial crisis is as severe as ever. When a nuclear option of a monster $700 billion rescue plan is not even able to rally stock markets, you know this is a global crisis of confidence in the financial system.

The next step of this panic could be the mother of all bank runs, i.e. a run on the trillion dollar-plus of the cross-border short-term interbank liabilities of the U.S. banking and financial system, as foreign banks start to worry about the safety of their liquid exposures to U. S. financial institutions. A silent cross-border bank run has already started, as foreign banks are worried about the solvency of U.S. banks and are starting to reduce their exposure. And if this run accelerates--as it may now--a total meltdown of the U.S. financial system could occur.

The U.S. and foreign policy authorities seem to be clueless about what needs to be done next. Maybe they should today start with a coordinated 100 basis points reduction in policy rates in all the major economies in the world to show that they are starting to seriously recognize and address this rapidly worsening financial crisis.

Nouriel Roubini, a professor at the Stern Business School at NYU and chairman of Roubini Global Economics, is a weekly columnist for Forbes.com.

craig-oxley - October 6, 2008 03:17 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

Monday: 10-6-08 The Great Financial Market Crash

04 October 2008

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=9pk50pWqCYg

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/9pk50pWqCYg&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/9pk50pWqCYg&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

On July 18, 2008, a poster by the Name of Reinhart sumbitted a message to Google Finance, predicting a major stock crash on September 15, 2008. The Dow Jones fell over 500 points on 09/15/08. He has left further clues as to the next movement on the internet.

From AboveTopSecret
"He basically predicted the fall of the markets today (dow closed -504.48 the worst since 9/11) The posters name is Reinhart.

He said on July 18th 2008 and the negative news that will move the market downward should occur Sept 15 but the rabbit hole goes deeper he not only predicted it but gave a laundry list of dates connections to companies and the vatican then this the money laundering occurs just prior to the pilgrimage to rome and the checks are written during the pilgrimage and the checks clear by September 14 and the negative news leaks out
I thought you would all like this because if you keep reading on the page and scroll down he goes into a firestorm of dates and transactions a little too much for me to absorb at this point, but I will get to checking the dates etc later this week.

He was banned and I cannot find any other posts but wow just look... "

Links:

http://finance.google.ca/group/google...

http://www.legatus.org/public/index.asp

QUOTE

Trading suspended on Russia's MICEX after 15 percent plunge

6 Oct 2008
http://www.kyivpost.com/business/30128

MOSCOW (AP) _ Trading has been suspended on Russia's leading stock exchange after shares plunged by more han 15 percent amid a backdrop of falling oil prices and fears over the global economy.

Trading was halted on MICEX at 1:35 p.m. (0935GMT) for one hour Monday. Shares fell by 15.4 percent to 781.8 points.

The benchmark RTS index fell by 13.9 percent to 921.7 points, but continued to trade.

Mining firm Norilsk Nickel fell by 25 percent on the MICEX. State-backed lender Sberbank by 16 percent and state-controlled oil major Rosneft by 17.4 percent.

In September, growing financial turmoil in the United States and tumbling oil prices sent the Russian stock markets into their biggest downward spiral since 1998. The MICEX lost 25 percent in just three days.

Regulators have shut down the markets on several occasions in an effort to stem the decline, often to positive effect.

The government has also offered financial support to the stock markets, and a raft of relief measures to the banking sector, where liquidity is tight and confidence between banks at rock-bottom, leading to a seizure of interbank lending activity.

The measures offered only short-term support to the stock markets, however, and buyers are still scarce on the market. Between July and mid-September, UralSib analysts estimate investors have pulled out more than US$50 billion from the country.

After trading closed for the weekend in Russia, the U.S. House of Representatives passed a US$700 billion bailout plan at the second attempt. But it provided little relief to investors, who are focused on deepening financial woes in Europe that threaten to derail global growth.

The bailout "does not look set to bring much immediate relief to suffering markets," Russia's Alfa Bank in a note to investors. "With investors transfixed by the events in the U.S., buyers are scarce, and Russian markets are lurching downward on a day-by-day basis."

Banking stocks were among the worst hit in Russia. State-controlled Sberbank, the country's largest lender, which at one point had plummeted 20 percent in early trading, shed 15 percent on MICEX, while the state-backed VTB banking concern also shed 15 percent. Mining firm Norilsk Nickel plunged by 31.4 percent on the RTS.

Of all major global indexes, the Russian stock markets have been among the worst performers.

The RTS is down 62 percent from its May peak.

QUOTE

Jim Cramer says GET OUT NOW!

[dohtml]<iframe height="339" width="425" src="http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/22425001/vp/27045406#27045406" frameborder="0" scrolling="no"></iframe>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

Major Economic Event

Between now and the 14th October 2008

http://www.kereport.com/audio/1004-04.mp3

QUOTE

How Far is "Down"?

6 Oct 2008
http://urbansurvival.com/week.htm

A couple of conversation this morning and some personal checklist items completed to report. First, about the linguistics. A check with Cliff, who has Igor watching data streams from the spiders, shows that we have not yet shifted into release language. In other words, whatever it is that has been popping up on our radar linguistically for a year plus has not yet occurred, which leads me to the tentative conclusion that whatever "IT" is hasn't yet happened.

As to how big IT might need to be? The 777 point decline (last week, wasn't it?) only got 18% release language going, so something MUCH bigger is still (linguistically) in the path immediately ahead. As soon as the language flips to 'release language' we'll post an update, but that might not come for a couple of days yet. So patience with the rickety time machine and attendant time monks, please.

Second point is that as of 10 AM Monday, Robin Landry, my friend who's a broker up in Shawnee, Oklahoma, said he's never seen the advance decline line as bad as it is today - greater than 39 to 1 on the downside - and that's worse than even the Great Depression as Landry has studied it. Also the volume was only about 2.2 million to the upside versus 506-million to the downside when we looked - again, Depression starting kind of numbers.

But the scariest part of all is that it is not brining out a high volume spike which would indicate capitulation and might put in a near term bottom.

So, based on my conversation with Landry, here's what I expect will happen in the next day or three:

- The market will rally back over 10,000 today for a while.
- Then a new decline will set in which might be greater than the initial 550 point drop, which might take us under the 9700 first target that Landry has.
- After that, there are some minor Fibonacci numbers on the way (e.g. 9550, 8900) but the next 'floor' is something like 7,400 on the Dow and with any kind of push/event/panic we might see that tomorrow and hit a thousand or 2,000 point down day.
- Next, we'd tee up an 'emergency' rate cut because the Fed might figure that will ju8mp start banks into loaning again... but...
- Then there's the CDS repricing going on and only those in Heaven know how big a money pit that will generate.
- Following that, a decline to the middle of November will be in the cards, depending on the size of unraveling events, that could be 7,400 after a short intermediate rally, or it could be (forbid) Dow under 5,000.

If that sounds kinda gloomy, relax - we're probably wrong.

Now, would you please let the market know we're wrong? It's acting like we're right so far...

QUOTE

QUOTE

5 OCT 2008 - DOW JONES TO POSSIBLY LOOSE OVER 2000 POINTS TOMORROW THE 6 OCT 2008 PRIOR TO THE GOD OF WAR DANGER DAY OF THE 7TH. PREPARE! -CRAIG OXLEY

Note how from Israel to Japan and now here in England and the U.S the shit is hitting the fan. Start to move away from the system immediately. Get to the stores now and get those survival stocks in, you will only have 24 hours if the profane become aware. Get your mountain bikes etc working and oiled up, there will be no transport if it kicks off. Get some pales/buckets with good handles to carry water around. Try and black the pales out so people don't know what your doing, they'll mug you otherise etc. So Unhived ones prepare now as it's about to arrive. So was all the talk from Lindsay Williams all disinfo to put us off talking about September/October? Why was my thread deleted off this site and not by me? Everything seems to be adding up. Download all the infos/videos/audios off the internet your after now before this goes down etc.

Note how the FTSE is absolute kaned so far at 16:18 with over 358 points whilst the dow only just opening a couple of hours ago is down almost 500 points!

Welcome to the Maltese Knights latest Knight made crisis.

[dohtml]<img src="http://i247.photobucket.com/albums/gg145/2tuff2006/SMOMCRASH.jpg" border="0" alt="SOVEREIGN MILITARY ORDER OF MALTA, THE GREATEST MERCHANTS ON EARTH CONTAINING THE FONDI WISH THE SYSTEM TO SOON COLLAPSE. YOU'LL SEE WHAT COMES NEXT AS THE CRISIS SPREADS.">[/dohtml]

October 7th LINK

Unauthorised Remoal of Economic Collapse thread LINK

MY FINANCIAL WARNING COMING TRUE LINK

craig-oxley - October 7, 2008 02:58 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

Daryl discussing the current financial mess

Friday 3rd October

Part 1 (6.8mb)
http://www.iamthewitness.com/audio/Cii/smi...%20%20pt1-1.mp3

Part 2 (8.5 mb)
http://www.iamthewitness.com/audio/Cii/smi...08%20%20pt2.mp3

QUOTE

Icesave savers warned on accounts

Tuesday, 7 October 2008 12:36 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7656387.stm

Customers of the Icesave internet bank have been warned they will probably have to claim compensation for money held in their savings accounts.

The authorities in the UK are preparing for the bank's parent in Iceland, Landsbanki, to be declared insolvent.

The Icelandic government took control of the country's second biggest bank on Tuesday to stop it collapsing.

Claims from Icesave's UK customers will be handled by the Financial Services Compensation Scheme (FSCS).

Under the depositor protection arrangements in Iceland and the UK, the Icelandic authorities will be liable for the first 20,887 euros (£16,300) of compensation.

The UK's FCSC will pay out the rest of the claims, up to the newly introduced ceiling of £50,000 per person.

"If, as expected, the Icelandic authorities put the firm into insolvency proceedings this would trigger a default under the FSCS," said the Financial Services Authority.

"In this case, savers with Icesave could make a claim to get their money back," it said.

A spokesman for the FSCS said however that UK customers of Icesave will not have to make two separate claims and that it would probably handle all UK claims on one form.

"We are working with the Icelandic authorities to confirm the procedure," a spokesman said.

"We are gearing up to be ready to do whatever we can in order to get compensation back to UK savers as quickly as possible," he added.

Insolvent

The Financial Services Authority (FSA) said it was expecting Icesave's parent bank to be declared insolvent soon, following its takeover by the Icelandic Financial Supervisory Authority (IFSA).

Worried Icesave customers

Icesave says that it is not currently allowing customers to take money out of their accounts or to put in deposits.

This dismayed customer Mike Davis, 62, who has £75,000 in retirement savings locked up in an Icesave account until 25 October.

His daughter also has savings there and his partner, Pam Henson, 67, has £23,000 with the same bank.

The couple are getting married on 1 November, and Mr Davis, who lives in Gloucestershire, said he was "shaking with worry" when he heard about problems with Icesave.

"This cannot have come at a worse time. It is a pretty devastating blow," said Mr Davis, a landscape architect.

"I haven't slept for a couple of days. This was money put away for retirement."

He was expecting a long process of trying to recover savings and called for governments to guarantee 100% of savings.

Emergency

Landsbanki is the second Icelandic bank to be taken over to prevent a collapse of the country's banking system.

In an announcement on state radio, the commerce and banking minister Bjorgvin Sigurdsson said the board of directors of Landsbanki had been dismissed and the bank put into receivership.

He said the state takeover was made "in co-operation" with Landsbanki and the bank would stay open and operate as normal.

Glitnir, the country's third-largest bank, was nationalised last week to stop it being driven into bankruptcy by the international financial crisis.

In a parallel move, Iceland's largest bank Kaupthing has been given a loan of 500m euros from the country's central bank.

"The central bank of Iceland has provided Kaupthing with a 500m euro loan to facilitate operations, and Kaupthing is committed to working with the government to ensure regular workings of the Icelandic financial system," the bank said in a statement.

Meanwhile there is confusion about whether or not Russia has agreed to help the Iceland central bank itself.

The bank said Russia would give it a loan of 4bn euros lasting for three to four years, to strengthen its foreign exchange reserves.

"The Russian Ambassador to Iceland, Victor I Tatarintsev, informed the chairman of the board of governors of the central bank of Iceland this morning that Russia would grant the central bank a loan in the amount of 4bn euros," said the bank in a statement.

"Prime Minister Putin has confirmed this decision," it added.

However the Russian ministry of finance denied explicitly that any decision on giving a loan to Iceland had been made.

Continued operations

On Monday the Icelandic government passed emergency legislation to try to rescue the country's banking system.

Prime Minister Geir Haarde said the new laws would help the island avoid "national bankruptcy".

Iceland also decided to offer an unlimited guarantee for all bank customers' savings accounts.

The website of Icesave tells customers that: "We are not currently processing any deposits or any withdrawal requests through our Icesave internet accounts.

"We apologise for any inconvenience this may cause our customers. We hope to provide you with more information shortly," it adds.

A spokeswoman for the bank said the website was not operating "due to technical difficulties", but did not offer any further reason for it being down.

Explaining its action in taking over Landsbanki, the IFSA said: "Based on new legislation, the Icelandic Financial Supervisory Authority (IFSA) proceeds to take control of Landsbanki to ensure continued commercial bank operations in Iceland.

"Domestic deposits are fully guaranteed, as declared by the government.

"Landsbanki's domestic branches, call centres, cash machines and internet operations will be open for business as usual," it added.

QUOTE

Tuesday, 7 October 2008 14:00 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7656741.stm

IMF in 'severe downturn' warning

The economic downturn in many countries is likely to worsen as the financial crisis continues, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) has warned.

The global economy is now showing signs of a marked slowdown in growth, said the IMF in its latest world economic outlook report.

In its study it said coherent and decisive policy measures were now needed to restore financial confidence.

The IMF report comes before this week's IMF-World Bank meeting in the US.

In the report the IMF also warned that the turmoil so far largely confined to the financial sector was likely to spread.

It estimated financial losses from the credit crisis would total $1.4 trillion, up from an earlier estimate of $1 trillion.

Credit crisis

It said problems in the money markets were now more likely to be associated with "severe and protracted economic downturns" in the rest of the economy.

IMF economists said that such downturns are more likely after a rapid expansion in borrowing, and rising house prices.

This week's annual IMF-World Bank meeting, which will bring together finance ministers and economic experts from around the world, has taken on special significance because of the global credit crisis.

The worldwide economy has been hit by high commodity prices, the housing slump and the growing financial crisis.

In its report, the IMF urged governments to co-ordinate their actions.

"Internationally coherent and decisive policy measures will be required to restore confidence in the global financial system," it said.

"Failure to do so could usher in a period which is increasingly disorderly and costly for the real economy."

Inflation risk

The IMF said it has been some of the world's more sophisticated economies, like the US, which have been the worst-affected.

This has been because those countries which had bigger financial sectors, also had higher levels of borrowing.

This has heightened the impact of the consequent credit squeeze.

Yet despite its predictions of a more protracted global economic slowdown, the IMF says that there is still the risk of inflation.

It said that despite recent price falls, global raw material prices would remain high and volatile.

QUOTE

Nationalisation fears spark stock plunge

October 08, 2008
http://www.theaustralian.news.com.au/story...3-20142,00.html

SHARES in Royal Bank of Scotland plunged more than 35 per cent to under pound stg. 1 ($2.40) on fears a pound stg. 40 billion bailout of high-street banks would result in a partial nationalisation of several.

RBS shares fell to a record low of of 95p on suggestions that it had approached the Government about a capital injection. Lloyds TSB was down by almost 20 per cent and HBOS, its putative merger partner, fell by 18 per cent.

The position was not helped by a warning from the British Chambers of Commerce that Britain is already in recession and could face a prolonged downturn.

In London, the FTSE 100 opened up 1.8 per cent, rising 84.65 points to 4673 points, and soon extended those gains, moving up almost 3 per cent. But the banking sector fears reversed that with the FTSE off 42.81 points at 4546.38 in mid-morning trading.

The volatile start to trading followed Monday's record 7.8 per cent fall as panic swept global financial markets, sending America's Dow Jones industrial average down to a four-year low after dipping below 10,000 points for the first time since October 2004.

At one point the Dow was down more than 800 points.

The swings in London were mirrored in other European markets, as France's CAC 40 and the Dax in Germany both gave up earlier sharp gains.

Dealers had been banking that plans by the Government to pump pound stg. 40 billion of fresh capital into high-street banks coupled with banking reform legislation, due to be outlined today, would calm markets. The bill is expected to include formal measures for the authorities to take control of a failing bank and will give the Bank of England statutory responsibility for maintaining financial stability.

The Chancellor last night held talks with banking executives on how the scheme, which could see the Government effectively part-nationalise such banks, would work.

Shares of RBS, which fell by 25 per cent on Monday, lost another 45.1p to 103p on suggestions that it was a likely candidate. Lloyds TSB fell by 41p to 218p while HBOS was 12p lower at 148.8p. Barclays fell 24p to 290p, a fall of almost 8 per cent.

The gloomy picture was compounded as the BCC warned both the Government and monetary policymakers that they must act immediately to boost market confidence in order to avoid a prolonged recession.

In its quarterly survey, the BCC found that confidence among British companies fell to its lowest on record in the third quarter as sales and orders tumbled, and it called for an immediate half-point cut in the base rate.

The Bank of England's monetary policy committee will announce its decision on interest rates at midday on Thursday.

The survey of more than 5000 businesses suggested that an economic recession had already started and was getting worse.

Confidence balances for both manufacturing and services sectors fell sharply for a second consecutive month to their lowest level since 1989 while cashflow balances and recruitment also dipped across the sectors.

David Kern, economic adviser to the BCC, said the alarming Q3 results pointed to worsening dangers of major economic downturn and rising unemployment. The results support the view that a British recession has started and the downturn is getting worse.

The survey reveals sharply weakening domestic sales and orders for both manufacturers and service sector companies, with the balances well into negative territory and at long-term lows. Export sales and orders balances for manufacturers weakened sharply in the third quarter.

In contrast, there was a somewhat surprising modest improvement in the services sectors' export balances, although they remained relatively low by long-term norms. Both manufacturers and services companies were markedly more pessimistic about the prospects.

The manufacturing sectors confidence balance plummeted 28 points to 4 per cent while profitability confidence plunged 16 points to -11. In the services sector, both figures fell 7 points to 10 per cent and 13 points to -12 respectively.

Howard Archer, chief British and European economist at Global Insight, said the BCC survey made "dire reading and reinforces our belief that the economy contracted in the third quarter and is well on its way into recession".

The Times

[dohtml]<embed src="http://services.brightcove.com/services/viewer/federated_f8/1184614595" bgcolor="#FFFFFF" flashVars="videoId=1840844653&playerId=1184614595&viewerSecureGatewayURL=https://console.brightcove.com/services/amfgateway&servicesURL=http://services.brightcove.com/services&cdnURL=http://admin.brightcove.com&domain=embed&autoStart=false&" base="http://admin.brightcove.com" name="flashObj" width="486" height="412" seamlesstabbing="false" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" swLiveConnect="true" pluginspage="http://www.macromedia.com/

shockwave/download/index.cgi?P1_Prod_Version=ShockwaveFlash"></embed>[/dohtml]

[dohtml]<embed src="http://services.brightcove.com/services/viewer/federated_f8/1184614595" bgcolor="#FFFFFF" flashVars="videoId=1841457405&playerId=1184614595&viewerSecureGatewayURL=https://console.brightcove.com/services/amfgateway&servicesURL=http://services.brightcove.com/services&cdnURL=http://admin.brightcove.com&domain=embed&autoStart=false&" base="http://admin.brightcove.com" name="flashObj" width="486" height="412" seamlesstabbing="false" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" swLiveConnect="true" pluginspage="http://www.macromedia.com/shockwave/download/index.cgi?P1_Prod_Version=ShockwaveFlash"></embed>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - October 8, 2008 12:42 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

October 7th - Last Update For Now

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=BynmfaBjFLA

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/BynmfaBjFLA&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/BynmfaBjFLA&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

07 October 2008

There are strong indications that we may suffer a bond market dislocation (and attendant stock market crash) which could come as early as tomorrow.

This is a direct consequence of Congressional refusal to address the issues for over a year, and Bernanke and Paulson playing "smartest men in the room."

I urge everyone to be prepared for a potential economic Depression, as if we get a bond market dislocation it will catapult us into a full-on Depression - this was what caused it in 1930-32, and it will be again, if it occurs.

If we the people are going to get in front of Congress and stop this, it has to happen now. Right now.

A few thousand views and the conspiracy nutballs who have infested the commentary of the previous videos will not do the job.

I will put what time I have available towards these videos and similar things in the future, but my family comes first.

It is now up to you, the people of America, to decide whether you wish to whine, bitch and moan in comments on Youtube, or whether you are going to take action such as visiting and hounding Congress, caling General Strikes, and similar forms of PEACEFUL direct action.

Time has expired for you to choose and you must make your decision today. Refusal to act is a choice, and ALL choices have consequences.

This is, literally, one of the most important decisions you will make - whether by your action or intentional inaction.

QUOTE

Falls force Russian markets close

Wednesday, 8 October 2008 09:59 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7658656.stm

One of Russia's leading stock exchanges has suspended trading until Friday after share prices fell too sharply.

Shares on Moscow's Micex index dropped by 14% in the first half hour of Wednesday trading, prompting the halt.

The country's other key index, the RTS exchange, has also been suspended after falls of 11%, though no time frame has been set for it to reopen.

Both indexes saw record losses on Monday, and measures to boost banking system liquidity got a tepid reception.

'Justified move'

Many observers had not expected the markets to open on Wednesday after recent losses.

"From a market point of view, they [the Micex exchange] had to get a sense of the [trading] situation," a trader at a major Russia bank told Reuters.

"Closing it was justified, although it was probably not justified to open it in the first place."

The falls in Russia and elsewhere have been blamed on panic selling by global investors fearful of a deep worldwide recession.

Russian shares were also hit in August amid concerns about the conflict between Russia and Georgia.

QUOTE

Brazil, Argentina start bilateral transaction with local currencies

www.chinaview.cn 2008-10-07 12:48:27 Print http://news.xinhuanet.com/english/2008-10/...nt_10159106.htm

BRASILIA, Oct. 6 (Xinhua) -- Brazil and Argentina, two biggest economies in South America, Monday launched a new payment system of bilateral transaction with their local currencies, aimed at eliminating the U.S. dollar as an intermedium.

The new system was agreed by presidents of the two countries early last month to end decades of mandated trade in dollars.

Argentine Central Bank President Martin Redrado and Brazilian Central Bank President Henrique de Campos Meirelles signed the enforcement of the agreement, the Payment System on Local Currency(SML), last Thursday.

Under the system, exporters and importers from both countries will make their exchanges with Brazilian reais and Argentine pesos.

The trade on reais and pesos will mainly benefit the small and medium companies from both countries because it will avoid the payment of bank charges when averting to dollars.

According to the Central Bank of Argentina, the trade between Brazil and Argentina is about 25 billion U.S. dollars per year.

Brazilian authorities said that with the SML exporters will receive exactly the negotiated value on their currency.

Although this new system seeks to gradually eliminate the dollar from the bilateral trade, the dollar will continue at the exchange.

The central banks of Brazil and Argentina will set the exchange rate between the reais and pesos with respect to the dollar.

Brazilian authorities said that the SML deepens the integration between Brazil and Argentina.

If the mechanism works out without incidents between Brazil and Argentina, it will be adopted by other countries of the Mercosur, like Paraguay and Uruguay, Brazilian authorities said.

Brazilian and Argentine authorities said that the partial elimination of the dollar in their bilateral trade does not have to do with the U.S. financial crisis since the SML was arranged a long time ago.

Economist Mariano Lamothe from the economic website www.abeceb.com said that despite the financial crisis in the United States, the dollar is more stable than the peso or reais.

The new payment system has more political importance than technical importance because it will strength ties between Argentina and Brazil, the biggest economies of the Mercosur, Lamothe said.

QUOTE

Indonesia Halts Stock Trading After 10 Percent Plunge (Update5)

By Berni Moestafa
http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...JzCQ&refer=home

Oct. 8 (Bloomberg) -- Indonesia's stock exchange halted share-market trading for the first time in eight years after the benchmark index plunged 10 percent, the biggest decline since the 1998 Asian financial crisis.

Trading was suspended indefinitely, the exchange said in an e-mailed statement. The Jakarta Composite Index plummeted the most in Asia, where credit market turmoil drove the MSCI Asia Pacific Index to its biggest loss since 1990. Almost a quarter of Indonesian shares fell at least 10 percent as lending costs rose to near a two-year high.

Bonds and the rupiah declined, while the cost to protect government debt from default rose to the highest level since at least 2004. The benchmark stock index is down 21 percent this week, the worst weekly drop since at least April 1983, data compiled by Bloomberg showed. It has fallen 47 percent this year.

``It's justified for us to suspend'' trading if the index falls more than 20 percent in just three days, Ahmad Fuad Rahmany, chairman of the Capital Market and Financial Institutions Supervisory Agency said in a mobile-phone text message. ``Under an irrational market situation, we can't let the market mechanism govern stock prices in a disorderly manner."

Exchange officials will meet market participants today to decide whether to extend the suspension tomorrow, said Erry Firmansyah, president director of the bourse. The exchange is ``looking into'' the cause of the market slump, he said.

Indonesia is battling rising inflation at a time when the global credit crisis may slow exports. The country's central bank raised its key interest rate yesterday by a quarter-basis point to 9.5 percent after inflation accelerated to 12.1 percent.

Global Uncertainty

``People are panicking,'' said Suherman Santikno, head of research at Jakarta-based PT Batavia Prosperindo Sekuritas, which manages about $573 million in assets. ``With uncertainty in the global economy, it's best to hold cash.''

Indonesian authorities last halted trading of the country's shares in September 2000, when a bomb exploded in the exchange building's car park, killing 15 people.

PT Astra International, Indonesia's largest auto retailer, tumbled 20 percent to 12,800 rupiah and PT Indosat, the nation's second-biggest telephone company, fell 23 percent to 3,950 rupiah. PT Adaro Energy, Indonesia's second-largest coal producer, plunged 19 percent to 810 rupiah.

The rupiah dropped 1 percent to 9,658 per dollar at 5:26 p.m. local time, paring a decline of 2 percent on speculation the central bank sold dollars.

``They sold dollars at 9,700,'' said Joanna Tan, an economist at Forecast Singapore Pte.

Bonds Drop

Ten-year government bonds tumbled, the biggest fluctuation of any government debt market today. The yield on the 9 percent note due September 2018 rose to 14.56 percent, compared with 12.95 percent yesterday, according to closing prices at the Inter Dealer Market Association. The price fell 7.0000, or 70,000 rupiah per 1 million rupiah face amount, to 71.250. A basis point is 0.01 percentage points.

Stocks also fell after commodity prices continued to slump as investors exit leveraged bets and slowing growth cuts demand for raw materials.

PT Astra Agro Lestari, Indonesia's biggest publicly listed plantation company, retreated 15 percent to 8,400 rupiah and PT International Nickel Indonesia, the nation's largest producer of the metal, slid 13 percent to 2,250 rupiah.

The value of the 19 commodities in the Reuters-Jefferies CRB Index dropped 43 percent from its July 3 peak through Oct. 6, data compiled by Bloomberg show. Crude oil slid to its lowest since Feb. 7 today, while palm oil lost 57 percent from its March 3 record and nickel fell 60 percent from its May 2007 record.

`Speculative Money'

``Too much of the Indonesian market is tied to commodities,'' said Kim Yong Tae, head of overseas investment at Yurie Asset Management Inc. in Seoul, which has the equivalent of $1.2 billion in equity assets. ``Also, the currency is very weak, suggesting that a lot of speculative money is pulling out of the market.''

Credit-default swap contracts on Indonesia jumped 80 basis points to 560 at 2 p.m. in Singapore, Barclays Capital prices show. The default swaps rose to 522.5 basis points on Oct. 6, the highest in more than four years, according to CMA Datavision, whose prices go back to 2004.

The three-month rate at which Indonesian banks charge each other for loans rose a fifth of a percentage point today to 11.17 percent, near the highest since October 2006.

To contact the reporter on this story: Berni Moestafa in Jakarta at bmoestafa@bloomberg.net

Last Updated: October 8, 2008 07:26 EDT

QUOTE

Many European stores are

NOT ACCEPTING

British credit cards

Watch from 3:15 onwards:
http://www.cnbc.com/id/15840232?video=881434420

"Now we getting anecdotal evidence, scattered reports that in other parts of Europe some stores are not accepting U.K. based credit cards." -CNBC reporter

craig-oxley - October 8, 2008 05:22 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

John Galt

Monday 6th October 2008

Market Crisis Intensifying Quickly

http://www.stevequayle.com/qf_october_06_2008.mp3

QUOTE

BRITISH CREDIT CARDS STOPPED ACROSS EUROPE

08 October 2008

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=fh_Wom5Hm1U

Credit Cards from Britain have been stopped across many stores over Europe. The Sovereign Military Order of Malta are starting to pull the plug on their current system. Remember how it was two Irish Roman Catholics who started the Great Depression.

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/fh_Wom5Hm1U&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/fh_Wom5Hm1U&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

Notice how BBC updated the page at 9-11! -Craig

Iceland halts all share trading

Page last updated at 11:09 GMT, Thursday, 9 October 2008 12:09 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7660511.stm

Iceland has suspended trading on its stock exchange in an attempt to prevent further panic spreading throughout the country's financial markets.

The OMX Nordic Exchange Iceland is closed for trading for two days and will reopen on Monday.

The decision to suspend trading was taken due to unusual market conditions.

It comes on the same day as Kaupthing, Iceland's largest bank, became the third bank to be taken over by the country's government in the past week.

The country's Financial Supervisory Authority said it took over Kaupthing to safeguard its domestic banking system.

All domestic deposits at the bank were fully guaranteed, it added.

On Wednesday, the UK Treasury arranged for ING Direct to take over the £2.5bn of deposits of 160,000 UK customers of Kaupthing's online arm, Kaupthing Edge.

The Swedish central bank had already agreed to provide a loan to the bank's Swedish arm.

Iceland's government has now seized control of all three of the nation's major banks. Landsbanki and Glitnir were taken over earlier this week.

The country has struggled to cope with the global financial crisis.

"The action taken... was a necessary first step in achieving the objectives of the Icelandic government and parliament to ensure the continued orderly operation of domestic banking and the safety of domestic deposits," Iceland's Financial Supervisory Authority said.

QUOTE

New World Order is the endgame, says Glen Beck

October 9th, 2008 | Constitutional Crisis, New World Order
By: D. H. Williams @ 12:04 PM - EST http://www.dailynewscaster.com/2008/10/09/...says-glen-beck/

Glen Beck urges America to, “wake up now!”

“There is a global meltdown coming. It is global depression. And one world currency and one world financial system is the endgame.” Glen Beck Says, “China said last week they want one global currency. France said yesterday … they want one world order - a new world order at the end of this event.

[dohtml]<embed type="application/x-shockwave-flash" width="480" height="296" src="http://www.eclipptv.com/embedPlayer.php?vid=07f75d9144912970de5a09f5a" flashvars="config=http://www.eclipptv.com/embconfigXmlCode.php?pg=video_3366_no_0_extsite" align="middle" bgcolor="#000000" name="flvplayer"></embed>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

Landry: Bounce @8,500, Dow to 5,800 Possible

Say, not to ruin the day, but I forgot to get the latest chart from my friend Robin Landry up for you...kinda hard to see, but you'll get the idea...

Robin's expectations are outlined this way:

"The Chart above is a long term chart that shows that my target for 7400 may be too high. If we get a maximum retracement of 68% then the 5800 range is quite possible. I am confident that one of the targets will be met. The time frame is the most difficult to determine. As always there will be sharp counter trend rallies along the way but keep your eye on the final larger degree target which is much lower than we are today. I have said for several years the idea of buy and hold will cause the greatest pain and loss of confidence in the advisement business that this industry has ever seen once we enter the larger degree correction corresponding to the 1929-1934 decline. We are at that timeframe and many people who rely on their saving in the markets to retire will not be able to retire due to the lack of discipline in the training of advisors toward capital preservation. I believe the next two or three years will prove me right. I hope I am wrong but doubt it. God help us all. As always questions and comments are welcome." rlandry@allegiance.tv

Talking a bit this morning, Landry says the web bot project's October 7th date was pretty close. "You see, the thing that happen was that we flipped over from the glass being half full to the glass being half empty...and today it's maybe 3/4's empty, but we have a long way to go..."

Indeed we do -especially if his 5,800 Dow low is anything near right.

craig-oxley - October 10, 2008 03:31 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

Dear friends

Now we can see much of what I & others warned about for some great length of time coming to pass economically.

This is completely engineered, just like the 1929 crash that started the Great Depression. Immediately below please find a brief summary of how the 1929 crash was caused written by Eric Jon Phelps, author of the essential true history book (as opposed to all the Establishment propaganda pieces & the works that all base themselves around these. Below that is a BBC article telling some usefuk infi about 1929 mixed in wuith the usual flannel about it being an accident. Complete rubbish.

Eric's book can be obtained at the links here:

http://troyspace2.wordpress.com/2008/04/21...ok-order-links/

In truth & awareness -

Troy

QUOTE

"In October of 1929 three Irish Roman Catholics on the New York Stock Exchange "sold short," hundreds of margin calls crashing the market. According to Curtis Dahl, FDR's son-in-law, they were Ben Strong, Tom Bragg and Joseph Kennedy. Hundreds of millions of hard-earned, real dollars had been invested in the market at the behest and encouragement of Dupont multimillionaire, Knight of Malta John J. Raskob. The calculated crash, resulting in the Great Depression, enabled the Jesuits to buy up all bankrupted businesses of interest on Wall Street for pennies on the dollar. The funds came from fascist Mussolini who had given the Vatican nearly 100 million dollars via the Lateran Treaty of March, 1929, as reparations for the loss of the Pope's Temporal Power from 1870 to 1929. With this backdrop, we can now understand why the Order used its CFR member and 33rd Degree Freemason President Franklin Roosevelt to remove the nation's gold coins from circulation in 1933 and to institute the Social Security System in 1934 as part of the Black Pope's socialist "New Deal," then supported by radio priest, Jew-baiter and Jesuit coadjutor, Charles Coughlin."

- Eric Jon Phelps

QUOTE

Total Financial and Economic Meltdown in Progress Now

On October 9th, 2008 SVincent says:
The night before last I wrote the following with the intention of sending it out to the group. I changed my mind and did not send it, fearing to be an alarmist.

"World markets are plunging in a panic as the banksters have severed access to credit making investment and speculation impossible. The Dow futures market is showing a nearly 400 point drop in response to a borderline crash in Asia and Europe tonight. It appears Morgan Stanley will be the next big bank to go under. In all likelihood this week will see the biggest stock market crash in history. Rumors abound that municipalities and States will default on their bonds this week. California and Massachusetts look like good candidates. The cessation of many government services and checks could follow. Iceland and Pakistan are on the verge of bankruptcy. Wonderful, a nuclear armed Islamic state thrown into chaos.

My guess is that we could see disruptions in the supply of food within two weeks, with food riots within a month.

If that is the scenario then we may see the suspension of the election and...well I can't bring myself to say it.

I do not write this casually and I do hope that I am mistaken. I ask God that I be completely wrong. But is what the situation appears to be at the moment.

May God Bless us all and keep us safe."

Today the Dow plunged 600 points (7%) in the final hour of trading. It should not have done so; it was set up for a rally. That it has done so is a clear indication that a total market meltdown and financial economic crash is upon us. The banksters, having enslaved formerly free markets to the cheap, sleazy drug of easy credit have now cut the addict off from its supply. We are now seeing the retching of withdrawal and the tremors of death of the global economy.

Today's Headlines

•Stocks in U.S. Tumble as Dow Industrials Drop Below 9,000; GM, Exxon Slide •Mutual Fund Withdrawals Jump to Record $72 Billion as Investors Seek Haven
•GM Shares Fall to Lowest Level Since 1950; S&P May Cut Automaker's Rating
•Leveraged Loan Index Plummets to Record as Hedge Funds, Banks Sell Assets
•U.S. Treasury Plans Bank-Stake Purchases Within Weeks to Shore Up Capital
•Iceland Seizes Kaupthing as Banking Industry Collapses Under Debt Weight

•VIX Options Index Climbs to Record Above 60 as Credit Market Stays Frozen
•Bush Will Meet With G-7 Finance Chiefs to Tackle Credit Crisis, Aide Says •Libor Holds Central Banks Hostage as London Rate Freezes Worldwide Lending •Fear Trumps Greed as Market Worries Amplify News, Paralyze World Economy
•Royal Bank of Scotland Loses Credibility After Goodwin's ABN Amro Purchase
•Central Banks Fail to Alleviate `Logjam' in Money Market: Chart of the Day

As I predicted, a global summit is being announced at which the bankster dictators will tell us their plans for remaking the world economy in their image. Anticipate a new global financial regulatory body (perhaps even a new World Central Bank) and moves in the direction of a World Currency. Please note that participation in such by the United States is predicated upon RATIFICATION by the Congress. If the Banker Dictatorship bypasses this requirement, we can take that as further evidence that the Constitution has in effect been suspended and that dictatorship is a concrete reality in America now.

State and Municipal government bankruptcies are likely within the next few weeks. My guess is that is what the action in the stock market is discounting right now. If you are in Massachusetts or California and rely upon state assistance, please prepare for disruptions.

Each of us must now decide what this means for us. You must make concrete preparations now. We are in an emergency situation, albeit a concocted and engineered crisis. This is an economic 911 and the measures following it are new versions of the Patriot Act and the Military Commissions Act.

Let's spring into action and inform the population of what is transpiring. People need to know:

"America is Now a Dictatorship"
"Oppose the Banker Dictatorship"
"The Financial 911 is a Scam"
"No Emergency Powers for Wannabe Dictators"
"Restore Constitutional Government NOW"
"End the Fed! Gold is Money!"

These slogan points should now appear on every freeway overpass, stuck on every sign, on flyers and posters. Thousands and thousands EVERYWHERE. Take it upon yourself to spring into action. Take the initiative and be creative. Build coalitions across the spectrum with others who will resist the Banker Dictatorship.

Here's a fast, cheap place to get large quantities of stickers: [link to www.stickergiant.c...] Take up a collection among your local groups and get stickering!!

Here's a great place to get t-shirts made...great prices, great service and fast (please tell them Steven Vincent sent you): [link to coastalprintworks....]

Here's a great place to get banners made: [link to www.alwayssign.com...]

Once again, I pray to God that I am an utter fool and an alarmist. Please God, let me be completely wrong. Or if not wrong, let this come to pass with a longer time frame so that good people can be better prepared for the inevitable. Please watch over us!

Your Friend in Freedom,

Steven Vincent

QUOTE

Berlusconi Says Leaders May Close World's Markets (Update1)

user posted image

By Steve Scherer
http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...id=aP5mpMUORBWM

Oct. 10 (Bloomberg) -- Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi said political leaders are discussing the idea of closing the world's financial markets while they ``rewrite the rules of international finance.''

``The idea of suspending the markets for the time it takes to rewrite the rules is being discussed,'' Berlusconi said today after a Cabinet meeting in Naples, Italy. A solution to the financial crisis ``can't just be for one country, or even just for Europe, but global.''

The Dow Jones Industrial Average fell as much 8.1 percent in early trading and pared most of those losses after Berlusconi's remarks. The Dow was down 0.5 percent to 8540.52 at 10:10 in New York.

Group of Seven finance ministers and central bankers are meeting in Washington today, and will stay in town for the International Monetary Fund and World Bank meetings this weekend. European Union leaders may gather in Paris on Oct. 12, three days before a scheduled summit in Brussels, Berlusconi said today, while Group of Eight leaders may hold a meeting on the crisis ``in coming days,'' he said.

Berlusconi didn't give any details about what kind of rules leaders were looking to change, except to say that leaders are ``talking about a new Bretton Woods.''

The Bretton Woods Agreements were adopted to rebuild the international economic system after World War II in a hotel in Bretton Woods, New Hampshire. The aim of the agreements was to establish a monetary management system, initially by pegging currencies to gold. The IMF was set up later to help manage the international financial system.

To contact the reporter on this story: Steve Scherer in Rome at scherer@bloomberg.net

Last Updated: October 10, 2008 10:15 EDT

QUOTE

California Rating Threatened by Cash Crunch, S&P Says (Update1)

By Michael B. Marois
http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...z12c&refer=home

Oct. 10 (Bloomberg) -- California's credit rating may be lowered if the state isn't able to borrow $4 billion it needs to pay monthly bills, Standard & Poor's said.

The rating agency said California's ability to access the short-term credit market is ``critical'' given falling revenue and a widening budget deficit that may force lawmakers to cut spending from a budget that was passed just three weeks ago following a record-long stalemate. The state plans to sell $4 billion in short-term notes to help cover expenses until tax receipts come in later in the year.

Disruptions in global credit markets have sent interest rates soaring in the municipal bond market and prompted dozens of borrowers to scrap planned offerings as investors shunned the debt. California Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger last week warned U.S. Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson that the state may need a loan if it can't complete a deal in coming weeks.

``Without a successful infusion of cash over the next six to eight weeks,'' S&P said, ``the state may be required to defer spending by executive order, schedule a special session of the legislature and/or possibly slow payments to local units, including school districts.''

California, the biggest borrower in the municipal-bond market, has $51 billion in general-obligation debt outstanding. The state is rated A + by Fitch Ratings and Standard & Poor's, the fifth-highest rankings, and a comparable A1 by Moody's Investors Service.

To contact the reporter on this story: Michael B. Marois in Sacramento at mmarois@bloomberg.net

Last Updated: October 10, 2008 19:02 EDT

craig-oxley - October 10, 2008 11:33 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

Meridian Bank of Illinois Fails, 15th Bank to Close This Year

By Alison Vekshin and Ian Katz http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...R7YA&refer=home

Oct. 10 (Bloomberg) -- Meridian Bank, of Eldred, Illinois, was closed by regulators today, the 15th to fail this year, as amid tightening credit and a deepening housing slump.

Meridian, with $39.1 million in assets and $36.9 million in deposits as of Sept. 25, was shut by the Illinois Department of Financial Professional Regulation, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. was named receiver. National Bank, of Hillsboro, Illinois, is acquiring the deposits of Meridian. Four of the failed bank's branches will reopen tomorrow and one will reopen Oct. 14 as branches of National Bank, the FDIC said.

To contact the reporters on this story: Alison Vekshin in Washington at avekshin@bloomberg.net; To contact the reporter on this story: Ian Katz in Washington at ikatz2@bloomberg.net.

Last Updated: October 10, 2008 18:34 EDT

QUOTE

October 10, 2008 posting ... BLACK FRIDAY !!! if the stock market (which has no real value anyway ... it is not a savings account folks) ... if the stock market continues to drop at the current rate it will be zero within 2 weeks ... it's all phony money anyway ... but i get a kick out of the people who extol Mr. B head of the phony money source the Federal Reserve (it is not federal and there is no reserve) ... i get a kick out of the smoooz noooz that claims he is somehow an intellectual ... this is what you get for placing a university professor and his theories in charge of your money supply (excuse me ...phony money supply) ... in my career teaching in universities i have seen hundreds of these schlocky guys sliding around the ivory tower hallways thinking they are next to god and ... SOOO ... O SO "intelligent" ... well now the proof is in the pudding ... the american economic "model" and the great Bush "bailout" have failed ... as rightly they should ... when you have idiots and greed coupled with a mindless university professor running the show ... creating trillions of more worthless dollars out of thin air to replace gaping holes in every corporation and and bank you get to what you see today ... of course this was the plan all along to take over the hard work of the american (and world-wide) public and reduce them to economic slaves (as i note repeatedly ... these techniques of using phony money with interest were developed in pre-biblical times and actually specifically outlawed in the old system of laws because the end result is the same EVERY TIME ... enslavement of the people and control by the phony bankers ... the money changers) ... add this to a worthless congress that gave away its mandate to issue real money and control the purse strings ... with a worthless justice department that sits idle as untold trillions of people's life savings have been stolen out of almost every major US corporation ... piled on a fractional reserve banking system with banks loaning to other banks who loan to other banks who then loan back to the original banks creating more phony money out of thin air ... clearly there has never been any "accounting" ... no one could possibly untangle the accounting nightmare created by these crooks ... so put this all in one giant heap and you get what you see right now ... worldwide economic chaos ... throwing more phony money at the problem and hoping some sticks like throwing mud at a wall is the current "solution" ... get ready to take care of yourselves by being your own source of food and water cause the USS TITANIC is sinking ... jim mccanney

QUOTE

Here is an excerpt from Svali's writings about the planned worldwide financial collapse:

All groups have goals, and the Illuminists are no exception. Money making is not their final goal - it is a means to an end. This end point, or goal, is no less than to rule the world. The Illuminati has a set plan similar to the Soviet Union's previous "5- year" and "10-year " plans. This is what the Illuminists themselves believe and teach their followers as gospel truth. Whether they will actually succeed is another matter altogether.

The following is the Illuminist agenda at ALL levels of the Illuminati. As with any goal, the Illuminati has specific steps which it plans to implement to reach its objectives. Briefly, each region of the United States has "nerve centers" or power bases for regional activity. The United States has been divided up into seven major geographical regions. Each region has localities within it that contain military compounds and bases that are hidden in remote, isolated areas or on large private estates.

These bases are used intermittently to teach and train generational Illuminati in military techniques, hand- to- hand combat, crowd control, use of arms, and all aspects of military warfare. Why? Because the Illuminists believe that our government, as we know it, as well as the governments of most nations around the world, are destined to collapse. These will be planned collapses, and they will occur in the following ways:

The Illuminati has planned first for a financial collapse that will make the great depression look like a picnic. This will occur through the maneuvering of the great banks and financial institutions of the world, through stock manipulation, and interest rate changes. Most people will be indebted to the federal government through bank and credit card debt, etc. The governments will recall all debts immediately, but most people will be unable to pay and will be bankrupted. This will cause generalized financial panic which will occur simultaneously worldwide, as the Illuminists firmly believe in controlling people through finances.

Next there will be a military takeover, region by region, as the government declares a state of emergency and martial law. People will have panicked, there will be an anarchical state in most localities, and the government will justify its move as being necessary to control panicked citizens. The cult trained military leaders and people under their direction will use arms as well as crowd control techniques to implement this new state of affairs. This is why so many survivors under 36 years of age report having military programming. People who are not Illuminists or who are not sympathetic to their cause, will resist. The Illuminists expect this and will be (and are BEING) trained in how to deal with this eventuality. They are training their people in hand-to- hand combat, crowd control, and, if necessary, will kill to control crowds. The Illuminati is training their people to be prepared for every possible reaction to the takeover.

Many mind control victims will also be called into duty with preset command codes. These codes are meant to call out a new, completely cult loyal presenting system. Shatter codes programmed under trauma will be used to destroy or bury non-cult loyal alters.

Military bases will be set up, in each locality (actually, they are already here, but are covert). In the next few years, they will go above ground and be revealed. Each locality will have regional bases and leaders to which they are accountable. The hierarchy will closely reflect the current covert hierarchy.
About five years ago, when I left the Illuminati, approximately 1% of the US population was either part of the Illuminati, sympathetic to it, or a victim of Mind Control (and therefore considered useable). While this may not sound like many, imagine 1% of the population highly trained in the use of armaments, crowd control, psychological and behavioral techniques, armed with weapons and linked to paramilitary groups. These people will also be completely dedicated to their cause.

The Illuminati firmly believes that it can easily overcome the other 99% of the population, most of whom are untrained, or poorly trained, such as "weekend hunters." Even the local military will be overcome as the Illuminati will have regional cell groups with highly trained leaders. They also count on the element of surprise helping them during their takeover. Many of the highest leaders in the militia branch of the Illuminati are or have been officers in the military, and so already have a good knowledge of which techniques will work best to overcome a region's or locality's defenses.

After the military takeover, the general population will be given a chance to either espouse the Illuminati's cause, or reject it (with imprisonment, pain, even death being possible punishments). These people very much believe that the intelligent, or "enlightened" or Illuminated, were born to rule. They are arrogant, and consider the general population as "dumb sheep" who will be easily led if offered strong leadership, financial help in an unstable world economy, and dire consequences if the person rebels. Their utter ruthlessness, and ability to implement this agenda, should not be minimized.

The Illuminati banking leaders, such as the Rothschilds, the Vanderbilts, the Rockefellers, the Carnegies, and the Mellons, as examples, will reveal themselves, and offer to "save" the floundering world economy. A new system of monetary exchange, based on an international monetary system, and based between Cairo, Egypt, and Brussels, Belgium, will be set up. A true "one world economy", creating the longed for "one world order", will become reality.

There is more to the Illuminist agenda, but these are the basics of it. This agenda is what the Illuminati really, truly, believe, teach, and train for. They are willing to give their lives up in this cause, in order to teach the next generation, as they believe that their children are their legacy. I was told that my children's generation would see this takeover, sometime in the 21st century.

At present, the Illuminati have quietly and covertly fostered their takeover plan by their goals of the infiltration of:
1. The media
2. The banking system
3. The educational system
4. The government, both local and federal
5. The sciences
6. The churches

They are currently, and have been working the last several hundred years, on taking over these 6 areas. They do NOT go to an institution, and say "hi, I'm a local Illuminist, and I'd like to take over your bank). Instead, they begin by having several people quietly invest funds over several years, gradually buying more and more shares in the bank (or other institution that they wish to control), until they have a financial controlling interest in it. They never openly disclose their agenda, or their cult activities, as often they are amnesic to them. These are well respected, "Christian" appearing business leaders in the community. The image in the community is all important to an Illuminist; they will do anything to maintain a normal, respected facade, and DESPISE exposure.

On one leadership in a major metropolitan city, where I was a member, there sat: one head of the local small business administration; one CEO of a government defense firm; one principal of a Christian school; one vice mayor of the city; one journalist; one nurse; one doctor; one behavioral psychologist, one army Colonel, and one navy Commander. All except one attended church weekly; all were well respected within the community. NONE of them appeared "evil", or "marked".

If you met them in person, you would probably instantly like any of these intelligent, verbal, likeable, even charismatic people. This is their greatest cover, since we often expect great evil to "appear" evil, led by media portrayals of evil as causing changes in the face and demeanor of people, or marking them like the biblical Cain. None of the Illuminists that I have known, had unkind, or evil appearing, persona in their daytime lives, although some were dysfunctional, such as being alcoholics. The dissociation that drives the Illuminists is their greatest cover for being undetected at this time. Many, if not most, of these people are completely unaware of the great evil that they are involved in, during the night.

There are other groups which are not actually part of the Illuminati, but the Illuminati are aware of them. The Illuminati are not the only group that follows esoteric practices, or worships ancient deities or demons. They encourage divisiveness between different groups (divide and conquer is one of their ruling principles), and are not concerned about other groups. Instead, they will often welcome them into their umbrella, if possible. This has been happening more and more in recent years, as the Illuminati trade teaching their training principles, which are considered the best by most secretive groups, in exchange for loyalty to the Illuminati. They will send their trainers to these groups, and the trainers will report to the local regional council.

In the political arena , the Illuminists will fund both sides of a race, because their greatest maxim is that "out of chaos comes order", or the discipline of anarchy. That is why they sent arms to, and funded, both sides of both the great World Wars in this century. They believe that history is a game, like chess; that only out of strategy, fighting, conflict, and testing can the strong emerge. I no longer agree with this philosophy, but at one time, I did, with all my heart.

Hopefully, as these people and their agenda are exposed the common man will rise up against this intended rule to be foisted upon an unsuspecting mankind.

QUOTE

"A controlled disintegration in the world economy is a legitimate object for the 1980s." Freeman adds, "it was not by chance that starting the week of Oct. 6-12, 1979, Volcker began raising interest rates, by raising the federal funds rate and increasing certain categories of reserve requirements for commercial banks. He kept pushing rates upward, until, by December 1980, the prime lending rate of U.S. commercial banks reached 21.5%." -Paul Volcker, who was appointed Federal Reserve Chairman by the 'Trilateral presidency' under Carter in August 1978, said only three months later:

QUOTE

PROJECT 80S: THE CFR'S PROGRAM FOR "CONTROLLED DISINTEGRATION"

By Angie Carlson
August 8, 2001
http://www.newswithviews.com/socialism/socialism1.htm

It is a dream-come-true for the world's chief theoreticians, the technocrats, Keynesian economists, for change agents worldwide and all quisling politicians.

Indeed, it was the Second World war master propagandist, Dr. Goebbels himself, who declared that for a lie to be believed, it must be grandiose and repeated often. Goebbels said a big lie will gradually become indistinguishable from the truth and all the more believable. Having proved the verity of Goebbels wisdom, the same must be said about the criminal fraud on a grandiose global scale, imposed upon a largely unsuspecting world, in the present age.

Policy makers, using the avenue of their controlled mass propaganda machine, set out on a massive campaign to deceive people into swallowing the lies of the "new era." The policies, laws, Treaties signed to usher in this new era with its new economy, were of course touted as beneficial change, as changes prudent for a now more sophisticated people and that livelihoods and nations could only benefit.

The liars perfected the Goebbelian falsehood into an Olympian profession that parallels the messianic zeal of the most ardent cult promoting its religion of redemption. Using the irresistibly seductive communication technology of the second half of the 20th century, the media cult conveyed to the world that unregulated free-trade, privatization (read the expropriation by multinational corporations) of national assets; deregulated banking and national utilities, as well highly speculative and unregulated investing practices, were all correct policies. Out of their ivy halls and think tanks came the intelligentsia and the US government spokespeaple, to preach the sermon of the new economy and free trade and to prepare the nation for the dawning of the age of Aquarius. Following Goebbels sage advice verbatim, the propaganda machine uttered ceaselessly the sugar coated mantra of what was fatefully to prove the process of "controlled disintegration." They told Western nations, that the original source of their nations' enrichment, the manufacturing base of their "real physical" economies, had finally outlived its usefulness. They screamed in the headlines that the manufacturing economy must now be replaced by service industries run by information technology. The media and their academic allies, professed to a baffled and tired world, that these smart new world policies must surely lead to the greater prosperity of ordinary people and leisure time would increase ten-fold. They said that de-industrialization of the Western world and the redistribution of wealth to the Third World, is of course the logical, fair and efficient thing to do, and the whole wide world would be a happier and richer place.

At the same time, the propagandists worked their magic tricks no less on the struggling masses of the Third World. The poorer nations were serenaded by international charlatans with doublespeak concerning the merits of exorbitantly high interest loans, oppressive measures to meet those loans, and slave labor. They were advised that they would prosper greatly from employment conditions of near slave labor-like conditions, in the West's transported factories. This, even if without the fair wages and health measures demanded by Western employees. The spin meisters convinced corrupt leaders that such feudal conditions were preferable to no labor at all, referring to the massive unemployment problems prevalent in their wretched nations--with ever destabilizing events producing demographic stresses, conflict and displacement. Neo Goebbelians everywhere bellowed continuously to all the world's increasingly beset and confused people the lies--again and again--until the lies took on a surreal aura of verity, finally becoming absorbed in most psyches worldwide. The peoples' need to believe a hopeful thing, even if against their better judgment... and as a result, rendered them befuddled and ever more exhausted, unable to distinguish truth from error.

Globalism and all its baggage: free trade, unregulated infrastructures, privatization, uncontrolled stock markets that are no more than legal racketeering establishments, deindustrializing, make for the largest, most cynical and destructive sting operation ever yet imposed upon humanity.

"We need an understanding if we are to minimize the chances that 'we' will experience a systematic disruption beyond our degree of comprehension or our ability to respond effectively...", said Alan Greenspan, talking about the Global Financial Infrastructure, on May 7, 1998.

Greenspan was fearfully saying that we, (read the elite), need to understand that the heretofore controlled disintegration of the U.S. economy, has reached a point of uncontrolled disintegration, and no longer the desired "controlled disintegration" they had so carefully engineered.

How is it possible for world economies to systematically, one after the other and then all simultaneously, disintegrate before some six billion pairs of eyes? How can this be? It is possible, because those six billion some odd pair of eyes have not witnessed the design of their destruction.

Barely known, is that Federal Reserve Chairman Greenspan's predecessor, Paul Volcker, in 1979, actually instituted a policy of "controlled disintegration." The New Federalist and Executive Intelligence Review, (EIR) are the only publications of note, which, over the years, have exposed and discussed this bombshell, at length. In a recent issue of EIR, writer Richard Freeman, says "that this policy was to serve as a cornerstone of a major policy shift in the United States.

The purpose was to level the physical economy of the wider world economy, with particularly destructive effects in the U.S."

Freeman explains that the British started the implementation of this policy in the late 1960s, with acceleration during the 70s-80s. Your writer saw with alarm the effects of those policies a decade ago on a visit. Thoughtful observers returning to Britain in those years, experienced the drastic and negative effects, what seemed a determined change for the worst. Why else would a nation enjoying great wealth fall into this measure of unwarranted deprivation and decadence? The breakdown continues to this day. First, uncontrolled free trade destroyed Britain's strong base of manufacture, then went her mines and ship yards, then the U.K. experienced the society debilitating "deregulated" energy policies with its high prices and inefficiencies, long before California unceremoniously woke up to the shocking, sky high energy bills and the grand fraud now more deeply imbedded in their own deregulated energy department.

The news wires mock Britain's capacity to tolerate several catastrophic public railway accidents with high casualty numbers. They expose to the world the sad tales of a once efficient rail service that presently has been systematically transformed into a disgracefully unattended, unsafe, and expensive mode of travel. Perhaps you've heard about the dreadful condition of Britain's dilapidated national health services, rampant with horrific abuses of malpractice, several cases of iatrogenic serial murder and sinister experiments, and the now familiar complaints decrying the very poor healthcare with long waiting periods. Woeful news articles detail the lack of adequate services throughout society, no longer a rare phenomenon. All the aforementioned conditions correspond in parallel with the degeneration generally of British society, not only economically, but socially and culturally. The degree of attrition is catching up here in the United States, also throughout society: less effective or safe air transportation, expensive and/or inadequate or poor health services, poor or lack of housing for working poor, innefective schooling, huge crime numbers, etc. These conditions are prevalent throughout the deindustrializing West. And all the while, the economic conditions of the majority of Westerners declines, while the tiny economic group at the top, becomes much richer.

Freeman in EIR reveals that Volcker's activities were guided by the "controlled disintegration" policies of one of the oligarchy's central institutions in the U.S., the New York Council on Foreign Relations, known more commonly as the CFR.

Starting in 1973, the CFR embarked upon a massive, nation changing project it named "Project 1980s." This project had at its core, the policy of "controlled disintegration." The top figures of "Project 1980s" of the Trilateral Commission, were chosen to become the top leadership of, and ran the government of, former Trilateral Commission member, Jimmy Carter, in 1977.

Paul Volcker was appointed Federal Reserve Chairman of the Board in August 1978, by then President Jimmy Carter. It was on November 9, 1978, that Volcker delivered the Fred Hirsch Memorial Lecture at Warwick University, in England. Volcker cited Hirsch and affirmed the policy by saying: "A controlled disintegration in the world economy is a legitimate object for the 1980s." Freeman adds, "it was not by chance that starting the week of Oct. 6-12, 1979, Volcker began raising interest rates, by raising the federal funds rate and increasing certain categories of reserve requirements for commercial banks. He kept pushing rates upward, until, by December 1980, the prime lending rate of U.S. commercial banks reached 21.5%."

A small understanding of elementary Keynesian economics leads one to grasp what Freeman explains: that the effects of this policy were swift and devastating, especially because the oligarchy had used two oil hoaxes during the 1970s, to send oil prices shooting upward. In the United States, industrial and agricultural production collapsed by huge amounts. Between 1979 and 1982, the production of the following critical U.S. manufacturing industries fell by the following amounts on a per-capita basis: metal-cutting machine tools, down 45.5%; bulldozers, down 53.2%; automobiles, down 44.3%; and steel, down 49.4%. In some cases, such as the machine-tool industry, parts of machine-tool capacity and of a skilled workforce were permanently lost. Those collapsing industries formed the very heart of the United States' physical economy. A similar pattern, on a greater or lesser scale, emerged in other industrial nations. These losses were due directly to the policies meant to bring the United States in closer parity with poorer nations. In the strictest sense of the Fabian politics of gradualism: "Controlled disintegration" would in time accomplish the goal.

Freeman explains that Volcker's measure also exacerbated the Third World debt crisis, and pushed it to the critical point. Third world nations had to finance their debt at an interest rate level of above 20%, which compounded the debt. Between 1979 and 1983, Third world debt levels, depending on the country, shot up by 40 to 70%. Your writer and the nation are informed in drone-like repetitions, that the poorer nations owe billions. The truth is, these poverty stricken nations have in fact more than doubled their obligations, in other cases, tripled their payments to the IMF and World Development Bank. The horrible truth is that they have been cruelly ripped off at the expense of their own national development in the social, economic and health spheres of their now miserably collapsing nations. All media lies notwithstanding, almost all of these borrowing nations today suffer more than they ever did. They were far better off before the cynical advent of the most dubious policies behind the canard of "world development." The problems are serious and diverse, ranging from famine, tribal conflict, serious warfare and widely prevailing plagues. Tens of millions of these suffering people are on the move to find work and security in the developed nations, where a demographic imbalance and social instability now threaten harmony.

BLUEPRINT FOR EXTINCTION

Indeed, it is a blueprint for extinction. Freeman in the pages of EIR explains that "Project 1980s" was composed of ten working groups. These tens groups toiled during the 1970s and eventually produced 33 volumes. The CFR's blueprint for economics was outlined in the book, "Alternatives to Monetary Disorder," one of whose authors was Fred Hirsch. Hirsch was the former editor of the London "Economist" magazine, the Fabian Socialists' Rothschild backed organ, and it is he whom Volcker quoted in his infamous 1978 lecture, announcing his policy.

Freeman asks: What did Hirsch mean in his book by "controlled disintegration"? The expression meant that the world economy would be pushed into disintegration---but not in an uncontrollable fashion. Rather, the plutocrats hoped it could control the process. They posit that it would be necessary for outside forces to deliver economic shocks to carry out this disintegration of the world economy: oil shocks, credit cut-offs (to mainly already struggling poorer nations) interest rate shocks, IMF austerity measures, etc., forcing the world economy to go to zero, and eventually negative growth. Today, a cursory view at selected business news sites on the Internet, on any given day, convey the alarming state of increasing world economic disintegration.

At this point, we note especially that the U.S., in the first quarter 2001, experienced negative manufacturing growth and this state has persisted for the last 9-11 months, only to continue on its downward spiral. Given the obscure polices of "Project 80s," it is equally important to bear in mind that manufacturing makes for a dismal 20% of our economic output and consumption of cheap imports two-thirds of support of the largest economy the world has ever seen. It is thus no surprise that our exports imbalances make for alarming deficits and cheap imports drive a consuming economy, much to its debt laden detriment. The U.S. is almost strictly an economy based on service industries. That service economy, inspite of the rosy predictions, is now declining. For the largest economy on the planet, it seems dumfounding to those who do not realize that the US is experiencing a determined course of "controlled disintegration."

Freeman says that in its 33 books, the CFR's "Project 1980s" covered a wide range of subjects, including plans for erecting a Bertrand Russell-H.G. Wells form of world government; finding methods to implement the mechanism of "stopping weapons of mass destruction," and methods for radical population reduction. The CFR called the overall project the largest undertaking in its history.

It was no idle exercise in futurology, asserts Freeman perceptively. "Their 33 volumes constituted blueprints, which the oligarchy used its power to institute during the second half of the 1970s and the 1980s. They imposed one of the most profound shifts in economic and nation-state policy during the 20th century."

Once the elitist Trilateral Commission's Jimmy Carter was installed as President, the British/American Commonwealth's oligarchical faction transferred the CFR's "Project 1980s" into his administration. Two of the Project's nine directors were W. Michael Blumenthal and Zbigniew Brzezinski; they were appointed Treasury Secretary and National Security Adviser, respectively. Cyrus Vance, who headed a "Project 1980s" working group, was appointed Secretary of State. Paul Volcker, spokesman for "Project 1980s" "controlled disintegration," became Federal Reserve Board Chairman.

At this juncture, your writer points to the fact that several key policies of "Project 80s," were major issues that dealt with the now hugely propagandized ecology "problems" and the aforementioned, population reduction-- the latter of heightened importance to the self appointed, Malthusian guardians of the world. In this regard, Carter signed the 1000-+ page "Global 2000" ode to sustainable growth, ecology management and population reduction. The volume in its original form, underwent an editorial catharsis shortly after release. Some of its most provocative pages betrayed the stark Malthusian visions: the writers document that 2 billion is the hoped for or preferable number for world population in toto. Also in this period, many books by sanctioned elitist ecologists and new-age futurologists, were widely distributed, especially in the academic halls of vulnerable minds who would become future guardians of the national patrimony. They dealt with scare mongering the American population with issues of unsustainable growth, the future filled with alleged shortages of natural resources, shortages of food, potable water, the grievous state of alleged over population and world destroying pollution threats.

All of their claims remained nothing but highly speculative theories, all of them based on circumspect texts of sophistic studies that never to this day passed the strict examination codes of genuine scientists, who, upon their own physical examination of the dreadful claims, found no evidence to substantiate them. In the early seventies, a Kissinger/Vance document, NSM or National Security Memorandum 200 was issued and classified. Years later, 80 pages were declassified. The treatise was a shocking piece of pompous bravado, a work of ultimate arrogance by the United States National Security Council. It demanded the curbing of populations in 13 Third World countries. It stated on page one, that Third World natural resources were imperative to the "national security" of the United States. The document betrayed the insidious aim for its population control programs: Multitudes of unemployed unruly youths in the Third World who would in the future pose a dangerous and difficult problem as far as the U.S.'s plans to harvest natural resources in those troubled regions. From its twisted policies, came the myriads of population and society changing programs of the UN in the Third World.

Volcker's actions were followed up by the 1981 Kemp-Roth Tax act, which opened up real estate and stock market to irrational speculations, destroyed U.S fiscal policy; and by the 1982, the Garn-St Germain Act, which deregulated the U.S. banking system. In 2000, the Glass-Spiegal Act enacted during the Great Depression to prohibit the merging of different institutions to prevent conflict of interest in investment practices, was abolished. Ordinary investors no longer have any true protections in a world fraught with cutthroat investment practices. The whole apparatus has shifted policy decisively away from financing physical production into pure speculation.

The policies of `controlled disintegration' are now ominously reaching the point of logical conclusion.

There are a million and one stories in the naked global village. The above is just one. More to follow.

craig-oxley - October 11, 2008 07:22 PM (GMT)

[dohtml]
Below is a list of the US Bank Holidays, known as Public or Federal Holidays, for 2008 and 2009.

The Embassy is closed on both US and UK Holidays

<table class="regular"> <thead>
<tr>
<th>
Bank Holidays 2008
</th>
<th>

```
Day Observed
</th>
<th> Date
</th>
</tr>
</thead>

<tbody>
<tr>
<td>
 New Years Day
</td>
<td>
 January 1
</td>
<td>

Tuesday, January 1, 2008

</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Martin L King's Birthday
</td>
<td>
 3rd Monday in January
</td>
<td>
Monday, January 21, 2008
</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 President’s Day
</td>
<td>
 3rd Monday in February
</td>
<td>
Monday, February 18, 2008
</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Memorial Day
</td>
<td>
 Last Monday in May
</td>
<td>
Monday, May 26, 2008
</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Independence Day
</td>
<td>
 July 4
</td>
<td>
 Friday, July 4, 2008
```

```

</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Labor Day
</td>
<td>
 1st Monday in September
</td>
<td>
Monday, September 1, 2008
</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Columbus Day
</td>
<td>
 2nd Monday in October
</td>
<td>
Monday, October 13, 2008
</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Veteran’s Day
</td>
<td>
 November 11
</td>
<td>

Tuesday, November 11, 2008

</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Thanksgiving Day
</td>
<td>
 4th Thursday in November
</td>
<td>
Thursday, November 27, 2008
</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Christmas Day
</td>
<td> December 25
</td>
<td>
Thursday, December 25, 2008
</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table class="regular"> <thead>
```

```
<tr>
<th>
Bank Holidays 2009
</th>
<th>
Day Observed
</th>
<th> Date
</th>
</tr>
</thead>

<tbody>
<tr>
<td>
 New Years Day
</td>
<td>
 January 1
</td>
<td>

Thursday, January 1, 2009

</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Martin L King's Birthday
</td>
<td>
 3rd Monday in January
</td>
<td>
Monday, January 19, 2009
</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 President’s Day
</td>
<td>
 3rd Monday in February
</td>
<td>
Monday, February 16, 2009
</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Memorial Day
</td>
<td>
 Last Monday in May
</td>
<td>
Monday, May 25, 2009
</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Independence Day
</td>
<td>
```

 July 4
</td>
<td>

Friday, July 3, 2009

</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Labor Day
</td>
<td>
 1st Monday in September
</td>
<td>
Monday, September 7, 2009
</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Columbus Day
</td>
<td>
 2nd Monday in October
</td>
<td>
Monday, October 12, 2009
</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Veteran’s Day
</td>
<td>
 November 11
</td>
<td>

Wednesday, November 11, 2009

</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Thanksgiving Day
</td>
<td>
 4th Thursday in November
</td>
<td>
Thursday, November 26, 2009
</td>
</tr>

<tr>
<td>
 Christmas Day
</td>
<td> December 25
</td>
<td>
Friday, December 25, 2009
</td>
</tr>

</tbody>
</table> [/dohtml]

QUOTE

IMF in global 'meltdown' warning

Sunday, 12 October 2008 04:22 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7665515.stm

The world financial system is teetering on the "brink of systemic meltdown", the head of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) has warned in Washington.

Dominique Strauss-Kahn said rich nations had so far failed to restore confidence, but he endorsed a new action plan by the G7 group.

He also said the IMF was ready to lend to countries in dire need of capital.

The 15 eurozone leaders will meet in Paris later to try to establish a common approach to the markets crisis.

French President Nicolas Sarkozy and German Chancellor Angela Merkel said they would present a number of proposals at the summit to ease the credit freeze that has caused the collapse of several leading international banks.

But after meeting in Paris on Saturday, the two leaders said the summit would not result in a joint financial rescue fund for Europe, in the model of a $700bn rescue by the US government.

French Economy Minister Christine Lagarde said the eurozone leaders would discuss the possibility of guaranteeing interbank lending and put "meat" on the "skeleton" of a five-point plan by the G7 group of most industrialised nations to resolve the crisis.

Intensifying concerns

Mr Strauss-Kahn was speaking in Washington after talks with US President George W Bush, G7 finance ministers and the World Bank.

Earlier, G7 ministers had released the five-point plan to free up the flow of credit, back efforts by banks to raise money and revive the mortgage market.

"Intensifying solvency concerns about a number of the largest US-based and European financial institutions have pushed the global financial system to the brink of systemic meltdown," said Mr Strauss-Kahn.

He later told a news conference: "The first co-ordination between advanced countries and the rest of the world is now on track."

The IMF chief's strong words reflect a belief that the global financial crisis can be contained, says the BBC's economics correspondent Andrew Walker in Washington.

Mr Strauss-Kahn was joined at the White House by finance ministers from the US, Canada, France, Germany, Britain, Italy and Japan, as well as World Bank President Robert Zoellick.

Following talks with the economic leaders, Mr Bush also pledged co-ordinated action, saying it was serious global crisis which demanded a serious global response.

Panic selling

The meeting came a day after Asian, European and US markets continued to panic sell despite rate cuts and cash injections by central banks, amid widespread fears of a global recession.

Late on Friday, US Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson said the US planned to invest directly in banks for the first since the 1930s, following a similar UK programme of partial bank nationalisation.

The G7 had earlier not ruled out adopting another part of the British plan - to guarantee borrowing between banks - as they issued their plan in Washington.

The G7 also left the door open to further reductions in interest rates, which six central banks this week jointly cut by half a percentage point.

But our correspondent says there is some disappointment that the G7 plan lacks detail.

Ahead of the emergency summit of eurozone leaders, UK Prime Minister Gordon Brown will hold talks with Mr Sarkozy.

Chancellor Merkel said governments must "redirect the markets so they serve the people, and not ruin them".

The heads of the EU's four biggest economies - Britain, France, Germany and Italy - held a first crisis summit last week, but were split over the need for a common plan.

Analysts say another week of plunging stock markets has focused minds and the real test of this weekend's scramble by world leaders to shore up the international financial system will come once markets reopen again on Monday.

QUOTE

Don't shut markets says bourse chief - report

Sun Oct 12, 2008 7:38am EDT Email | Print | Share| Reprints | Single Page | http://www.reuters.com/article/usDollarRpt...C68627920081012

ROME, Oct 12 (Reuters) - Suspending markets should not be considered as a tool to deal with global financial turmoil, a senior European bourse executive was quoted as saying in Il Sole 24 Ore newspaper on Sunday.

"It's not a hypothesis to take into consideration. One must always allow the possibility of exchanging shares for cash, because this is a release valve for tension," said Massimo Capuano, chief executive of Milan's Borsa Italiana and deputy chief executive of the London Stock Exchange (LSE.L: Quote, Profile, Research, Stock Buzz).

He is also chairman of the World Federation of Exchanges, which is holding meetings in Milan this week.

"Above all, blocking negotiations on regulated markets would not stop trades from taking place elsewhere, in a context of less transparency."

Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi said on Friday that there was talk of suspending markets but later played down the idea that this was a serious policy suggestion.

Britain's Sunday Times newspaper said trading at the London Stock Exchange could be suspended on Monday to give the market time to digest the impact of massive recapitalisation plans the daily said would be announced for major British banks.

But the LSE downplayed that prospect. "My information is that the market will open on Monday," a spokesman for the exchange told Reuters. (Reporting by Phil Stewart; Editing by Greg Mahlich)

QUOTE

October 12, 2008 posting ... the current state of banking ... the stock market ... the political world ... the military world ... the secret ops world that is now nearly totally funded through drug trafficking ... etc etc etc ... can be summed up in one small analogy ... these are all like the movie about the drug dealer cocaine addict ... who is using his "product" ... the guy is psycho and hooked on the money and drug habit ... life is "good" until "da man" comes calling to collect the funds ... since there are no funds (cause the stuff went up the addict and all of his friends noses) there is a problem ... then the promises start ...'just come back tomorrow and i will have the money' ... but of course there is a slight problem ... there ain't no money ... so the addict has two options ... face "da man" with no money tomorrow OR ... drum roll ... he has to come up with it some other way ... so he hits a series of robberies and life gets back to "normal" ... he promises himself that this will never happen again and he will run his "business" so as to always be able to pay "da man" when "da man" comes calling ... but of course this lasts until the first party comes along and our addict starts the same process all over again since this "process" worked and he will do it just this one next time and then amend his ways ... the analogy with the current "economic melt-down" is exactly the same ... when "da man" (the international investors that expected money payments based on bundled loan securities based short term equity mortgages) ... when "da man" came calling he wanted his money ... so geee dubya, paulsen and bernanke had one choice as they represent the american banking and business community to these international investors ... of course this is coupled to the entire world economy ... all the financial rules had been broken by the money-addicts that had been absconding with "the product" (make no mistake ... money is far more addicting than cocaine) ... and they had just a few days to come up with the money to pay off "da man" (that is why bush & paulsen and bernanke looked so worried and that is why they said and did anything to get the "bailout" plan passed by congress which are your elected representatives to give it the "official OK" from you the fleeced public ... cause "da man" had come knocking on their door) ... so they did what any good addict would do ... they performed a heist ... and they fleeced you the american people via congress ... and now life reverts back to "normal" ... so expect this "process" to continue and repeat itself cause like the cocaine addict ... the money addicts will now see this as the new way of the future ... their habit has now been satisfied and they have found a way to pay for it ... they get their cake and can eat it too ... now people are asking a simple question .... was not all this money supposed to cure the economic Armageddon spoken of by bernanke just before passage ... well ... how could it since the money only went to pay off already accrued debt ... the debt created by the thousands of businesses and bankers who were absconding with the "product" and creating "product" out of thin air ... with the next wave about to hit ... that is why they put a provision in this bill that turned over congressional power over finances directly to the federal reserve independent bank ... so they could pay off "da man" without anyone noticing the next time "da man" came calling ... which by the way should be real soon as the next wave of higher end mortgage foreclosures hits this fall and winter ... but of course remember in all of this ... the overall plan has always been to bury the US public and world citizens under so much debt (excuse me ... i mean phony debt) ... that they will NEVER EVER EVER be able to "pay it off" ... thus enslaving the entire world to this phony banking system and their paymasters ... additionally the "war" in afghanistan can now never end since the US soldiers there are protecting the CIA drug crop that has soared since the "war" began ... forget oil ... this is far more profitable ... a listener just wrote and asked what i thought about people getting together to start a new third political party ... below is my answer ... jim mccanney

QUOTE

Two More Banks Closed by Regulators

By MARCY GORDON, AP
11 Oct 2008
http://money.aol.com/news/articles/_a/bbdp...3371x1200675175

WASHINGTON (Oct. 10) - Regulators on Friday shut down two small banks, Main Street Bank in Michigan and Meridian Bank in Illinois. They brought to 15 the number of federally insured banks that have failed this year.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. was appointed receiver of the banks. Main Street Bank, based in Northville, Mich., had $98 million in assets and $86 million in deposits as of Oct. 7. Meridian Bank, based in Eldred, Ill., had assets of $39.2 million and deposits of $36.9 million as of Sept. 25.
The FDIC said all of Main Street Bank's deposits will be assumed by Monroe Bank & Trust of Monroe, Mich. The two offices of Main Street Bank will reopen Saturday as branches of Monroe Bank & Trust.
All of Meridian Bank's deposits will be assumed by National Bank of Hillsboro, Ill. Meridian's four offices in Altamont, Carlyle, and Eldred will reopen for normal hours on Saturday, and its Alton office will reopen Tuesday, as branches of National Bank.
The 15 bank failures so far this year compare with three for all of 2007, and federal banking officials have said that more banks are in danger of collapse.
Regular deposit accounts are now insured up to $250,000 as part of the financial rescue legislation enacted last week. The FDIC formally approved the increase from $100,000 per account at a meeting on Friday. The limit on individual retirement accounts held in banks remains at $250,000.
Concern has been growing over the solvency of some banks amid the housing slump and the steep slide in the mortgage market. The pressures of tighter credit, tumbling home prices and rising foreclosures have been battering many banks nationwide.
The 15 federally insured banks and savings and loans to fail this year include two major thrifts, Washington Mutual Inc. and IndyMac Bank, and more collapses are expected. The deposit insurance fund is now at $45.2 billion - below the minimum target set by Congress and the lowest level since 2003.
Of the roughly 8,500 FDIC-insured banks in the country, 117 were considered to be in trouble in the second quarter - the highest level in about five years and up from 90 in the first quarter. The agency doesn't disclose the banks' names.

craig-oxley - October 13, 2008 02:07 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

Bond Market Collapse is Imminent

-- Posted Monday, 13 October 2008 | Digg This Article | Source: GoldSeek.com
By Adrian Douglas
http://news.goldseek.com/GoldSeek/1223911533.php

Imagine a country such as Venezuela announced that it was bailing out an investment bank, then just days later said it was nationalizing its mortgage industry, and then just days later that it was bailing out its biggest insurance company, and then just days later its government pledged 700B$ to inject into its failing banks, and then just days later its stock market fell 20%. Would you feel comfortable having your money invested in such a country, in its stock market, in its bond market or in its currency?

I hope you answered “No” or “Hell, No!” to the above question! So why should you feel any different about the situation if the country is called “America”? I am going to show you that the US Bond market is on the brink of collapse and with it will come the collapse of the currency, just as you would expect to be the outcome of such ridiculously inflationary policies in any other country.

Figure 1 US 10 Year Note Price and MFA

In figure 1 the 10 Year US Treasury Note price is shown in black. The Market Force Analysis (MFA) is shown in red. From 2000-2003 the MFA was rising and in a bull trend identified by the trend channel labeled “1”. The bond price was generally rising (falling yields). In late 2003 the MFA exited the channel and entered into a declining trend labeled “2”. The bond price as a consequence was falling (rising yields). In early 2007 the MFA fell rapidly and exited the lower side of the channel. This seemed to be signaling an imminent rapid decline of the bond price. But then in mid-2007 the first news broke of sub-prime mortgage problems. There was a sudden rush to “prime” and safe debt in the form of Government Treasury debt. The MFA did a reversal and entered into a new rising trend labeled “3” and the 10Y note commenced a strong bear market rally. In early 2008 the MFA exited this trend and has been tracking sidewards suggesting a topping process. Ominously the bond price has made a pronounced double top and is looking ripe for a collapse. As the stock market had its worst week in history the financial press reported on short term treasuries rallying as the initial reaction of investors was to rush into “safe haven” treasuries. The 10 year note tells a different story. It initially rallied on Monday October 6 to 118 but by the end of the worst week in stock market history it had fallen to 113.5. Hardly indicative of a safe haven play!

All the bailouts and "recapitalization" plans of the Treasury and the FED are highly inflationary and require issuing massive amounts of Treasury debt. The bond vigilantes are waking up. They are going to dump bonds like they have gone out of style. Bond prices will drop like a stone (as indicated by the black arrow in figure 1), general equities will drop more and the dollar will nose dive.

This highly inflationary scenario will make money rush into the tiny precious metals market and explode their prices due to paltry supply. The lack of supply of the metals will mean that money will have to spill into anything silver or gold such as the mining equities. Money will also flow back into commodities because the money leaving the bond market and the equities markets will be just too large to be accommodated anywhere else.

On Friday October 10 as the stock market selling intensified and 10 Year note prices were falling CNBC Rick Santelli was saying this was a sign the credit market freeze was easing! This was as the LIBOR-TED spread reached an all time high!

What is more likely is that bond holders were waking up to the certain hyperinflation coming as a consequence of the largesse of the government's massive rescue plans.

Many analysts are incorrectly talking of deflation. Falling stock markets or falling housing markets do not contract the money supply. The government's bailouts and "liquidity" injections on the other hand increase it. John Williams shows at shadowstats.com that the money supply is expanding at 14% and when the government guarantees all bank deposits and probably all interbank lending I can't imagine what it will be!

Imagine that instead of living through this nightmare yourself you were watching this complete financial drama unfolding in Venezuela. Who in his right mind would predict that Venezuela would experience massive deflation as a result of creating massive amounts of money and credit out of thin air? So why is it different for America? The laws of economics are not country specific.

Because the Cartel hit gold and silver in the middle of the night on Thursday October 9 many started invoking deflation theories. This is nonsensical and the bond market is about to confirm it!

We have seen the mega-shorts on TOCOM reduce their shorts in gold and silver to next to zero. They know what is going to happen to the prices of precious metals!

Many investors are starting to think that after this stock market rout and with a G7 package things will begin to improve. That is not the way things work! 20 years of excesses with even more monetary excesses about to be heaped upon us as a "rescue package" do not get unwound in 5 days. This is just the beginning. The bond market is the biggest market in the world (if we ignore the ridiculous, unregulated casino peddling OTC derivatives!). When the bond market heads south the money that has to find a safe haven somewhere else is in the trillions. Just a small percentage of this capital will blow the precious metals to unimaginable levels.

The authorities keep saying that they will "use all tools available to them". They only have one…it's an electronic version of the printing press. They will spin it in many different ways using jargon like "increased liquidity" and "injection of capital" and "buying equity stakes" and "buying toxic debt" but it all translates to "create more money out of thin air". Gold and silver and the mining equities will be the place to be and soon thereafter commodities in general.

Clarity will come when the metals reach new highs and at that point a child of six will be able to say where to invest. Of course, that is the greatest incentive for the Gold cartel to prevent new highs being achieved! But new highs are already being achieved in the retail market and on e-bay. The silly manipulation on the COMEX will soon end. You can help it end if you buy a contract and stand for delivery or buy gold and silver through goldmoney.com.

Adrian Douglas

info@marketforceanalysis.com

QUOTE

America's latest export: empty municipal coffers

James Doran reports from New York on how all 50 state treasuries are failing to raise the billions needed just to keep functioning and pay the wages

James Doran The Observer, Sunday October 12 2008
http://www.guardian.co.uk/business/2008/oc...nment-borrowing

The Golden State needs $7bn in the short term just to pay wages of civil servants and maintain infrastructure

Financial Armageddon, the meltdown, the crisis, or whichever title fits the bill this week, is about to enter another even more damaging phase in America.

And it would pay for the rest of the world to take notice because a fair amount of evidence has piled up in recent months to prove the adage about America sneezing and everyone else catching a cold.

The housing markets of much of Europe mimicked those in America by slumping after a few years of heady price increases. The credit markets of Europe and Asia seized up, again following America's lead. Then, of course, stock markets in London, continental Europe and the Far East lost trillions of dollars of value in the wake of several historic Wall Street plunges last week.

Even the solutions to these dominoing financial calamities were tried first in America. The big bail-out authored by US Treasury Secretary Hank Paulson and his friends in Congress, with provisions to protect hundreds of thousands of dollars in the accounts of ordinary citizens, was copied to some degree by Alistair Darling in the UK Treasury and his counterparts across much of continental Europe.

So what's next? What could possibly come along in the middle of this series of economic nightmares to make things even worse? How about a total depletion of local government finances that pay for the things that make up the very fabric of American society. Imagine that rippling across the rest of the world, reducing public services to skeleton operations.

Arnold Schwarzenegger, the former Terminator star turned governor of California, wrote a rather troubling letter to Paulson a couple of weeks ago warning him that the Golden State is in need of about $7bn to meet short-term spending needs.

The money is raised in the bond market to pay the wages of police officers, teachers, judges, attorneys, the National Guard and every other civil servant you can think of. It is also used to pay for the general upkeep of the state - the roads, bridges, tunnels and the essential infrastructure.

California State Treasurer Bill Lockyer is trying to raise a bond issue to help meet the payment, but it is proving very difficult with the debt markets being locked up as they are. And time is running out. Schwarzenegger needs to raise the money before the end of this month or thousands of policemen, teachers and other civil servants will not be paid, prompting who knows what kind of industrial action and civil unrest.

'What is most disconcerting about the way this turmoil is panning out,' says Sujit Canagaretna, senior fiscal analyst at the Council of State Governments (CSG), 'is that most state governments were already in a terrible state. But now things have worsened considerably and the credit markets have a real choke hold on almost all state treasuries. It is so bad that economic activity in most states has all but ground to a halt.'

States have become accustomed to borrowing their way out of troubles like these, but today state and local governments are having just as hard a time securing credit as the banks and financial firms .

'It is just like Wall Street,' Canagaretna says. 'It is almost as if they thought they could borrow for ever without ever confronting the consequences.'

In 1998 the 50 United States had just under $200bn of net tax-supported debt. By 2007, that figure had almost doubled to $398bn, according to the CSG, while tax revenues had fallen sharply. 'Increasing taxes is politically unpalatable and cutting costs is difficult, but borrowing more and more was easy,' Canagaretna adds.

Every day another state or city reports a fresh problem raising funds in the bond market. For the week ending 26 September 2008, some $6bn in new municipal debt issues were expected, yet only $100m came to the market.

Two weeks ago, Erie County, New York could not complete a $75m bond issue because of the unavailability of investors, jeopardising the county's entire $12m payroll. Last week, the state of Massachusetts went into the market for its routine $400m to be used for quarterly payments to cities and towns but the bond issue came up $170m short. Meanwhile, Missouri is having trouble raising a bond to pay for essential road and bridge repairs.

The only bright spot is in Kentucky, where the state treasury successfully completed a $400m bond issue last week. 'But the combined effects of all the problem states far overshadow this one success story,' Canagaretna says.

The financial problems of state governments stretch far beyond the bond market. New York State differs slightly from California and other states in that it cannot call upon the bond markets for short-term funding. Rather, the Empire State relies upon large cash reserves derived from its once bulging tax coffers.

New York State has about $8bn of cash to meet its essential costs, but is in the midst of a budget crisis. Tax revenues for the next year are set to fall by about a third because of the troubles on Wall Street. The problem is that the financial services industry accounts for about 20 per cent of all taxes levied in the State of New York.

'Things are very problematic,' says a spokesman for New York State Comptroller Thomas DiNapoli. 'And, like Governor [David] Paterson said the other day, 49 other states are dealing with the same problems. There is a lot of concern.'

As the spectre of a long and painful recession looms ever larger across the globe, it is troubling to note that these dual problems facing governments across America - falling tax revenue and reduced access to debt - are universal. Brace yourselves for another great American export.

QUOTE

Iceland stock market to stay shut

Monday, 13 October 2008 11:12 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7666498.stm

The Icelandic stock exchange has said that share trading will remain suspended until Tuesday because of continuing "unusual market conditions".

Trading was suspended last Thursday after days of market turmoil and the government's decision to nationalise Iceland's three major banks.

UK councils and other public bodies have about £1bn invested and it is not known if their deposits are safe.

Icelandic and UK authorities are trying to establish a single claims procedure.

Government talks

A Treasury delegation spent the weekend in talks with their Icelandic counterparts.

Private customers with Landsbanki's closed internet bank Icesave are protected by the UK's Financial Services Compensation Scheme.

And arrangements have been agreed "in principle" for a quick payout to retail depositors in Icesave.

But the Icelandic government has not extended protection to the £1bn of taxpayers' money invested by councils, police forces, fire services and charities.

Insolvency fears

So far, more than 100 local authorities in England, Wales and Scotland have revealed they have deposits worth £842.5m in total.

Fears are growing that some local government workers may not be paid this month because councils have payroll tied up in the banks.

And at least 60 UK charities fear they may have lost up to £120m of funds invested in failed Icelandic banks.

The Christie NHS Foundation Trust, based in Withington, Manchester, has revealed it could lose £7.5m.

Representatives from the board of the cancer hospital met with the Financial Services Authority and its lawyers over the weekend.

Iceland is crippled with debt and giving UK depositors their funds may depend on the country securing emergency loans from other countries or the International Monetary Fund (IMF).

Its debt is an estimated about £50bn, which is five times the total annual income of the country.

QUOTE

Dollar, Euro, Sterling May Be Destroyed Zimbabwe-Style

Paul Joseph Watson
Monday, October 13, 2008
http://www.infowars.com/?p=5260

Private investment advisor Martin Hennecke warned this morning that the endless printing of money to bail out collapsing banks would lead to hyperinflation and the Zimbabwe-style destruction of the dollar, euro and sterling.

Asked by CNBC how the three currencies could be destroyed, Hennecke, senior manager of private clients at Tyche, highlighted the collapse of Iceland's banks.

"They have a lot of external debt in other currencies so they wouldn't be able to print up more of their own currency - meaning hyperinflation to get out of their debt - but the UK, the U.S. and the rest of Europe could do it….this is the first step down the road to hyperinflation," said Hennecke.

Noting that there was a gold rush and panic buying taking place while gold dealers worldwide had to close their doors, Hennecke agreed that gold prices would explode as hyperinflation crept up, and said that relatively modest overall price rises in the precious metal were partly a result of deleveraging as well as, "manipulation as the central bankers and the politicians don't want you to panic out of their debt and go into gold."

Hennecke dismissed the new rescue plans announced over the weekend as merely new taxpayer funded money being printed up and thrown at the problem, which will lead to accelerated inflation.

Asked if he believed whether the Euro and the U.S. dollar could go the way of the Zimbabwean dollar, which has suffered annual inflation of over 200 million per cent over the last few years, Hennecke responded, “Actually it’s interesting to know that the world’s leading standard rating agency Standard and Poor has predicted that all the major western governments are heading towards default on their sovereign bonds - that was predicted way before the crisis even started and now with tax revenues drying up and much much more money needed for these bailouts and privatizations of the banks to prevent a bank run, clearly that is likely to be happening earlier (rather) than later.”

“Most investors are saying cash is the safest thing but it might just turn around with cash being one of the highest risk investments if this inflation accelerates,” Hennecke concluded.

Early last month, before the collapse of Lehman Brothers and the announcement of the $700 billion bailout package, Hennecke warned that the U.S. and Europe were both heading for depression and that the U.S. would eventually be forced to announce national bankruptcy.

craig-oxley - October 14, 2008 12:00 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

"The Central Banks and Federal Reserve will dump the U.S World reserve currency on the market. This would prop up their systems and this will collapse the U.S dollar and U.S economy soon after..." -Linday Williams

LINKED>>>>

QUOTE

Fed Releases Flood of Dollars, Market Rates Fall (Update4)

By John Fraher and Simon Kennedy http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...444o&refer=home

Oct. 13 (Bloomberg) -- The Federal Reserve led an unprecedented push by central banks to flood the financial system with as many dollars as banks want, backing up government efforts to revive confidence and helping to reduce money-market rates.

The European Central Bank, the Bank of England and the Swiss National Bank will offer European banks unlimited dollar funds with maturities of seven, 28 and 84 days at fixed interest rates against ``appropriate collateral,'' the Washington-based Fed said today. Previously, the Fed had capped at $380 billion the currency it would swap with the three central banks.

Global economic leaders have redoubled efforts to unfreeze credit markets and avert the worst worldwide recession in 30 years after last week's 20 percent slide in the MSCI World Index. Policy makers from the Group of Seven nations are committed to taking ``all necessary steps'' to stem a market panic, and European and U.S. governments today outlined plans to avoid bank failures.

``Like high waves that have gathered tremendous pace, global policy initiatives are coming to crash on the markets' shores,'' said Alex Patelis, chief international economist at Merrill Lynch & Co. in London. ``A turning point could be reached.''

The cost of borrowing in dollars for three months today fell to 4.75 percent from 4.82 percent, the highest this year. The rate for euros over the same timeframe declined to 5.32 percent from 5.38 percent.

`Funding Stresses'

On foreign exchange markets, the euro rose 1.3 percent against the dollar. Equities rallied worldwide, with the Dow Jones Industrial Average gaining the most points ever. Morgan Stanley soared 85 percent, while Bank of America Corp. and Citigroup Inc. jumped more than 9 percent.

``Taken together, the latest moves increase the chances that we will begin to see some relaxation of the intense funding stresses,'' Dominic Wilson and other economists at Goldman Sachs Group Inc. wrote in a note today. ``This is because bank solvency risk should decline as the government offers protection.''

As well as slashing interest rates in concert last week, global central banks are expanding their toolkits to push down money-market rates. The Fed on Oct. 7 said it will create a special fund to buy U.S. commercial paper and the ECB last week said it would offer financial firms unlimited euro funds. The Bank of England is scheduled to revamp its own money-market operations later this week.

Until now, central banks and governments have failed to gain traction in markets, with investors criticizing them for adopting a scattershot and uncoordinated approach.

`Work Together'

The ECB, the BOE and the Swiss National Bank ``can provide U.S. dollar funding in quantities sufficient to meet their demand'' into 2009, the Fed said today. The Bank of Japan may introduce ``similar measures.''

The aim is to keep the financial system flowing with the world's reserve currency. Banks are hoarding cash for fear they will lose the money if it's loaned or held elsewhere, or because they need it for their own funding needs.

``Central banks will continue to work together and are prepared to take whatever measures are necessary to provide sufficient liquidity in short-term funding markets,'' the Fed's statement said.

What began last December as a $24 billion arrangement between the Fed, the ECB and Swiss central bank was boosted over the past year to $620 billion and broadened to additional countries. The Fed didn't announce changes to the $240 billion of swap lines with six other central banks, including those in Japan, Canada, Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Australia.

`More Important'

Today's ``action is unprecedented,'' said Neil Mackinnon, chief economist at ECU Plc in London and a former U.K Treasury official. Andrew Milligan, who helps oversee about $260 billion as head of global strategy at Standard Life, said it's a ``much more important'' move than the coordinated rate cut.

G-7 finance chiefs pledged Oct. 10 to take ``urgent and exceptional action'' after stocks plunged and as a global recession looms.

France, Germany and Spain today committed 960 billion euros ($1.3 trillion) to guarantee lending between banks and take stakes in them. That followed a summit of European leaders in Paris yesterday focused on achieving a more united front to battle the crisis.

Royal Bank of Scotland Group Plc, HBOS Plc, and Lloyds TSB Group will get an unprecedented 37 billion-pound ($64 billion) bailout from the U.K. government. The U.K. stole a march on its counterparts by saying last week it would guarantee lending between banks and invest in lenders.

In a New York Times column published today before the announcement that he had won the Nobel Prize in economics, Paul Krugman said the U.K.'s ``combination of clarity and decisiveness hasn't been matched by any Western government.''

U.S. Proposal

The U.S. Treasury today fleshed out its new proposal to buy stakes in financial firms. The program will be optional and aimed at ``healthy firms,'' Treasury Assistant Secretary Neel Kashkari, who oversees the $700 billion rescue package, said in a speech in Washington. U.S. Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson has identified purchasing stocks as his top priority.

The U.S. may now have to match Europe in guaranteeing interbank loans, said Win Thin, an economist at Brown Brothers Harriman & Co. in New York. ``It would appear that it has no choice but to follow suit,'' he said.

The collapse of New York-based Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc. precipitated the latest chapter of the 14-month crisis, causing banks to stop lending to each other out of concern they may not get their money back. The world's largest financial companies have posted more than $635 billion in writedowns and credit losses since the start of last year after the U.S. housing market slumped.

Today's move by central banks is ``another welcome measure,'' said Ross Walker, an economist at Royal Bank of Scotland in London. ``We'll have to see what comes out of it. We all expect more rate cuts, whether they're coordinated or not is another matter.''

To contact the reporter on this story: John Fraher in London at jfraher@bloomberg.net; Simon Kennedy in Washington at skennedy4@bloomberg.net

Last Updated: October 13, 2008 16:27 EDT

QUOTE

Take note folks at whats happening to the poor Icelandic peoples now in a real mess. Take note on the foreign currency and needing documents of proof etc. Get in first or get in Gold and essentials. Prepare for shortly when we all have this happening. Only two weeks worth of stock tops. I personally plan for 1-3 days. -Craig

Icelandic Shoppers Splurge as Currency Woes Reduce Food Imports

By Chad Thomas
http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...cc50&refer=home

Oct. 13 (Bloomberg) -- After a four-year spending spree, Icelanders are flooding the supermarkets one last time, stocking up on food as the collapse of the banking system threatens to cut the island off from imports.

``We have had crazy days for a week now,'' said Johannes Smari Oluffsson, manager of the Bonus discount grocery store in Reykjavik's main shopping center. ``Sales have doubled.''

Bonus, a nationwide chain, has stock at its warehouse for about two weeks. After that, the shelves will start emptying unless it can get access to foreign currency, the 22-year-old manager said, standing in a walk-in fridge filled with meat products, among the few goods on sale produced locally.

Iceland's foreign currency market has seized up after the three largest banks collapsed and the government abandoned an attempt to peg the exchange rate. Many banks won't trade the krona and suppliers from abroad are demanding payment in advance. The government has asked banks to prioritize foreign currency transactions for essentials such as food, drugs and oil.

The crisis is already hitting clothing retailers. A short walk from Bonus in the capital's Kringlan shopping center, Ragnhildur Anna Jonsdottir, 38, owner of the Next Plc clothing store, said she can't get any foreign currency to pay for incoming shipments and, even if she could, the exchange rate would be prohibitively high.

``We aren't getting new shipments in, as we normally do once a week,'' Jonsdottir said. ``This is the third week that we haven't had any shipments.''

Bankrupt

Iceland's 320,000 inhabitants have enjoyed four years of economic growth in excess of 4 percent as banks and businesses expanded abroad, buying up companies from brokerages to West Ham United soccer club. Now, the three biggest banks, Kaupthing Bank hf, Landsbanki Island hf and Glitnir Bank hf have collapsed under the weight of about $61 billion in debts, 12 times the size of the economy, according to data compiled by Bloomberg.

The central bank, or Sedlabanki, ditched its attempt to peg the krona to a basket of currencies on Oct. 9, after just two days, citing ``insufficient support'' in the market. Nordea Bank AB, the biggest Scandinavian lender, said the same day that the krona hadn't been traded on the spot market, while the last quoted price was 340 per euro, compared with 122 a month ago.

``There is absolutely no currency in the country today to import,'' said Andres Magnusson, chief executive officer of the Icelandic Federation of Trade and Services in Reykjavik. ``The only way we can solve this problem is to get the IMF into the country.''

Imports Dependency

The International Monetary Fund sent a delegation to the island last week. Prime Minister Geir Haarde said on Oct. 9 his country may ask it for money after failing to get ``the response that we felt that we should be able to get'' from European governments and central banks. The state will also start talks with Russia over a possible 4 billion-euro ($5.5 billion) loan.

Iceland's rugged, treeless terrain, a barren stretch of volcanic rock, geysers and moss, means the country imports most food, other than meat, fish and dairy products.

Magnusson said last week that one of Iceland's largest supermarket chains was unable to get any foreign currency to make purchases abroad and another retailer's electronic payment didn't go through. Iceland will begin to see shortages of ``regular goods'' by the end of the week if nothing changes, he said.

``We are struggling to make the economy survive from hour to hour,'' Magnusson said. ``There is an enormous amount of capital that wants to get out of the country.''

Sedlabanki told lenders on Oct. 10 that residents who want foreign currency should first prove they need the money for traveling by providing documentation for their trip.

Essential Goods

Wholesalers are demanding that importers pay before any goods are shipped, said Knutur Signarsson, head of the Reykjavik-based Federation of Icelandic Trade. Under normal circumstances, wholesalers abroad would extend credit for 30 to 90 days, he said.

``Many of them ask us to pay cash before they send the goods to Iceland,'' Signarsson said. ``Because of the situation, Iceland has become a country that no one trusts any longer.''

Bogi Thor Siguroddsson, owner of Johan Roenning, an import and retail business which has about 7 billion krona ($71 million) in annual sales, says he's instructed his purchasing managers to only import the core goods, including light bulbs, lamps and electrical cables, they need to serve their customers.

``It's enough to have the credit crisis,'' he said. ``Then you have the currency crash. Unfortunately, we have shown that we can't handle it ourselves."

Food Inflation

Icelanders, whose per capita gross domestic product is the fifth highest in the world, according to the United Nations 2007/2008 Human Development Index, will have to tighten their belts.

Shoppers are paying more for the goods they do get. The cost of fruits and vegetables, nearly all of which are imported, have gone up about 50 percent in recent months, said Steinunn Kristinsdottir, a 33-year-old Reykjavik resident who was leaving the Bonus store with her cart full.

``This situation really has been a bit troubling for people," she said. ``They don't know what's going to happen."

To contact the reporter on this story: Chad Thomas in Reykjavik, Iceland, via the Helsinki newsroom at cthomas16@bloomberg.net.

Last Updated: October 13, 2008 01:47 EDT

QUOTE

Just stop paying your mortgage

By Peter Schiff
October 10, 2008
http://www.signonsandiego.com/uniontrib/20...1e10schiff.html

If you are a mortgage holder who is either struggling with crushing payments, bitter for having overpaid for your home during the bubble, or who has extravagantly refinanced when prices were rising, the government's landmark $700 billion bailout package has an important message for you: stop making your mortgage payments . . . immediately. Furthermore, if you believe that with some planning and sacrifice you may be able to meet your mortgage obligations, the government's message is clear: relax, don't bother.

While angry voters have labeled the package as a bailout for Wall Street, it is more akin to a “Get out of Jail Free” card for anyone who acted irresponsibly during the boom. Here's why.

Nobody likes foreclosure, least of all politicians. The new law clearly indicates that the government will make major efforts to reduce foreclosures through “term extensions, rate reductions and principal write-downs” of the troubled mortgages that it buys from the private sector. In other words, your new landlord will bend over backward to keep you in your home. The legislation telegraphs this by including a provision that extends until 2013 the exclusion of loan reductions from taxable income.

When a financial institution holds a mortgage, homeowners must live with the fear of foreclosure. Private institutions only have obligations to shareholders. In the case of a defaulting borrower, they will look to recover as much of their principal as possible. If foreclosure is their best option, they will take it in a heartbeat.

The government has no such obligations. Its only goal is to keep voters happy. After supposedly bailing out the fat cats on Wall Street, no politician wants to be accused of evicting struggling families. Once you understand this, all of your anxiety should melt away. Why pay your mortgage if foreclosure is off the table, and if you know that lower payments, and possibly a reduced loan amount, would result? A tarnished a credit rating is a small price to pay for such a benefit.

Unfortunately, this boon will not extend to those foolish individuals who either made large down payments or resisted the temptation of cashing out equity. The large amount of home equity built up by these suckers, I mean homeowners, means that in the case of default foreclosure remains a financially attractive option. As a result, these loans will be much less likely to be turned over to the government.

If your mortgage does become the property of Uncle Sam, the growingly popular impulse to “just walk away” should be replaced by “just stay and stop paying.” No one will throw you out. After a few months, or years, of living payment free, you will get a call from a motivated government agent eager to adjust your loan into something affordable.

To bolster your bargaining position it will help to be able to claim poverty. As a result, if you have any savings, spend it soon, before they call. Buy a bigger TV, a new wardrobe, or better yet, take a vacation. After the hardship of spending all of your refi cash, you probably deserve it. If you have any guilt just remember, Washington argues that consumer spending is the best way to stimulate the economy. Living beyond your means is a patriotic duty.

If you do get the opportunity to live for a while with no mortgage payment, don't make the tragic mistake of using your extra cash to pay down your credit cards. As the growing level of credit card defaults will soon push credit card companies into bankruptcy, we can expect a similar bailout plan for American Express and Discover Financial. When that happens, expect massive balance reductions for Americans who can demonstrate the inability to pay. The bigger your balance, the greater the benefit.

Taxpayers, however, will not be so lucky. The savvy investment strategists who see the government turning a tidy profit on its mortgage purchases have not factored in the incentives that will discourage nonpayment. The only way the government will be able to profit would be to buy the mortgages at deep discounts to actual loan values. However, if the purchase prices are too low, the plan will bankrupt the institutions it is trying to bail out. On the other hand, if it substantially overpays, which seems far more likely, it will bankrupt the nation.

In any event, as more and more borrowers succumb to the allure and safety of nonpayment, look for the number of troubled assets to swell. This will ensure that the $700 billion merely represents the first installment in what will be a multitrillion-dollar plan. Just as government policies provided the primary impetus in blowing up the housing bubble earlier in the decade, its latest attempt at market manipulation will only result in making a terrible problem far worse.

Schiff is president of Euro Pacific Capital and author of “The Little Book of Bull Moves in Bear Markets.”

QUOTE

Tips for Financial Problems

http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...php?showtopic=6

QUOTE

Rogers: Inflation Holocaust

10 oct 2008

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xIsHD7nwTbU

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/xIsHD7nwTbU&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/xIsHD7nwTbU&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - October 14, 2008 04:29 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

Juicing the stock market
The secret maneuverings of the Plunge Protection Team
http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...?showtopic=2756

QUOTE

The Party Is Just Beginning
Derivatives Are 16x World's Entire GDP

By Randolph Buss
Berlin, Germany
10-10-8

As the saying goes : "In a ham and eggs breakfast, the hen is involved, but the pig is committed".

By my reckoning, Paulson and Central Banks are the chicken and the world's (stupid) taxpayers are the pig. We have no choice in the matter, and by the way, to get ham, the pigs are always slaughtered.

My current fear is that we may be in near term for continued financial meltdown - something is definitely in the works in Washington D. C. ...

All hell is breaking loose - the DOW closed down 670 points last evening and today asian markets have been battered down again with the NIKKEI losing 10%, most other asian markets are down 7 - 9 %.
Oil has corrected down again this week so far as the outlook for world-wide recession is growing while gold and silver are now moving higher. Overnight figures are :

Oil

$82.63 -3.96 -4.57%

Gold

$929.50 +43.00 +4.85%

Gas

$6.67 -0.16 -2.27%

I expect another "Sunday announcement" from officials - the G8 Finance Ministers are meeting today in Washington D.C. and the IMF are deliberating. Likewise, Pres. W. Bush is to give ANOTHER announcement today at 16:25 EST. What will this be about ? There could be a bank moratorium in the pipeline. Or more drastic measures...

The chart above (courtesy of D. Norcini | Tech Lines: R. Buss) shows that in Euro terms, gold is breaking out and making new highs - very interesting indeed. As well, in other currencies, Gold is rocketing to new highs - this is the true currency of last resort as other currencies devalue in purchasing power - this will become more apparent as higher inflation in the pipeline comes...

The prospect of hyperinflation is now becoming a REAL possibility - trillions of dollars are being pumped and nothing is happening in the credit markets - FEAR is enveloping world markets. We now think there may be another concerted effort to engage in socialist methods of the State buying up everything, guaranteeing loans, etc. as in Iceland, UK, etc. Welcome to October 2008. We would not be surprised to see more civil unrest as people realize they have been cheated out of their lifetime savings and pensions.

If you ever thought to be invested in gold and silver and hard assets - NOW is the time. A storm is brewing over the world economy and PAPER MONEY is not helping anything it seems. Caveat : we are also sure that "gold enemies", i.e. Central Banks and their banks, will try to keep the price on gold below $1000 - there is a fight coming - Gold .vs. Paper - do not underestimate this fight - it will be very dirty and it is your government fighting against you and your wealth.

Here are few recent remarks from elected officials in the US government:

US House of Rep. Speaker Nancy Pelosi : "It's not a bailout, it's a buy-in"
W. Bush : "We have a sound economy"
Hank Paulson : "Our underlying financial system is solid"
Hank Paulson : "The US Dollar is strong"
As an ambitious student of history in all its twisted and convoluted probity, or lack thereof, a thought from my Berlin (a rather appropriate location) office below. The point being, the SPIN is no longer working - the Emperor, or better said, the Empire, has no clothes. He is now laid bare for all to see - now the financial spin doctors are about to foist even more upon us - just wait.

The Big Lie is a propaganda technique. It was defined by Adolf Hitler in his 1925 autobiography Mein Kampf (My Struggle) as a lie so "colossal" that no one would believe that someone "could have the impudence to distort the truth so infamously".

"If you tell a lie big enough and keep repeating it, people will eventually come to believe it. The lie can be maintained only for such time as the State can shield the people from the political, economic and/or military consequences of the lie. It thus becomes vitally important for the State to use all of its powers to repress dissent, for the truth is the mortal enemy of the lie, and thus by extension, the truth is the greatest enemy of the State."

And here was a response from Joseph Goebbels to Churchill and Co. - also very interesting.

"One should not, as a rule, reveal one's secrets, since one does not know if and when one may need them again. The essential English leadership secret does not depend on particular intelligence. Rather, it depends on a remarkably stupid thick-headedness. The English follow the principle that when one lies, one should lie big, and stick to it. They keep up their lies, even at the risk of looking ridiculous."

Like I have said in the past : Repeat the government's mantra over and over again until you believe it : Strong Dollar, Sound Economy, All is Well, Jobs will not be Lost, Economic Fundamentals are Good.

By the way, Gordon Brown, UK Prime Minister, is now seemingly intent upon using Anti-Terror Laws against Iceland for sandbagging UK citizens accounts in icelandic banks which have been nationalized- no payouts at the moment, if ever. Gordo, why dont you just bomb them ? God knows, there can be a case made for the outcast Icelandic Taliban in Iceland's extensive cave systems... briefcases full of Kronor, Russian Rubles and even a few of the Queen's pounds - this is absolutely hilarious if it were not totally true.

( note: Iceland was turned down by the US, UK and Euroland when submitting for help on a loan bailout for its banks. In the end, it turned to Russia to secure an $8 billion loan - so much for so- called "friends and allies". I suppose Russia will now have secured submarine bases in the North Atlantic)

As I stated above - the "Financial Powers that Be" have been meeting and are in close consultation, are meeting today in Washington D.C.,(IMF and World Bank) will continue to meet on the weekend in Washington D.C.

A final chart : in the last months, hundreds of billions have been literally created and thrown into the financial arena to try and "calm the markets". We should realize that the total amount of OTC derivatives are on magnitude of 16x the world's entire GDP, or, approximately 650 trillion dollars in June 2008.

If this is the amount of "bad debt" on the books, and which must be cleansed, then I submit we shall soon see complete meltdown of the financial system and of general solid businesses with no access to credit to finance things like payroll, inventory or investment plans - they will collapse.

It is pure folly to hear politicians and news stories of "Are we in a recession?". My answer is beginning to turn - I now say we are entering a Depression - as I have often surmised in my GMR Newsletter. And if things continue on this route, we shall be entering a hyperinflationary depression. Why? Because now the Central Banks are likely to embark upon one of the greatest reflation programs ever witnessed in the modern world.

Hyperinflationary because the world is facing a deflationary menace - that of too many goods in an environment of fear, panic and need to save. Thus those goods will linger and stagnate. No new widgets or gadgets need to be built. The bad debt is coming home to you - now.

It was interesting to read a few reader comments sent to me, which said "Thank God I did not invest in gold" - it has dropped so much" . My current thoughts are : those readers shall likely eat their words if things get wholly out of control. In any case, the amount of reflation necessary will be horrendous. Funny, but looking at the gold charts, I see gold in most major currencies has zoomed up (NOT down) - hard to understand those readers. The major stock indices are getting hammered down 30, 40 or even 50 percent while gold has maintained a steady uptrend. That is why gold is STILL in a stealth up move - when and/or if "joe public" realize this, there will be a jump.

I expect at that point, gold controls to be enacted. How and When and What I don't know. It all hinges on this ONGOING bailout and how the markets respond - it's no longer the "financial engineers" in control, it's the politicians, the bureaucrats and the state-sponsored hoodlums. I leave the rest to your imagination. And if you're wondering, yes, I am considerably perturbed at these bumbling idiots...

Just to note, as I had predicted, we see Central Banks and their recent press statements:

inflation is coming down ; it is no longer a major threat the economy is weakening - we have room to cut rates
Are we headed to a full-blown Kondratieff Winter? ... certainly it looks so. Finally, I want to throw in an interesting astrological tidbit - I read and study alot of this but keep it mostly to myself.
We have entered a Pluto-Capricorn cycle having just passed out of the Sagittarius. Capricorn house is for the next 16 years and is indicative of deflation, fear, panic, less freedoms, low returns.
Both Kondratieff and Pluto in Capricorn point to investment in commodities, food, agriculture.

Randolph Buss
diiportal@dinl.net

Randolph Buss | DINL
located in Berlin, Germany | Zürich, Switzerland
please contact me for a non-binding consultation

Personal appointments in Berlin, Hamburg, Munich, Frankfurt, Zurich or by arrangement at mutual location

The Markets · Macro Economic Outlook · Technical Analysis & Charts Fundamental Research · Independent Asset Management Portfolio Advisory

tel: +49 30 850 73371
skype: dinl.net
http://www.dinl.net
Berlin, Germany
© copyright 2004-2008

QUOTE

Argentina's Economic Collapse (FULL VERSION)

59 min - Jul 19, 2008
http://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=4353655982817317115

Documentary on the events that led to the economic collapse of Argentina in 2001 which wiped out the middle class and raised the level of po...all » Documentary on the events that led to the economic collapse of Argentina in 2001 which wiped out the middle class and raised the level of poverty to 57.5%. Central to the collapse was the implementation of neo-liberal policies which enabled the swindle of billions of dollars by foreign banks and corporations. Many of Argentina's assets and resources were shamefully plundered. Its financial system was even used for money laundering by Citibank, Credit Suisse, and JP Morgan. The net result was massive wealth transfers and the impoverishment of society which culminated in many deaths due to oppression and malnutrition. If you want to stop the same thing from happening here, and it is happening here, right now, please join the revolution at the Kick Them All Out Projet http://www.KickThemAllOut.com and the Fire Congress Campaign

[dohtml]<embed id="VideoPlayback" src="http://video.google.com/googleplayer.swf?docid=4353655982817317115&hl=en&fs=true" style="width:400px;height:326px" allowFullScreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" type="application/x-shockwave-flash"> </embed>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

Glenn Beck Highlights Threat Of Martial Law

Following Economic Crisis

13 Oct 2008
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=jB9fuIvksLw

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/jB9fuIvksLw&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/jB9fuIvksLw&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

October 15, 2008 posting #2 ... my analogy of the drug addict cocaine dealer (see the "thought of the day" sub-page if you missed that commentary) comparing the drug dealer doing his "product" to the financial "experts" and bankers and business leaders in the USA and around the world rings more true than ever ... i had to chuckle as yesterday every major news paper (excuse me ... i mean the smooooz noooz papers) all heralded the one day stock market rise of 936 points as "proof" that the "bail-out" had worked ... but oooops ... they should have waited a day ... like the drug addict with a one day high from his latest shot in the arm and his "euphoria" ... the crash has already come a day later as the world reverberates with sharp losses and countries going entirely under financially ... take little Iceland for example ... it is completely broke ... today the governor of New York stated that it is now bankrupt and so is the city of New York ... i bet the phones have already started ringing to the fed for another "bailout" ... people in iceland are raiding the food markets and clearing the shelves in panic buying ... make no mistake ... the future may certainly hold the same for most of the world and the good ole' USA is not immune to this either ... we were all told that the "bailout" would cure all our woes ... it was no more passed than the backpedaling started in full throttle by the very people who days earlier were calling it the cure-all ... jim mccanney

craig-oxley - October 17, 2008 11:34 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

"Recession? It's a DEPRESSION!!" -Hugh Hendry (European Hedge Fund Expert) on Bloomberg @ 22:14BST 17 Oct 2008

Electica Asset Management:
http://www.eclectica-am.com/disclaimer.asp...ome&target=home

QUOTE

Dear Robert,

Good conclusion.

Further, Richard Fuld, Jr., CEO and Chariman of Lehman Brothers, was the only Jewish head of the major banks and investment houses on Wall Street at the time of the "collapse." But he was busy serving his master on Rome, setting up his own Jewish people here in the US (all six million of them) to be blamed for the largest bankrupcy in the nation's history. Fuld is a CFR member and on the board of Directors for the Federal Reserve of New York.

The Jesuit Order's Bank of America refused to purchase Lehman Brothers (full of Jewish capital) and Fuld set up Lehman for the fall---as ordered. Now the nine banks to receive funds from Secretary of the Treasury Paulson (from Goldman Sachs) are all controlled by White Gentiles---loyal to Rome---except one Jew, Lloyd Blankfein of Goldman Sachs, which company is laced with Knights of Malta including that SMOM and "Steward of St Peter," Geoffrey T. Boisi.

Sincerely in faith,

Brother Eric

QUOTE

Banks borrow record $437.5 billion per day from Fed

Fri Oct 17, 2008 12:38am EDT Email | Print | Share| Reprints | Single Page |
http://www.reuters.com/article/newsOne/idU...0081017?sp=true

NEW YORK (Reuters) - Financial institutions ran to their lender of last resort for record amounts of cash in the latest week, under extreme pressure from the worst global financial crisis in a generation, Federal Reserve data showed on Thursday.

Banks and dealers' overall direct borrowings from the Fed averaged a record $437.53 billion per day in the week ended October 15, topping the previous week's $420.16 billion per day.

Some analysts are concerned that banks' dependence on Fed lending might become long term and difficult to change.

"The banking system is going to become addicted to this very cheap money. Unwinding it will be very difficult," said Howard Simons, strategist with Bianco Research in Chicago.

"We have effectively allowed the central banks to disintermediate the banking system. Why would I want to borrow from you if I could do it with the central bank, because they can always print it up and say 'here'...and they are in the business now of making sure I stay in business," Simons said.

Primary credit discount window borrowings averaged a record $99.66 billion per day in the latest week, up from $75.0 billion per day the previous week.

Primary dealer and other broker dealer borrowings were $133.87 billion as of October 15, versus $122.94 billion on October 8.

"Other credit extensions", mostly reflecting loans to insurer AIG, were $82.86 billion as of October 15, versus $70.30 billion as of October 8.

The Fed's lending to banks to enable them to purchase asset-backed commercial paper from money market mutual funds was $122.76 billion as of October 15, versus $139.48 billion on October 8.

Proceeds from the U.S. Treasury's sales of Treasury bills in the Fed's supplementary financing account, which are helping to fund the Fed's support of financial institutions, were $499.13 billion as of October 15, versus $459.25 billion as of October 8.

(Reporting by John Parry; Editing by Leslie Adler)

QUOTE

Central banks failing to solve crisis

Depression on the way

by Christopher Laird, PrudentSquirrel.com | October 16, 2008
http://www.financialsense.com/fsu/editoria.../2008/1016.html

A few weeks ago, I mentioned that the central banks had put up collectively $3 trillion worth of stimulus/backing to financial markets. I also noticed that the big bailouts had about only a one day boost to the financial markets till they did a thumbs down.

Now, as of Monday Oct 13, the Europeans came up with a mammoth 1.3 trillion Euro bailout package (close to $ 2 trillion worth). The markets rallied for ONE day. Then, add another unlimited Fed dollar swap package to anyone (they trade dollars to central banks who need them for their currency because those central banks need dollars for people leaving foreign markets). So using my rough math, since August 07, the central banks have now put out over an astonishing $5 trillion plus worth of what is mostly short term liquidity (loans to financial institutions).

And, with all that money, the markets are down Wednesday across the world again? Only two days after the Europeans add almost $2 trillion worth of backing to their financial system? And the Fed had just added unlimited dollar swaps?

What the heck is going on?

Relentless deleveraging

What is going on is relentless deleveraging of over $1000 trillion of financial leverage (it's more than that but the figure gets the idea across. So, over a period of a year, the US and ECB /Europe alone have added $5 trillion worth of financial backing to the world, but that is against $1000 trillion deleveraging – the bailout efforts are simply miniscule compared to what is driving markets down – at a ratio of 1000 to 5 so far. The bailouts and liquidity injections simply cannot work.

And, the markets relentlessly tail down, even within a day or two of major new bailout announcements. I think this kind of makes the point. Which is that $5 trillion is not near enough to stop $1000 trillion from deleveraging worldwide.

Gold, USD, and oil here

And then, we see gold and silver and precious metals selling off big at times, but gold kind of holds its own. But basically, gold is being tugged between big selling for money for margin calls on big investors like hedge funds. Then gold comes back a week later. Gold is reacting most strongly to the credit crisis worldwide, as big investors flee into the most secure 'money' they can find.

And even though the initial epicenter of the real estate collapse and the banking crisis is in the US, the USD is strengthening too. One reason is that people are selling emerging/foreign markets and repatriating that back to the US in dollars. Another is that the USD is still regarded as a safer haven than most. Just take a look at the Ruble and Russian markets – way way down, but last year regarded as a possible resource currency financial haven. Well, that sure proved wrong.

Resource sector

And then, the resource sector is just getting killed. And so are the resource nations stocks. And, get this, China is slowing markedly. Not to mention the China stock markets are WAY down from their highs, like 70% or so down from a year or two ago. But, didn't we hear that China and the emerging economies would carry the world economy if the US/West slowed? Well, I think that theory has been definitively debunked.

And, with this slowing in the West, and now about a year later in developing economies like China and Russia and South America, the resource sectors are getting creamed. Miners and also oil/energy stocks are getting creamed. But didn't we hear that these sectors were the new future and in the middle of a ten year plus bull market only a year ago?

I think a lot of this is simpler than that. Frankly, a year ago, we stated over and over that the imminent slowing of US and world economies would lead to a China slowdown, and a resource correction. But it was worse than that even. The collapsing credit markets (imploding is a better characterization, frankly) have put a choke hold on every imaginable economic activity.

And guess what, the next shoes to drop in the US, EU, Asia will be huge layoffs, as the economic stats will start to show big economic declines in consumer and business activity in coming months. In fact, those bad data are now showing up now.

Realization

And, when markets finally wake up to the fact that, despite new gigantic bailouts by governments, it's not working, it's definitely not working, and financial institutions are still afraid to loan money out. The realization is that it's basically over, the cake is baked.

Or, to be more clear, the markets are not going to recover, and are going down far more.

Now, after the totally unprecedented actions in the last two weeks, particularly the announcements Monday by the Europeans and the Fed, with another what $2 to 3 trillion thrown at the problem, the markets this week are just crashing.

And now we get back to the original point, that every time a new huge bailout is announced, all that money appears to be good for a mere one day rally in financial markets.

Of course, to be fair, the Fed and others say it takes time to get all that money out and working in the system. But, do we have the time now? And frankly, can the huge bailouts even work in the end?

It's already being stated that, even with the huge infusions to all these world banks and financial institutions, the financial institutions still won't lend but are merely holding on desperately to the money- Lest they be the next Lehman or whatever.

Central banks cannot replace the economy

Now, Sarkozy and others in the EU are talking about a new Bretton Woods agreement. So now they want to replace /reform the entire world monetary system too? Do you think that will solve the problem? So, now after committing what is rapidly going to be $10 trillion and counting of public backing, which is not working, they will think up anything to try to stop what they fear, a total world financial collapse.

But, no matter what they try, no matter how big, nothing works. The reason is that the Central Banks cannot replace the economy. They can try to stimulate it, but they cannot even come close to replacing millions of people working, borrowing and lending.

And the way things are going, with every bigger bailouts (that European $2 trillion move Monday was amazing) it would seem they are going to bankrupt their own government finances along with their collapsing economic sectors. They will stop at nothing to avoid what they fear, a total economic collapse. And after that, comes the currency collapses? With the way they are handling this, that appears to be in the cards.

It's already being stated that the US fiscal situation has been severely degraded by all these bailouts. The USD is still holding, but till when?

Effects on the Euro

Then, consider the effect of all this on the Euro. First, when it became clear that there would be no EU wide consensus on a fix, the Euro fell. Then some of the big nations did come up with a $2 trillion backing Monday. But, the fact is, there is no real coordinated EU wide policy on this situation. Even if the Fed is acting wildly, it at least has a unified policy for the USD. But the EU is not so.

And this definitely calls the Euro in question. So then, we get calls for a new Bretton Woods agreement. (The Bretton Woods agreement was where the USD was used to back the collapsing European currencies during WW2. It stayed in effect after WW2 till the US went off the gold standard in 1971).

New world currency?

But, this time, the USD is not really able to back the world's currencies. Some new form will be invented. The trouble is, what currency is able to step into that gap? None that I can see.
So, will this relentless bailout mentality lead us all ultimately to a new world currency? A single new world currency, or one that the major economies subscribe to?

That may sound preposterous but I don't think it's quite that unlikely.

What really concerns me

What really concerns me is another Great Depression. And, we are actually closely following the script of that time. First, economic and financial crashes. Then big public bailouts. Then economic activity collapses. Then we have a grinding depression.

And, in a depression, we get huge unemployment, and even food shortages. In fact, I wonder if we will see something like what happened in Iceland this week, where the stores are running out of food and everything because there is no foreign exchange. They won't accept the Iceland Krona. So, Iceland can't import food.

Lest you think that problem is isolated to that island nation, in the Great Depression millions starved in the US and Europe and elsewhere, even in big food producing countries. One reason is that big food producers sell their food for foreign currency – ie export it. The natives be damned. That's what happened in Argentina in the early 2000's.

And, god forbid, there can be a big war after the depression. This is exactly what happened in the 1930's/40's.

So, batten down the hatches, and be super cautious. Don't believe the financial TV that seems to be always saying the bottom is here. I don't believe that for a minute. The credit crisis is just grinding away at the world economies like a big wood chipper. The next quarter or two, we will see big declines in economic activity, and also big layoffs all over the world.

QUOTE

Global systemic crisis Alert - Summer 2009: The US government defaults on its debt

- Public announcement GEAB N°28 (October 16, 2008) - http://www.leap2020.eu/GEAB-N-28-is-availa...debt_a2250.html

In this 28th edition of the GEAB, LEAP/E2020 has decided to launch a new global systemic crisis alert. Indeed our researchers anticipate that, before next summer 2009, the US government will default and be prevented to pay back its creditors (holders of US Treasury Bonds, of Fanny May and Freddy Mac shares, etc.). Of course such a bankruptcy will provoke some very negative outcome for all USD-denominated asset holders. According to our team, the period that will then begin should be conducive to the setting up of a « new Dollar » to remedy the problem of default and of induced massive capital drain from the US. The process will result from the following five factors studied in detail further in this GEAB:

• The recent upward trend of the US Dollar is a direct and temporary consequence of the collapse of stock markets

• Thanks to its recent « political baptism », the Euro becomes a credible « safe haven » value and therefore provides a « crisis » alternative to the US dollar

• The US public debt is now swelling uncontrollably

• The ongoing collapse of US real economy prevents from finding an alternative solution to the country's defaulting

• « Strong inflation or hyper-inflation in the US in 2009? », that is the only question.

Studying the case of Iceland can give an idea of the upcoming stages of the crisis. That is what our team has been doing ever since the beginning of 2006. This country indeed provides a good illustration of what the US and the UK should be expecting. It can be considered – and that is what most Icelandic people do today – that the collapse of Iceland's financial system came from the fact that it was disproportionate to the size of the country's economy.

user posted image
Inflation in Iceland - 2003-2008 - Source Central Bank of Iceland

Financially speaking, Iceland thought of itself as UK (1), in the same way as, financially speaking, UK thought of itself as the US and the US thought of themselves as the entire world. It is therefore quite useful to study the case of Iceland (2) in order to understand the course of events that London and Washington will follow in the next 12 months (3).

What we see today is a double historical phenomenon:

. on the one hand, since September 2008 (as anticipated in the February 2008 edition of the GEAB - N°22), the whole planet has become aware that a global systemic crisis is unfolding, characterised by the collapse of the US financial system and its contagion to the rest of the world.

. on the other hand, a growing number of global players are beginning to act on their own, in reaction to the ineffectiveness of the measures advocated or implemented by the US though they are the centre of this global financial system. What happened with this first Euroland (or Eurozone summit which took place on Sunday, October 12, 2008, and whose decisions, by their scope (close to 1,700-billion EUR) and their nature (4), resulted in a regain of confidence on financial markets from all over the world, is typical of the « post-September 2008 world ».

user posted image

Map of deposit insurances in the EU - Source AFP - 10/09/2008

Indeed there is such a thing as a « post-September 2008 world ». According to our team, it is now clear that this past month will remain in the history books of the whole planet as the month when the global systemic crisis started; even if what is really at play is its decanting phase, the last of a series of four phases of the crisis described by LEAP/E2020 as early as June 2006 (5). As always when it comes to large human groups, the perception of change among the general public only occurs when change is already far on its way.

As a matter of fact, September 2008 is the month when the « financial detonator » of the global systemic crisis exploded. According to LEAP/E2020 indeed, this second semester 2008 is the time when « the world dives into the heart of the impact phase of the global systemic crisis » (6); which means for our researchers that, at the end of this semester, the world enters the « decanting phase » of the crisis, i.e. a phase when the outcome of the shock settles down. This phase is the longest (from 3 to 10 years, according to the country) and the one affecting the largest number of people and countries. It is also the phase when the components of new global equilibriums will start to appear, two of them being already described by LEAP/E2020 in this 28th edition of the GEAB in the graphic illustrations below (7).

Therefore, as we repeated it on and on since 2006, this crisis is far more important, in terms of impact and outcome, than the 1929 crisis. Historically, we are the very first players, witnesses and/or victims of a crisis affecting the whole planet, in a situation of unprecedented interdependence of countries (resulting from twenty years of globalisation) and people (the level of urbanization - and related dependence for all the basic needs – water, food, energy… - is also unprecedented). However, the 1929 experience and all its dreadful outcome, is still vivid enough in our collective memories to hope, if citizens are vigilant and leaders clear-sighted, that we will be spared from a « remake » leading to major conflagration(s).

Europe, Russia, China, Japan,... are certainly the collective players who can make sure that the unfolding implosion of today's world power, i.e. the United States, does not drive the planet into a disaster. Indeed, except for Gorbachev's USSR, empires have a tendency to strive in vain to reverse the course of History when they realize their might is escaping them. It then belongs to partner-powers to channel the process peacefully, as well as it belongs to the citizens and rulers of the concerned country to be clear-sighted and face the difficult times they are about to cross.

user posted image

Total borrowings of US Depository Institutions from the US Federal Reserve (01/08/1986 – 10/09/2008) - Source Federal Reserve Bank of St Louis

The « emergency repair » of international financial channels, achieved by the countries of the Eurozone at the beginning of this month of October 2008 (8), should not hide three fundamental facts:

• The "repair" was necessary to curb the panic that threatened to squander the entire global financial system in just a few weeks, but what it heals temporarily is merely a symptom. It has just bought a bit of time, two to three months maximum, as the global recession and the collapse of the US economy (the table above shows the staggering increase of US banks' borrowings from the Fed) will speed up and create new tensions in the economic, social and political fields, that must be anticipated and coped with as soon as next month (as soon as the "financial packages" have been implemented)

• The huge financial means allocated worldwide for « emergency rescues » of the global financial system, though they were necessary to put back in order the system of credit, are lost for the real economy when it is on the verge of facing a global recession

• The « emergency repair » results in further marginalization, and therefore weakening, for the United States, because it sets up processes that are contrary to those advocated by Washington for the allocation of the Hank Paulson's and Ben Bernanke's 700-billion USD TARP: bank recapitalisation by governments (a decision Hank Paulson has now come to follow) and interbank loan guarantees (in fact Euroland governments substitute to credit insurers, a mostly American industry at the centre of global finance since decades). These trends turn more and more decision-making relays and financial flows away from the United-States when because of the explosion of their public (9) and private debt they need them more than ever; not to mention pensions going up in smoke (10).

The last aspect shows how, in the coming months, solutions to the crisis and to its various sequences (financial, economic, social and political) will increasingly diverge: what is good for the rest of the world will not be good for the United States (11), and now, Euroland in the first place, the rest of the world seems determined to make its own choices.

The sudden shock that will result from the US defaulting in summer 2009 is partly due to this decoupling of decision-making processes of the world's largest economies with regard to the US. It is predictable and can be dampened if global players start to anticipate it. As a matter of fact, it is one of the topics developed in this 28th edition of the GEAB: LEAP/E2020 hopes that the September shock has "educated" the world's political, economic and financial policy-makers and made them understand that it is easier to act by anticipation than in a panic. It would be a pity if Euroland, Asia and oil-producing countries, as well as US citizens of course, discover one morning of summer 2009 that, after a long-week-end or bank-holiday in the US, their US T-Bonds and Dollars are only worth 10 percent of their value because a « new Dollar » has just been imposed (12).

Notes:

(1) Iceland adopted 10 years ago all the principles of economic deregulation and « financieration » advocated and implemented in the US and UK. Reykjavik thus became some sort of a financial « Mini-Me » of London and Washington, in reference to the very Americano-British movie character Austin Powers. The three countries undertook to play the financial game of « the frog that wished to be as big as the ox », in reference to a fable by Jean de la Fontaine with a very unhappy end for the frog.

(2) Icelandic stocks collapsed 76 percent after a few days suspension designed to « avoid » a panic! Source: MarketWatch, 10/14/2008

(3) On this subject, let's spend a few lines on the amount of the “financial package” announced by London, i.e. 640-billion EUR including 64-billion EUR to recapitalize banks and a further 320-billion EUR pay back those same banks’ debt (source: Financial Times, 10/09/2008). With an economy in freefall to the image of the real-estate market, with a soaring inflation, with capital-based pensions going up in smoke and a currency at the lowest,… apart from increasing the public debt and weakening even more the Sterling pound, it is difficult to imagine how the plan can « rescue » British banks. Contrary to Eurozone banks, the British financial system, exactly like its US counterpart, is at the centre of the crisis, not a collateral victim. Gordon Brown may well compare himself to Churchill and Roosevelt together (Source: Telegraph, 10/14/2008), in his ignorance of History, he seems to forget that neither Churchill nor Roosevelt had already spent 10 years in their country's governments when each of them had to cope with their « big crisis » (that goes for the US and the Bush administration – Paulson and Bernanke included - who all come from the problem and are certainly not part of the solution). Not to mention the fact that Churchill and Roosevelt organised summits such as Yalta or Tehran leaving the French and the Germans waiting at the door, while today it is him who waits at the door of the Euroland summit.

(4) Source: L'Express, 10/13/2008

(5) Source: GEAB N°5, May 15, 2006

(6) Source: GEAB N°26, June 15, 2008

(7) LEAP/E2020 made a synthesis of its anticipations on the decanting phase of the crisis by means of a world map of the impact of the crisis based on the identification of 6 large groups of countries; and of an anticipatory schedule of the 4 financial, economic, social and political sequences over 2008-2013 for each of these regions.

(8) It is indeed the Eurozone which curbed the spiral of global panic. For weeks, the US and British initiatives followed one another without any effect. The eruption of a new collective player, the « Euroland summit », and the wide-ranging decisions it made, are a new and soothing phenomenon. It is for this very reason that Washington and London have systematically prevented such a summit from taking place ever since the Euro was launched, 6 years ago. A complete set of diplomatic gesticulation was required (preliminary meeting, pre-summit group photo,…) to make the British Prime Minister believe he was not set aside the process, when in fact there is no reason why he should take part in a Euroland Summit. In this edition of the GEAB, LEAP/E202020 comes back on the phenomenon and the long-term systemic consequences of this 1st Euroland Summit.

(9) The US financial rescue plan has already increased by 17,000 USD the debt owned by each US citizen. Source: CommodityOnline, 10/06/2008

(10) It is indeed 2,000-billion USD of capital-based pensions which evaporated in the past few weeks in the US. Source: USAToday, 10/08/2008

(11) At least in the short-term. Indeed our team is convinced that it is not bad at all for the American people in the medium- and long-term if the system currently prevailing in Washington and New-York is fundamentally reappraised. This system has thrust the country into dramatic problems among which dozens of millions of US citizens now struggle, as illustrated in this article by the New York Times dated 10/11/2008.

(12) Even if it will be a minor-scale measure compared to the prospect of a US bankruptcy, those who think that it is time to invest again on financial markets may find useful to learn that the New York Stock Exchange has recently reviewed all its circuit-breaker thresholds as a result of ratings collapse. Source : NYSE/Euronext, 09/30/2008

Jeudi 16 Octobre 2008

QUOTE

Eric Jon Phelps Show -- October 15, 2008

JESUIT CONTROL OF BANKING

Financial Crisis Analysis

MP3 Format, 53 minutes, 24 kbps
(left click):
http://www.megaupload.com/?d=0LBDXU1R

Alternate Download Site:
(left click):
http://www.mediafire.com/?n53tinn4ymk

Eric Jon Phelps Show -- October 16, 2008

Finance - Part 2

MP3 Format, 53 minutes, 24 kbps
(left click):
http://www.megaupload.com/?d=6GC707QC

Alternate Download Site:
(left click):
http://www.mediafire.com/?zzj4zwajnnr

craig-oxley - October 19, 2008 02:55 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

Run on Russian bank heightens fears

By Charles Clover and Catherine Belton in Moscow
October 15 2008 23:10
http://www.ft.com/cms/s/0/b2115c90-9afd-11...?nclick_check=1

Globex on Wednesday banned depositors from withdrawing their money as confidence in the Russian banking system began to show signs of -evaporating.

Globex, a mid-sized retail bank with assets of $4bn (€2.95bn, £2.32bn), is the first Russian bank to experience a run on deposits during the crisis. It lost 13 per cent of its deposits last month, according to Maxim Raskosnov, an analyst at Renaissance capital, and a further 15 per cent this month according to Emilya Alieva, Globex's vice-president.

At least a dozen other Russian banks have reported a sharp rise in withdrawals and account closures.

An economist with a leading western bank in Moscow said Globex was probably the first in what could be a number of bank panics, if the government did not take concerted action soon. "I think there are a large number of small and medium sized banks that are in the same situation," she said.

Despite a Kremlin promise of $200bn in relief funds – $87bn this week – the fall-out of a stock market plunge and the global credit crunch appears to be worse than anticipated, analysts say.

So far, the crunch has not affected the living standards of ordinary Russians, but a rash of bank failures could.

Banks across Russia have faced a rise in outflows as depositors have begun to lose trust in all but the biggest state banks, VTB and Sberbank, which have received most of the government's liquidity support.

Tatyana Sadovskaya, the director of a branch of Khnati Mansisk Bank in the city of Nizhnevartovsk, on Wednesday told Interfax news agency that in response to rumours of her bank's insolvency: "People have formed long lines at cashiers and at bankomats, people are taking their deposits and closing their accounts."

Natalia Elisseva, vice-president for financial development at the Bank Nizhni Novgorod, based in the city of the same name, said the number of clients closing accounts had risen. "If there is something that can sink the banks, it is panic amongst the population•.•.•.•If there is a panic, not one bank will stand, regardless of state support."

Mr Raskosnov said Globex was in an especially difficult situation, as a high concentration of its lending was in property, one of the sectors most under pressure from the credit crunch. He said the bank was also not rated by a leading credit rating agency, the prerequisite for central bank funding.

Globex confirmed that the ban on withdrawals had been in effect since Tuesday and blamed “demand from depositors, many of whom explained their wish to transfer their money to VTB or Sberbank”.

So far in the past two months three Russian banks have been forced into mergers as a result of the credit crisis, and analysts expect more consolidation.

Russia’s central bank made no public mention of Globex crisis, sparking criticism from -analysts.

Alexander Khandruyev, head of the association of regional banks and former deputy central banker, called on the central bank to act immediately to allay depositors’ fears. The central bank, he said, “needs to put out the fire now and sort out who is guilty later”.

“They have delayed and delayed, and it only means the longer they leave it the more it is going to cost when they do have to rescue the banks,” he said. “If another day goes by it could happen in other banks. I don’t know what the central bank is thinking of.”

QUOTE

Moscow Grocery Shelves Increasingly Empty

10-17-2008
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/finance/finance...a-reminder.html

For a generation of Russians who queued daily in the snow for the most basic of staples, the symbolism of a bare supermarket shelf is so powerful that it could potentially destroy the reputation of Vladimir Putin, the prime minister, as saviour of the world's largest country.

The shortages are not yet widespread. Even so, goods have begun to vanish from dozens of Moscow supermarkets over the past fortnight.

At a branch of the supermarket chain Samokhval in southwestern Moscow, a handful of shoppers pushed their trolleys through empty rows of shelves that once groaned under the weight of imported wares.

The deep freezes hummed, although there was nothing to freeze. Only a row of baked beans, a few jars of olives and sealed cupboards filled with vodka and cheap wine interrupted the void.

Unlike in the dying days of the Soviet Union, when the madcap policies of a bankrupt ideology inflicted deprivation across the country, today's shortages are very much rooted in modern Russia's enthusiastic embrace of capitalism.

Samokhval, which has 60 outlets across the capital, is the victim of a credit crunch whose tentacles have spread to virtually all sectors of the Russian economy. With trust a commodity in short supply, distributors have been unwilling to refinance the chain's debts and have stopped supplying.

Similar problems have affected Mosmart, which has 58 outlets and is also suffering from empty shelves.

The breadlines are unlikely to reform any time soon -- most supermarkets seem to be operating almost as normal -- yet such shortages seem extraordinary in a city that revels in its reputation as the world's most expensive.

A consumer boom, built on runaway oil prices, has turned Russians into some of the world's most aggressive spenders.

Yet the global financial crisis and investor jitters over Russia's increasingly aggressive foreign policy and its propensity to intervene in the private sector at the whim of the Kremlin have led to share prices tumbling.

The Moscow stock exchange's main indices lost over nine percent yesterday, and have fallen over two-thirds since touching all-time highs in May.

So rapidly have events moved that many Russians are almost unaware of the meltdown. A government-ordered news blackout of the market's woes has helped perpetuate the ignorance, convincing many that it was only the West that was affected. Tabloids have run stories claiming that Britons are so short of cash they can no longer bury their dead.

Despite the shortages, shoppers at Samokhval seemed either unconcerned or fatalistic.

"Life gets better, it gets worse," said Yevgenia Krasovskaya, a doctor. "Difficult times are followed by good times. Even if there is a little less now, what difference does it make so long as the basics are there? We've been through much worse than in the past." But Samokhval's checkout girls were more pessimistic.

"We're worried," said Svetlana, who would not give her surname as her supervisor was lurking nearby. "The management tells us everything will be ok, but I don't believe it."

QUOTE

The World's Most Powerful Currency?

"In short, those crafty Chinese, a fifth of the world's population, may be getting ready to issue a gold-standard money, which will instantly make their currency the strongest in the world…"

by The Mogambo Guru
http://www.dailyreckoning.com/Writers/Moga...s/MG092908.html

The economic slowdown has been characterized as "consumers are de-leveraging", which is an interesting turn of phrase that means that people are not borrowing money to spend.

The importance is dependent on your perspective. Those people who are not borrowing money to spend are thus suffering the pangs of a lowering of their lifestyle, which depended on borrowing money to spend; and then they come around, whining about stupid things like, "Daddy, things have gone up so much in price that I need more money, which you would give me if you loved me. Don't you love me? I love you! Won't you please love me, daddy?"

And so I ask, "Can't you love me if I don't give you any money?" and they say, "No. You could borrow the money, and then we would love you", and I reply, "I have been borrowing money and now I can't pay them back" and so the kids say, "Then borrow some more!"

And, in a terrifying revelation, I realized that it is not only my children, but all the rest of the economy that is totally dependent on everybody else borrowing money to spend, too.

So now you see how Chaos Theory was right, and that all things are connected to all things? If not, then pay attention to how they will now commence to all drag each other down into the Nightmarish Hell Of Inflationary Insolvency (NHOII).

And it doesn't take a real genius to see why, but the point is not that the American people were stupid enough to think they could get a perpetual free lunch by borrowing money to pay for it, or even that a smaller subset of those who are suffering the pangs of a lowering of their lifestyle is composed of those who also think that they can call me on the phone and either 1.) Ask to borrow some money from me, or 2.) Ask me to pay them back the money I borrowed from them.

My response is the same, in that I give neither one of them any money because I don't have any money; so to one I laugh in scorn, and to the other I say that I have just put a check in the mail to them, and that they will get their money soon, and if it hasn't arrived in a few months, call me back and I'll write you a new check and get it right into the mail.

The point is that a much larger subset of those who are suffering the pangs of a lowering of their lifestyle is composed of those people who think that they can elect government representatives who legislate all problems out of existence, that will tax me and then give the money to them, or the Federal Reserve will create more money to loan to investors with which to buy government debt so that the government can spend, spend, spend us into blessed Utopia. Either way, it's Bad, Bad News (BBN).

And, alas, one way or the other, they are right. Unfortunately. And that is one reason that I weep, alone, in the Mogambo Bunker Of Bunkers (MBOB), doors locked, radio blaring, machine guns cocked and loaded, mostly drunk or nearly so, soon to be blissfully comatose.

Another reason that I cry so piteously and drink so abusively is that all this new government borrowing will create so much new money that it will destroy the dollar's buying power, taking my own country down with it.

The only reason that I stop bawling like a little crybaby is the knowledge that the people who own gold, silver and oil will get rich, rich, rich, and since I own gold, then people will want me to loan them a few bucks out of my huge stacks of money because they are starving, and their children are starving, and I will say "No!", and it will be thin gruel indeed for them to hear my mocking voice again echoing in their heads, "Buy gold, silver and oil, you morons, because your stupid government is letting a private bank (that misleadingly calls itself the Federal Reserve when it is, in fact, neither) to create so damned much fiat money that it will produce catastrophic inflation in consumer prices that will destroy the country, just like it has done to every other stupid country in the last 4,000 years that let its stupid government increase a fiat money supply at its whim! Hahahaha! Now you see why I always said you were freaking doomed! Hahaha!"

But I feel terrible, as this constant infliction of inflationary pain by heedless expansion of the money supply is so unnecessary, and that is why I was pleasantly surprised to read in the Wall Street Journal the headline "Central Banks Consider Gold" in its Commodities Reports column.

The reason is easy to see if you read the article backwards, in that there was a question about central bank buying "last week, when gold saw a record single-day gain", especially Chinese central bank buying of gold, which is already the ninth-largest holder of gold in the world but which holds only 1% of its foreign-exchange reserves in gold, although it actually said it would like to hold more. And Mark O'Byrne at Gold & Silver Investments says that he would "be surprised if the Chinese hadn't been nibbling at the gold market,", which leads to the news that Asian banks "are seen as keen buyers" of gold, which leads to the news that "other central banks are now far more likely to be holders of gold", which leads us back to the second paragraph that "Turbulence in the financial markets and recent U.S. dollar weakness are helping the precious metal claw back its reputation as the central monetary anchor within the international monetary framework", which leads to the opening paragraph of "Central banks may be starting to turn one of the few assets in which they can invest; gold."

In short, those crafty Chinese, a fifth of the world's population, may be getting ready to issue a gold-standard money, which will instantly make their currency the strongest in the world, which is just what a country needs if it wants to import a lot of things cheaply so as to respond to demand for internal economic growth without stoking inflation in prices!

And, fortunately for those of us who both love to have large profits handed to us and who also own gold, a Chinese gold-standard may soon make a dream come true as gold would skyrocket when priced in suddenly depreciated dollars.

Whee! This investing stuff is easy!

P.S. To get The Daily Reckoning sent directly to your inbox, sign up for our free email newsletter, or if you prefer to use RSS, subscribe to the Daily Reckoning RSS feed.

Editor's Note: Richard Daughty is general partner and COO for Smith Consultant Group, serving the financial and medical communities, and the editor of The Mogambo Guru economic newsletter - an avocational exercise to heap disrespect on those who desperately deserve it.

The Mogambo Guru is quoted frequently in Barron's, The Daily Reckoning and other fine publications. Click here to visit the Mogambo archive page.

QUOTE

Expect financial hell to break loose on Tuesday; major bank failure

October 19, 2008
http://halturnershow.blogspot.com/

Tuesday, 21 October 2008 is going to be marked in history as a huge day in matters of U.S. finance. Tuesday is the day that Lehman Brothers "credit default swaps" (CDS) must be settled.

CDS were insurance-like guarantees provided by banks and hedge funds as a source of easy revenue for themselves. Offering the CDS meant that banks and hedge funds agreed to cover any default by a major investment house like Lehman Brothers. The banks and hedge funds charged "premiums" to provide this "protection" which they never believed would ever be needed to cover anyone. Then Lehman Brothers went bankrupt. OOOOPS.

Last week, it was determined that Lehman Brothers assets were only work about 8 cents on the dollar, meaning the credit default was about 92 cents on the dollar. . . . . times about four hundred billion dollars!

Tuesday is the day that the CDS must be settled. Tuesday is the day that whoever agreed to cover a default by Lehman Brothers, must actually fork over the cash money.

Since the CDS markets are so intertwined and convoluted, it is not yet clear who has to pay how much. Tuesday will change all that because whoever is on the hook to pay, must pay on Tuesday.

Look for all hell to break loose in US markets because some very big bank(s) and very big investment house(s) ARE going to fail . . . . . big.

craig-oxley - October 19, 2008 11:09 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

The Ice Storm

By GAUTI KRISTMANNSSON
Reykjavik, Iceland
October 16, 2008
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/10/16/opinion/...gin&oref=slogin

ICELANDERS have woken up in a new novel by Franz Kafka, where everybody is guilty by default. One by one, the mighty banks have been seized by the government, and Icelanders, aghast, have been told that each and every one of us owes millions of dollars — to whom, we don't know. The earnest faces of the politicians, of bankers and tycoons almost crying, give us the final touch of the surreal. The situation is comparable only with the fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989 and the 9/11 attacks — something final and yet beyond one's individual grasp has happened.

This time, however, instead of looking on we are in the middle of it. The first 500 bankers have lost their jobs in one go; many others are waiting for the double blow of unemployment and losing their house as their mortgage payments soar. When the Reykjavik stock exchange reopened on Tuesday after three days of suspended trading, its index, dominated by bankrupt financial institutions, had lost 75 percent of its value.

Suddenly, there are lines in the bank for foreign currencies, and there is a limit on how much we can get — overseas banks are refusing to accept our freefalling currency, the krona. One of my students, studying in Spain, can't get money from Iceland for her rent. Importers and exporters can't get currency to conduct business. Icelandic tourists abroad have problems getting cash from A.T.M.'s. The British government has applied terrorist laws to freeze the assets of an Icelandic bank; the list goes on as if it were a script for the nightmare of globalization.

We thought we had friends, in Europe and in the United States. They were sought in the hour of need and found to be busy with their own problems; only the Scandinavians were prepared to extend a helping hand, and then, all of a sudden, Russia — somehow the world has changed. The disappointment with our old "friends" is great and people ask, did we really behave any worse than the others?

People joke about going back to the '70s, when there were restrictions on how much currency one could take abroad and the government devalued the krona regularly to reduce spending on foreign luxuries. It wasn't all that bad then, they say, apart from the bellbottoms and high-heeled shoes for men, perhaps.

But the jokes are not funny, for we did join the party in the 1990s, we did pour money into our apartments, houses, cars, gadgets, stocks; the money was borrowed, too. After an era of deprivation, we were eager to enjoy the newfound freedoms of capitalism and credit cards. We believed everything would add up; certainly the free-market enthusiasts told us so time and again. And most of us could pay our mortgages and credit cards, at least until last week.

Now that we don't know if we can, the shock is so strong that neither anger nor sorrow have really taken hold. We thought Iceland was an independent country that could take care of itself without the help of Russia or the International Monetary Fund, that our currency amounted to something, that we could own companies and banks all over the world. We thought we could enjoy our beautiful country and clean air in the backyard of the aluminum smelter.

In many ways, we uncritically accepted the capitalist system, which now appears to have been a gigantic casino without an owner. We did in the end believe that we could get "money for nothing" and now we face the fact that we will get nothing for our money.

What to do, nobody knows, least of all the politicians, bankers, tycoons; but then again, I heard that a new edition of "The Communist Manifesto" will be published here this autumn. Coincidence, of course, but like everything else, unreal. Kafka's Iceland probably has an ending different from anything that we can possibly imagine.

Gauti Kristmannsson is an associate professor of translation studies at the University of Iceland.

QUOTE

Secretive sector next to face the squeeze

Phillip Inman The Guardian, Friday October 17 2008
http://www.guardian.co.uk/business/2008/oc...-marketturmoil1

Thousands of hedge funds are expected to go bust in the next few months, amid fears that the secretive sector of the financial industry will be the next to buckle under the pressure of global market turmoil.

Tumbling stock markets and a reluctance among banks to do business with hedge funds has further worked against an industry known as much in recent years for multimillion-pound bonuses and jet-set lifestyles as the increasing reliance of pension funds and other investors on its investment returns.

Yesterday two major funds in the US revealed they were under pressure. It is estimated that 20-50% of the 10,000 hedge funds worldwide are vulnerable to a squeeze on their funds.

Highland Capital Management, a US fund that has seen its assets fall in value by almost a quarter, to $33bn, since March, was yesterday expected to close its flagship Highland Crusader Fund and one smaller fund after suffering losses on high-risk loans.

It was the world's largest non-bank buyer of leveraged loans last year, according to Bloomberg.

Citadel Investment Group, one of the world's largest hedge funds, has warned investors that returns for one its major funds would swing wildly as it was battered by the markets.

Its $18bn worth of funds have fallen by 30% in value this year, despite putting a third of the funds into cash.

Recent figures from Hedge Fund Research revealed a 15% rise in the number of hedge fund liquidations. The prospect of a sharp downturn in the industry's fortunes follows 10 years of rapid growth, as wealthy investors and then institutions such as pension funds reaped supercharged returns.

In 1990 there were 610 hedge funds worldwide; this year there were 10,233. Average gains in the late 1990s topped 20% a year.

Short selling became a particular favourite as traders saw an opportunity to borrow shares in a firm and sell them in the expectation that the price would fall.

Philip Falcone, who earned £1.7bn last year from his Mayfair-based firm Harbinger Capital, is believed to have made £280m from shorting HBOS before its rescue by Lloyds TSB.

To cope with the crisis, several hedge funds are expected to follow the example of RAB Capital, the beleaguered fund that lost millions of pounds in Northern Rock. Last month it persuaded investors in its troubled Special Situations Fund to maintain their investments for three years, by threatening to liquidate the fund.

Many of the industry's leading players have expanded rapidly in recent years, based on borrowed funds which they have used to multiply their gains.

However, banks have become increasingly reluctant to lend for hedge funds to make bets, except at prohibitive interest rates. The collapse of Lehman Brothers has also hit hedge funds, many of which relied on the investment bank as a counter-party in complex trades with clients.

Several funds are believed to be in financial trouble after being told they must wait to access funds locked up in the US bank.

PricewaterhouseCoopers, the administrators for Lehman Brothers, who are demanding that £8bn of funds be repatriated from New York as part of a rescue plan for the bank's London operations, have denied the hedge funds access to accounts holding hundreds of millions of pounds

QUOTE

CONFIRMED: U.S. GOV'T WILL COLLAPSE BEFORE SUMMER 2009; WILL REPUDIATE NATIONAL DEBT; ISSUE NEW CURRENCY AND DEVALUE "OLD DOLLARS" BY 90%

October 19, 2008
http://halturnershow.blogspot.com/

I have confirmed that the United States federal government will financially collapse "before summer 2009."

Long time listeners to my radio show will recall that as early as September 5, 2007, over one year ago, I warned my audience on the air, that this was coming.

I announced during that same radio show that the US government was secretly minting new currency, THE AMERO and revealed a plot to intentionally bankrupt the United States to force integration with Canada and Mexico. Once merged, the US Canada and Mexico would be a new entity called the North American Union. (You may listen to an archive of that show, from over a year ago, by clicking HERE)

According to a Bulletin issued out of Cannes, France, the collapse will come "before summer 2009" because the U.S. can no longer make payments on its national debt.

According to "Lettre Confidentielle de LEAP/E2020" the US economy, now in deep recession, will collapse. The resulting lack of tax revenues will make it impossible for the federal government to pay even the interest on its ten trillion dollar national debt.

On October 16, 2008, the "Global-Europe Anticipation Bulletin" told its subscribers that the present U.S. Dollar will be demonetized and a new currency imposed. "Old dollars" will be devalued by ninety percent (90%)

When the collapse occurs, countries around the world will immediately stop accepting our money. That means imports will dry up very quickly -- including food and oil imports.

Lets talk oil first

The United States uses 18 million barrels of oil each day. We produce 5 million barrels a day of our own oil and import 13 million barrels a day from around the world.

Right now, our strategic petroleum reserve has 701 million barrels of oil in storage. When the world stops accepting our currency and stops shipping oil to us, we will have to draw down on the strategic petroleum reserve by 13 million barrels per day. We will run out of oil in 59 days.

No oil means no gasoline for cars; no diesel fuel for trucks.

Everything in this nation, except electricity and natural gas, is transported by truck. No diesel fuel means no products being shipped. . . . . including food.

Now lets talk food

After our oil reserves run out in 59 days, trucks will have no fuel. No fuel means no food gets delivered anywhere.

Here in the New York City area, our supermarkets have about three days worth of food in stock. They must get deliveries almost every day to feed the population.

So . . . . . the oil reserves run out in 59 days, the supermarkets are empty 3 days later. What do you think is going to happen?

Complete Social Collapse and anarchy

The cities will disintegrate into complete chaos first. Roving bands of savages will break into homes looking to eat. If you cannot protect yourself, they will take your food.

Once the cities are emptied of food, the savages will come to the suburbs. Small local police departments will be instantly overwhelmed. Calling 911 will be useless.

If folks in the suburbs cannot protect themselves, the savages will take their food too.

Ultimately, people will start killing each other for food.

No Government money means no welfare checks, no food stamps.

When this collapse happens because the government is totally broke, the welfare checks will stop. Almost immediately thereafter, civil unrest will erupt and we know who will be doing that. . . . don't we?

Now you know why Barak Obama is being pushed so hard for President. The powers-that-be know what's coming and they want a black man in the White House with the hope he can control "his" people. It won't work. They'll just call him an Uncle Tom or an OREO cookie and then go on their merry way to rape, rob, pillage, burn and kill.

In fact, to prove I'm right about the Obama situation, check out what VP candidate Senator Joe Biden said this past weekend. Biden 'guaranteed" that Barak Obama "will be tested by an international crisis within his first six months in power and he will need supporters to stand by him as he makes tough, and possibly unpopular, decisions." Telling us all that we're going to lose 90% of the value of our life savings sure will be unpopular.

I wonder if the Secret Service agents who lose their life savings too, will bother protecting Obama from assassination; or might they kill him themselves? After all, the Zapruder film proves the secret service agent driving John F. Kennedy in Dallas, turned around and shot him in the head. That's why his wife, Jacqueline Kennedy, tried climbing out of the back of the limo after it happened! She saw who shot her husband. It happened once, it can happen again!

What to do right now

1) If you live in a city, make plans to get out when all hell breaks loose. Arrange a place to stay with relatives or friends far away from the city because the cities will be deadly.

2) Start storing food. Don't wait. You have less than 6 months before the shit hits the fan. Buy canned foods because they stay fresh a long time. Buy SEVERAL 50 lb bags of rice, SEVERAL 50 lb bags of oatmeal and store them. Make sure you have lots of flour and yeast to bake your own bread. Have supplies of sugar, salt and the like. Buy powedered milk that can be mixed with water to create real milk. Refill your propane tank for your grill and maybe get some spare tanks. Do not store propane inside your house because it can explode.

3) This Christmas, forget buying presents; buy a gun or two and ammunition. Ideally you should have one handgun for each older teenager/adult in your home. You should also have at least one 12 gauge shotgun and one hunting rifle such as a .308 or 30-30. Teach everyone in your family how to use them. Make certain your children understand these are not toys and that in apartment buildings and condos, bullets can go through walls and kill innocent people. We don;t want that so make sure you teach your kids well. You're going to need guns to fend off the savages that come to steal your food. You may also need a rifle to hunt for food yourself.

4) Buy a gravity-fed water filter so you have clean water for drinking and cooking.

5) Stock up on any prescription drugs you MUST have to live.

6) If you have never hunted for food and don't know how to gut, clean and prepare freshly killed animals, LEARN. Get a couple books and LEARN.

7) Start talking to your neighbors about what's coming. Since the police will be totally overwhelmed, form local neighborhood defense groups. Get CB radios or Family Radio Service radios so you and your neighbors can call each other for help immediately. If the bad guys come, call out the whole neighborhood and use all deliberate force to repel the invaders. Don't be afraid to shoot and kill. The savages won't be afraid to do it to you!

Folks, this is the absolute worst news I have ever delivered to my readers. I shudder at what's coming. If we hope for the best but also plan for the worst, we might. . . . . just might. . . . get through this alive.

Please spread the word to prepare for this coming disaster. Europeans are already planning for it.

Final analysis

How we got to this point is simple: The United States federal government and in particular, the Congress, systematically and deliberately overspent our nation into oblivion. Our own government wrecked our nation.

In order that WE THE PEOPLE can bring justice to our elected officials, I am publishing the private home addresses of all members of the United States House of Representatives and the United States Senate.

Under our Constitution, they hold the purse strings. They are the only branch of government that can tax, spend or incur debt. Sure, they blame Presidents - that's politics. But the Constitution makes clear that congress and ONLY congress deals with money.

If you would like to know where your U.S. congressman and U.S. senators live so that you can "pay them a visit" after they devalue your life savings by 90%, I will provide their home address to you.

To get the home addresses of your congressman and senators, send an e-mail to: wheretheylive@optonline.net and I will tell you how to get the info.

craig-oxley - October 21, 2008 01:38 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

Do our rulers know enough to avoid a 1930s replay?

Events are moving with lightning speed as the global credit freeze evolves into something awfully like a classic trade-depression.

By Ambrose Evans-Pritchard
Last Updated: 11:17AM BST 20 Oct 2008
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/finance/comment...30s-replay.html

The commodity and emerging market booms are breaking in unison, leaving no more bubbles left to burst. Almost every corner of the world is now being drawn into the vortex of debt deflation.

The freight rates for Capesize vessels used to ship grains, coal, and iron ore have fallen 95pc to $11,600 since May, hence the bankruptcy of Odessa's Industrial Carriers last week with a fleet of 52 vessels. Cargo deliveries dropped 15.2pc at the US Port of Long Beach last month, but that is a lagging indicator.

From what I have been able to find out, shipping is slowing as fast as it did in the grim months of late 1931. "The crisis is now in full swing across the entire world," said Giulio Tremonti, Italy's finance minister. "It is hitting the real economy, the productive forces of industry. It's global, it's total, and it's everywhere," he said.

Italy's industrial output has fallen 11pc in the last year. Foreign orders have dropped 13pc. But we are all in much the same boat. Europe's car sales fell 9pc in September (32pc in Spain). US housing starts fell to a 45-year low in September.

Last week, the International Monetary Fund had to rescue Hungary and Ukraine as contagion swept Eastern Europe. It would not surprise me if Russia itself were to tip into a downward spiral towards bankruptcy (again) and fascism (again).

Russia's foreign reserves have fallen by $67bn since August. Ural crude prices fell to $65 a barrel last week, below the budget solvency threshold of the now extravagant Russian state.

The new capitalists have to repay $47bn in foreign loans over the next two months. In Russia, oligarch fiefdoms built on leverage - Mikhail Fridman (Alfa), Oleg Deripaska (Basic Element), and Vladimir Lisin (Novolipetsk) - are lining up for state bail-outs from a $50bn rescue fund.

Brazil is free-fall as well. Sao Paolo's Bovespa index is down a third in dollar terms in a month. Hopes that the BRIC quartet (Brazil, Russia, India, and China) would take over as the engine of world growth have proved yet another bubble delusion.

China says 53pc of the country's 3,600 toy factories have gone bust this year. Economist Andy Xie says China is at imminent risk of its own crisis after allowing over-investment to run rampant, like Japan in the 1980s. "The end is near. They've been keeping this house of cards going for a long time with bank support," he said.

Lord (Adair) Turner, the head of Britain's Financial Services Authority, offers soothing words. "There is no chance of a 1929-33 depression. We know how to stop it happening again," he said.

I hope Lord Turner is right, but his Olympian certainty bothers me. It assumes that the economic elites a) understand what happened in the 1930s – on that score I suspect that few, other than the Fed's Ben Bernanke, have delved into the scholarship (sorry, Galbraith's pot-boiler The Great Crash does not count);

B) that central banks will now jettison the dogma of inflation-targeting that got us into this mess by lulling them into a false sense of security as credit growth and housing booms went mad. Will they now commit the reverse error as credit collapses?

c) understand that non-US banks – especially Europeans – have used the shadow banking system to leverage a $12 trillion (£7 trillion) spree around the world, and that this must be unwound as core bank capital shrivels away;

Yes, the Fed made frightening errors in the early 1930s by raising rates into the crisis, but they were constrained by the norms of the age: the fixed exchange system (Gold Standard), and fear of the bond markets. Are today's central banks are doing much better? The Europeans fell into the trap of equating this year's oil and food spike with the events of the early 1970s.

As readers know, I view European Central Bank's decision to raise rates to 4.25pc in July – when Spain's property market was already crashing, and Germany and Italy were already in recession – as replay of 1930s ideological madness.

You could say the ECB also acted under the constraints of the age: its rigid inflation mandate. But I suspect that Bundesbank chief Axel Weber and German finance minister Peer Steinbruck were quite simply too arrogant to listen to anybody.

Mr Steinbruck insisted that "German banks are far less vulnerable than US banks" just days before the collapse of Hypo Real with €400bn (£311bn) of liabilities. Had he not read the IMF reports showing that German and European lenders have an even thinner Tier 1 capital base than American banks?

One can only guess what French President Nicolas Sarkozy has been saying to ECB chief Jean-Claude Trichet, but he must have warned in blunt terms that Europe's leaders would exercise their Maastricht powers to bring the bank to heel unless it slashed rates. Democracies cannot subcontract monetary policy (with all its foreign policy implications) to committees of economists in a fast-moving crisis. Those accountable to their electorates have to take charge.

Whatever occurred behind closed doors, the ECB is now tamed. It has cut rates to 3.75pc, and will cut again soon, perhaps drastically. The risk is that rates have come too late in Europe and Britain to stop a nasty denouement, given the 18-month lag on monetary policy.

We should be thankful that President Sarkozy and Gordon Brown took action in the nick of time to save our banking systems. Their statesmanship should at least spare us mass bankruptcy and unemployment.

But it will not spare us a decade-long toil of pitiful growth – or none at all – as we purge debt. The world stole prosperity from the future for year after year, with the full collusion of governments, regulators, and central banks. Now the future has arrived.

QUOTE

Banks braced for Lehman Brother's debt insurers' deadline

Tom Bawden and Catherine Boyle
The TimesOctober 20, 2008
http://business.timesonline.co.uk/tol/busi...icle4974438.ece

Financiers enjoying a respite from the panic of the past few weeks should brace themselves for further mayhem tomorrow, the deadline for insurers of Lehman Brothers' debt to pay up on billions of dollars of policies.

Last week, these borrowings were deemed to be worth only 9.75 cents on the dollar. There are about $400 billion (£231 billion) worth of insurance contracts — known as credit default swaps, or CDSs — written on Lehman's debt, leaving the underwriters on the hook for about $360 billion. Fears are mounting that billions of dollars of insurance will go unpaid and that dozens of financial groups will go under because of Lehman's demise.

Groups such as the Deposit Trust and Clearing Corporation (DTCC) argue that many insurers have hedged their exposure effectively and estimate that the "net settlement", after hedging, will amount to only about $6 billion.

Robert Pickel, chief executive of the International Swaps and Derivatives Association, said: "People have been monitoring these positions on a daily basis and have been hedging against their exposure. I don't think at this point there's any unexpected loss or unexpected payment."

However, Hugh Johnson, head of Johnson Illington, an American fund manager, said: "I hope the $6 billion estimate is correct — that would be a real gift — but I don't believe anybody really has a good handle on the size of the net settlement. I have heard a range of $2 billion to $300 billion and have no idea what it is." Mr Johnson said that "significant net settlement figures" could require further government intervention and may force down financial shares as investors fret about exposure to CDS contracts.

Part of the problem, experts say, is that the underwriters sold the policies on and nobody really knows who will be on the hook for the Lehman debt, by how much or whether they will be able to pay up.

Any large hits are likely to leak out soon. About 350 banks and investors are thought to have taken on CDS contracts, of which hedge funds hold about a third. Some institutions have already declared their exposure. These include Freddie Mac and Swedbank, with $1.2 billion apiece, and State Street, with $1 billion. Of greater interest will be the exposure of the hedge funds and whether they can pay.

QUOTE

Remember the list of things discussed during the closed door congressional meeting?? Timeline would fit.

1. the imminent collapse of the U.S. economy to occur by September 2008,

2. the imminent collapse of US federal government finances by February 2009,

3. the possibility of Civil War inside the USA as a result of the collapse,

4. advance round-ups of "insurgent U.S. citizens" likely to move against the government,

5. the detention of those rounded-up at "REX 84" camps constructed throughout the USA,

6. the possibility of retaliation against members of Congress for the collapses,

7. the location of "safe facilities" for members of Congress and their families to reside during expected massive civil unrest,

8. the necessary and unavoidable merger of the United States with Canada (for its natural resources) and with Mexico (for its cheap labor pool),

9. the issuance of a new currency - THE AMERO - for all three nations as the proposed solution to the coming economic armageddon.

QUOTE

"the British banking system had been closer to collapse earlier this month than at any time since the start of World War I"* -Mervyn King (BOE)

craig-oxley - October 21, 2008 11:20 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

Further banks may fail, says IMF

Tuesday, 21 October 2008 17:26 UK
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7682371.stm

More European banks "may fail" as doubts persist about the viability of their business models, the International Monetary Fund has warned.

Private funding is "virtually unavailable" and banks will have to rely on public intervention, asset sales and consolidation, it said.

The six-monthly study also warns that eurozone economic growth will almost grind to a halt next year.

Growth in the 15 euro countries will fall to just 0.2% in 2009, it forecast.

The report argued that disruptions in the US financial system have "heightened the risk of a systemic financial crisis in Europe further".

However, it maintained that a full-blown crisis "remains improbable".

Economic slowdown

The slowdown has resulted from high oil prices, rising inflation, a strong euro, falling export demand and the financial crisis, the Fund reported.

However, amid the gloom, inflation will slow next year - allowing room for cuts in interest rates, it forecast.

Meanwhile, the Icelandic government has said it hoped to reach an agreement on an economic rescue loan from the IMF this week.

"We hope an agreement with the IMF can be reached today or tomorrow," said commerce minister Bjoergvin Sigurdsson after a cabinet meeting on Tuesday.

If Iceland does receive a loan from the IMF, it would be the first Western country to do so since 1976.

Inflation eases

The IMF said growth in the eurozone would be 1.3% this year and just 0.2% next year - down from 2.6% in 2007.

"While these projections were finalised before the crisis reached systemic proportions in early October, they remain broadly valid," the IMF said in a statement.

Europe's biggest economy, Germany would see no growth at all in 2009 after expanding by 1.8% this year, while France would grow by just 0.2% after gaining 0.8% in 2008.

However as Europe's economies slow, price rises will ease, allowing the European Central Bank scope to cut interest rates, says the IMF.

"While containing inflation remains a policy concern, nurturing the recovery is likely to gain policy prominence," it said.

QUOTE

Today's (Monday's early action - G) action raises the probability that the rally seen late Friday till early Tuesday was all of wave 4 of 3 and we are headed to at least the 7200 area +- 200 pts to complete wave 3 down.

However, now that we are in an environment where no one trusts the government, the banks, or any other financial institution, much less the politicians, an extended decline to the 5800 area +- 200 points is likely.

Once that is done a rally to at least the high seen Tuesday morning is probable before another decline starts to form wave 4 which may be a more complex rally but I will cover that after the current wave three decline is complete.

The positive side of this market is those who are aware of the wave structure and able to act on it are making more money in a few weeks than most people are able to make in a lifetime. When oil bottoms somewhere between 50-70- dollars a barrel, I intend to put 50% of my money in select oil and gas stocks and forget about them for at least 5 yrs.

What a time to be alive if you are out of debt and sitting on cash.

The buy and hold mantra will cause so much misery and pain for people close to retirement that it will become the cuss words of the future.

I pray that those of you who receive these updates have heeded them to at least a small extent and thus not in much financial pain.

The good news is, it is not to late. Once this bottom is in, the rally that follows will be a swift wave B rally lasting about 5 months in which much money can be made.

Then the final decline to lows undreamed of will begin, and once again will be very profitable.

I will comment on levels as they become appropriate. Comments and questions are welcome and will be answered as time permits. Do not listen to the talking heads on TV. They will lead you to poverty.

-Robin Landry 20/oct/2008

QUOTE

Fed to Provide Up to $540 Billion to Aid Money Funds (Update6)

By Craig Torres and Christopher Condon http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...0a5w&refer=home

Oct. 21 (Bloomberg) -- The Federal Reserve will provide up to $540 billion in loans to help relieve pressure on money-market mutual funds beset by redemptions.

``Short-term debt markets have been under considerable strain in recent weeks'' as it got tougher for funds to meet withdrawal requests, the Fed said today in a statement in Washington. A Fed official said that about $500 billion has flowed since August out of prime money-market funds, which with other money-market mutual funds control $3.45 trillion.

The initiative is the third government effort to aid the funds, which usually provide a key source of financing for banks and companies. The exodus of investors, sparked by losses following the bankruptcy of Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc., contributed to the freezing of credit that threatens to tip the economy into a prolonged recession.

``The problem was much worse than we thought,'' Jim Bianco, president of Chicago-based Bianco Research LLC, said in a Bloomberg Television interview. Policy makers are trying to prevent ``Great Depression II'' by stemming the financial industry's contraction, he said.

JPMorgan Chase & Co. will run five special units that will buy up to $600 billion of certificates of deposit, bank notes and commercial paper with a remaining maturity of 90 days or less. The Fed will provide up to $540 billion, with the remaining $60 billion coming from commercial paper issued by the five units to the money-market funds selling their assets, central bank officials told reporters on a conference call.

`Lot of Pressure'

``This will take a lot of pressure off the Fed and the Treasury,'' David Glocke, head of taxable money market funds for Valley Forge, Pennsylvania-based Vanguard Group Inc. Glocke said he'll be more willing to shift money he's invested in U.S. Treasuries back into financial-sector commercial paper covered by the plan.

U.S. money-market mutual funds held more than 63 percent of outstanding unsecured commercial paper and 39 percent of asset-backed commercial paper at the beginning of September, according to Alex Roever, a New York-based analyst at JPMorgan.

Commercial paper, which typically matures in 270 days or less, is used by companies to finance payroll, rent and other daily expenses.

The new program is called the Money Market Investor Funding Facility, and officials said it's intended as a backstop for money-market mutual funds to use as needed to meet redemptions.

Liquidity Buffer

Today's action shows that two programs set up last month by the Fed and U.S. Treasury to help money-market funds haven't stabilized the industry. A Fed official told reporters today that the funds don't have much of a liquidity buffer remaining.

Last month, the Fed agreed to give loans to banks so they can buy asset-backed commercial paper from money funds. There was $122.8 billion of such loans outstanding as of Oct. 15. The Treasury separately used a $50 billion emergency pool to offer money funds guarantees against losses.

The central bank's announcement today ``is a big event,'' BlackRock Inc. Chief Executive Officer Laurence Fink said during an earnings conference call with analysts and investors. ``It is the first thawing.''

BlackRock and JPMorgan were members of the consortium of money managers that put together the plan and presented it to the Fed, people briefed on the matter said.

Money-market funds have been hurt by their inability to sell back at par the commercial paper they bought from banks and other issuers, Fed officials said.

The new program ``should improve the liquidity position of money market investors,'' the Fed said in its statement.

Special Units

Each of the five special units will buy assets from up to 10 separate bank and financial company issuers. The program may be expanded to include purchases from other money-market investors.

The special-purpose vehicles will finance 10 percent of their purchases by selling asset-backed commercial paper. That paper won't be eligible for the Fed program that extends credit to banks to buy such assets, a central-bank official said.

The New York Fed will lend the remaining 90 percent to the facilities on an overnight basis at the discount rate, which stands at 1.75 percent.

Each special-purpose vehicle will only purchase debt with the top short-term ratings of A-1, F1 and P-1 given by Standard & Poor's, Fitch Ratings and Moody's Investors Service respectively.

The Fed said the facility will be in place until April 30 unless extended by the Board of Governors. Fed officials said they will announce a start date by the end of the week.

In addition to the three programs to aid money funds, the Fed next week will start an unlimited program to purchase commercial paper directly from issuers, after companies had to pay more to borrow or were cut off from that market.

Turmoil Worsened

Turmoil worsened among money-market funds after the bankruptcy of Lehman Brothers on Sept. 15, and the breakdown of the oldest money-market fund the following day.

The $62.5 billion Reserve Primary Fund announced Sept. 16 that losses on debt issued by Lehman had reduced its net assets to 97 cents a share, making it the first money fund in 14 years to break the buck, the term for falling below the $1 a share that investors pay.

Institutional investors have since pulled $341 billion from funds that can invest in corporate debt, or 28 percent of assets in those funds.

The Treasury responded to the initial run three days after the Reserve fund faltered by introducing the guarantee program. While that calmed investors, fund managers didn't resume buying commercial paper because it can't be sold quickly without realizing a loss.

``There have been very few or no bids at all'' in the secondary market, Debbie Cunningham, head of taxable money funds for Pittsburgh-based Federated Investors Inc. Federated had $231.1 billion in money-market funds at the end of August.

``This is another important piece in the puzzle,'' Cunningham said. ``It will be very helpful in bringing more normal market tendencies back for investors.''

To contact the reporters on this story: Craig Torres in Washington at ctorres3@bloomberg.netChristopher Condon in Boston at ccondon4@bloomberg.net

Last Updated: October 21, 2008 18:52 EDT

QUOTE

Bush Is `Open to Idea' of Second Economic Stimulus (Update1)

By Holly Rosenkrantz
http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...zbQQ&refer=home

Oct. 20 (Bloomberg) -- The Bush administration is ``open to the idea'' of another economic stimulus package, though approval would depend on details drafted by Congress, spokeswoman Dana Perino said.

President George W. Bush would weigh input from all of his economic advisers, and Federal Reserve Chairman Ben S. Bernanke ``obviously'' is ``a key one,'' Perino told reporters traveling with the president on Air Force One to Alexandria, Louisiana.

Bernanke, citing the chance of a ``protracted slowdown'' and a ``weak'' outlook for the U.S. economy into next year, told Congress today he endorses considering another stimulus package.

Perino said the White House will ``remain open to the idea and then we'll just have to see when Congress gets back, if they decide to move forward, what sort of package they want to draft into legislation.''

Proposals ``put forward so far'' by Democratic leaders in Congress ``were elements of a package we did not think would actually stimulate the economy, so we would want to take a look at anything very carefully,'' Perino said.

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi today repeated her support for an economic recovery program and cited Bernanke's testimony to buttress her case. He ``made it clear that a new economic recovery package is critical to boost our weakening economy,'' she said in a statement.

Pelosi has ordered hearings to determine the size and provisions of the plan. She previously said she may call lawmakers back to Washington to work on a package that includes infrastructure spending and extended unemployment benefits.

Earlier Proposal

If passed, it would be the second economic stimulus plan enacted this year. Bush in February signed into law a $168 billion measure that sent tax rebates of as much as $600 to individuals. Checks went to 111 million households beginning in May.

The House approved a $56 billion stimulus package last month that was blocked in the Senate by Republicans. The plan would have extended unemployment assistance and increased spending on food stamps, highway and other infrastructure work and aid to state governments.

Members of the House Budget Committee today split generally along party lines in reacting outside the hearing room to Bernanke's comments.

His endorsement ``ought to move us in the direction of acting'' next month ``and not wait'' until a new Congress convenes, said Lloyd Doggett, a Texas Democrat. Xavier Becerra, a California Democrat, said the Fed chairman's backing ``further opens the door'' and Niki Tsongas, a Massachusetts Democrat, said it will ``help move'' a stimulus package toward passage.

Paul Ryan of Wisconsin, the panel's ranking Republican, scoffed at the prospect of another stimulus.

``Throwing more money out the door may help for a quarter, but it won't help to create jobs,'' he said.

To contact the reporter on this story: Holly Rosenkrantz in Alexandria, Louisiana at 4547 or hrosenkrantz@bloomberg.net

Last Updated: October 20, 2008 13:44 EDT

QUOTE

Argentine Bonds, Stocks Sink as Takeover Fuels Default Concerns

By James Attwood and Drew Benson http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...rb5w&refer=home

Oct. 22 (Bloomberg) -- Argentina's bonds and stocks plunged for a second day as a planned government takeover of $29 billion of pension funds stoked concern the South American country is headed for its second default this decade.

President Cristina Fernandez de Kirchner's bid to seize the private funds is undermining investor confidence that was already faltering as prices on the country's commodity exports tumbled and a five-year-old economic expansion began to sputter. The last time the government sought to tap workers' savings to help finance debt payments was in 2001, just before it halted payments on $95 billion of bonds.

``It's the final of many nails in the coffin from an institutional investor perspective,'' Bill Rudman, who helps manage $3 billion of emerging-market equity at WestLB Mellon Asset Management in London. Argentina is ``disappearing into irrelevance,'' he said.

The yield on the government's 8.28 percent bonds due in 2033 surged 3.2 percentage points to 27.91 percent at 10:10 a.m. in New York, according to JPMorgan Chase & Co. The bonds yielded 12.16 percent a month ago. The price dropped 4.11 cents to 25 cents on the dollar, leaving it down 11.91 cents in the past two days. The benchmark Merval stock index plunged 7.2 percent, extending its decline this week to 20 percent.

The private retirement system, set up in 1994 to help bolster capital markets, owns about 5 percent of companies listed on the Buenos Aires stock exchange and 27 percent of shares available for public trading, data compiled by pension funds show.

The government's proposal to take control of 10 funds, including units of London-based HSBC Holdings Plc and Bilbao, Spain-based Banco Bilbao Vizcaya Argentaria SA, still needs congressional approval. BBVA fell 6.5 percent in Madrid.

Repsol Drops

Repsol YPF SA, Spain's biggest oil producer, slid 13 percent in Madrid, the steepest intraday decline since 1997. Repsol owns YPF SA, the largest oil company in Argentina, and said last month it would announce in November a date for the delayed sale of a 20 percent stake in YPF on the local stock market.

Fernandez, 55, said yesterday her decision is ``in a context where the biggest countries'' are taking steps to protect their banks because of the global financial crisis.

``Instead, we're taking them for our retirees and workers,'' she said during a rally in Buenos Aires.

Argentina's borrowing needs will swell to as much as $14 billion next year from $7 billion in 2008, RBC Capital Markets, a Toronto-based unit of Canada's largest bank, said yesterday.

South America's second-largest economy has been shut out of international capital markets since its 2001 default. Holders of about $20 billion of defaulted bonds rejected the government's 2005 payout of 30 cents on the dollar. Fernandez said last month she's considering offering those holdouts a new deal, part of an effort to regain access to foreign financing.

Argentina's Bonds

The cost of protecting Argentina's bonds against default soared today. Five-year credit-default swaps based on Argentina's debt jumped 3.67 percentage points to 35.83 percent, according to Bloomberg data.

Credit-default swaps, contracts conceived to protect bondholders against default, pay the buyer face value in exchange for the underlying securities or the cash equivalent should a company fail to adhere to its debt agreements. An increase indicates a deterioration in the perception of credit quality.

The proposed takeover ``makes the chance of default in the short-term less likely by inflicting immense damage to the long- term credibility of the government and the financial system with its own people,'' said Paul McNamara, who helps manage $1.2 billion of emerging-market assets at Augustus Asset Managers Ltd. in London.

`Enormous Error'

The peso was little changed today, rising 0.1 percent to 3.2150 per dollar, as traders said the central bank intervened in the foreign exchange market to shore up the currency.

Amado Boudou, the head of Argentina's social security administration, said yesterday the government will keep the same investment mix for the funds, with 60 percent in bonds and 10 percent in stocks. He called the privately run system an ``enormous error.''

About 55 percent of the 94.4 billion pesos ($29.3 billion) held by the private pension funds is invested in government debt, according to the pension regulator's Web site. A takeover would allow the Fernandez administration to write off the sovereign bonds held by the funds, said Javier Salvucci, an analyst with Buenos Aires-based Silver Cloud Advisors.

`Short-Term Fix'

``It's a short-term fix that may cause more fiscal and macro pain in the long haul, which has been typical of the last two administrations,'' said Will Landers, who manages $5 billion in Latin American equities at BlackRock Inc.

Since the pension system began in 1994, trading volume on the Buenos Aires stock exchange has quadrupled. The funds were net buyers of domestic equities for a third straight month in September, investing about $144 million, according to Deutsche Bank AG. They have about $4.1 billion in domestic stocks, strategist Guilherme Paiva wrote in an Oct. 15 note.

The government's plan is ``one additional factor to count against Argentine assets,'' said Vinicius Silva, an emerging market strategist at New York-based Morgan Stanley, which recommends that emerging-market equity investors have a ``zero' weighting in the country.

Economic Slowdown

Nestor Kirchner, Fernandez's husband and predecessor as president, began tightening restrictions on private pension funds last year, requiring them to keep more investments in the country to sustain economic growth. The rules forced the funds to ``repatriate'' about $3 billion in mostly Brazilian assets, Sebastian Palla, chairman of the country's pension fund association, said in February.

Foreign emerging-market funds sold about $250 million in Argentine stocks through August this year in the biggest outflow since 2000, according to fund flow tracker EPFR Global in Cambridge, Massachusetts. The Merval is down 55 percent this year compared with a 42 percent decline for the Bovespa in neighboring Brazil.

The slide reflect concern that a 40 percent drop in commodity prices since July will throttle growth in South America's second-biggest economy. Argentina gets more than half its export revenue from wheat, soybeans, corn and other commodities.

Growth will slow to 5 percent this year and 2.5 percent in 2009, RBC Capital Markets said. The economy expanded 8.8 percent on average over the past five years as Kirchner and Fernandez used surging tax receipts to boost government spending on everything from civil servant pay rises to energy subsidies.

`Much, Much Worse'

Seven years ago, as the government tried in vain to stave off a debt default, it pressured the pension funds to participate in bond swaps that pushed forward repayment dates. That December, strapped for cash to pay salaries, it ordered the funds to transfer $3.2 billion in bank deposits to state-owned Banco de la Nacion.

The latest move is ``much, much worse,'' said McNamara at Augustus.

``It's not just shoving a little bit of debt in at the edge, it's taking over the whole system,'' McNamara said. ``It does even more damage to the concept of encouraging people to invest in the domestic financial industry.''

To contact the reporters on this story: James Attwood in Santiago at jattwood3@bloomberg.netDrew Benson in Buenos Aires at Abenson9@bloomberg.net

Last Updated: October 22, 2008 10:15 EDT

craig-oxley - October 22, 2008 04:30 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

Power company in administration

Wednesday, 22 October 2008 17:18 UK
http://newsvote.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7684880.stm

An electricity company which supplies 40,000 small businesses has gone into administration, the BBC has learned.

A buyer was unable to be found for Electricity 4 Business (E4B), which is based in Milton Keynes, energy regulator Ofgem confirmed.

Customers will not be disconnected, but will automatically be transferred to another supplier in a process organised by the regulator.

Customers' tariffs may change, but they will be free to switch supplier.

Nobody at E4B was available to comment.

The company had 140 members of staff, of which 100 were made redundant on Wednesday. The remaining staff will stay as the business is run down.

'Unusual'

Existing measures are in place for situations such as this.

Ofgem will invite other suppliers to take on the business's customers before appointing a supplier.

"This situation is very unusual but not unprecedented," said Philip Cullum, deputy chief executive of watchdog Consumer Focus, formerly Energywatch.

"Ofgem has robust procedures in place to make sure that that these very small businesses are not left high and dry without an energy supply."

An Ofgem spokesman said that a report regarding the future for customers would be released by the end of the week.

'Cutting costs'

On its website, E4B says that it is aimed at cutting electricity costs for small and medium-sized businesses spending less than £10,000 a year on electricity. It does not produce electricity.

Its customers include a number of sole trader businesses. They will be contacted by their new supplier.

"It is disappointing that E4B is gone," said a spokesman for the Federation of Small Businesses.

"This will leave thousands of small businesses looking for new deals on their energy in an extremely volatile market. We would urge Consumer Focus to get involved immediately to ensure new deals offered to small businesses are fair."

E4B signed businesses on to relatively long-term contracts which allowed them to pay in regular instalments throughout the year.

It bought electricity at wholesale prices, which have remained stubbornly high over the last year.

QUOTE

ECONOMIC CRISIS: Depression rerun?

Conventional wisdom says this is the worst financial crisis since the Great Depression. But is it really?

By Michael E. Kanell
The Atlanta Journal-Constitution
Wednesday, October 22, 2008
http://www.ajc.com/services/content/busine...10/22/econ.html

In recent days, you've heard —- a lot —- how the current financial crisis is the worst since the Great Depression.

It may be. Much less clear is whether it will turn into anything actually like the Depression, when over three years the economy shrunk by nearly half and unemployment reached 24 percent.

Current economic measures are still far cheerier than that. There are other reassuring differences as well.

As the Depression began, the nation had virtually no safety net for the needy and no regulation of banks. Government officials then were reluctant to rescue distressed players in the market.

Yet to some historians, today's storyline has familiar themes.

"It is a very similar process to the Great Depression, because what you have is people not spending enough money," said historian Bryant Simon of Temple University, director of American studies.

Debt-ridden consumers and troubled banks are toxic to a consumption-driven economy, he said.

"It is not as severe as it was," Simon said. "But if the banks are not going to lend money, you can't get the economy back in gear. What you have is people not spending enough money."

The United States has struggled through periodic and painful downturns during its history, every time bouncing back.

But the Great Depression was so deep and broad that it sparked dramatic action to change the rules of the market.

Some of those changes —- such as deposit insurance —- make another Depression much less likely, many experts agree.

The current credit crunch may test the theory.

The late economist Hyman Minsky said capitalist systems tend to "constantly leverage up with more debt," noted former Fed economist Tim Yeager, who was one of Minsky's students and is now a finance professor at the University of Arkansas.

"Credit becomes weaker, loans become worse and worse and risk grows," Yeager said. "It is like a Ponzi scheme."

He hears echoes in today's financial headlines.

"That is a good explanation of what happened this time. It's a good explanation of what happened in the Great Depression."

In popular memory, the stock market crash in the fall of 1929 triggered the Depression, although many experts say the crash was more symptom than spark.

Again this fall, the market has gyrated unnervingly.

"That is what everybody is looking at and that is about where the similarities end right now," said Tom Smith, finance professor at Emory's Goizueta Business School.

Even with the similarities, the stock market has a long way to go to match the Great Depression's collapse. The Dow, an index of big company stocks, has lost roughly 40 percent in a year. In October 1929, stocks lost 40 percent in a month and would go on to lose almost 90 percent in three years.

Banks were a focus then as now, but for different reasons, Smith said.

"The 1930s was a failure of the banking system. What we had this time was a failure of banking practices."

Those practices included creation of innovative securities meant to dilute the risk of bad loans. Instead, they spread financial poison around the world when the housing market stalled, as many of the securities were backed by mortgages.

Another difference: During the Depression, loans came mostly from small, virtually unregulated community banks. Government did not insure deposits, and banks could invest them any way they wanted.

As a sliding world economy ensnared the United States, millions of Americans saw their incomes drop. Passage of the Smoot-Hawley tariff exacerbated the problem by chilling trade. Many —- especially in rural America —- couldn't make debt payments.

The need to get money often accelerated to a frenzied run on banks, which could not keep enough cash on hand to satisfy all depositors at once.

During the first 10 months of 1930, 744 banks failed, said Roger Cominsky, a Buffalo-based partner in Hiscock & Barclay's Financial Institutions & Lending practice. By the end of the decade, 9,000 had gone under —- nearly one in three.

In contrast, the community banks of the 21st century are relatively strong. But they do less of the nation's lending. Instead, the economy depends on a handful of huge banks and other financial institutions.

Both eras came after economic "bubbles" that inflated many Americans' wealth, at least on paper. In the '20s it was stocks, and in this decade housing.

In both cases ownership was propelled by easy credit, easy terms and rules meant to encourage buyers to stretch beyond their ability to pay.

With stocks, it was "margin" buying —- investors needed just a fraction of the price to make a purchase. A broker could issue a "call" that required the buyer to come up with more cash, but that was easy if prices had gone up. With homes it was a combination of public policy that encouraged easier credit, along with lending and investing practices that fueled the binge. Consumers used refinancings or equity loans to fund other big purchases.

For both stocks and homes, the game could go on as long as prices kept rising.

During the early years of the Depression, about 40 percent of bank loans were secured with stocks, said Brian Olasov, managing director at McKenna Long & Aldridge, who consults with banks and has done extensive research on banking crises.

"Now, about six-tenths of bank portfolios are real estate-related."

Despite similarities, most experts don't think the 2008 crisis will lead to a full replay of the Depression.

But Yeager, the former Fed economist, said the worst may still be to come.

"There is a big storm brewing."

A TALE OF TWO ERAS
So far, the pain of the 2008 market crisis is milder than in 1929 —- and far milder than it was by 1932.
.....Fall 1929 .....Fall 1932 .....Fall 2008
Dow loss.....44% .....88% .....15% (so far)
Unemployment.....3.2%.....24% 6.1%
Bank failures,
..year to date .....About 1,000 ....N/A 15
Size of U.S. economy..$103.6 billion..$58.7 billion ..$14.3 trillion
Sources: Bureau of Labor Statistics, Econ Review, Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., Bureau of Economic Analysis

QUOTE

The decline this am was, I believe, wave d in the triangle and now we are in the wave e rally, the target is between 8868 and 8944 before wave five down to my 5800 target for the DJIA begins. A break below the low this morning will mean the wave 5 decline has begun. As I have said many times before, the 5th wave is usually the crash wave ever since people became aware of the Elliott wave and when a new low is set they realize the wave patern is not an ABC but a fifth to new lows and the panic selling begins. I will update as conditions warrant and time permits. Do not believe the talking heads that are saying the low is in and try to catch a falling knife. The turmoil is worldwide and is just now spreading. I pray that I am wrong but each day the market seems to verify my count. -Robin Landry 22 Oct 2008

craig-oxley - October 24, 2008 02:45 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

'Dr. Doom' says markets may face temporary closures

7:29 PM, October 23, 2008
http://latimesblogs.latimes.com/money_co/2...mist-nouri.html

Economist Nouriel Roubini, who predicted much of the financial catastrophe that has unfolded worldwide over the last year, now says governments may have to temporarily close markets as a way to try to halt another massive wave of selling.

Roubini, an economics professor at New York University and head of Roubini Global Economics, warned a conference of hedge fund managers in London on Thursday that the risk to the financial system "has become bigger and bigger" and could result in market "holidays" ordered by desperate governments.

From Bloomberg News:

"We've reached a situation of sheer panic," Roubini said. . . . "There will be massive dumping of assets" and "hundreds of hedge funds are going to go bust."

"Systemic risk has become bigger and bigger," Roubini said at the Hedge 2008 conference. "Don't be surprised if policymakers need to close down markets for a week or two in coming days," he said.

Although the U.S. Standard & Poor's 500 index is down a relatively modest 3.4% this week, net losses have been much more severe in many foreign markets over the last four days. The German market has fallen 5.5% this week, Brazilian stocks are down 7.1% and the South Korean market has tumbled 11.1%.

"There are about a dozen emerging markets that are now in severe financial trouble," Roubini said. "Even a small country can have a systemic effect on the global economy," he said. "There is not going to be enough IMF money to support them."

Roubini has become a celebrity in the financial world for accurately calling this credit debacle, earning him the "Dr. Doom" moniker. But I couldn't tell from his comments on Thursday whether he believed that declaring a market holiday would be a smart idea.

After the U.S. closed down Wall Street for four days after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, some people figured that investors would be dissuaded from selling when markets reopened.

Instead, the Dow industrials dived 7.1% on the first day of trading after the halt and continued falling the rest of the week, losing 14.3% for the five days.

Now, as then, wouldn't a holiday just make people more desperate to sell as soon as the market reopens?

QUOTE

Biggest falls in Indian stock market history

A Correspondent in Mumbai
October 24, 2008
http://inhome.rediff.com/money/2008/oct/24bcrisis10.htm

The rise and fall of the Sensex has been dizzying. The markets are back to the point it scaled three years ago. . . The BSE Sensex on Friday crashed by 1,071 points to close at 8,701 points. This has been an incredible year for the markets, after scaling the 21,000 peak in January 2008, the markets are at 8,000 now.

On Friday, the Reserve Bank of India [Get Quote] gave the markets its biggest blow as it left key interest rates unchanged and lowered the GDP target to 7.5-8% for 2008-09.
Markets across the globe crashed on Friday. Japan's Nikkei shed 9.6% (812 points) to 7,649. Hang Seng plunged 6% (822 points) to 12,939. The Seoul Composite index tumbled 10.5% (111 points) to 939.

The worst hit stocks were DLF, Ranbaxy Laboratories [Get Quote] Hindalco Industries [Get Quote], Tata Motors [Get Quote], Reliance Industries [Get Quote] and Mahindra & Mahindra.

On Thursday, stock markets plunged following sustained capital outflows, shaky global markets, poor company results, and the International Monetary Fund's warning that economic growth in advanced nations will be close to zero. The BSE Sensex fell by 398.20 points, or 3.92%, to fall to 9,771.70.

We take you through the BIGGEST falls in the Indian stock market history.

October 24, 2008: The Sensex plunged by 1070.63 points (10.96 per cent) to close at 8,701.07. The National Stock Exchange's Nifty ended at 2,557.25, down 13.11 per cent or 386 points. The BSE Midcap closed 8.38 per cent lower and BSE Smallcap Index ended 7.66 per cent down.

March 17, 2008: The Bombay Stock Exchange benchmark Sensex crashed by 951 points to close at 14,809 on weak cues from the overseas markets. Unabated selling saw the index slip below the 15,000-mark.

March 3, 2008: The Bombay Stock Exchange benchmark Sensex witnessed its second-largest fall ever losing 900.84 points to close at 16,677.88 on frantic selling by funds, triggered by deepening concern over United States recession and some Budget-related concerns.

January 21, 2008: The Sensex saw its highest ever loss of 1,408 points at the end of the session on Monday. The Sensex recovered to close at 17,605.40 after it tumbled to the day's low of 16,963.96, on high volatility as investors panicked following weak global cues amid fears of the US recession.

January 22, 2008: The Sensex saw its biggest intra-day fall on Tuesday when it hit a low of 15,332, down 2,273 points. However, it recovered losses and closed at a loss of 875 points at 16,730. The Nifty closed at 4,899 at a loss of 310 points. Trading was suspended for one hour at the Bombay Stock Exchange after the benchmark Sensex crashed to a low of 15,576.30 within minutes of opening, crossing the circuit limit of 10 per cent.

February 11, 2008: The Sensex finally ended with a loss of 834 points (4.8%) at 16,631. The NSE Nifty slipped over 5% (263 points) to 4,857.

May 18, 2006: The Sensex registered a fall of 826 points (6.76 per cent) to close at 11,391, following heavy selling by FIIs, retail investors and a weakness in global markets. The Nifty crashed by 496.50 points (8.70%) points to close at 5,208.80 points.

December 17, 2007: A heavy bout of selling in the late noon deals saw the index plunge to a low of 19,177 - down 856 points from the day's open. The Sensex finally ended with a huge loss of 769 points (3.8%) at 19,261. The NSE Nifty ended at 5,777, down 271 points.

10 October 2008: The markets crashed by 801 points to close at a low of 10,528. The crisis in the global markets, a fall in the rupee and poor IIP numbers led to the fall.

October 18, 2007: Profit-taking in noon trades saw the index pare gains and slip into negative zone. The intensity of selling increased towards the closing bell, and the index tumbled all the way to a low of 17,771 - down 1,428 points from the day's high. The Sensex finally ended with a hefty loss of 717 points (3.8%) at 17,998. The Nifty lost 208 points to close at 5,351.

January 18, 2008: Unabated selling in the last one hour of trade saw the index tumble to a low of 18,930 - down 786 points from the day's high. The Sensex finally ended with a hefty loss of 687 points (3.5%) at 19,014. The index thus shed 8.7% (1,813 points) during the week. The NSE Nifty plunged 3.5% (208 points) to 5,705.

November 21, 2007: Mirroring weakness in other Asian markets, the Sensex saw relentless selling. The index tumbled to a low of 18,515 - down 766 points from the previous close. The Sensex finally ended with a loss of 678 points at 18,603. The Nifty lost 220 points to close at 5,561.

August 16, 2007: The Sensex, after languishing over 500 points lower for most of the trading sesion, slipped again towards the close to a low of 14,345. The index finally ended with a hefty loss of 643 points at 14,358.

April 2, 2007: The Sensex opened with a huge negative gap of 260 points at 12,812 following the Reserve Bank of India decision to hike the cash reserve ratio and repo rate. Unabated selling, mainly in auto and banking stocks, saw the index drift to lower levels as the day progressed. The index tumbled to a low of 12,426 before finally settling with a hefty loss of 617 points (4.7%) at 12,455.

August 1, 2007: The Sensex opened with a negative gap of 207 points at 15,344 amid weak trends in the global market and slipped deeper into the red. Unabated selling across-the-board saw the index tumble to a low of 14,911. The Sensex finally ended with a hefty loss of 615 points at 14,936. The NSE Nifty ended at 4,346, down 183 points. This is the third biggest loss in absolute terms for the index.

QUOTE

TSX plunges as recession fears grow

Updated Fri. Oct. 24 2008 10:26 AM ET http://www.ctv.ca/servlet/ArticleNews/stor...1024?hub=Canada

The Toronto stock market was down more than 500 points Friday following massive selloffs overseas as investors continue to fear a deep global recession.

Toronto's S&P/TSX composite index opened down nearly 700 points but rebounded slightly, off 565.27 points or six per cent to 8,766.08.

The declines were led by drops in the energy sector as the November crude contract on the New York Mercantile Exchange fell $3.91 to US$63.93 a barrel.

The tumbling price for crude came despite a decision from OPEC Friday to cut output quotas by 1.5 million barrels a day.

In New York, the Dow Jones index fell 395.37 points or 4.5 per cent to 8,295.88.

New York's Nasdaq composite index was down 83.91 points or 5.23 per cent to 1,520 while the S&P 500 retreated 47.78 points or 5.25 per cent to 860.33.

Before markets opened, Dow Jones industrial average futures fell 550-points -- the maximum allowed price change -- forcing trading to be halted.

Ian Lee, a professor at Carleton University's Sprott School of Business, said it's widely agreed that the U.S. is going into a recession.

"How we can avoid that in Canada when we have such a tightly coupled economy... I'm not sure," Lee told CTV Newsnet on Friday.

"They buy a lot of our output and if they go deeply into the tank then I can't see how we cannot tip over into recession."

Overseas, Japan's Nikkei 225 stock average lost 9.6 per cent while Hong Kong's Hang Seng closed down 7.8 per cent.

In Tokyo, Sony stock fell more than 14 per cent Friday after the electronics giant slashed its annual profit and sales forecasts citing poor demand.

The forecast was one of several triggers that frightened investors, prompting them to dump shares.

In Europe, Germany's benchmark DAX index lost 10.76 per cent, France's CAC40 dropped 10 per cent while Britain's FTSE 100 shed 8.67 per cent Friday.

The British government announced Friday its gross domestic product fell 0.5 per cent in the third quarter -- placing the country at the brink of a recession.

Meanwhile, trading on the Russian stock market has been halted.

With files from The Associated Press

QUOTE

Trading on Russian RTS exchange halted after stocks plunge

By MarketWatch
Last update: 5:36 a.m. EDT Oct. 24, 2008Comments: 4
http://www.marketwatch.com/news/story/trad...2%7D&dist=msr_1

LONDON (MarketWatch) -- Trading on Russia's RTS stock market was halted Friday for one hour after the dollar-denominated index fell 7.33% amid widespread sell-offs on global exchanges. S&P cut its outlook on Russia's long-term sovereign credit ratings to negative from stable Thursday, citing increasing costs from the government's bank rescue operations and rising capital outflows. Russia's economy is also being hit hard by the recent sharp drop in oil prices.

QUOTE

CNBC SPEAK OF ILLUMINATI AND STOCK MARKETS

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=5rBX3iTzyh0

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/5rBX3iTzyh0&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/5rBX3iTzyh0&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

craig-oxley - October 25, 2008 04:47 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

The inevitable day the Dollar crashes

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=U58a42USAKc

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/U58a42USAKc&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/U58a42USAKc&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

Kuwait scrambles to prop up second biggest bank

26 Oct 2008
http://afp.google.com/article/ALeqM5jX0Itd...p2h5QaLrpc4523w

KUWAIT CITY (AFP) — Kuwait on Sunday scrambled to shore up its second biggest bank and launched an economic task force as part of a flurry of measures to counter the growing impact of the global financial crisis.

The problem at Gulf Bank was revealed by the Central Bank of Kuwait (CBK), which immediately suspended the company's shares but said it "backs the bank and fully guarantees its deposits."

Meanwhile, the government of the oil-rich emirate pledged to guarantee deposits in all local banks as the Kuwait Stock Exchange tumbled yet again, prompting traders to walk out.

Gulf Bank has run up losses on derivatives because of a drop in the value of the euro against the dollar, the central bank said, without giving the size of the losses.

CBK is sending in a "supervisor" to strengthen internal controls by monitoring the bank's management of treasury, foreign exchange and stock markets activities.

The central bank has ordered a probe into the problem deals to determine their size and who was responsible for conducting them.

However, the losses will not "affect Gulf Bank's activities (nor) its ability to continue providing its normal banking services," the CBK added.

It is the first time that a Kuwaiti bank is known to have been affected by the global financial crisis.

The formation of the task force was decided during an emergency cabinet meeting.

"The cabinet has assigned the governor of the central bank to lead a professional and specialised working team with executive powers to follow up and deal with the impact of the global financial crisis on Kuwait's economic and financial situations," a statement said.

The cabinet also said the government is committed to "guarantee all deposits in the national banks." The central bank said the government will urgently submit a draft law to parliament to authorise the guarantee.

An opposition lawmaker announced that he will seek to quiz the emirate's prime minister for allegedly failing to resolve economic problems.

On the only previous occasion that Kuwaiti MPs have filed a request to grill the prime minister, in May 2006, the emir responded by dissolving parliament.

Gulf Bank general manager Fawzi al-Thanayan told reporters outside Kuwait's stock exchange that the problematic derivatives trading was on behalf of a customer and not for the bank's own account.

When the losses occurred, the customer refused to pay the bank and "we are trying to resolve the issue," he said.

Kuwait is the second Gulf state to decide to guarantee bank deposits after the United Arab Emirates took a similar step earlier this month.

Kuwaiti share dealers, who staged an initial walkout on Thursday, stormed out again on Sunday and protested outside the stock market building after the index dived more than 300 points withing a few minutes of the opening.

About 30 marched to the nearby council of ministers building where the cabinet was holding an emergency session on the plan to guarantee bank deposits.

"We want the government to intervene to rescue the bourse and traders. We want the government to buy stocks. This month, I have already lost half my investments in the bourse," one of the protestors, Hussein Tubayekh, told AFP.

The Kuwait Stock Exchange Index shed 3.5 percent to finish at 10,114.30 points, a new low since April 2007. The slump was led by the banks which dropped 3.9 percent and investment firms 3.7 percent.

Last week, the market plunged 9.2 percent.

Liberal-leaning MP Ahmad al-Mulaifi told reporters that he will file a request on November 6 to grill Prime Minister and ruling family member Sheikh Nasser Mohammad al-Ahmad al-Sabah over his management of the economic crisis and claims of misappropriation of funds.

He accused Sheikh Nasser of "failing to manage the economic crisis in the country."

QUOTE

AUSTRALIAN BANKS FREEZE PEOPLES ACCOUNTS!

Go to Centrelink: Swan's advice on frozen funds

Ruth Williams and Peter Martin
October 24, 2008
http://business.theage.com.au/business/go-...1023-57gk.html#

PRESSURE on the Federal Government over its bank deposit guarantee has escalated after three big financial institutions hit with a spate of withdrawals by customers last night froze their accounts.

Tens of thousands of Australians, many of them retirees, are now unable to get immediate access to their capital after AXA Asia Pacific, Perpetual Investment Management and Australian Unity suspended withdrawals from some funds.

Treasurer Wayne Swan responded last night by advising people adversely affected to go to Centrelink to see if they were eligible for income support.

But the Government did not appear to have an immediate answer to the cascading problem, and Mr Swan's comments were seized on by the Coalition, which accused him of insensitivity and incompetence.

As the row erupted, Mr Swan and Prime Minister Kevin Rudd last night met the chief executives of the nation's four biggest banks - Commonwealth, NAB, ANZ and Westpac - to discuss the financial crisis.

The meeting in Canberra came after another day of carnage on world markets, with Australia's ASX-200 index plunging more than 4.4%.

The freezing of funds by AXA, Perpetual and Australian Unity came in response to a flood of people trying to withdraw money - mainly from mortgage funds - and transfer it into banks to take advantage of the Government's decision to guarantee deposits.

By last night, four of the nation's five biggest mortgage fund managers had either suspended or put restrictions on withdrawals from funds worth billions of dollars. Industry sources said up to 180,000 individuals were affected, with an average investment of about $40,000 each.

The funds are favoured by older, retired people because they provide a steady income stream. While there is no apparent threat to people's savings, the freeze means those wanting access to more than the regular income payments might be unable to do so for some time.

Senior Perpetual executive Richard Brandweiner said that from last night, the company would allow only quarterly redemptions, and these would be dependent on the level of funds available at the time.

He blamed the situation on "a sudden spike in redemptions" after the Government flagged its bank deposit guarantee and "subsequent actions by other parties".

A spokeswoman for AXA said the company had to act after withdrawals by investors yesterday soared to about 20 times the daily average.

The latest developments will increase pressure on the Government to get its planned fee on big bank deposits - aimed at curbing the massive flight of money to the safety of government guaranteed banks - in place quickly.

Last night Mr Swan remained adamant that the guarantee would not be extended to mortgage funds and other managed investments. "These are not deposits in a bank, we are dealing with market-linked investments," he said.

"I say to the people who are adversely affected by some of these decisions that have been taken in these managed investment funds, do fully investigate your eligibility for income support through Centrelink."

He also said Perpetual managing director David Deverall had told him the bank deposit guarantee was not solely to blame for the problems. "He was very supportive of the bank guarantee," Mr Swan said.

Shadow treasurer Julie Bishop said: "This is just not good enough. The Government's actions are affecting people's livelihoods. It has caused such confusion."

Opposition Leader Malcolm Turnbull said Mr Swan's "incompetence" was matched by his "cold" indifference. "Confronted with the human consequences of his mismanagement and incompetence, the best he can do is tell people whose savings have been frozen to show up at Centrelink," Mr Turnbull said.

Earlier yesterday, in an apparent change of heart, Mr Swan said he was considering allowing big depositors to opt out of the proposed fee on bank deposits over $1 million.

On Tuesday Mr Swan had insisted the fee would "be paid by all depositors in the deposit-taking institutions".

AntiSionist - October 31, 2008 03:00 AM (GMT)

UPCOMING GOLD DEFAULT

Jim Willie CB, editor of the “HAT TRICK LETTER”
October 30, 2008
http://www.gold-eagle.com/editorials_08/willie103008.html

The gold & silver futures markets are each hurtling down a dangerous path toward possible default. The artificial paper price has created enormous physical demand, and hampered supply production, if not delivery. The gap between the corrupted paper price and the legitimate physical price in actual trading markets has grown sharply, enough to force a breakdown like in any distorted market. When December contracts in gold & silver are demanded to be satisfied via delivery of the metal, we could easily see the COMEX fail in delivery. A default is highly likely.

The USFed cut the official interest rate again by 50 basis points, now to 1.0% on the Fed Funds target, in utter desperation. Other central banks did not join in rate cut exercises. The Euro Central Bank is expected to cut next week, reluctantly. So is the beleaguered Bank of England. The pressure is building on gold demand. Now with the official US price inflation at CPI = 5% or so, the real rate of money cost is minus 4%. The actual price inflation runs more like 10% to 12%, making the real cost of money more like minus 9% to minus 11%. GOLD RESPONDS TO NEGATIVE REAL RATES VERY FAVORABLY.

GALLOPING RECESSION TO FORCE MORE INFLATION

If you think the bank crisis is bad now, wait until the USEconomic recession achieves galloping speed downhill. The stagflation will eclipse that seen in the late 1970 decade. Today the economic growth in the GDP was posted for 3Q2008 at minus 0.25%, even with a hefty 5.4% PCE (personal consumption expenditures). This is another fairy tale told. The US consumer activity cut the GDP back by 2.25%, while the government activity added to the GDP by 1.15% in retrograde style. So the USDollar has rallied amidst economic decay, doing its death dance. Bear in mind that the stated admitted price inflation for Q2 was only 1.5% in that GDP corrupt calculation, which avoided a negative GDP for 2Q2008. They called inflation growth, the usual corrupted modus operandi. The second quarter was when prices skyrocketed for everything under the sun, if memory serves properly. Clearly, the wizards in the USGovt stat-rat offices, employing advanced techniques, moved some price inflation from Q2 into Q3, so that a recession would not be admitted all summer long. With the USFed rate cut to 1.0% again, they are admitting the recession.

The Shadow Govt Statistics folks pitch in a comment to provide light upon corrupted data. "Narrower Than Expected GDP Contraction Is Nonsense. The difference between the reported 0.3% annualized Gross Domestic Product (GDP) and the consensus expectation of a 0.5% contraction is no more than statistical noise, yet the reported result most certainly was manufactured so as to allow the hypesters on Wall Street and in Washington spin their fairy tales of a 'less-severe recession' in order to help draw the gullible back into stocks, at least for a day or two before next week's election. This follows earlier economic scare tactics aimed at the public to help sell the 'Bailout' package… With a 95% confidence interval of +/- 3% around this morning's estimate of an annualized 0.25% contraction in real (inflation adjusted), annualized quarterly third-quarter GDP growth, the number was not even statistically indistinguishable from growth or contraction in the 3% range. A quarterly contraction in excess of 2% would have been more realistic… U.S. Economy is in a severe recession. With real retail sales, housing, non-farm payrolls, new orders for durable goods, and industrial production all showing quarterly and annual growth patterns never seen outside of a recession still in deterioration, GDP reporting eventually should show a string of quarterly contractions, with the recession dating back to fourth-quarter 2006 long before the exacerbation of the current systemic solvency crisis."

A simple statement is required to close the preface. The financial market crises, in numerous arenas, have come in large part because the banking authorities have intentionally provided rescues only for New York investment banks and other big financial firms. Up to a month ago, the USFed had sterilized most injections into the Wall Street centers of the banking system by denying the mainstream bank system via liquidity drains. Drain the national system where households work and live, and provide subsidies for the financial crime syndicate. This is a betrayal of government to the people. Elite gain came at mainstream expense. Attention has gained on the misuse, false promises, and other misdirection of USGovt funds even in the bailout packages. The big banks are ordered not to lend, but to acquire smaller banks.

Until the global interest rate cut was announced, the USFed had not created much new money, despite the numerous rate cuts on the US side. The policy was unconventional and deliberate, with a two-fold purpose to aid Wall Street and to keep a lid on the gold price. Their bad policy, emphasis upon rescue and redemption for criminal fraud, neglect of the private sector, have left the USEconomy vulnerable to an extreme breakdown. A GRAND REFLATION WILL SOON BE ATTEMPTED, TIMED OBVIOUSLY AFTER THE ELECTION. The effect will be much like blowing up a dam holding back a lake, where downstream the price inflation will be broad, deep, and powerful. That day comes soon, and if not, then the entire US financial system will go dark. That cannot be permitted.

COMMENT ON USDOLLAR PARADOX

As a preface, much response came from last week's article about the "USDollar Death Dance" from both the public and analyst community. No hint of investment in the USEconomy is coincident with the paradoxical US$ rise. In "Plumbing the Depths of Depravity" posted of October 29 (CLICK HERE), the intrepid expert forensic financial analyst Rob Kirby, and erstwhile bond trader, confirmed my view of a twisted engineered perverse USDollar rally. He echoes one of my major points delineated, that settlement of credit derivatives, like with the credit default swaps from failed insured asset backed bonds, has produced a demand for USDollars in contract settlement payouts. His website (http://www.kirbyanalytics.com) contains a treasure trove of information that reads like criminal indictments, but without the hundreds of obscurely written pages and weird words.

In the cited article, Kirby wrote: What folks need to understand is that the global OTC derivatives market, measured in tens or hundreds of Trillions, is virtually all US Dollar denominated. Its SYSTEMIC failure, which is now occurring, requires US Dollar balances to clear (settle) the trades (bets). This has created the paradoxical global demand for US Dollars, the currency of a country that is fundamentally bankrupt. By rationing credit to hedge funds that were naturally levered and 'long commodities' (institutions like JP Morgan routinely took the other sides of their customers commodities bets, ruining institutions like natural gas player Amaranth), and propping up the balance sheets of those who were short commodities [such as] the Banks. The Federal Reserve led cabal of Central Bankers have ENGINEERED the collapse in commodities prices while creating the illusion (of a perverse USDollar rally). The engineered collapse of the commodities complex became necessary in the eyes of monetary elites because the rush for tangibles and corresponding repudiation of fiat money was becoming manic, as so CLEARLY evidenced by the emerging shortages of precious metals, gold and silver bullion." My rejoinder is that the crude oil price, and many commodity prices, have come down right before the election, just like in autumn 2006, a perception we share.

Kirby went on to conclude that "We are CLEARLY going to HYPERINFLATE!!!!" He steadfastly contradicts shallow assertions that deflation will dominate the scene. Anyone observing the money supply acceleration in recent weeks can easily see this, yet deflationists seem unable to observe the human response in desperation. We two have frequent debates between ourselves, whether USTreasury Bond default will occur or else a big Reflation Episode. It is possible both will occur. These exchanges will contribute toward a key section in the upcoming November Hat Trick Letter on the weekend of November 9. A topic raging lately between us has been the failures to deliver USTreasurys. This extraordinary phenomenon highlights the extreme mountain of toxic bond (in)securities spewed worldwide by the corrupted US financial sector, but it also highlights the questionable legitimacy of USTreasury Bonds. The traded volume of USTBonds had been recorded a few years ago to be over $2 trillion above official issuance in USTBonds. So maybe we are seeing a redux of counterfeit issuance of USTBonds in order to satisfy unprecedented demand. By the way, USTreasury management is done, and accounting is done, handled by only one giant bank.

Could the failures to deliver USTreasurys, as shown in the alarming graphic below, be a precursor to actual default? We will see. Kirby maintains a period of tremendous hyper-inflation is coming. My forecast is for a possible USTreasury default, as conditions grow out of control, and economic disintegration catches the nation by surprise. The collapse of General Motors could trigger a profound change in perception concerning the effective implementation of USGovt and Wall Street bailouts and rescues. Either way, disruptions like never seen before are on the horizon. The settlement failures bring into question the integrity of the USTreasurys as a legitimate market. Their counterfeit from more supply than issuance is well documented, and rings like a loud echo to the naked stock shorting chapter of US financial markets.

VANISHING OPEN INTEREST IN C.O.T.

What conditions would precede a default in gold & silver COMEX futures contracts? Tough question. These are unprecedented times. Surely, a widening between physical price and paper price reads like bold billboard graffiti. That invites a queer arbitrage, to buy in one location and sell in another, of course practiced only by the privileged insider. One other characteristic of imminent default could be a vanishing act in the open interest (OI) seen in the Commitment of Traders for futures contracts. The gold OI has reduced sharply since late spring when it ranged between 400 and 460 thousand, now to 319.5k on 21 October 2008. The silver OI has reduced sharply since late spring when it ranged between 125 and 140 thousand, now to 95.8k on 21 October 2008. The severe drop in open interest is highly unusual, not at all normal!

If these unfair paper markets, intended as devices for price discovery, when just devices for price suppression, are heading into default, then the movement among many players might be to exit the stage before chaos erupts, and embarrassment is heaped upon trading firms. Leading US bankers might be isolated. Also, and more importantly, if a default occurs, the settlement of existing contracts comes seriously into question. The players might wish to exit the crime scene before major doubt distorts contract settlement. Who would want to have hundreds of $thousands tied up in a market with yellow police 'Crime Scene' tape cordoning off the zone? By the way, the shrinkage in large commercial net short position usually means a big powerful upsurge in the gold price is coming, as in very soon. They have little more to liquidate, and never liquidate all, since they delivery from production facilities.

BACK TO GOLD LEASE RATES

The gold lease rates have jumped significantly. Lease rates have more than tripled in the last month alone! They have not subsided. The last time rates on the one-month lease were in this neighborhood was over a decade ago in another crisis. It means that vault owners who control large quantities of gold are much less willing to permit other parties to borrow it, plain and simple. The COMEX, where paper gold is traded, might not be able to acquire much needed gold from central bank vaults and other bullion bank vaults in order to satisfy delivery requirements. Vault owners must expect higher gold prices to come. Clearly, the gold market is experiencing shortage. The lease market is an excellent forward indicator on physical price movement. Silver lease rates have also tripled, just like gold, and not subsided either. The lease game is thoroughly perverse. One effect rarely noted is that short sellers within the futures contracts might be squeezed due to leasing challenges. If they have a harder time to roll over contracts, by means of higher required posted margin or higher cost of leased gold, then they must cover. A price rally ensues.

Steven Isenberg, chief executive officer of M Partners in Toronto pointed out that the cost of borrowing gold rose dramatically in March 2001, when central banks were making less bullion available to speculators, mining companies, and jewelers. Gold promptly rallied more than 12% in the following two months. He said, "This [the lease rate for gold] usually precedes a sharp move in the gold price."

Ross Norman, director of TheBullionDesk.com, said the latest lease rate spike "is indicative of perhaps an even tighter market still yet to come." While gold miners and jewelry groups are the most frequent borrowers, central banks are the traditional lenders. Fat Prophets offers an excellent interpretation on lease rates, given on October 12. "Today's commentary concerns the last carry trade left in the markets, i.e. gold. Gold peaked at $1032 in March this year. However, since then it has fallen steadily, trading as low as $734. While this fall has been in line with a rising USD dollar, it has also been orchestrated. The current spike in gold lease rates indicates that demand for physical gold is extremely high and growing quickly. We may well be witnessing the first seeds of the gold price breaking free from the short sellers and the end (death) of the gold carry trade, which so many bullion banks made such large profits on in the 1990s. The lease rates (available on TheBullionDesk.com) will be the key indicator to watch."*

The margin requirements at COMEX have been increased. Could this move be intended to hinder gold investors? Yep! Is the move consistent with rising gold lease rates? Yep! Will the devious maneuver halt a gold price response? Nope! Margin collateral demands in a general sense have risen by 500% in many hedge fund accounts. The pressure extends to India, where withholding credit from major buyers has inhibited gold buying. The trend is clear, as pressure by authorities has been to reduce leverage by force. When liquidation is late, price reversal comes swiftly.

PEPTALKS, ANECDOTES & SHORTAGES

Two interviews have been cited in recent past articles. They are so important, a repeat must be provided in case readers missed them. In a rare event shedding light on the positive side of the gold market, CNBC interviewed Jurg Kiener, CEO of Swiss Asia Capital. He points out the stark contrast of the two markets, paper gold versus physical gold. Kiener expects soon the US 'gambling price' gold market in major US-based and London-based exchanges to eventually default after a titanic battle that began years ago has reached fever pitch. By that he means a return suddenly to physical price determination will come for gold. He concluded that when such an inevitable event occurs, THE GOLD PRICE WILL DOUBLE VERY QUICKLY, LIKE IN DAYS. Watch the brief clip (CLICK HERE).

John Embry of Sprott Asset Mgmt focuses on the extreme amount of nationalization and other bailout funding by the USGovt, as a prelude to a potential gold futures default. He said to watch the December COMEX futures contract. The old saying is that gold responds to the medicine applied, but not the prescription written. Sadly, not much of any medicine has been administered to the public or the mainstream USEconomy yet. Almost nothing has occurred yet for applied medicine on mortgage workouts, rewritten home loans, loan balance forgiveness, and ample new funds for new home loans that would truly assist the pain in the mainstream. Instead, a sham of a voluntary bank program has resulted in little more than a 'Revolving Door' that returns distressed homeowners to the foreclosure center. Embry makes great points in his article "Rescue Will Send Gold to Surreal Price Level" (CLICK HERE). But notice the title has the future tense. He implicitly agrees that the rescue for the system outside the banking sector has not begun, that the USDollar debasement is a process only just begun, although Pandora's Box has been opened. He says in the interview, *"… the US authorities will not hesitate to debase their currency in an attempt to salvage the financial system. In the fullness of time, this will be wildly inflationary and should propel gold and silver prices that would be viewed by many in today's context as surreal."

Gerald Celente of Trends Research Institute is a superstar. He commented on how the USGovt bailouts will result in enormous upcoming supply of new money creation. It is all funny phony money in my view, requiring protection from the imminent guaranteed runup in price inflation. NEVER DOES A DEBT RELATED SOLUTION FIX A DEBT RELATED PROBLEM. He regards the USGovt bailouts, rescues, and mergers to be a colossal failure of policy, which will not prevent a USEconomic depression. The absence of realistic assistance to the American people who struggle with mortgages is what is missing in glaring manner. He points to most bailouts giving subsidy aid to CEOs and preferred stock holders. Gold will surpass the $1000 mark in the near term, but probably not until the liquidation engineered by the corrupt bank authorities has subsided. His comments came immediately after an important global interest rate cut that involved numerous central banks, which joined the embattled US Federal Reserve.

Celente wrote: "Beyond the $1 trillion subprime problem that has been erroneously targeted as the prime culprit behind the credit crisis are more serious financial catastrophes that are barely reported, mostly overlooked and cannot be remedied. The Fed cannot print enough money to paper over the $531.2 trillion in derivatives and credit swaps, the trillions in the overbuilt commercial real estate market ready to collapse, the multi-trillions in leveraged buyouts going bust, and other exotic financial instruments that have turned toxic. Yesterday's lowering of interest rates and the continual Fed action to flood the markets with money will lead to an era of hyper-inflation, the likes of which no living American has ever seen. Gold prices shot up some $24 after being down over $20 earlier in the day. We continue to forecast gold $2000. And once again, we urge you to take precautionary measures in view of a worsening global market meltdown."

THE HAT TRICK LETTER PROFITS IN THE CURRENT CRISIS.

From subscribers and readers:
At least 30 recently on correct forecasts regarding the bailout parade, numerous nationalization deals such as for Fannie Mae and the grand Mortgage Rescue.
"You seem to have it nailed. I used to think you were paranoid. Now I think you are psychic!"
(ShawnU in Ontario)
"Your analysis is of outstanding quality, the best I have read. In particular, as a person on the spot, I can confirm the accuracy of your bleak assessment of our prospects in the UK."
(JanB in England)
"I just subscribed to your services and must say that your insights are so eye-opening that it is like having a window to the future. I never thought that they would in so much detail encompassing the entire world. With all that is going on, I still wonder how you are so in touch with it all."
(ChrisB in Australia)
"The latest Hat Trick Letter is great work. I am still reading and absorbing, but this is just great analytical work. Truly inspired. I would say you produce a very sophisticated, detailed product that is the best of the bunch. Truly. You help keep me very focused on current events and help me keep my eyes on the distant horizon."
(RichardB in Texas)
"Your unmatched ability to find and unmask a string of significant nuggets, and to wrap them into a meaningful mosaic of the treachery-cum-stupidity which comprise our current financial system, make yours the most informative and valuable of investment letters. You have refined the 'bits-and-pieces' approach into an awesome intellectual tool."
(RobertN in Texas)
"Your reports scare the hell out of me every month, probably more so over time, since so many of your predictions have turned out to be very accurate. I am afraid you might be right that by the end of 2008, we are in a pretty severe situation, with civil unrest and severe financial stress on Main Street."

(GeorgeC in Minnesota)

Jim Willie CB is a statistical analyst in marketing research and retail forecasting. He holds a PhD in Statistics. His career has stretched over 25 years. He aspires to thrive in the financial editor world, unencumbered by the limitations of economic credentials. Visit his free website to find articles from topflight authors at www.GoldenJackass.com .

craig-oxley - October 31, 2008 11:40 PM (GMT)

QUOTE

America's econonmy in 2010

by insider Peter Schiff

Part 1/2:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=CUlLnCrh77s

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/CUlLnCrh77s&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/CUlLnCrh77s&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

Part 2/2:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=coaI3d89kuA

[dohtml]<object width="425" height="344"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/coaI3d89kuA&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/coaI3d89kuA&color1=0xb1b1b1&color2=0xcfcfcf&hl=en&fs=1" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" width="425" height="344"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

QUOTE

IMF aid for Ukraine and Hungary

Monday, 27 October 2008
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/business/7692017.stm

The International Monetary Fund (IMF) is to offer a $16.5bn (£10.4bn) loan to Ukraine and has agreed an as yet undisclosed package with Hungary.

Ukraine is to receive the loan to help it "maintain confidence and economic and financial stability", the IMF said.

The country has seen its stocks, banks and currency badly shaken by the global credit crunch.

The "substantial financing package" for Hungary is due to be finalised in the next few days, the IMF said.

It is conditional upon Hungary adopting "strong policies" and will be drawn from the IMF, the EU, and some individual European governments "together with regional and other multilateral institutions", IMF Managing Director Dominique Strauss-Kahn said in a statement.

"The policies Hungary envisages justify an exceptional level of access to fund resources," he added.

The BBC's Sarah Morris in Washington says this suggests the loan is likely to be one of the biggest the IMF has ever made.

Hungary's currency, the forint, has seen a sharp fall, stocks have tumbled and the country has cut its growth forecast for 2009.

Currency plunge

Internal political turmoil has delayed economic development in Ukraine and the IMF loan depends on the ex-Soviet state being able to balance its budget and make reforms to its banking sector.

Last week, the IMF said it was to give Iceland a £2.1bn loan as its banking system came close to collapse.

Pakistan and Belarus are also in talks about accessing IMF funding.

"The authorities' programme is intended to support Ukraine's return to economic and financial stability, by addressing financial sector liquidity and solvency problems, by smoothing the adjustment to large external shocks and by reducing inflation," said Mr Strauss-Kahn.

"At the same time, it will guard against a deep output decline by insulating household and corporations to the extent possible."

Easy credit and a property boom have seen Ukraine's capital Kiev expand rapidly but the global downturn has seen investors and those willing to offer loans withdraw.

Ukraine also relies heavily on steel, but prices have collapsed and its currency, the hryvnia, has fallen sharply in the past two weeks.

QUOTE

Time To Bunker Down

Joe Average
November 2008
http://www.gold-eagle.com/editorials_08/swagell110208.html

Global Panic Spreads

The largest debt bubble in the history of mankind is on the verge of deflating and collapsing as world leaders and central bankers fly around the globe to one crisis meeting after another. No sooner is one panic quelled or some hasty band-aid fix slapped into place to stop a financial collapse, then another breaks out somewhere else. The bad news just keeps on coming;

ICELAND...Bankrupt...Oct.2008 nationalises banks; turns to International Monetary Fund for help.
BALTIC DRY INDEX...Down 90%... a leading indicator of shipping rates & global trade.
JAPAN (NIKKEI)...Down 81%... from all time high of 38,957 on December 29th 1989.
RUSSIA (RTS & MICEX)...Down 77%... exchanges shut down several days to stem panic.
CHINA (SSE)...Down 72%... from all time high of 6,029 0n October 16th 2007.
KOREA (KSE)...Down 68%... from high in May 2007.
ARGENTINA (MERVAL)...Down 64%... moves to take over $30 billion in private pension funds.
INDIA (BSE)...Down 60%... since January 2008.
TURKEY (ISE)...Down 59%... from high in November 2007.
HONG KONG (HANG SENG)...Down 55%... past 12 months.
ITALY...Down 53%... past 12 months.
BRAZIL (BOVESPA)...Down 52%... from May 2008 peak. Trading suspended 5 times in 3 weeks.
FRANCE (CAC)...Down 50%... from June 2007.
GERMANY (DAX)...Down 50%... year to date.
GREAT BRITAIN (FTSE)...Down 47%...from all time high of 6,930; now “officially” in recession.
MEXICO (IPC)...Down 47%...since June this year.
AUSTRALIA (ASX)...Down 45%... from all time high of 6,829 on November 1st 2007.
U.S.A (DJIA)... Down 46%... to 8154 on Oct.10th 2008 from 14,198 on Oct.11th 2007. Interesting that the American market (where this crisis all began) is down less than so many others...but not surprising really with the U.S. Fed prepared to monetise as much debt as necessary to avert a Financial Armageddon.
OIL...Down 54%... after peaking at $139 in June 2008. OPEC Nations hastily cut supply.
COPPER...Down 50% from July 2008 high.
NICKEL...Down 62% year to date.
GOLD...Down 26% +... from high of $1,010 on March 17th 2008.

The statistics speak for themselves. The world is undoubtedly experiencing what Alan “I made a mistake” Greenspan described as a “once in a century event”... thanks for that Mr. Greenspan.

The only question now is how long might it last?

Most observers have now resigned themselves to the realisation that we are most unlikely to have a “V” shaped recovery (i.e. a short, sharp recession lasting only six months or so). Many believe the extent of damage that has been inflicted on world markets ensures that we will have to endure at least a “U shaped recovery” that will not see an end to hard times for at least two years (i.e. a recovery sometime in 2010). Some arch-bears (like NYU Professor Nouriel Roubini) are warning that what may be coming our way is an “L shaped recovery” meaning we will flat-line along the bottom in a recession/depression for many years to come before we emerge out the other end.

A Dash to Cash...and Unintended Consequences

Following the lead of other world banks, the Australian Government acted quickly to guarantee the savings deposited in its banks (even though the top four Australian banks are included in the top safest 20 banks world-wide with a AA+ rating).

Rather than ensuring calm among nervous investors it triggered a mad scramble for the safety of government-guaranteed deposits that resulted in a deluge of withdrawal requests from investors outside this safety umbrella. The unintended consequence of this was that mortgage trusts and other non-bank funds were swamped with withdrawal requests and were forced to freeze all withdrawals.

So this nation of just under 22 million found itself with more than 250,000 Australians with their funds frozen in accounts valued at $25 billion.

Many of these investors are retirees. One distressed elderly gent, in tears, was featured on the T.V. news complaining that he didn't even have enough cash at hand to take his wife out to lunch at the local seniors club. Another retiree described how he couldn't sleep nights and kept waking at three in the morning worrying about how he and his wife would manage in the future.

The only consolation and advice forthcoming from Australia's Treasurer was for them to head down to their local welfare office to find out if they might be eligible for a government handout until this problem was sorted out... not exactly what they had planned for and counted on in their retirement!

Similar concerns have been raised by Martin Weiss Ph.D. of Weiss Research Inc who goes so far as to suggest that massive, erratic flows of "Hot Money" from deposits around the globe may result in some kind of international bank holiday having to be declared. Meanwhile, Prof. Roubini predicts hundreds of hedge funds will go bust and that many more stock markets will be forced to shut... perhaps for up to a week. Also, Charles Wendel (Financial Institutions Consulting) fears that of the 8,000 plus banks in America's fragmented banking system...up to 1,000 will disappear within two years.

The message seems to be... have some cash on hand...ideally enough to cover your living expenses for a couple of months or three if possible.

Australians certainly seem to be doing so according to Alexander Symonds (Australian Financial Review October 29th 2008)... " CASH IS BACK UNDER BEDS...There's a run on $100 notes but the Reserve Bank of Australia's message is...don't panic. Armaguard had advised small businesses it was short of $100 bills and expected to be for some time...wealthy people (are blamed for) walking into bank branches and withdrawing all their cash 'to the point where we now have a $100 note shortage in Australia".

Killed by Debt

As the world economies stumble from one crisis to another, it is sobering to hear how horribly the global debt bubble is destroying the lives of some poor, naive, unsophisticated individuals in emerging countries. The credit implosion in India, where the masses were recently introduced to freely-handed-out-money and a new-found consumerism, has resulted in a recent tragedy that is sickening.

Indian police were this month called to a suburban apartment where they discovered four bodies. The father (70 years of age) and his wife (60 years old) had committed suicide by swallowing poison. Nearby, their middle aged daughter and son had hanged themselves. 73 credit cards were found in the apartment as well as evidence of the overwhelming debts they had gotten themselves into. Not understanding how the interest charges would compound, the family had dug themselves so deep into a hole that in the end shame and despair led them to kill themselves. No walking away from their obligations and declaring bankruptcy for them.

Greed is NOT Good!

"We've seen the triumph of greed over integrity... The triumph of speculation over value creation... The triumph of the short term over long-term sustainable growth. It is perhaps time now to admit that we did not learn the full lessons of the greed-is-good ideology. And today we are still cleaning up the mess of the 21st-century children of Gordon Gekko."

Kevin Rudd, Prime Minister Australia.

Adding another slant to the recent behaviour of "The Masters of the Universe" on Wall Street and their outrageous remuneration packages.

"I am old enough to have known both the CEO's of 20 years ago and those today. I can assure you that we CEO's of today are NOT 10 times better than those 20 years ago."

William McDonough, Former New York Federal Reserve Governor.

Simple the New "Chic"

The times for conspicuous consumption, trying to overtake the Joneses, piling on more debt, leveraging up, and big risk taking are over.

Simple is the new "chic". Frugal is good...greed and overindulgence is bad. Working to rebuild savings is good. Paying down credit card debt is good. Entering into new credit arrangements, especially for expensive discretionary items you don't really need...is unwise.

Savings deposits should be with banks that are rated A+ and preferably have government guarantees. Real estate investments where mortgage repayments might prove crippling if tenants move out, interest rates rise or your income is reduced (Heaven forbid you lose your job) should be disposed of where possible. Down-size if necessary.

Baby Boomers should be prepared to help their kids out if they're able (some kids might even have to move back in with the old folks to save rent). If Boomers have suffered serious losses to retirement nest eggs they may need to consider working longer before retiring, going back to work if already retired (at least part-time), and not get spooked into taking risky gambles to try and "get it all back".

Being in denial won't cut it. Nor will the old clichés about "it's not a real loss if you don't sell...it's only a loss on paper...it'll come back...it always does", "I'm in for the long haul...I'll dollar-cost-average-down", etc. Good financial advice is essential...preferably from someone who has been through tough times before and can come up with a sound survival strategy.

Personal safety for you and your family may become more of an issue in the turbulent, uncertain times that lie ahead because unemployment looks certain to rise as will unruly behaviour.

The tough times will pass...but in the mean time it's time to bunker down.

All the best, Joe.

www.lifetoday.com.au

QUOTE

`Panic' Strikes East Europe Borrowers as Banks Cut Franc Loans

By Ben Holland, Laura Cochrane and Balazs Penz
http://bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=2060110...yBJQ&refer=home

Oct. 31 (Bloomberg) -- Imre Apostagi says the hospital upgrade he's overseeing has stalled because his employer in Budapest can't get a foreign-currency loan.

The company borrows in foreign currencies to avoid domestic interest rates as much as double those linked to dollars, euros and Swiss francs. Now banks are curtailing the loans as investors pull money out of eastern Europe's developing markets and local currencies plunge.

``There's no money out there,'' said Apostagi, a project manager who asked that the medical-equipment seller he works for not be identified to avoid alarming international backers. ``We won't collapse, but everything's slowing to a crawl. The whole world is scared and everyone's going a bit mad.''

Foreign-denominated loans helped fuel eastern European economies including Poland, Romania and Ukraine, funding home purchases and entrepreneurship after the region emerged from communism. The elimination of such lending is magnifying the global credit crunch and threatening to stall the expansion of some of Europe's fastest-growing economies.

``What has been a factor of strength in recent years has now become a social weakness,'' said Tom Fallon, emerging-markets head in Paris at La Francaise des Placements, which manages $11 billion.

Plunging Currencies

Since the end of August, the forint has fallen 16 percent against the Swiss franc, the currency of choice for Hungarian homebuyers, and more than 8 percent versus the euro. Foreign- currency loans make up 62 percent of all household debt in the country, up from 33 percent three years ago.

Romania's leu dropped more than 14 percent against the dollar and 3.2 percent against the euro. Poland's zloty declined more than 17 percent against the dollar and 6.8 percent versus the euro, and Ukraine's hryvnia plunged 22 percent to the dollar and 11.5 percent to the euro.

That's even after a boost this week from an International Monetary Fund emergency loan program for emerging markets and the U.S. Federal Reserve's decision to pump as much as $120 billion into Brazil, Mexico, South Korea and Singapore. The Fed said yesterday that it aims to ``mitigate the spread of difficulties in obtaining U.S. dollar funding.''

Plunging domestic currencies mean higher monthly payments for businesses and households repaying foreign-denominated loans, forcing them to scale back spending.

In Kiev, Ukraine, Yuriy Voloshyn, who works at a real-estate company, says he's forgoing a new television because of his dollar-based mortgage. His monthly payments have risen by 18 percent, or 1,000 hryvnias ($167), since he took out the loan seven months ago.

No More Dreaming

``I only have money to pay for food and my monthly fee to the bank,'' Voloshyn, 25, said. ``I can't even dream about anything else.''

Rafal Mrowka, a driver from Ostrow Wielkopolski in western Poland, says he became addicted to checking foreign-currency rates as monthly installments on his Swiss-franc mortgage jumped 25 percent.

``I've even stopped getting nervous, now I can only laugh,'' the 32-year-old, first-time property owner said.

The bulk of eastern Europe's credit boom was denominated in foreign currencies because they provided for cheaper financing.

Before the current financial turmoil, Romanian banks typically charged 7 percent interest on a euro loan, compared with about 9.5 percent for those in leu. Romanians had about $36 billion of foreign-currency loans at the end of September, almost triple the figure two years earlier.

In Hungary, rates on Swiss franc loans were about half the forint rates. Consumers borrowed five times as much in foreign currencies as in forint in the three months through June.

`Serious Problems'

Now banks including Munich-based Bayerische Landesbank and Austria's Raiffeisen International Bank Holding AG are curbing foreign-currency loans in Hungary. In Poland, where 80 percent of mortgages are denominated in Swiss francs, Bank Millennium SA, Getin Bank SA and PKO Bank Polski SA have either boosted fees or stopped lending in the currency.

The extra burden on borrowers is making a bad economic outlook worse, said Matthias Siller, who focuses on emerging markets at Baring Asset Management in London, where he manages about $4 billion.

If borrowers believe local interest rates are prohibitive and foreign currency lending dries up, it means ``a sharp deceleration in consumer spending,'' Siller said. ``That will bring serious problems for the economy.''

The east has been the fastest-growing part of Europe, with Romania's economy expanding 9.3 percent in the year through June, Ukraine 6.5 percent and Poland 5.8 percent. The combined economy of the countries sharing the euro grew 1.4 percent in the period.

IMF Help

Governments are seeking to ease the pain as recession concerns sweep across eastern Europe's emerging markets.

Ukraine, facing financial meltdown as the hryvnia drops and prices for exports such as steel tumble, on Oct. 26 agreed to a $16.5 billion loan from the IMF.

Hungary on Oct. 28 secured $26 billion in loans from the IMF, the EU and the World Bank. The government forecast a 1 percent economic contraction next year, the first since 1993.

The Hungarian central bank raised its benchmark interest rate by 3 percentage points to 11.5 percent on Oct. 22 to defend the forint.

The same day, Prime Minister Ferenc Gyurcsany said the government was seeking an accord with banks to ``prevent the burdens of debtors from reaching the sky.'' It's considering granting borrowers extended payment periods or the ability to convert foreign-exchange debts into forint.

Panicked Customers

``Panicked customers are calling to say they're afraid the interest on their mortgages will go up or that they won't be able to secure mortgages,'' said Nikolett Gurubi, director of lending at Otthon Centrum Belvaros, the downtown Budapest branch of a real estate agency.

Project manager Apostagi, 58, said he hopes the crisis will be over in a few months, blaming U.S. banks for creating such distrust between lenders. For now, ``it looks like our signed contracts were for naught,'' he said.

Romanian central bank Governor Mugur Isarescu sounded the alarm in June, saying the growth of foreign-currency loans was ``excessively high and risky,'' especially because Romanians with their communist past aren't used to the discipline of debt.

``It's not that we're bad,'' Isarescu said. ``It's that, culturally, we need to prepare for the moment of repayment.''

At the other end of the spectrum, Turkish consumers have proved more cautious after living through their own currency crises in 2001 and 1994. The government, the IMF's biggest customer in recent years, is resisting new loans from the fund, arguing that its economy can weather the credit crunch and a 22 percent slump in the lira since the start of September.

`Cheaper, Riskier'

Turkish savings in foreign currencies exceeded loans by about 30 percent as of the end of 2007, according to a January Fitch report. In Poland foreign exchange loans were double deposits, and in Hungary they were triple.

Mert Sevinc borrowed the equivalent of $100,000 in Turkish liras to buy an Istanbul apartment in 2006, paying an annual rate of 13.5 percent. The marketing consultant didn't even look at the foreign exchange loans at less than half that price.

``Of course it would have been cheaper to borrow in dollars or euros, but it's a fairly basic principle of finance: Things that are cheaper are riskier,'' he said.

That reasoning may soon be part of the eastern European psyche too.

``We've been observing a return to a good old banking rule to lend in a currency in which people earn,'' said Jan Krzysztof Bielecki, chief executive officer of Poland's biggest lender, Bank Pekao SA. It stopped non-zloty lending in 2003. ``Earlier, banks competed on the Swiss franc market watching only sales levels and not looking at keeping an acceptable risk level.''

The problem is a ``good lesson to all of us,'' Polish President Lech Kaczynski said at an Oct. 24 press conference in Warsaw, where he urged Poles to stick to zloty lending.

QUOTE

Gulf Citizens Beg for Bailout as Stock Rout Signals End of Boom

By Glen Carey and Matthew Brown http://bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=2060110... gc&refer=home

Oct. 31 (Bloomberg) -- Abdullah Hajeri led a march on the Emir's palace in Kuwait this week, demanding the oil-rich nation's ruler stop stocks from plunging. Adnan Mohammed Saleh, down the Persian Gulf coast in Dubai, said he wants more government protection from the global financial crisis.

``Every day the market is crashing,'' said Saleh, a 42-year- old trader, staring dumbfounded last Tuesday as company names scrolled across the Dubai Stock Exchange's outdoor ticker in red.

The region's rulers are under pressure from citizens to shore up investors, not just banks, as they try to fend off what may be the worst economic crisis since December 1998, when oil at $10.35 a barrel forced them to slash spending. Crude prices have fallen 50 percent from a record $147.27 in July, and stock indexes in Dubai and Saudi Arabia are down by as much this year.

Gulf economies are more susceptible to financial turmoil than in the past because of their greater dependency on international expertise, investment and tourists to diversify away from oil. While Dubai, home to the world's tallest building and the man-made Palm Island, is considered most at risk, no part of the Persian Gulf will go untouched.

``There is no way you can say that any trouble in Dubai is going to be isolated,'' Georges Makhoul, Morgan Stanley's president for the Middle East and North Africa, said in an interview in London. ``The biggest threat is going to be local confidence in the local economy, whether it's in Dubai or Abu Dhabi or anywhere else.''

No Investors Left

There aren't many international investors left in the region, he added.

Regional competition to attract investors and tourists from around the world led to a surge in record-breaking projects.

Dubai is racing against Saudi billionaire Prince Alwaleed bin Talal's investment company to build the world's first kilometer-tall tower. Saudi Arabia has turned a spot on its Red Sea coast into the biggest property development in the Middle East. Now little more than sand and construction cranes, the $120 billion King Abdullah Economic City is meant to create 1 million jobs and be home to 2 million residents.

Projects risk going unfinished or becoming white elephants if economies around the world go into recession, keeping international investors and tourists closer to home.

Dubai's plans, including the Disneyland-style ``Dubailand'' that will be three times the size of Manhattan, are predicated on doubling the number of tourists annually to reach 15 million visitors by 2015.

``Many of the projects being marketed in the Gulf today will get shelved,'' Kamel Lazaar, chairman of Riyadh-based financial advisory firm Swicorp, said Oct. 7. ``The price of land has been inflated. It will have to correct.''

`Better Suited'

Kuwait on Wednesday became the third Gulf state to prop up its banking system. It did so after losses on currency derivatives at Gulf Bank KSC, the country's second-largest lender by assets, sparked a surge in customer withdrawals from the bank.

The United Arab Emirates said Oct. 12 it would guarantee deposits of all local lenders and large foreign banks. It also set up a $19 billion facility to help banks make loans. Saudi Arabia, the world's largest oil exporter, put $2.7 billion into a government-run bank in Riyadh to provide no-fee loans to low- income citizens.

``We are going to be impacted, but we are better suited than anyone else to deal with the problems,'' Hareb Al-Darmaki, executive director of the Abu Dhabi Investment Authority, said Oct. 28 at a London conference for companies from the United Arab Emirates' richest member. ``We have the ammunition.''

Societal Setback

The emirate has almost 8 percent of the world's oil reserves and a sovereign wealth fund with assets between $250 billion and $875 billion, according to a range of estimates compiled by the International Monetary Fund. Even with its decline, oil still averages $110 a barrel for the year.

Residents of the region are used to government intervention. All Gulf countries are run by unelected rulers who maintain political power through tribal allegiances and marriages. Generous state welfare programs have traditionally damped demands for more political participation.

How the region's rulers cope with the turmoil may define relations with their people in the future, as they try to wean their subjects off state handouts and encourage them to find jobs and embrace market capitalism.

``There's no question that it sets back the move from socialist, paternalistic societies toward more modern capitalist states,'' said Gabriel Stein, a director at London's Lombard Street Research, which provides economic analysis to investors and companies. ``It is a trend that we have seen all over the world. The immediate reaction is that you told us to do this, so now things are going wrong it's up to you to help us out.''

Market `Destruction'

On Oct. 27, Hajeri, an independent equity trader, and 20 peers marched from the Kuwait Stock Exchange's trading floor to the emir's office to demand that the government close the exchange. Rebuffed, Hajeri said it meant ``destruction to the market and the Kuwait people.''

All capital markets in the Gulf Cooperation Council, which includes Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates, have declined and interest rates have increased since Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc. sought bankruptcy protection on Sept. 15.

Foreign investors were net sellers of more than 5 billion dirhams ($1.4 billion) of shares on the Dubai Stock Exchange since the beginning of August, more than 1 percent of its current market value, according to bourse data.

`More Integrated'

``The U.S. financial crisis has ramifications for all countries, including the Gulf,'' U.S. Deputy Secretary of Treasury Robert Kimmitt said this week during a speech in Dubai, where he met representatives of sovereign wealth funds. ``Our capital markets are more integrated than ever before, allowing opportunities, but also financial difficulties, to spread rapidly across borders.''

Of the Gulf states, Dubai may be hardest hit by a global economic slowdown because it has borrowed more to finance its transformation from a Persian Gulf trading post to a financial and tourist hub, and has only 4 billion barrels of oil reserves.

Government-controlled companies owe at least $47 billion, more than Dubai's gross domestic product, and they will continue to accumulate debt faster than the economy grows, Moody's Investors Service estimated in an Oct. 13 report. It concluded that Dubai may need financing help from Abu Dhabi.

Dubai-based Emaar Properties PJSC has shed more than 26 percent since Sept. 15 as investors lost confidence in the ability of the Middle East's biggest publicly traded real-estate developer to finance projects by borrowing through local and international banks.

Real Estate Bust?

Dubai property prices will likely remain unchanged through 2010 after quadrupling in the past five years, Colliers CRE Plc said Oct. 5.

``There is a liquidity and credit crunch and now oil prices have fallen from $140 to $70,'' said Nouriel Roubini, a professor at New York University. ``I see the risk of a real-estate bust throughout the Gulf, but specifically in Dubai, and there's a huge amount of excess capacity being built.''

That's not keeping investors from betting on pain across the region. The cost of protecting debt from default has jumped more than fivefold since July for Abu Dhabi and Dubai, according to trading in credit default swaps. The cost of insuring Saudi Arabian government debt has risen 51 percent since Sept. 18.

The price of oil may determine whether governments can maintain government spending and support economic growth.

``If prices drop by $15 a barrel from the $60 to $70 mark, then they will probably not break even in terms of their budgets,'' said John Sfakianakis, chief economist at Saudi British Bank in Riyadh.

QUOTE

Australian Central Bank Pumps $1.48 Billion Into Money Markets

By Garfield Reynolds
http://bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=2060108...H1Tk&refer=home

Nov. 3 (Bloomberg) -- The Reserve Bank of Australia pumped A$1.48 billion ($992 million) into money markets today, as financing costs fell for the country's banks.

The central bank had estimated the system would have a deficit of A$2.17 billion today, according to the Sydney-based RBA's Web site. Australian banks increased deposits held at the RBA by A$594 million to A$8.19 billion on Oct. 31. Those holdings reached a record A $11.2 billion Oct. 20.

Interbank lending rates have jumped as banks hoarded cash after Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc. went bankrupt last month.

The rate Australia's banks charge each other for three- month loans fell 19 basis points, or 0.19 percentage point, to 5.62 percent as of 10:07 a.m. in Sydney. The difference between that yield and the overnight indexed swap rate, a measure of funding availability, dropped to 56.5 basis points, the narrowest since Lehman filed for bankruptcy on Sept. 15.

The London interbank offered rate, or Libor, that banks charge each other for three-month loans in dollars fell 16 basis points to 3.03 percent on Oct. 31, its 15th straight drop, according to the British Bankers' Association.

Exchange settlement accounts are on-call deposits at the Reserve Bank that receive interest at 0.25 percentage point below the central bank's benchmark rate. Governor Glenn Stevens lowered the cash target rate to 6 percent on Oct. 7.

craig-oxley - November 3, 2008 04:05 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

Are Credit Cards The Next Collapse?

October 29, 2008
by Christina Rexrode
McClatchy Newspapers

First came trouble with mortgages, then home equity loans and commercial real estate. Now, banks are starting to worry about credit cards.

As the economy slows and unemployment rises, consumers are defaulting on credit-card payments more often. And though that trend is unlikely to create a crisis in line with the mortgage fallout, it's still a headache for banks that are already hurting.

U.S. banks charged off 5.47 percent of all credit card loans in the second quarter, according to the Federal Reserve, representing some $50 billion that they'll likely never collect. That's up from 3.85 percent the year before, and that is a movement that's on the radar of Ken Lewis, chief executive of Charlotte's Bank of America Corp.

Asked in a recent TV interview if credit-card debt would be "the next shoe to drop" for the banking industry, Lewis replied: "It, in some ways, already is," adding that such losses have risen "pretty substantially."

Laura Nishikawa, an analyst at the Innovest ratings agency, predicts that banks such as Bank of America and New York's Citigroup Inc. could be hit especially hard by credit-card defaults. That's because those banks, which offer both consumer and investment services, have been depending more heavily on money made on consumer services such as credit cards as the returns in investment banking grow increasingly unpredictable.

To be sure, credit cards don't represent a huge portion of assets for most banks. For example, they comprise about 14 percent of all consumer loans and leases at Bank of America, the country's largest credit-card issuer. The main problem, Nishikawa said, is that "everyone is so weak after what happened with mortgages that another blow to a consumer product would be hard to handle."

Consumer groups have long complained that credit-card issuers push cards onto people who don't need them or can't afford them. They say that rising credit-card defaults - just like mortgage defaults - are largely the fault of banks who lent to risky borrowers.

Innovest estimates that about 30 percent of Bank of America's credit card loans are to subprime borrowers - second only to the failed Washington Mutual Inc., which had almost half of its credit-card loans held by subprime borrowers.

Innovest also estimates that more than half of Bank of America's credit cards are high-limit cards - second only to American Express Co. (Innovest classifies high-limit cards as those with lines of more than $10,000.) Nishikawa says that combination could prove toxic for Bank of America, which may have "lent more than (borrowers) can be expected to pay back."

Bank of America's charge-offs, or loans it doesn't expect to collect on, increased to 6.14 percent of all credit-card loans, or $1.24 billion, in the third quarter. That's up from 4.61 percent the year before.

Executives of Wells Fargo & Co., which is buying Charlotte's Wachovia Corp., also noted credit-card troubles in their recent earnings call. The San Francisco bank, which is the country's eighth-largest credit-card issuer according to The Nilson Report, saw credit-card charge-offs increase to 7.2 percent, or $361 million, from 4.3 percent a year ago. Chief financial officer Howard Atkins blamed "higher bankruptcy rates, seasoning of the portfolio, and continuing economic pressure on consumers," though he said the losses were in line with the bank's expectations.

Innovest predicts that credit-card charge-offs across the industry will continue to rise, peaking around 10 percent by the first quarter of 2009. Some banks are also reporting that consumers are spending less with their credit cards, which hurts the banks because they collect fees from merchants every time a consumer uses a card.

Even so, credit card defaults probably won't wreak as much havoc as mortgage defaults already have, because they're on a much smaller scale.

"This won't be anything like the mortgage crisis," said James Early, an analyst at The Motley Fool. "Simply put, the average person owes a lot more on her house than on her credit cards."

U.S. consumers have less than $1 trillion in outstanding credit-card loans, but more than $10 trillion in outstanding mortgage loans. And the delinquency rate for mortgages is higher than that for credit-cards: 6.41 percent in the second quarter, up from 5.12 percent the year before, according to the Mortgage Bankers Association.

Indeed, no one is predicting that banks will abandon credit cards &mash; only that they'll get stingier with lending and perhaps lose money for a few quarters. Banks usually expect higher default rates on credit cards anyway, since those loans are not secured by a house, car or other type of collateral. That's one reason why banks charge such high interest rates on credit-card loans.

Guy Cecala, publisher of Inside Mortgage Finance, says that the most notable characteristic of the current cycle isn't the rising percentage of credit-card defaults, but the fact that people started defaulting on mortgages before credit cards. This time is different - the mortgage defaults are driven less by the slowing economy, Cecala said, and more by unwise lending and the declines in home prices. "The people going into default actually have jobs," he said.

As banks get squeezed on credit cards, they're sure to pass the pain along. That means they're lowering - sometimes even closing - customers' credit lines, increasing interest rates and declining more applications, which will especially hurt poor or unemployed consumers who use credit cards for basic living expenses. Early, the analyst, said it's hard to feel sorry for credit-card issuers even if they do encounter serious losses: "I don't think these guys will get much sympathy," he said.

QUOTE

Europe on the brink of currency crisis meltdown

By Ambrose Evans-Pritchard – Telegraph.co.uk October 26, 2008

The financial crisis spreading like wildfire across the former Soviet bloc threatens to set off a second and more dangerous banking crisis in Western Europe, tipping the whole Continent into a fully-fledged economic slump.

Currency pegs are being tested to destruction on the fringes of Europe's monetary union in a traumatic upheaval that recalls the collapse of the Exchange Rate Mechanism in 1992.

"This is the biggest currency crisis the world has ever seen," said Neil Mellor, a strategist at Bank of New York Mellon.

Experts fear the mayhem may soon trigger a chain reaction within the eurozone itself. The risk is a surge in capital flight from Austria – the country, as it happens, that set off the global banking collapse of May 1931 when Credit-Anstalt went down – and from a string of Club Med countries that rely on foreign funding to cover huge current account deficits.

The latest data from the Bank for International Settlements shows that Western European banks hold almost all the exposure to the emerging market bubble, now busting with spectacular effect.

They account for three-quarters of the total $4.7 trillion £2.96 trillion) in cross-border bank loans to Eastern Europe, Latin America and emerging Asia extended during the global credit boom – a sum that vastly exceeds the scale of both the US sub-prime and Alt-A debacles.

Europe has already had its first foretaste of what this may mean. Iceland's demise has left them nursing likely losses of $74bn (£47bn). The Germans have lost $22bn.

Stephen Jen, currency chief at Morgan Stanley, says the emerging market crash is a vastly underestimated risk. It threatens to become "the second epicentre of the global financial crisis", this time unfolding in Europe rather than America.

Austria's bank exposure to emerging markets is equal to 85pc of GDP – with a heavy concentration in Hungary, Ukraine, and Serbia – all now queuing up (with Belarus) for rescue packages from the International Monetary Fund.

Exposure is 50pc of GDP for Switzerland, 25pc for Sweden, 24pc for the UK, and 23pc for Spain. The US figure is just 4pc. America is the staid old lady in this drama.

Amazingly, Spanish banks alone have lent $316bn to Latin America, almost twice the lending by all US banks combined ($172bn) to what was once the US backyard. Hence the growing doubts about the health of Spain's financial system – already under stress from its own property crash – as Argentina spirals towards another default, and Brazil's currency, bonds and stocks all go into freefall.

Broadly speaking, the US and Japan sat out the emerging market credit boom. The lending spree has been a European play – often using dollar balance sheets, adding another ugly twist as global "deleveraging" causes the dollar to rocket. Nowhere has this been more extreme than in the ex-Soviet bloc.

The region has borrowed $1.6 trillion in dollars, euros, and Swiss francs. A few dare-devil homeowners in Hungary and Latvia took out mortgages in Japanese yen. They have just suffered a 40pc rise in their debt since July. Nobody warned them what happens when the Japanese carry trade goes into brutal reverse, as it does when the cycle turns.

The IMF's experts drafted a report two years ago – Asia 1996 and Eastern Europe 2006 – Déjà vu all over again? – warning that the region exhibited the most dangerous excesses in the world.

Inexplicably, the text was never published, though underground copies circulated. Little was done to cool credit growth, or to halt the fatal reliance on foreign capital. Last week, the silent authors had their moment of vindication as Eastern Europe went haywire.

Hungary stunned the markets by raising rates 3pc to 11.5pc in a last-ditch attempt to defend the forint's currency peg in the ERM.

It is just blood in the water for hedge funds sharks, eyeing a long line of currency kills. "The economy is not strong enough to take it, so you know it is unsustainable," said Simon Derrick, currency strategist at the Bank of New York Mellon.

Romania raised its overnight lending to 900pc to stem capital flight, recalling the near-crazed gestures by Scandinavia's central banks in the final days of the 1992 ERM crisis – political moves that turned the Nordic banking crisis into a disaster.

Russia too is in the eye of the storm, despite its energy wealth – or because of it. The cost of insuring Russian sovereign debt through credit default swaps (CDS) surged to 1,200 basis points last week, higher than Iceland's debt before Götterdammerung struck Reykjavik.

The markets no longer believe that the spending structure of the Russian state is viable as oil threatens to plunge below $60 a barrel. The foreign debt of the oligarchs ($530bn) has surpassed the country's foreign reserves. Some $47bn has to be repaid over the next two months.

Traders are paying close attention as contagion moves from the periphery of the eurozone into the core. They are tracking the yield spreads between Italian and German 10-year bonds, the stress barometer of monetary union.

The spreads reached a post-EMU high of 93 last week. Nobody knows where the snapping point is, but anything above 100 would be viewed as a red alarm. The market took careful note on Friday that Portugal's biggest banks, Millenium, BPI, and Banco Espirito Santo are preparing to take up the state's emergency credit guarantees.

Hans Redeker, currency chief at BNP Paribas, says there is an imminent danger that East Europe's currency pegs will be smashed unless the EU authorities wake up to the full gravity of the threat, and that in turn will trigger a dangerous crisis for EMU itself.

"The system is paralysed, and it is starting to look like Black Wednesday in 1992. I'm afraid this is going to have a very deflationary effect on the economy of Western Europe. It is almost guaranteed that euroland money supply is about to implode," he said.

A grain of comfort for British readers: UK banks have almost no exposure to the ex-Communist bloc, except in Poland – one of the less vulnerable states.

The threat to Britain lies in emerging Asia, where banks have lent $329bn, almost as much as the Americans and Japanese combined. Whether you realise it or not, your pension fund is sunk in Vietnamese bonds and loans to Indian steel magnates. Didn't they tell you?
www.telegraph.co.uk/finance/comment/ambroseevans_pritchard/3260052/Europe-on-the-brink-of-currency-crisis-meltdown.html

QUOTE

WORSE THAN THE GREAT DEPRESSION

by Krassimir Petrov, PhD
Prince Sultan University, Saudi Arabia
November 2, 2008
http://www.financialsense.com/editorials/p.../2008/1102.html

The mainstream media and Wall Street have reached the consensus that the current credit crisis is the worst since the post-war period. George Soros' statement that "the world faces the worst finance crisis since WWII" epitomizes the collective wisdom. The crisis is currently the ultimate scapegoat for all the economic evils that currently plague the global financial system and the global economy – from collapsing stock markets of the world to food shortages in third world counties. We are repeatedly assured that the ultimate fault lies with the Credit Crisis itself; if there were no Credit Crisis, all of these terrible things would never have happened in the economy and the financial markets.

The most extraordinary thing is that the mainstream media has never attempted to compare the current economic environment to the one preceding the Great Depression. In essence, it is assumed outright that the Great Depression can never possibly happen again, ever, thus obviating the need for such a comparison. I actually believe that the macroeconomic fundamentals today are much worse, so that we are in for a protracted period of economic depression – a depression much worse than the Great Depression, a depression that would likely be remembered in history as "The Second Great Depression" or The Greater Depression, as Doug Casey has called it so aptly. Here is why I believe that this is the case.

Duplicating Mistakes from the Great Depression

At its core, the environment of the 1990s, and the response of the Fed to the tech-telecom bust has created an economic environment that has encouraged the repetition of the very same mistakes that led to the Great Depression. Here is a concise summary of widely recognized mistakes of the 1920s, without going into the details, with obvious parallels in the current environment:

Asset Bubbles – first in the stock market during the 1990s, then in real estate during the 2000s, pretty much mirroring the stock and real estate market bubbles of the 1920s.
Securitization – although not in the very "ultra-modernistic" form and shape of the 2000s, with slicing and dicing of pools and tranches of seniority, it was widely recognized in the 1930s that securitization during the 20s drove the domino effect in the U.S. financial system during the Great Depression.
Excessive Leverage – just like in 2008 the topic du jour is "deleveraging", so the unwinding of leverage during the 1930s was the driver of forced liquidations and financial pain. Of course, it was very clear back then that the root of the problem was not deleveraging per se, but the excessive leverage that took place prior to the deleveraging process. "Investment Pools" were then instrumental in both the securitization and excessive leverage, just like the Hedge Funds of today.
Corrupt Gatekeepers – we know well that the Enrons and Worldcoms were aided and abetted by the accounting firms – those same firms that were supposedly the Gatekeepers of the financial community, yet handsomely profited from the boom while neglecting their watchdog functions. In the current financial crisis, we also know that the rating agencies were also making hay during the boom. Very similar were the issues during the 1920s that led to the establishment of the SEC and other regulatory bodies to replace the malfunctioning "gatekeepers" at the time.
Financial Engineering – we are led to believe that financial engineering is a rather recent phenomenon that flourished during the New Age Finance Era of the last 15 years, yet financial engineering was prevalent in the 1920s with very clear goals: (1) to evade restrictive regulations, (2) to increase leverage, and (3) to remove liabilities from the books, all too familiar to all of us today.
Lagging Regulations – just like the regulatory environment lagged the events of the 1920s and regulations were introduced only after the Great Depression had obliterated the U.S. financial system, so we are yet to see new regulations addressing the causes of the current crisis. Understandably, regulations should have foreseen today's financial problems and should have been introduced before the crisis.
Market Ideology – back in the 1920s, just like in the last two decades, the market ideology of "laissez faire", which Soros quite appropriately described as "Market Fundamentalism", has swept the financial markets. Of course, the free market knows the best, but the reality is that the money market is not really free – when the Fed determines the cost of money (interest rates), and can fix this cost for as long as it wants, then all sorts of financial imbalances can be sustained without the discipline imposed by the market. This can lead to all sorts of problems that we actually have to face today.
Non-Transparency – back in the 1930s, it was widely recognized that businesses and especially financial institutions lacked transparency, which allowed for the accumulation of significant imbalances and abuses. Today, financial markets and institutions have intentionally compromised transparency in a number of ingenious, or better disingenuous, accounting trickeries and financial gimmicks, like off-balance-sheet entities (SIVs), hard-to-understand derivatives, and opaque instruments with mind-boggling complexity. Today CEOs and Chief Risk Officers of major financial institutions cannot figure out their own risk exposures. Originally, lack of transparency was designed to fool the markets; ironically, modern-day financial executives have gotten to the point of fooling themselves.
Worse than the Great Depression

So, why Worse Than The Great Depression? What makes me believe that the current depression will be worse than the Great Depression? I present six of the most important fundamentals that are "baked in the cake" and that suggest of a Greater Depression.

Overvalued Real Estate. The real estate market has been driven by a number of innovations in real estate finance. Overvaluation in real estate implies overvaluation in real estate financial instruments; an implosion of real estate prices implies an implosion in those instruments. It is widely recognized by economists that the Case-Shiller Index is a good proxy for the prices of real estate. A widely-recognized chart from 1890 to 2007 tells the story. The chart makes it crystal clear that the current overvaluation of real estate in real terms grossly exceeds the one during the 1920s. The coming correction in real estate will be protracted and gut-wrenching, with an expected cumulative effect that is much worse than the Great Depression.

user posted image

Total U.S. Credit. Credit makes leverage: the more credit in the financial system, the more leveraged it is. Today's total U.S. credit relative to GDP has surpassed significantly the levels preceding the Great Depression. Back then, the total amount of credit in the financial system almost reached an astonishing 250% of GDP. Using the same metric today, the debt level in the U.S. financial system surpassed 350% in 2008, while the level in 1982 was "only" 130%. As Charles Dumas from Lombard Street Research put it quite aptly, "we've had a 30-year leveraging up of America, ending in an unchecked orgy."

The chart below shows a dramatic buildup of debt (leverage) in the 1920s and a deleveraging from 1930 to 1945 (or 1952). Then it shows a consistent buildup of debt afterwards, with a dramatic rise since the 1990s, and surpassing in 2000 the previous peak in 1929. The chart shows the level of 299% at the end of 2005, but the level has already reached 350% by 2008.

user posted image

Of course, leveraging, as already indicated above, must necessarily be followed by deleveraging.

The best way to think about leverage is to compare it with using drugs, while deleveraging is like detox. The problem is not that the detox is killing the patient who has abused drugs for years; what is really killing the patient is the drug abuse itself. However, one thing is clear – the patient must either go through a painful detox or die; the same applies for the financial system – it must either deleverage or implode.

Explosion of Derivatives. Derivatives have been likened by Warren Buffet to "financial weapons of mass destruction". The notional amount of total derivatives, as well as "Value at Risk" (VaR), has skyrocketed in recent years with the potential to destabilize the financial system for decades. To put it more allegorically, derivatives hang like a sword of Damocles over the financial system.

A comparison with the 1920s is difficult to make. mostly Derivatives back then were extensively used, although not widely understood. Given that I am not aware of any statistics of derivatives for the period of the 1920s, a meaningful comparison based on hard data is admittedly impossible. Nevertheless, I would venture to make an intelligent guess that the size of modern-day derivatives is hundreds or even thousands of times larger relative to the size of the economy in comparison to the 1920s. Some of the latest reports indicate that the total notional value of derivatives outstanding surpasses one quadrillion dollars. To put this into perspective, this amounts to almost 100 times the GDP of the U.S. economy.

The chart below shows the explosion of derivatives in the U.S. banking system. You can see that in 1991 the notional value of the derivatives was about the size of the U.S. GDP. By 2006 the size has grown to about 10 times the GDP, vastly outgrowing the real economy.

user posted image

The chart below shows an even more telling picture. It shows world GDP and world's notional value of derivatives. Again, while there is no direct comparison with the 1920s, it is clear that the overall level of derivatives has skyrocketed during the last two decades and presents risks that were simply not present at the onset of the Great Depression. The unwinding of these derivatives could only be compared with a nuclear explosion in the financial system.

user posted image

Dow-Gold Ratio. The Dow-Gold ratio represents the most important ratio between the relative prices of financial assets and real assets. The Dow component represents the valuation of financial assets; the gold component – of real assets. When leverage in the financial system increases significantly, so does this ratio. A very high ratio is interpreted as an imbalance between financial and real assets – financial assets are grossly overvalued, while real assets are grossly undervalued. It also implies that a correction eventually will be necessary – either through deflation, which implies deleveraging and a collapsing stock market, or through inflation, which implies stagnant stock market for many years and steadily rising prices of real assets, commodities, and gold, usually associated with stagnant economy and typically resulting in stagflation. The first case—deflation—occurred during the 1930s, while the second case—stagflation—occurred during the 1970s.

The graph below illustrates the above concepts. The very high Dow-Gold Ratio in 1929 was followed by the Great Depression, while the higher level in 1966 was followed by the stagflationary 70s. It is evident from the chart the peak in 2000 surpassed the previous two peaks in 1929 and 1966, so this provides a reasonable expectation that the forthcoming return to "normalcy" will be more painful than the Great Depression, at least in terms of cumulative pain over the next 10-15 years.

user posted image

Global Bubbles. It is impossible to make direct comparison with the 1920s, but today the global economy is rife with bubbles. Back then in the 1920s, the U.S. had its stock and real estate bubbles, while the European economies were struggling to rebuild from the devastations of WW1 that ended in 1919. I am personally not aware of any other bubbles during this period, although I welcome reader feedback on this topic.

Today the picture is very different. The U.S. economy had a stock market and real estate bubble that has surpassed its own during the 1920s. Colossal US current account deficits have fuelled extraordinary growth in global monetary reserves. As a result, Europe has real estate bubbles across the board, from the U.K. and Ireland, throughout the Mediterranean (Spain, France, Italy and Greece), to the entire Baltic region (Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia) and the Balkans (Romaina and Bulgaria). Even worse, many Asian countries (China, Korea, etc.) also have their own stock and property bubbles, only with the exception of Japan, which is still in the process of recovering from its own during the 1980s. Thus, during the 1920s only the U.S. suffered from gross financial imbalances, while today the imbalances have engulfed the whole world – both developed and developing. It stands to reason that the unwinding of those global imbalances is likely to be more painful today than it was during the Great Depression due to both size and scope.

Collapsing Bretton Woods II. The global monetary system was on a quasi-gold standard during the 1920s. Back then dollars and pounds were convertible to gold, while all other currencies were convertible to dollars and pounds. An appropriate way to think about it is that of a precursor to the Bretton Woods from 1945-1971. What is important to understand is that while the system was fiat in nature, gold imposed significant limitations to credit expansion and leveraging.

Somewhat similar was the role of Bretton Woods that lasted from 1945 to 1971. The dollar was tied to gold, while all other fiat currencies were tied to the dollar. Just like the interwar period, gold imposed some limitations on credit and financial imbalances.

We now live in what has been termed Bretton Woods II. Essentially, this is a pure fiat dollar standard, where all currencies are convertible to dollars, either at fixed or floating exchange rates, while the dollar itself is convertible to “nothing”. Thus, the dollar has no limitations imposed to it by gold, so without the discipline of gold, the current global monetary system has accumulated significantly more imbalances than ever before in modern capitalism. These imbalances show up in the international monetary system as unsustainable trade deficits (and surpluses), skyrocketing official dollar reserves in some European and many Asian central banks, and the proliferation of Sovereign Wealth Funds; more generally, these imbalances result in a myriad of bubbles, overleveraging, and other maladjustments already discussed above.

Today Bretton Woods II is in the process of disintegration. The world is slowly but steadily losing its confidence in the dollar as the world reserve currency. A flight from the dollar is in progress and the collapse of the global monetary system is imminent. As Bretton Woods II disintegrates and a new system replaces it, the process of readjustment will be necessarily more painful than the respective process during the Great Depression.

A caution on terminology is necessary here. While the literature over the last 10-20 years has widely recognized the term “Bretton Woods II”, in September-October of 2008 the term was widely used by the media to describe a proposed international summit with the goal of reconstructing a new international monetary system designed from scratch, just like “Bretton Woods”. Instantly dubbed by the media “Bretton Woods II”, this term could be potentially very confusing as it could mean very different things to different people. The interested reader should consult Wikipedia’s Bretton Woods II where both meanings are explained in detail.

Conclusion

Since August of 2007 we have witnessed the relentless escalation of the credit crisis: a steady constriction of credit markets, starting with subprime mortgage-backed securities, spreading to commercial paper, then to interbank credit, and then to CDOs, CLOs, jumbo mortgages, home equity lines of credit, LBOs and private equity markets, and then generally to the bond and securities markets.

While the media describes the problem as one of illiquidity and confidence, a more serious analysis indicates that boom-time credit has been employed unproductively and so losses must be incurred. In other words, scarce capital has been misallocated, poorly invested, and effectively wasted. No amount of monetary or fiscal policy can fix the errors of the past, just like no modern treatment can quickly restore to health a drug addict debilitated from a decade-long drug abuse.

Based on indicators like (1) global real estate overvaluation, (2) indebtedness, (3) leverage, (4) outstanding derivatives, (5) global bubbles, and (6) the precariousness of the global monetary system, I would argue that the accumulated imbalances in the current period surpass significantly those preceding the Great Depression. I therefore conclude that the coming U.S. (and possibly) global depression will be of greater magnitude than the Great Depression of the 1930s. It likely suggests that we are entering a historic period that will likely be known as The Greater Depression.

Investor beware! Only gold can protect you from the ravages of another Depression!

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: "[We'll Have] a Never-Ending Depression

Title: "[We'll Have] a Never-Ending Depression

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:39 AM (GMT)

Economics Professor: "[We'll Have] a Never-Ending Depression Unless We Repudiate the Debt, Which Never Should Have Been Extended In The First Place"

Tuesday, July 19, 2011
http://www.washingtonsblog.com/2011/07/eco...have-never.html

Preface: Regular debts which are knowingly and honestly incurred should be repaid. This essay focuses solely on debts which are involuntarily incurred by politicians at the expense of the American people - and which do not benefit the public, but only a handful of bankers and defense contractors - and debts based upon false promises.

Economists: The Economy Can Only Recover If We Repudiate the Debt

Leading Austrian-school economist Murray Rothbard - an American - wrote in 1992:

I propose ... out-right debt repudiation. Consider this question: why should the poor, battered citizens of Russia or Poland or the other ex-Communist countries be bound by the debts contracted by their former Communist masters? In the Communist situation, the injustice is clear: that citizens struggling for freedom and for a free-market economy should be taxed to pay for debts contracted by the monstrous former ruling class. But this injustice only differs by degree from "normal" public debt. For, conversely, why should the Communist government of the Soviet Union have been bound by debts contracted by the Czarist government they hated and overthrew? And why should we, struggling American citizens of today, be bound by debts created by a ... ruling elite who contracted these debts at our expense?

***

Although largely forgotten by historians and by the public, repudiation of public debt is a solid part of the American tradition. The first wave of repudiation of state debt came during the 1840's, after the panics of 1837 and 1839. Those panics were the consequence of a massive inflationary boom fueled by the Whig-run Second Bank of the United States. Riding the wave of inflationary credit, numerous state governments, largely those run by the Whigs, floated an enormous amount of debt, most of which went into wasteful public works (euphemistically called "internal improvements"), and into the creation of inflationary banks. Outstanding public debt by state governments rose from $26 million to $170 million during the decade of the 1830's. Most of these securities were financed by British and Dutch investors.

During the deflationary 1840's succeeding the panics, state governments faced repayment of their debt in dollars that were now more valuable than the ones they had borrowed. Many states, now largely in Democratic hands, met the crisis by repudiating these debts, either totally or partially by scaling down the amount in "readjustments." Specifically, of the 28 American states in the 1840's, nine were in the glorious position of having no public debt, and one (Missouri's) was negligible; of the 18 remaining, nine paid the interest on their public debt without interruption, while another nine (Maryland, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Florida) repudiated part or all of their liabilities. Of these states, four defaulted for several years in their interest payments, whereas the other five (Michigan, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Florida) totally and permanently repudiated their entire outstanding public debt. As in every debt repudiation, the result was to lift a great burden from the backs of the taxpayers in the defaulting and repudiating states.

***

The next great wave of state debt repudiation came in the South after the blight of Northern occupation and Reconstruction had been lifted from them. Eight Southern states (Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia) proceeded, during the late 1870's and early 1880's under Democratic regimes, to repudiate the debt foisted upon their taxpayers by the corrupt and wasteful carpetbag Radical Republican governments under Reconstruction.

Economics professor Steve Keen is also calling for a debt jubilee, stating:
We should write the debt off, bankrupt the banks, nationalize the financial system, and start all over again.

We need a twenty-first century jubilee.

[We're going into] a never-ending depression unless we repudiate the debt, which never should have been extended in the first place.

If we keep the parasitic banking sector alive, the economy dies. We have to kill the parasites and give a chance to the real economy to thrive once more and stop the financial [crooks] doing what they did this time around ever again.

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/VoqaMzBK4pc&rel=0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/VoqaMzBK4pc&rel=0&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

Economics professor Michael Hudson - who also calls for a debt jubiliee - writes:
The only way to resolve the [European debt crisis] is to negotiate a debt write-off.

As I've noted for years, the entire strategy of the Bush and Obama economics teams have been to prevent the big banks, bondholders and other creditors from having to take haircuts by writing down the bad loans, phony instruments and bad debt. They have suspended any objective accounting requirements, allowed endless shell games to hide the debt and pretend all of the insolvent creditors are solvent, done everything under the sun to artificially prop up asset prices, turned a blind eye to the underlying fraud which caused the bubble, the toxic investment instruments and false representations, and then helped cover up the mess. See this, this, this and this.

I noted last month:

America - like most nations around the world - decided to bail out their big banks instead of taking the necessary steps to stabilize their economies (see this, this and this). As such, they all transferred massive debts (from fraudulent and stupid gambling activities) from the balance sheets of the banks to the balance sheets of the country.

Failing to acknowledge the bad debt is dooming the world economy. As leading independent banking analyst Chris Whalen points out:
The invidious cowards who inhabit Washington are unwilling to restructure the largest banks and GSEs [government sponsored enterprises, like Fannie and Freddie]. The reluctance comes partly from what truths restructuring will reveal. As a result, these same large zombie banks and the U.S. economy will continue to shrink under the weight of bad debt, public and private. Remember that the Dodd-Frank legislation was not so much about financial reform as protecting the housing GSEs.

Because President Barack Obama and the leaders of both political parties are unwilling to address the housing crisis and the wasting effects on the largest banks, there will be no growth and no net job creation in the U.S. for the next several years. And because the Obama White House is content to ignore the crisis facing millions of American homeowners, who are deep underwater and will eventually default on their loans, the efforts by the Fed to reflate the U.S. economy and particularly consumer spending will be futile. As Alan Meltzer noted to Tom Keene on Bloomberg Radio earlier this year: "This is not a monetary problem."

***

The policy of the Fed and Treasury with respect to the large banks is state socialism writ large, without even the pretense of a greater public good.

***

The fraud and obfuscation now underway in Washington to protect the TBTF banks and GSEs totals into the trillions of dollars and rises to the level of treason.

***

And in the case of the zombie banks, the GSEs and the MIs, the fraud is being actively concealed by Congress, the White House and agencies of the U.S. government led by the Federal Reserve Board. Is this not tyranny?

And Paul Mason - economics editor for BBC Newsnight - told Democracy Now on July 1:

[Interviewer]: Is there a qualitative difference in our era where you have essentially financial institutions that are far more powerful than any governments? Where you had a situation where during the 2008 crisis the United States government was bailing out banks in Europe that had been involved in investments here as well as its own banks, that this concept of too-big-to-fail for banks, but not for countries, or not for populations that end up having to suffer?

***

[Paul Mason]: You're absolutely right that the situation we are in is unprecedented..... And we are entering a situation where the entire system seems incapable of recognizing bad debt. The bad debt has been flowing around the system since Lehman.

And see this.

Repudiating Debt is MORAL

Religions were founded on the concept of debt forgiveness.

For example, Matthew 6:12 says:

And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.

As I've previously noted, periodic times of debt forgiveness - or debt "jubilees" - were a normal part ancient Jewish and Christian religions.

David Graeber, author of "Debt: The First 5,000 Years" told Democracy Now recently: Most revolutions, more revolts in human history have been about debt. It's the most perennial tool that's been used by people who are powerful to make the victims of structural inequalities feel that it's somehow their fault. So I wanted to unveil that and show that we're actually part of a very very long history. There's also a lot of hope in it. Because the other thing I realized is that much of the world religions grew out of social movements, which were exactly about "problematizing" debt. Basically saying, who owes what to who?

That made me think that we're actually at a very strange historical moment because they've managed to convince people around the world that debt is somehow something sacred. I mean, a debt is just a promise, right? It has no greater moral standard than any other promise that you would make. Yet, here we have people accepting that it's perfectly reasonable to say well, we can't possibly keep our promise to the public, politicians say, to give you health care because it's absolutely unthinkable we could break our sacred promises to bankers to give them a certain percentage of interest every year. How did that become a convincing argument? It's utterly odd if you think about in terms of any kind of principle of democracy. As I say, if you look at the history of world religions, of social movements what you find is for much of world history what is sacred is not debt, but the ability to make debt disappear to forgive it and that's where concepts of redemption originally come from.

***

[Interviewer] David Graeber in this long history is there a qualitative difference in our era where you have essentially financial institutions that are far more powerful than any governments? Where you had a situation where during the 2008 crisis the United States government was bailing out banks in Europe that had been involved in investments here as well as its own banks, that this concept of too-big-to-fail for banks, but not for countries, or not for populations that end up having to suffer?

[Graeber]:I think that marks a significant break in world history. I think when we look back at this, we're gonna think of 2008. 1972 when the U.S. went off the gold standard was the first moment we sort of moved toward a system of virtual money where we realize that money is not a thing, it's an arrangement between people. In 2008, where it became clear that the old global financial system is something that's created politically and has to be periodically recreated, it doesn't maintain itself, like they want us to believe. I mean, that really marks a break. The question is now that we understand that money is a political construct, that they really do just print it, it is a promise that people make to each other. Well who has control over that process of making promises? Who gets to make them and to whom?

Ambrose Evans-Pritchard wrote in 2009:
In the end, the only way out of all this global debt may prove to be a Biblical debt Jubilee.

Repudiating Debt is "Odious" Debt LEGAL
Former Managing Director and board member of Wall Street investment bank Dillon Read, president of Hamilton Securities Group, Inc., an investment bank, and former government servant Catherine Austin Fitts wrote:

Look up "fraudulent inducement." My position as the former Assistant Secretary of Housing-Federal Housing Commissioner and then as lead financial advisor to the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development is that the majority of the mortgages originated in the United States after 1996 were fraudulently induced.

The way to deal with criminals is to treat our contracts with them in a manner reciprocal to how they have treated their contracts with us.
Congresswoman Kaptur advises her constituents facing foreclosure to demand that the original mortgage papers be produced. She says that - if the bank can't produce the mortgage papers - then the homeowner can stay in the house.

As I pointed out last year:

There is an established legal principle that people should not have to repay their government's debt to the extent that it is incurred to launch aggressive wars or to oppress the people.

These "odious debts" are considered to be the personal debts of the tyrants who incurred them, rather than the country's debt.

Wikipedia gives a good overview of the principle:
In international law, odious debt is a legal theory which holds that the national debt incurred by a regime for purposes that do not serve the best interests of the nation, such as wars of aggression, should not be enforceable. Such debts are thus considered by this doctrine to be personal debts of the regime that incurred them and not debts of the state. In some respects, the concept is analogous to the invalidity of contracts signed under coercion.

The doctrine was formalized in a 1927 treatise by Alexander Nahum Sack, a Russian émigré legal theorist, based upon 19th Century precedents including Mexico's repudiation of debts incurred by Emperor Maximilian's regime, and the denial by the United States of Cuban liability for debts incurred by the Spanish colonial regime. According to Sack:

When a despotic regime contracts a debt, not for the needs or in the interests of the state, but rather to strengthen itself, to suppress a popular insurrection, etc, this debt is odious for the people of the entire state. This debt does not bind the nation; it is a debt of the regime, a personal debt contracted by the ruler, and consequently it falls with the demise of the regime. The reason why these odious debts cannot attach to the territory of the state is that they do not fulfil one of the conditions determining the lawfulness of State debts, namely that State debts must be incurred, and the proceeds used, for the needs and in the interests of the State. Odious debts, contracted and utilised for purposes which, to the lenders' knowledge, are contrary to the needs and the interests of the nation, are not binding on the nation – when it succeeds in overthrowing the government that contracted them – unless the debt is within the limits of real advantages that these debts might have afforded. The lenders have committed a hostile act against the people, they cannot expect a nation which has freed itself of a despotic regime to assume these odious debts, which are the personal debts of the ruler.
Patricia Adams, executive director of Probe International (an environmental and public policy advocacy organisation in Canada), and author of Odious Debts: Loose Lending, Corruption, and the Third World's Environmental Legacy, has stated that:

by giving creditors an incentive to lend only for purposes that are transparent and of public benefit, future tyrants will lose their ability to finance their armies, and thus the war on terror and the cause of world peace will be better served.

A recent article by economists Seema Jayachandran and Michael Kremer has renewed interest in this topic. They propose that the idea can be used to create a new type of economic sanction to block further borrowing by dictators.
Jubilee USA notes that creditors may lose their rights to repayment of odious debts:

Odious debt is an established legal principle. Legally, debt is to be considered odious if the government used the money for personal purposes or to oppress the people. Moreover, in cases where borrowed money was used in ways contrary to the people's interest, with the knowledge of the creditors, the creditors may be said to have committed a hostile act against the people. Creditors cannot legitimately expect repayment of such debts.

The United States set the first precedent of odious debt when it seized control of Cuba from Spain. Spain insisted that Cuba repay the loans made to them by Spain. The U.S. repudiated (refused to pay) that debt, arguing that the debt was imposed on Cuba by force of arms and served Spain's interest rather than Cuba's, and that the debt therefore ought not be repaid. This precedent was upheld by international law in Great Britain v. Costa Rica (1923) when money was put to use for illegitimate purposes with full knowledge of the lending institution; the resulting debt was annulled.
The launch of the Iraq war was an unlawful war of aggression. It was based on false premises (weapons of mass destruction and a connection between Iraq and 9/11; see [this], this, this, this, this, this and this). Therefore, the trillions in debts incurred in fighting that war are odious debts which the people might lawfully refuse to pay for.

The Bush and Obama administrations have also oppressed the American people through spying on us - even before 9/11 (confirmed here and here) - harassment of innocent grandmothers and other patriotic Americans criticizing government action, and other assaults on liberty and the rule of law. See this. The monies borrowed to finance these oppressive activities are also odious debts.

The government has also given trillions in bailouts, loans, guarantees and other perks to the too big to fails. [The American people were overwhelmingly against the bailouts, and never consented to the fact that much of the money went to foreign banks (and see this and this). Moreover, government pulled a "bait and switch" as to what the bailout money would be used for.]. These funds have not helped the American people. For example, the giant banks are still not loaning. They have solely gone into speculative investments and to line the pockets of the muckety-mucks in the form of bonuses. PhD economist Dean Baker said that the true purpose of the bank rescues is "a massive redistribution of wealth to the bank shareholders and their top executives". Two leading IMF officials, the former Vice President of the Dallas Federal Reserve, and the the head of the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City have all said that the United States is controlled by an oligarchy. PhD economist Michael Hudson says that the financial "parasites" have killed the American economy, and they are "sucking as much money out" as they can before "jumping ship". These are odious debts.

[Bush and Obama officials] who ordered that these debts be incurred must be held personally liable for them. We the American people are not responsible to creditors - such as China, Saudi Arabia - who have knowingly financed these illegal and oppressive activities which have not benefited the American people, but solely the handful of corrupt politicians who authorized them.

Repudiating Debt Is Politically EMPOWERING

Matt Taibbi wrote last year:

As powerful as these Wall Street banks may seem, they are also exquisitely vulnerable. Right now virtually all of them are dependent upon the government keeping accounting standards lax enough for all of them to claim to be functional businesses. It is generally accepted that if the major banks on Wall Street were forced to mark all of their assets to market tomorrow, they would all be either insolvent or close to it.

Thus their "healthy" financial status is already illusory. So imagine what would happen if large numbers of those dubious loans on their balance sheets that they have marked down as "performing" were suddenly pushed ahead of time into the default column. What if Greece, and the Pennsylvania school system, and Jefferson County, Alabama, and the countless other municipalities and states that are wrapped up in these corrupt deals just decided to declare their debts illegitimate and back out?

I think it's an interesting question and would like to hear what knowledgeable people in the field have to say about it. But the big picture, to me, is that these companies are almost totally dependent not only upon the continued good faith of aggrieved debtors, but upon the government recognizing the (sometimes fraudulent) loans made to those debtors as fully performing.
Similarly, Gregor MacDonald argued in February 2009:
The private sector debt in the United States exerts the same power over the banking system as the public debt of the United States exerts over our international creditors. Collectively, the debtors are in control. Not the creditors. This is why the the Creditors, not the Debtors, will be making most of the concessions in the years ahead. Whether the US public debt is inflated away, rescheduled, or repudiated–or some combination of all three–it doesn't matter much. The process is already underway.
The most cynical (but not necessarily inaccurate) view of debt I've seen is that banks loan out imaginary money they don't really have, which money is "collateralized" by capital they do not really have, which is, in turn, based upon central bank printing presses which create money out of thin air which the central banks don't really have. But then when debtors have trouble repaying onerous loans, the bankers seize real assets. See this, this and this.

In other words, according to the most cynical view, the entire debt-money system is a scam ... and should be repudiated.

Repudiating Debt is POPULAR

Walking away from home mortgages has actually become mainstream, being trumpeted by:
CBS
CNBC
The New York Times (and New York Times Magazine)
The Wall Street Journal
MSN
NPR
The Arizona Republic
Even popular personal finance advisor Suze Orman is highlighting the debtors revolt phenomenon on her national tv show
And Max Keiser predicts that the revolts in Greece, Spain and elsewhere will play out in the U.S. in the form of mass defaults on mortgages later this year.

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:40 AM (GMT)

Hamid Karzai Bans U.S. Treasury Officials From Afghan National Bank

20 7 2011

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2011/07/20/h...t_n_904425.html

WASHINGTON -- Amid a growing financial scandal, Afghanistan President Hamid Karzai has banned U.S. Treasury officials from his country's central bank, hampering work to fight the flow of money to insurgents, a report revealed Wednesday.

The Treasury advisers won't return because working conditions at the bank have become too hostile, said the report from the top U.S. auditor for reconstruction in the war-ravaged nation.

Raising a new alarm over a national banking scandal that's left Afghanistan in financial crisis, the report cites Karzai's move as one of a number of ways in which his government fails to cooperate with costly international efforts to improve the country's financial sector.

"The United States has poured billions of aid dollars into a country plagued by corruption, insurgency and the narcotics trade," acting Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction Herbert Richardson said in a statement accompanying his report. "It is essential that we use all tools available to ensure that U.S. dollars are protected from fraud and diversion to the insurgency."

Among his recommendations is that Afghan banks and the U.S. should record the serial numbers of the huge bundles of cash that have been flowing into the country as part of a $70 billion American effort since 2002 to improve security and development there.

But efforts to track and protect U.S. tax dollars and other international aid are entangled in a web of Afghan banking scandals that have been fast developing in recent weeks:

_The former head of the central bank, Abdul Qadir Fitrat, fled late last month to Northern Virginia amid allegations of failing to act on warnings about widespread corruption at the nation's largest private lender, Kabul Bank.

_Kabul Bank, formerly headed by a world-class poker player, nearly collapsed last year because of mismanagement and questionable lending practices, becoming a symbol for the country's cronyism and deep-rooted corruption. Top officers were not arrested until last month.

_Earlier in June, the International Monetary Fund stopped an expected $70 million reconstruction payment to Afghanistan to show displeasure of international donors, a move that threatens billions of aid to a country reliant on foreign assistance.

The United States has a number of programs to help develop Afghanistan's central bank, regulate the nation's 17 commercial banks and strengthen how U.S. and Afghan law-enforcement authorities monitor the flows of U.S. aid through the economy. As part of that, Treasury had two advisers in the central bank, Richardson's office said.

But "President Karzai banned all U.S. government advisers" at the bank in May, a U.S. Embassy comment in Richardson's report said. "Treasury currently has no plans to re-engage at the central bank as the working conditions there for advisers have become hostile."

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:41 AM (GMT)

An unprecedented 1 in 66 Americans is a diagnosed psychotic

Wednesday, July 20th, 2011 -- 9:31 am
By Robert Johnson
http://www.rawstory.com/rs/2011/07/20/an-u...osed-psychotic/

Outselling even common drugs to treat high blood pressure and acid reflux, antipsychotic medications are the single top-selling prescription drug in the United States.

Once reserved for hard-core, One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest type of mental illnesses to treat hallucinations, delusions or major thought disorders; today, the drugs are handed out to unruly kids and absent minded elderly.

A recent story in Al Jazeera by James Ridgeway of Mother Jones illuminates the efforts by major pharmaceutical companies to get doctors prescribing medicines like Zyprexa, Seroquel, and Abilify to patients for whom the drugs were never intended.

Focusing on psychiatrists because they rely on subjective diagnoses, the drug reps have been so successful that they've changed the criteria for mental illness and disability payments. Ridgeway quotes former New England Journal of Medicine editor Marcia Angell.

"[T]he tally of those who are so disabled by mental disorders that they qualify for Supplemental Security Income (SSI) or Social Security Disability Insurance (SSDI) increased nearly two and a half times between 1987 and 2007 - from one in 184 Americans to one in seventy-six. For children, the rise is even more startling - a thirty-five-fold increase in the same two decades. Mental illness is now the leading cause of disability in children." Under the tutelage of Big Pharma, we are "simply expanding the criteria for mental illness so that nearly everyone has one." Fugh-Berman agrees: In the age of aggressive drug marketing, she says, "Psychiatric diagnoses have expanded to include many perfectly normal people."

Particularly vulnerable because medication decisions are often out of their hands the old and the young suffer most.

For kids: the number diagnosed with bi-polar disorder rose 40-fold between 1994 and 2003 and one in five comes away from a psychiatrist with a prescription for an antipsychotic.

Dosing the elderly at nursing homes has become so common that sales reps have coined the term "five at five" -- meaning 5 milligrams of Zyprexa at 5 pm to sedate difficult residents.

For all their nefarious wrangling, in 2009, Lily agreed to pay $1.4 billion, including a $515 million criminal fine. The largest ever in a health care case and the largest criminal fine on any corporation in the U.S.

That year, Lilly sold $1.8 billion of Zyprexa alone.

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:41 AM (GMT)

Six Ways to Liberate America From Wall Street Rule

Wednesday 20 July 2011
by: David Korten, Yes! Magazine | Report
http://www.truth-out.org/how-liberate-america/1311104394

How is it that our nation is awash in money, but too broke to provide jobs and services? David Korten introduces a landmark new report, "How to Liberate America from Wall Street Rule."

The dominant story of the current political debate is that the government is broke. We can't afford to pay for public services, put people to work, or service the public debt. Yet as a nation, we are awash in money. A defective system of money, banking, and finance just puts it in the wrong places.

Raising taxes on the rich and implementing financial reforms are essential elements of the solution to our seemingly intractable fiscal and economic crisis. Yet proposals currently on the table fall far short of the need.

A newly released report of the New Economy Working Group, coordinated by the Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, DC, goes beyond the current debate to call for a deep restructuring of the institutions to which we as a society give the power to create and allocate money. How to Liberate America from Wall Street Rule spells out the steps required to rebuild a system of community-based and accountable institutions devoted to financing productive activities that create good jobs for Americans and generate real community wealth.

Despite the financial crash of 2008, the financial assets of America's billionaires and the idle cash of the most profitable corporations are now at historic highs. Their biggest challenge is figuring out where to park all their cash.Over the past 30 years, virtually all the benefit of U.S. economic growth has gone to the richest 1 percent of Americans. Effective tax rates for the very rich are at historic lows and many of the most profitable corporations pay no taxes at all.

Corporations are using their stores of cash primarily to buy back their own stock, acquire control of other companies, invest in off-shoring yet more American jobs, and pay generous dividends to shareholders and outsized bonuses to management. Unfortunately, most of those who hold the cash and the corporations they control have lost interest in long-term investments that build and expand strong enterprises. The substantial majority of trades in financial markets are made by high-speed computers in securities held for fractions of a second. Business pundits still refer to this trading as investment. It bears no resemblance, however, to the investment required to put people to work rebuilding a strong America.

Help fight ignorance. Click here for daily Truthout email updates.

It was not always so. In response to the Great Depression, our country enacted financial reforms that put in place a system of money, banking, and investment based on community banks, mutual savings and loans, and credit unions. These institutions provided financial services to local Main Street economies that employed Americans to produce and trade real goods and services in response to community needs and opportunities.

This system, which Wall Street interests dismiss as quaint and antiquated, financed the U.S. victory in World War II, the creation of a strong American middle class, an unprecedented period of economic stability and prosperity, and the investments that made America the world's undisputed industrial and technological leader.

The consequences include the erosion of the middle class, an extreme concentration of wealth and power, a costly financial collapse, persistent high unemployment, housing foreclosures, collapsing environmental systems, the hollowing out of U.S. industrial, technological, and research capacity, huge public and international trade deficits, and the corruption of our political institutions.In the 1970's Wall Street interests began pushing a deregulation agenda that led to a transfer of financial power from Main Street to Wall Street. Wall Street's mega-banks lost interest in real investment and developed a new business model. They now specialize in charging excessive fees and usurious interest rates, providing leverage to speculators, speculating for their own accounts, luring the unwary into mortgages they cannot afford, bundling junk mortgages to sell them as triple-A securities, betting against the clients to whom they sell the overrated securities, extracting subsidies and bailouts from government, laundering money from drug and arms traders, and offshoring their profits to avoid taxes.

Wall Street profited at every step and declared its experiment with deregulation and tax cuts for the wealthy a great success. It now argues for extending the same measures even further.

How to Liberate America from Wall Street Rule spells out details of a six-part policy agenda to rebuild a sensible system of community-based and accountable financial services institutions.
Break up the mega-banks and implement tax and regulatory policies that favor community financial institutions, with a preference for those organized as cooperatives or as for-profits owned by nonprofit foundations.
Establish state-owned partnership banks in each of the 50 states, patterned after the Bank of North Dakota. These would serve as depositories for state financial assets to use in partnership with community financial institutions to fund local farms and businesses.
Restructure the Federal Reserve to function under strict standards of transparency and public scrutiny, with General Accounting Office audits and Congressional oversight.
Direct all new money created by the Federal Reserve to a Federal Recovery and Reconstruction Bank rather than the current practice of directing it as a subsidy to Wall Street banks. The FRRB would have a mandate to fund essential green infrastructure projects as designated by Congress.
Rewrite international trade and investment rules to support national ownership, economic self-reliance, and economic self-determination.
Implement appropriate regulatory and fiscal measures to secure the integrity of financial markets and the money/banking system.

How to Liberate America from Wall Street Rule is the product of extended discussions among representatives of a diverse group of organizations committed to deepening and reframing the conversation on financial reform to focus attention on the serious financial system restructuring required to build a strong new American economy adequate to the social and environmental challenges of the 21st century. It may be freely shared, reproduced and distributed with appropriate citations.

David Korten

David Korten is co-founder and board chair of YES! Magazine and co-chair of the New Economy Working Group. He is the author of Agenda for a New Economy, The Great Turning: From Empire to Earth Community, and the international best seller When Corporations Rule the World. He is principal author of How to Liberate America from Wall Street Rule, which shows how America can restore economic health and financial integrity by rebuilding a system of accountable local financial services institutions much like the one that financed the achievements that made America the envy of the world.

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:43 AM (GMT)

Activists Cleared and Vindicated As 'Police' Admit Deceiving Them Into Mass Arrest

Posted by Alexander Higgins - July 19, 2011 at 10:45 pm - Permalink - Source via Alexander
http://blog.alexanderhiggins.com/2011/07/1...s-arrest-36621/

Courts drop charges in mass arrests of activists after revelations came to light that the senior officer at the heart of policing the demonstration deceived protesters into a mass arrest for engaging in a non-violent and sensible protest.

British courts have dropped charges against 109 protestors who participated in a non-violent and sensible protest.

The Guardian reports that the police deceived the activists into participating in the demonstration so that they would be arrested.

The operation led to the arrest of 150 people including minor participants as young as the age of 15.

While many cases have been dropped dozens of cases still remain open in the British court system but are expected to be dropped in the near future.
Fortnum & Mason protest: CPS drops charges against 109 UK Uncut activists Charges no longer in public interest, says CPS
Police admit deceiving protesters into mass arrest
Lawyer says it makes no sense to proceed with 30 cases

There has been criticism of the policing of the UK Uncut protest at Fortnum & Mason. Photograph: Carl Court/AFP/Getty Images

The Crown Prosecution Service has dropped charges of aggravated trespass against 109 UK Uncut activists who occupied Fortnum & Mason in March, saying they are no longer in the public interest.

The Guardian can also reveal that the senior officer at the heart of policing the demonstration deceived protesters into a mass arrest.

More than 150 activists were arrested on the evening of 26 March despite holding what chief inspector Claire Clark described at the time as a non-violent and "sensible" demonstration.

As they left the store, the activists were handcuffed and transported to police stations across London, where they were held in cells for up to 24 hours.

Some protesters had their clothes and personal items taken from them for evidence purposes. One UK Uncut activist described it as "one of the worst nights in my life".

Five minors, the youngest aged 15, were among those held overnight in police cells. Their cases were dropped by the CPS almost three weeks ago. The cases of 30 activists are still continuing through the courts and will be heard from November.

Lawyers acting for the remaining defendants said the CPS decision to continue with the prosecutions "makes no sense". In court a fortnight ago the 30 were described as organisers of the protest. Thirteen have already denied the charges against them, and the other 17 are expected to do likewise during a hearing on 25 July.

Following the mass arrest, activists claimed they had been "tricked", as they said Clark had assured them that after leaving the store they would be directed to the nearest tube stations and free to go home. Their claims were backed by video footage obtained by the Guardian, which shows Clark denying that anyone would be kettled or detained after leaving the store. It was not known at the time whether Clark was aware that the activists would in fact be arrested.

The Guardian can now reveal that the police admit deception in the lead-up to the mass arrest. Clark has confirmed she was told by her fellow commanding officers that everyone inside the building would be arrested. However, 10 minutes later at 5.50pm, Clark has admitted, she gave assurances to demonstrators that they would be allowed to leave unhindered.

On the video, which timestamps confirm was shot after 5.50pm, Clark can be heard telling a member of the crowd that the police were "getting ready to let you go". In response to a question about whether there was a "kettle" outside, she replies: "No, we are getting ready to let you go."

A letter to the CPS from the defence solicitors Bindmans on 17 June criticised Clark's promises to the crowd. "It clearly brings the administration of justice into disrepute if an individual is not able to rely on the clear assurances of the police – and in this case a very high ranking officer – engaged in the policing of a peaceful protest," it read. "A decision by the CPS to continue the prosecution in these cases is an abuse of the process of the court."

Clark has defended her actions, saying she feared a breach of the peace if she told the otherwise peaceful activists inside the store that they would all be arrested.

Also that evening, so-called "black bloc" protesters broke into banks and damaged the front of the Ritz hotel. Fortnum's suffered some damage to the front of its store from those gathered outside.

The Metropolitan police said it was unable to comment on questions from the Guardian about Clark's actions. "As there are a number of outstanding trials, it would be inappropriate to comment at this time," a spokesperson said.

The CPS had signalled a fortnight ago that it would drop "a significant" number of charges. In a statement on Monday Alison Saunders, chief crown prosecutor of CPS London, said: "I have decided that the cases against 109 individuals who were charged after protesting in Fortnum & Mason on 26 March should be discontinued. However, we will continue to pursue the other 30 cases through the judicial process.

"After careful and necessary investigative work by the police to provide the fullest evidential picture, we have reviewed the evidence now available and considered representations made by the defence teams.

"I have concluded that there is sufficient evidence to provide a realistic prospect of conviction for the offence of aggravated trespass against all the defendants. However, in discontinuing these cases I have considered whether a prosecution is necessary in the public interest. I have decided that it is not, taking into account the following factors from the code for crown prosecutors: that this was a single incident; that they have not been involved in similar offences previously and that they played only a minor role in the offending behaviour; that if these defendants had been convicted the court would be likely to impose only a nominal penalty.

"The police investigation was able to identify whether these factors were present for each defendant. It was only after such an investigation that these factors could be applied," she added.

Mike Schwarz, of Bindmans, said: "It makes no sense to continue the prosecution of some of them while they are discounting so many of the other cases. The nature of civil disobedience doesn't accommodate that discrimination."

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:44 AM (GMT)

Test

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 05:04 AM (GMT)

.fsddsf

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 05:05 AM (GMT)

asshole

Keith - July 23, 2011 03:17 AM (GMT)

I got to thinking. Its sort of stupid to thank the lord for 15 seconds before a meal . Wouldn't it be better to sort of meditate/pray for 10 minutes AFTER we eat and focus not only on the lord for providing us with sustenance but also to sort of "get what we want" out of the food or promote " optimal digestion" so to speak. So many get lazy after they consume but I'm starting to think using our mind to in a way "ultra digest" the food and at the same time be ultra thankful and do it after eating rather than before.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Peter Schiff: If We Raise The US Debt Limit That's

Title: Peter Schiff: If We Raise The US Debt Limit That's Description: Bully for Gold & Bears for the Dollar [V

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:38 AM (GMT)

Peter Schiff: If We Raise The US Debt Limit That's Bully For Gold & Bears For The Economy & Bears For The Dollar!

http://revolutionarypolitics.tv/video/view...?video_id=15766

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Is Kodak Going Bankrupt Fast?

Title: Is Kodak Going Bankrupt Fast?

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:31 AM (GMT)

Is Kodak Going Bankrupt Fast?

By Daniel Ho
Benzinga Columnist
July 20, 2011 3:36 AM
http://www.benzinga.com/markets/bonds/11/0...g-bankrupt-fast

While Apple Inc. (NASDAQ: AAPL) is having a blast after reporting earnings, pushing its stocks towards $400/share, a company that tried to ride on Apple's success by filing patent claims on Apple's product, is falling fast. The company, of course, is Eastman Kodak (NYSE: EK [FREE Stock Trend Analysis]).

Eastman Kodak, the company which brought us the term 'Kodak moment', is synonymous with the photographic film technology. Once a proud sponsor of the Olympics, its biggest headache used to be a Japanese company, FujiFilm, as they competed fiercely with each other over every major sponsorship event. Alas, they don't have to worry about each other anymore, as their glorious times had passed, with digital imaging technology replacing films decidedly. Nowadays, with many digital cameras selling at < $100 and every cell phone equipped with a camera, the people who still use film cameras are either hard-core professionals or really old people who do not bother to learn digital technology.

Facing this sea change, Kodak is trying hard to cope with the disruption of its business by transforming itself to focus on digital printing and other digital products such as digital cameras and software. It also discovered that its vast portfolio of patents might allow it to anchor on the success of others, as it had sued and extracted hundreds of millions on royalty payments from LG and Samsung. However, its dispute with Apple and Research in Motion (NYSE: RIM) had not gone as smooth, and hit a snag when the ITC (International Trade Commission) sent the dispute back to a judge who earlier ruled against Kodak, although Apple's countersuit against Kodak did not hold ground. While the suit against Apple is still on, the consensus is that it would be unlikely for Kodak to extract over a billion dollars from Apple and RIM as it originally hoped.

Another shoe dropped when Bill Miller of Legg Mason disclosed that he had sold off his shares in Kodak. with $551.3 million loss, in April after holding it for almost a decade. These debacles had dropped Kodak's share from ~$3.5/share to ~$3/share in early July. However, in the last few days, Kodak's bond had behaved badly, with its 2013 bonds now yielding almost 16%. Its stocks had also dropped from $2.75/share to $2.31/share in the last 2 days.

With earnings reporting due in next week, the recent price action of Kodak may indicate something bad to come. However, it's hard to imagine Kodak will just give up the fighting and rolls over when the CEO and directors recently purchased its stocks at ~3/share, even though it only ranged from tens to hundreds of thousands of dollars. Moreover, the bond is not due until 2013 and there are still time to work around the problems. For daring souls, this can be the opportunity to make good money if the price action was just due to some large funds unloading its holding like Legg Mason did.

Kodak is definitely not in good shape, and there are no shortages of problems for its business. But to declare it dead (i.e. creditors taking over, leaving nothing for common share holders) at this point seems a little premature. Nonetheless, the price action might be telling something the general public does not know. Therefore, if investors were to go long on Kodak, we would suggest buying only call options, so the exposure will be limited, or writing puts, essentially betting on Kodak not rolling over in the short term. To do these, one can consider buying the 2011 Oct $3 call, betting that Kodak will be ok with its upcoming earnings report, and the Aug. decision on the patent lawsuit with Apple and RIM may produce some upside surprise. Another considering would be to write a 2012 Jan $1.5 put, getting oneself the premium of $0.27 on the put, betting that any bad news will not take the stock below $1.23/share, giving oneself a buffer of ~47% from its current price. However, make no mistakes these are risky endeavors, and one must prepare to accept any loss that may result from being wrong.

Position: none

Sino Clean Energy moved 10.75% higher after Benzinga Pro reported the Chairman share purchase. Try Benzinga Pro for free now and don't miss out on profits like these!
Daniel Ho

Daniel Ho is the founder of 10xreturn.com, a financial portal providing financial information and market statistics for investment professionals.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: EU’s QE: Printing money is Europe’s only way out

Title: EU’s QE: Printing money is Europe’s only way out

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:31 AM (GMT)

EU’s QE: Printing money is Europe’s only way out

Published on July 20, 2011 by Michael Vail · 1 Comment http://theintelhubradio.com/2011/07/20/eus...s-only-way-out/

Source: MW

Italy is wobbling. Spain is facing a fresh crisis. Even France doesn’t look like it is a secure member of the euro zone anymore. The storms swirling around Europe’s beleaguered single currency are growing by the day as the crisis moves in from the periphery into what can only be regarded as core Europe. The markets remain poised on a knife edge, fearful of the consequences of a full scale collapse.

And yet, the one thing that can’t be underestimated is the political will of Europe’s leaders to keep the euro alive. Three generations of politicians have staked their careers on closer European integration. They won’t give up without a fight.

They will make one last-ditch effort to save the project. How? Europe will soon start printing money on a massive scale — far larger than even the U.S. Federal Reserve’s exercises in quantitative easing.
Why gold could lose grip on $1,600

An extended sell off in stocks and a drop in the Swiss franc against the dollar are two signs that the rally in gold is likely to fade, Richard Hastings, a macro strategist at Global Hunter Securities, tells MarketWatch’s Laura Mandaro.

That is the only move that can save the euro. And when it happens, it will spark another rally in global commodity and asset prices.

By training their guns on Italy, the bond markets have taken the euro zone’s debt crisis up to a new and far more dangerous level. Italy is a big, important economy. It has the third largest debt market in the world after the U.S. and Japan. And even though the Italians save a lot by global standards, and buy their own government’s debt, even the hard-working citizens of Milan and Turin can’t absorb all the paper the Italian government has issued over the years. Around half of that debt is internationally traded. If the country goes to the brink of insolvency, the shock waves will be felt everywhere.

Italy cannot be ignored. But it increasingly looks as if it can’t be bailed out either.

European Union leaders are meeting on Thursday for yet another summit. The aim, as always, will be to convince the markets that this time they have really got a grip on the crisis. And, as so often during the year this crisis has been dragging on, they won’t be able to agree on a plan that convinces anyone they can stop the contagion spreading.

The reason is simple. They can’t get a grip because they keep getting offered completely unacceptable choices.

Realistically, there are only two ways out of this mess. A fiscal union that involves massive transfers from Germany to the peripheral countries — and quite possibly to Spain and Italy as well. Or else a managed default and an exit from the euro by Greece, Portugal, and potentially some other countries as well.

The trouble is, neither is politically feasible. The German electorate won’t accept paying vast subsidies to the periphery. They are already up in arms about paying for the Greeks. Present them with the bill for Italy, and the German Chancellor Angela Merkel can kiss goodbye to any hope of re-election.

And yet, the EU’s establishment can’t contemplate default or the break-up of the single currency either. For 60 years, the momentum of the EU has been toward ever closer union. The euro was a key step in that process. If it starts to break apart, the momentum will swing into reverse. If countries can opt out of the euro, why not start opting out of any other part of the EU that isn’t working for them? Very soon, the whole structure will start falling apart.

Neither is acceptable. So what do you do? Simple logic tells us they will scrabble around for a third option.

In fact, there is one available. A massive QE blitz. The European Central Bank can simply print money and monetize the debt by buying up the bonds of the peripheral countries. That will achieve two things. It will finance those governments that can no longer borrow from the markets. And, because foreign exchange dealers hate to see money being printed, it will drive down the euro, making it easier for the continent to export its way out of trouble.

It might not make sense in the long-run. But, hey, it will hardly be the first time politicians have put short-term survival ahead of the long-term interests of their country or continent. Likewise, the ECB will resist. But the bank has a new president, Italian Mario Draghi, taking charge after the summer, and he is more likely to buckle under the huge political pressure to start buying government bonds directly than his predecessor was.

How much money are we talking about? The Royal Bank of Scotland estimates that at least 2 trillion euros may needed to be added to the emergency funds set up by the EU to keep the single currency afloat. True, that money could be borrowed from the wealthier members, but the more likely outcome is that it is simply printed. Even that may ultimately turn out to be relatively conservative figure.

Let's put that in perspective. The Federal Reserve's first round of QE was $1.25 trillion, and the second round was $600 billion. Two trillion euros is $2.8 trillion. So the total program could be half as much again the entire Fed stimulus package. In other words, the amount of money printed to prop up the euro is going to far larger than anything we have yet seen.

That is going to have a huge impact right around the world. When Japan started QE in the 2000s, it buoyed asset prices elsewhere through the "carry trade." Investors borrowed cheap yen, and bought assets elsewhere. When the Fed embarked on QE, stocks and commodity prices rose sharply.

It won't be any different when the ECB takes its turn. Indeed, one of the curious features of QE programs is that they lift asset prices — but not necessarily in the country that prints the money. In fact, they have a tendency to rise most outside the home country.

So global asset prices can expect another lift from the ECB's blitz. It might — indeed almost certainly will — end in catastrophe. Inflation will follow. The peripheral countries will be hooked on printed money: they'll never be able to return to the capital markets.

But that doesn't mean that stock and commodity prices won't get a big lift in the short-term. And smart investors might as well get ready for that.

Matthew Lynn is a financial journalist based in London. He is the author of "Bust: Greece, the Euro and the Sovereign Debt Crisis," and he writes adventure thrillers under the name Matt Lynn.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Jim Rogers: Fed Will Launch QE3 by Q3

Title: Jim Rogers: Fed Will Launch QE3 by Q3

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:16 AM (GMT)

Jim Rogers: Fed Will Launch QE3 by Q3

Tuesday, 19 Jul 2011 09:08 AM
By Julie Crawshaw
http://www.moneynews.com/StreetTalk/JimRog...omo_code=CA65-1

International investor Jim Rogers expects a third round of quantitative easing by the third quarter of this year.

The head of Rogers Holdings expects this will happen "in the fall or early next year," Rogers told CNBC, as FT Adviser reported.

"It's the wrong thing to do but that's all they [US policymakers] know to do. They are not very smart people so you better own commodities," says Rogers.

"They will see things not getting better and will do what they do."

Jim Rogers
(Getty Images photo)

Rogers comments came after U.S. Federal Reserve chairman Ben Bernanke hinted the Fed might provide "additional policy support" should economic conditions warrant it, indicating that a third round of quantitative easing may be offered.

Commenting on the bond market, Rogers said "I have no idea what can cause the bond market to rally but I don't think it will rally any time soon."

"If the world economy gets better I will make a lot of money on commodities because of the shortages," Rogers says.

"But if the world economy doesn't get better I'm probably going to make money on commodities too as they will print more money."

Moneycontrol.com reports that Arjuna Mahendran, head of Asian investment strategy with HSBC Private Bank told CNBC-TV18, that a probable QE 3 will only shoot the elevated commodity prices further.

"We have seen in the last two instances of QE, it created bubbles in the commodity space, principally, in oil but also in gold and other metals," Mahendran said.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Moody's: McConnell Backup Debt Plan Won’t Save

Title: Moody's: McConnell Backup Debt Plan Won’t Save Description: Rating

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:16 AM (GMT)

Moody's: McConnell Backup Debt Plan Won’t Save Rating

Wednesday, 20 Jul 2011 11:20 AM http://www.moneynews.com/FinanceNews/Moody...07/20/id/404253

A backup plan to raise the U.S. debt ceiling and avoid default could still lead to a negative outlook on the country's ratings, Moody's said, highlighting the plan's failure to substantially reduce the deficit.

The back-up plan offered by Senator Mitch McConnell would avoid any immediate downgrade of the coveted U.S. triple-A rating, Moody's analyst Steven Hess told Reuters in an interview, bringing relief to investors who fear an imminent downgrade of the coveted U.S. triple-A rating.

"But the numbers that are being discussed in terms of any possible deficit reduction coming out of this plan don't seem to be very large," Hess said. "Therefore, this plan might result in a negative outlook on the rating."

A negative outlook is a sign the rating may be downgraded in 12 to 18 months.

McConnell's plan, which is being negotiated with Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, would include about $1.5 trillion in deficit-reduction measures.

Hess said a "much larger amount" of deficit-reduction measures would be necessary for Moody's to affirm U.S. ratings with a stable outlook.

In the most recent development in Washington on Tuesday, President Barack Obama supported efforts by a bipartisan group of U.S. senators with a more ambitious budget plan that includes $3.75 trillion in savings over 10 years.

Asked about the ideal size of the deficit-reduction measures, Hess said $4 trillion "could lead us to affirm the rating at Aaa with a stable outlook, if those measures were actually adopted."

"I'd rather not opine on the numbers in between," he said, also noting that Moody's does not have a view on whether that deficit reduction should be achieved via revenue increase or spending cuts.

McConnell's plan would authorize Obama to raise the debt limit in three increments, totaling $2.5 trillion -- without any mandatory spending cuts -- provided Obama's fellow Democrats go along with it.

The plan would avoid a feared default by the U.S. Treasury in August but would not eliminate the periodic uncertainty related to the debt ceiling, Hess said.

"That event risk would still be there because the debt limit would have to be raised again a couple of times before the end of 2012," Hess said.

Moody's currently has U.S. ratings on review for a possible downgrade to account for the growing risk that lawmakers fail to raise the debt ceiling before Treasury runs out of money to keep servicing its obligations.

It has said that, if the government avoids a default, it will likely affirm the country's rating at triple A but it will likely assign a negative outlook on the rating, unless there is a "substantial and credible" budget agreement to cut the deficit.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: State of CRISIS [Vd]

Title: State of CRISIS [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:43 AM (GMT)

State of CRISIS

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/THwZHNMiJR0?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/THwZHNMiJR0?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: IMF warns the Eurozone of £400bn global 'earthquak

Title: IMF warns the Eurozone of £400bn global 'earthquak
Description: and urges them to rescue Greece

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:16 AM (GMT)

IMF warns the Eurozone of £400bn global 'earthquake' and urges them to rescue Greece

By Hugo Duncan
Last updated at 8:24 AM on 20th July 2011
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-20...earthquake.html

The debt crisis crippling the Eurozone could trigger an ‘earthquake’ that slashes hundreds of billions of pounds off the global economy, the world’s financial watchdog warned last night.

The International Monetary Fund urged European leaders to rescue Greece and stop the shockwaves spreading to some of the region’s largest economies, including Italy and Spain, and the rest of the world.

‘It would be very costly not just for the Eurozone but for the global economy to delay tackling the sovereign crisis,’ said Luc Everaert, head of the IMF in the single-currency bloc.

The Washington-based Fund said that in its ‘earthquake scenario’ – where the crisis spreads through the entire Eurozone – the size of the economy in the region would fall 2.5 per cent.

Global growth would fall by around 1 per cent, it said, or nearly £400billion.

The price of gold raced to a fresh high of $1,610 an ounce yesterday as nervous investors piled money into ‘safe havens’. Borrowing costs in the Eurozone also rose, making it even more expensive for governments to operate.

European leaders meet in Brussels tomorrow in a desperate effort to break the deadlock over a second bailout for Greece.

It is feared that if an agreement is not reached, the crisis will engulf Italy and Spain and lead to the collapse of the euro. One leading economist in London said it was ‘last-chance saloon’ for politicians to save the single-currency union.

Bond yields rise when investors want a better return to compensate for risk when lending to a government. Yields for the UK have remained rock bottom while Italy and Spain pay the price for high debts and for offering poorer prospects for repaying them

But German Chancellor Angela Merkel played down the chances of the emergency summit resolving the crisis in Greece.

She said there would be nothing ‘spectacular’ decided in Brussels, adding the meeting ‘will help in this, but further steps will be needed’.

Suki Mann, a senior analyst at Societe Generale in London, said: ‘As another D-day looms on Thursday, we have few soothing words, ‘Greece appears beyond repair, Italy is on the brink and the chances are that the euro might be no more very soon.’

Former Tory chancellor Lord Lamont said the crisis tearing through the Eurozone was ‘much more serious’ than the phone hacking scandal. He urged European leaders to ‘come up now with a comprehensive solution’.

Greece, Ireland and Portugal have already received £240billion of bailout loans from the EU and the IMF – including £12.5billion from Britain, or £500 per family.

But Greece needs a second rescue package, worth around £100billion, to stop it defaulting on its debts.

Europe is at loggerheads over how to deal with the crisis in Greece and its failure to do so has put Spain and Italy in the firing line.

In its latest report on the 17 single-currency nations, the IMF said: ‘An intensification of the debt crisis, especially if it were to spread to the core euro area, could have major global consequences. The euro area plays a major role in the global economy and therefore has potentially large spillover effects on the rest of the world.’

The Fund said ‘financial markets remain under stress, underscoring the urgent need for strong measures’ to shore up the euro bloc.

Looking to tomorrow's meeting, Jonathan Loynes, chief European economist at Capital Economics, said: 'This crucial summit could provide the last-chance saloon for Eurozone policymakers to get a grip on the region's debt crisis.

'Anything other than a very decisive response could see the situation become irretrievable.'

Spain was in the spotlight yesterday after its borrowing costs soared by more than a third.

The country sold £3.9billion of bonds to investors on the financial markets – but the interest rate on the loans hit 3.7 per cent. That was 37 per cent higher than the 2.7 per cent paid during a similar auction last month and underlined how nervous investors are to lend to Madrid.

Meanwhile, President Barack Obama said there had been 'some progress' in negotiations over raising the nation's debt ceiling.

If it is not raised, the U.S. will default on its loans, which financial experts say would be 'catastrophic' for the global economy.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: China urges U.S. to boost confidence in debt, dlr

Title: China urges U.S. to boost confidence in debt, dlr

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:00 AM (GMT)

China urges U.S. to boost confidence in debt, dlr

Wed Jul 20, 2011 4:03am EDT
http://www.reuters.com/article/2011/07/20/...E7IK18420110720

* China FX regulator calls U.S. to act responsibly on debt, dlr
* Says China cannot use reserves to buy too much gold, oil (Adds details)

(Reuters) - China pressed the United States to take "responsible" measures to boost market confidence in the dollar and U.S. government debt on Wednesday, underscoring investor worries that Washington could default on its debt.

The urging from China's currency regulator came as U.S. leaders tried to hammer out an 11th-hour deal to raise a $14.3 trillion debt ceiling for the United States before it runs out of money to cover all its bills on Aug. 2.

"We hope the U.S. government will take responsible policies and measures to boost global financial market confidence and respect and protect the interests of investors," the State Administration of Foreign Exchange said.

The remarks, published on its website, were carried as a response to queries on whether Beijing will cut its investment in U.S. Treasuries following through from rating agencies saying they may cut the United States' credit rating.

The agency, which manages China's $3.2 trillion in foreign exchange reserves, the world's largest, said its buying and selling of Treasuries were part of normal investment operations.

Due to the size of China's reserves, Beijing has few choices but to invest the bulk of the stash in U.S. Treasuries, by far the world's biggest and most liquid asset class.

About two-thirds of China's reserves are estimated to be invested in dollar assets, ranking Beijing as the biggest creditor to the United States.

While China is keen to cut its reliance on the dollar by investing its reserves in other assets, its currency regulator acknowledged the crucial role of Treasuries by saying it is "an important investment product for both U.S. domestic and international institutional investors".

The currency regulator also argued it cannot invest too much of China's reserves in commodities such as oil, gold and silver these markets are too volatile and small.

"Chinese companies and households consume a large amount of gold and crude oil," it said.

"If we use much of our foreign exchange reserves to invest in such areas, we could push up market prices, which may affect our people's consumption and economic development."

For a full translation of the agency's comments, please click on (Reporting by Zhou Xin and Koh Gui Qing; Editing by Jacqueline Wong)

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: A Trillion of revenue is on the plate

Title: A Trillion of revenue is on the plate

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 03:00 AM (GMT)

A Trillion of revenue is on the plate

Submitted by Bruce Krasting on 07/19/2011 19:10 -0400 http://www.zerohedge.com/article/trillion-revenue-plate

We're coming down to the wire on the debt limit. "Hard" deals are now being put on the table. The Republicans have said all along they don't want any new taxes. But only a fool could think this can be done without a significant amount of revenue increase. So if we're to get a deal what has to give? Easy. Rather than increase taxes the government can phase out deductions.

This data looks at individual deductions. This come to a whopping $950 billion. You tell me, are you on this list? Have a mortgage? Pay state or property taxes? School debt? Health care costs? Charity? Kids? Veterans? At one point or another every American is on this hit list.

Table 2. Major Components of Individual Share*
(Numbers in billions of dollars)

A. Owner-occupied housing
Mortgage interest	$80
Exclusion of gain on sale	$30
Real property tax deduction	$14
Total	$124
B. Pension and other retirement savings
Employer pension plans	$114
Inside build-up on life insurance contracts	$26.8
IRA and self-employed retirement plans	$26.5
Total	$167.3
C. Health (only income tax cost, not employment tax cost)
Employer-provided	$116.5
Exclusion of Medicare benefits (parts A, B, and D)	$42.8
Medical expense deduction	$9.5
Exclusion of health benefits under worker's compensation	$8.1
Self-employed health insurance deduction	$4.4
Total	$181.3
D. Family-related benefits
Earned income tax credits	$46.5
Per-child credit	$44.8
Tuition credits, scholarship exclusion, etc.	$8
Dependent care credit and exclusion	$2.6
Total	$101.9
E. Charitable deduction	$44.1
F. State and local governments
Deduction for income, sales, and personal property taxes	$30
Exclusion of interest on G/O bonds	$21.5
Private activity bonds	$6.7
Total	$58.2
G. Capital gains and dividends
Reduced rates $128
No tax on unrealized appreciation for transfers at death or by gift	$59
Total	$187
H. Exclusion of government transfer payments
Social Security	$23.1
Public assistance	$2.7
Disability and survivor worker's compensation benefits	$2.7
Total	$28.5
I. Employee benefits other than health or pension
Cafeteria plans	$33.6
Miscellaneous fringe benefits	$7
Group life, accident, and disability benefits	$5.6
Transportation (parking and transit)	$4.8
Total	$51
J. Exclusion of military and veterans benefits	$10
Total	$953.3

Need a Trillion? Here it is →

Consider the deductions at the corporate level in America. It's only $65b. Peanuts compared to the tax breaks of individuals.

Table 3. Major Components of Corporate Share*
(Numbers in billions of dollars)

A. International tax benefits
Sales source	$6.6
Deferral	$6.4
Active financing	$2.6
Total	$15.6
B. Research and development	$5
C. Section 199 manufacturing deduction	$5.5
D. Charitable	$3.6
E. Tax-exempt interest
General purpose bonds	$8.4
Private activity bonds	$1.9
Total	$10.3
F. Credit union exemption	$1.7
G. Accelerated depreciation for equipment	$6.2
H. Lower corporate rates (below $5 million)	$3.5
I. Reserve deductions for insurance companies	$5.5
J. Low-income housing credit and NMTC	$5.0
K. Like-kind exchanges	$3.3
Total	$65.2

A lousy $65b. They're after you!

Now think of yourself in a room trying to negotiate this big deal. It's all well and good to say that the end result will be more taxes for corporations. But at a ratio of 15 to 1 you have to hit individuals pretty hard in order to raise any serious money. At this point everyone understands that. Cutting personal deductions in a very big way is the only possible outcome where all sides can save some face.

The way that these cuts in deductions will be phased out will hit high incomes the hardest. But don't kid yourself; this will end up in three to four years as a very middle class tax increase. Should something like this come about you have to look askance at owning real estate. You'll get hit with a tax from employer 401 contributions. You might think twice about having a child. Those charitable deductions are just that, charity.

I guess this is what has to happen when you need to raise a trillion in revenue to sell a deal. We're going to hate it a few years from now when all this kicks in.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Ron Paul: "We Will Default Because The Debt Is Title: Ron Paul: "We Will Default Because The Debt Is Description: Unsustainable [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 02:58 AM (GMT)

Ron Paul: "We Will Default Because The Debt Is Unsustainable"

[dohtml]<iframe width="425" height="349" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/MHk-vvsDWnM" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Fed Preparing For US Default Says Plosser

Title: Fed Preparing For US Default Says Plosser

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 02:44 AM (GMT)

Fed Preparing For US Default Says Plosser

Submitted by Tyler Durden on 07/20/2011 16:21 -0400
http://www.zerohedge.com/article/fed-prepa...lt-says-plosser

That giant whooshing, and humming, sound you hear are all the printers at the basement of Marriner Eccles getting refills and start the warm up process. Because according to the Fed Charles Plosser the Federal Reserve is actively preparing for the possibility that the United States could default. Which can only mean one thing: an immediate paradrop of millions of $100 bricks to every man woman and child in the US since as we all know by know Tim Geithner has repeatedly confirmed the Treasury has absolutely no default plans. None.

Per Reuters:

Philadelphia Federal Reserve Bank President Charles Plosser said the Fed has for the past few months been working closely with Treasury, ironing out what to do if the world's biggest economy runs out of cash on August 2.

"We are in contingency planning mode," Plosser told Reuters in an interview at the regional central bank's headquarters in Philadelphia. "We are all engaged ... It's a very active process."

Plosser said his "gut feeling" was that President Barack Obama and Congress will come to an agreement to increase the Treasury's borrowing authority in time to avert a default on government obligations.

And in addition to the warming up, the Fed is also engaging in the following:

The Fed effectively acts as the Treasury's bank -- it clears the government's checks to everyone from social security recipients to government workers.

"We are developing processes and procedures by which the Treasury communicates to us what we are going to do," Plosser said, adding that the task was manageable. "How the Fed is going to go about clearing government checks. Which ones are going to be good? Which ones are not going to be good?"

"There are a lot of people working on what we would do and how we would do it," he said.

Plosser added that there are difficult questions that the Fed itself had to grapple with.

The Fed lends to banks at the discount window against good collateral. But what happens if U.S. Treasuries no longer fit that bill?

"Do we treat them as if they didn't default, in which case we would be saying we are pretending it never happened? Or do we treat them as if they defaulted and don't lend against them?" Plosser said. "Those are more policy questions."s at the basement of Marriner Eccles getting refills and start the warm up process.

We urge the secretary of tax evasion to take a hint or two from his "Treasury Bank" brethren and start contemplating a Plan B since we now stand less than 48 hours away from D-Hour and there is still no consensus.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: $ Is Over. (If you want it.)

Title: $ Is Over. (If you want it.)

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 02:41 AM (GMT)

$ Is Over. (If you want it.)

JULY 18, 2011
http://goldsilver.com/news/is-over-if-you-want-it/

By Silver Shield,on July 18th,2011

The death of the dollar will be the largest single event in human history. This collapse will be the first event to dramatically effect every human being on the planet. Few people realize the dramatic impact this event will mean to every single aspect of their lives. To those of you that do realize the enormity of this cataclysmic event,it is hard not to watch the kettle boil. While we do our best to become aware and prepared for this event,the dollar chart is the one chart everyone watches. I would contend that while we watch the dollar chart,it is not the one we should be really watching. The reason for this is that it is measuring a one crappy fiat currency against other crappy fiat currencies. Even in this relative weak race to the bottom,the dollar stinks. As gold pushes through $1600,it is a truer measure of the declining value of ALL currencies. Still the dollar chart is significant simply because it is King Dollar.
If not for our criminal financial oligarchs funneling dollars into our markets,the dollar would be dead.
If not for our drug kingpins funneling dollars into our markets,the dollar would be dead.
If not for our petro dollar confidence game,the dollar would be dead.
If not for our bullying military industrial complex plundering the assets of the world,the dollar would be dead.
If not for our corporate vampire squids harvesting the spoils of empire,the dollar would be dead.
If not for the intense manipulation of the markets and statistics like inflation and unemployment,the dollar would be dead.
If not for all of you that keep your wealth in any paper asset,the dollar would be dead.

John Lennon lead a non violent,non compliant revolution against the Vietnam War. He said that,“War is Over! (If you want it.)”This simple message showed how all of the Elite’s power to spread debt and death is only possible through our active or passive support of their machine. Not one bullet will be fired if men did not actively or passively support the war machine. Not one enslaving dollar would exist,if people did not actively or passively support the dollar paradigm. (All money is debt. If all debt was paid off there would not be one dollar in existence.)

The $ is the basis for all of the power of the Elite. Without the ability to control the money,the Elite could not control the economy,corporations,media,academia,politicians,and the Military Industrial Complex. When one realizes that the debt based $ is the basis for every evil in the world,you should not even be able to passively support the dollar by holding your wealth in it. When you realize that the dollar is mathematically and inevitably going to fail,you should flee the dollar with haste. There will come a day when you will see this kind of passion urging people to wake up and stop the debt and death machine.

[dohtml]<iframe width="640" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/KJKbDz4EZio"

frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

If people who were in debt stopped paying for their slavery,the $ would be over.

If people who do have paper assets put their wealth in REAL tangible assets,the $ would be over.

When the $ is over there is a real possibility to create a new Renaissance in humanity. One that rejects usury,fractional reserve banking,debt,and the collectivist power that forces coercion throughout the world. The best part about this inevitable end is that it will most likely collapse of its own cancerous excesses long before any massive resistance can be made. In fact in a world that uses so much leverage,there is only room for 1% of the wealth to get out before the fire alarm is sounded. The greatest thing is that there is still (very little) time for many of us to get to the exits. The masses of the world is either drunk on debt or enslaved by debt where they cannot see the true nature of the world. Through efforts like the Silver Bullet and the Silver Shield and the Sons of Liberty Academy,I have tried my best to show you that we have the power to create generational wealth. With that new wealth we create a new world paradigm that would give our children a real shot at becoming their highest and best self.

To be Totally Free.

Until that day,I watch the pot boil…

The looooooong term chart of the dollar is decidedly negative relative to the other fiat currencies.Any break below 71.32 is dead space. Now that the Euro crisis is on the back burner for a week or two,all eyes focus on the dollar. I have said for 6 months that the debt ceiling is going to be raised. There will be no significant cuts or tax raises and that the money/debt will be created in increasingly faster pace. We are reaching the mathematical end where we will no longer be able to service the debt which would lead to a deflationary default. Or that we will print the money necessary to pay the bills and this will lead to a hyper inflationary depression where money dies. I am in the hyper inflationary camp because our Elite do not have any monetary or fiscal restraints. Their quest for more $ drugs will ultimately kill the $.

The BEST Dollar Chart from our friends at Jesse's Cafe Americain

The shorter term chart shows that the Osama bin Silver Drive By Shooting $ rally is coming to an end. This rising wedge formation typically leads to a resumption of a downward trend. This coincides with the debt ceiling being raised,a weakening job market,and the second leg down in the Real Estate market. This next drop is going to be the “Big One”. However tough 2008 was,this next one is going to be magnitudes worse. There will be no breather like we got in 2009-2011. We have blown through all of our safety nets.
We have blown through our savings.
We have blown through our quick fixes.
We have blown through our military solutions.
We have blown through our corporate solutions.
We have blown thorough our political solutions.
We have blown through the amount of lies we are willing to accept.

There is nothing left to act as a buffer for a very hard reality that is coming our way.

Rising wedge will lead to a breakdown in the Dollar. The coincides with a longer term breakdown that will be very scary below 71.32

Wake Some People Up!

Original source

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Economic D-Day for the Euro 21Jul11

Title: Economic D-Day for the Euro 21Jul11

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 02:39 AM (GMT)

Economic D-Day for the Euro 21Jul11

http://mediajackhammer.wordpress.com/2011/...y-for-the-euro/

Today, Europe's leaders are holding what is perhaps the single most important meeting in the common economic zone's history.

If you've been watching, reading or listening to the news lately, you probably already know why.

The 'Eurozone' is facing the very real possibility of totally falling apart.

How the PIIGS are killing the EMU

It's all to do with the PIIGS and the EMU. That is Portugal, Ireland, Italy, Greece and Spain – and the European Monetary Union.

It's a huge and complex financial zoo. Suddenly the George Orwell novel Animal Farm comes to mind..

All of a sudden, this zoo is about to become very chaotic. Well, more so than as of late.

Thirteen European economists have just written an open letter to EU leaders pleading for them to act now before it's too late.

However, those on the receiving end of the letter needn't even get out the paper knife. "Too late" came twelve years ago after the Euro was created.

Despite boasting the world's second largest reserve and trade currency, the practicality of a common currency in Europe is, and always was, flawed. The idea of individual nations (each with their own respective industries) giving up economic sovereignty to a rigid bureaucracy defies common sense.

If a nation, with its own policies, industries, targets and goals is to progress then it must do so in accordance with its own framework – not that of another where policy is more or less dictated.

This is not just bad for the individual member states but also for the EU as a whole, as it is the wealthier member states which are forced to bail out the smaller ones when their debt becomes unmanageable.

Enter the PIIGS crisis. Portugal, Ireland, Italy, Greece and Spain are neck-deep in a debt contagion that threatens to unravel the very foundations of the EMU (European Monetary Union).

"The reaction by national authorities and economic agents has been one of retrenchment, threatening to turn back the clock on economic and financial integration, the very foundation" of the Economic and Monetary Union, the IMF said.

The Euro could succumb if countries put sovereign pride over the common good, IMF eurozone chief Luc Everaert told reporters in a conference call Tuesday.

And this is the way it's destined to go.

As explained above, when the chips are down you look out for number one. This logic has universally applied as much on an individual level as it has an organisational or national level.

Between now and when today's meeting ends, we may be greeted with the good news of a bailout for Greece, or even an action plan to save Italy from going bankrupt.

But further down the line, when the economic and political consequences of the Euro-wide debt contagion set in and take form, voters will opt out of the EMU.

That leaves the PIIGS to fend for themselves, but most likely collapse under the burden of their respective debt. They may choose to form a union of their own, simply called PIIGS.

Germany and France will revert back to the Deutsche Mark and Franc respectively while the other member states follow suit by reintroducing their former currencies.

The social consequences may come in the form of nationalism, due to the high unemployment that the collapse of the Eurozone is likely to bring.

However, it pays to be optimistic. In hindsight, the Europeans can't be blamed for trying the experiment.

So let's look at the upside of this crazy and chaotic roller-coaster ride. The passengers had a dark and checkered history with one another, yet strapped themselves in for the ride – together.

The leap of faith hasn't ended well, but the fact it was taken at all deserves applause.

This has stirred up questions as to the possibility of Germany leaving the Eurozone altogether.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Crisis And Collapse Unfortunate but Inevitable

Title: Crisis And Collapse Unfortunate but Inevitable

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 02:33 AM (GMT)

Crisis And Collapse Unfortunate but Inevitable

An excerpt from Bob Chapman's weekly publication.

http://theinternationalforecaster.com/Inte..._but_Inevitable

July 16 2011: Fraud the cause of the credit crisis, fraud stalls the recovery, Greece crisis spreads to Italy, Euro zone bound to failure, US debt rating to be revised, debt ceiling to be raised again, Municipal credit ratings also downgraded, harmony in the system is coming to an end soon.

As we have said for many years crime on Wall Street, in banking and in corporate America pays. One just neither admits or denies and lets the corporate shareholders pay the fines. These are today's untouchable, who steal billions and get away with it. Financial institutions are too big to fail, as are their key employees. To a great extent fraud and other criminal behavior caused the credit crisis and lack of recovery that we have witnessed over the last 5 years. We have had top officers of firms see their companies headed for trouble and with this inside knowledge they have cashed out their share holdings. Then there were the predatory lenders, syndicators of bonds, which contained mortgages, now known as toxic waste, that were criminally given AAA ratings when they deserved BBB. We had some 1,000 corporate officers who backdated their options. Only one was criminally prosecuted when they all should have been. Prosecutions have come few and for between, because the SEC, CFTC and the Justice Department aid and abet these crooks in order to keep harmony in the system, which is coming unglued. They have always done this, but over the past 5 years even the uneducated can see what has and is taking place. In fact the more outrageous the crime, the less it is liable to be pursued. This non-pursuit of crime needless to say encourages more crime and further damages overall corporate and financial sectors. There is no accountability and we see none in the future. Let there be no mistake this financial crisis is worse than the last depression. This continuing degenerative process can only assist in a further degeneration of the system.

A bill has been introduced by Senator Carl Levin, chairman of the permanent subcommittee on investigations, that would change IRS regulations that allow American traders of credit default swaps to avoid paying federal taxes on transactions initiated in the US. It would tighten rules that enable some hedge funds and US corporations to reduce federal tax liabilities by declaring themselves foreign companies and moving a small part of their operations overseas. It would require companies to provide the SEC and the public, with a country-by-country breakdown of their sales, employment and operations.

Senator Levin says that abuse of offshore havens cost American taxpayers $100 billion a year. Presently American transnational conglomerates have more than $2 trillion stashed offshore waiting for another tax break like the one five years ago that allowed them to bring $350 billion home at 5-1/4% instead of regular taxation of 35%. That works out to about $600 billion lost to the Treasury. Gains from traders would be $20 billion over ten years. The removal of these tax breaks would certainly help cut the budget deficit.

The crisis in Greece is finally causing contagion in Italy. The crisis of all six near bankrupt euro nations is upon us and it is permanent. Moody's just downgraded Ireland again, at the worst possible time. Spain, which is in terrible shape, will soon follow. The EU members and their controllers, the banks, keep trying to put band-aids on their festering problem. Sooner or later they will have to face the music and that is those six nations will all have to go bankrupt along with the banks. All of you subscribers in the EU and UK get your funds out of the bank, now, and into gold and silver coins. If you don't you may end up with nothing. If this goes on long enough it will take the presently solvent nations down as well.

The European Union and the euro zone were ill conceived and bound to failure. After having lived in Europe for years, and being able to speak several of their languages, you get to understand people and the way they think. Both entities were anthropologically unnatural. Europe is still tribal. Just look at countries like Germany, France and Belgium where people speak different variations of the same language. In Belgium they speak two distinct languages. The EU's major flaw was sovereign countries ran their own fiscal policies, as bureaucrats ran the EU. You have to either federalize all the way or forget it. The euro zone foisted one interest rate fits all, all on countries that should have never had the same interest rates as say Germany. We talked about both these issues 14 years ago, but as usual, no one was listening. From the very beginning the EU and the euro zone were doomed. Both are going to now begin the process of disintegration, as both are a failure. The six countries will go bankrupt, as will the banks. That will dislodge England and push it into bankruptcy and that in turn will force the US to follow. That may be the catalyst that forces a meeting of all nations to revalue, devalue and multilaterally default, hopefully such a meeting will occur long before this stage is reached. There is no question now that the game is over. The question now is when?

Workers have become a form of inventory just like widgets. For years now companies have laid off and rehired workers at will, keeping the expensive worker participation to a minimum. If you use total figures and include discouraged workers the unemployed are 20.6 million, up 483,000 in June. We do not see stimulus 3 coming from Congress, so we expect unemployment to resume its relentless rise upward from 22.6%. Mind you unemployment reflects $1.7 trillion in stimulus 1 and 2, and QE 1 and QE 2, which takes us well over 44 trillion. All those injections did was to bail out the financial sector and government. As we know our President tells us the administration created three million jobs, at a cost of $266,000 per job. That is hardly something to write home about. Corporate America is in excellent financial shape, but they will be slow to hire until they see a firm recovery in place. Sure GE made $17 million, because they did not pay taxes as we do, but they won't rush out to hire unless the reason to hire exists. The real opportunity to hire has to be with small business that hires 70% of Americans. They do not enjoy the tax-free status of GE. Most of these small companies are barely hanging on. These are the companies that banks won't loan too. Half of them are still experiencing falling profits, only 20% are doing well.

Year-on-year in the municipal sector 450,000 workers are going to lose their jobs, because many of these entities are close to broke. They and the states want more money from the federal government, which it doesn't have to give. Large, very profitable businesses generally create very few jobs. They and mid-sized companies are buying more and more labor saving equipment, or they are moving production offshore. For the last three years most of the new jobs paid subsistence wages. Those are $8.00 to $11.00 an hour jobs, which are really part-time providing a 34.3-hour week, as inflation roars ahead up 10.6% and headed up to 14% by yearend. The average duration of unemployment is at an all-time high and 44% unemployed have been out work six months or more, at an all-time high.

We had a gentlemen call in on one of our programs, he has a masters and had been out of work for four years. He went to a company and told management he would work for nothing in order to learn to operate a forklift. After training he got a job doing that work at a plumbing company. He has the distinction of beating out 26 other applicants. He has been told in 1-1/2 years they will be an opening for him in accounting, his major. This is the state of America today, as our transnational conglomerates ship our jobs out of the country every day.

We figure a debt extension bill is on the way, but it will only cut $150 to $200 billion a year in government spending, hardly an accomplishment. If the Fed does not inject $850 billion into the economy we are looking at a minus 3% to 5% in GDP. That is in addition to buying $1.7 trillion in treasuries and other associated toxic waste.

The newest recession began a few months ago, or should we say downturn in an inflationary depression. There will be no recovery this year or next without $850 billion additional being thrown into the economy. No 3.5% growth. Perhaps a minus 4% if we are lucky. That should put unemployment close to 25% by 2012. After the news comes out that the term debt deal has been done the stock market will begin to slip downward.

As this transpires we see a million more foreclosures and more the following year. In order for the economy to revive housing it has to revive and we see absolutely no chance of that happening over the next two years. As the Fed supplies buckets of money and credit inflation will scream upward. 25% to 30% is already in the pipeline for next year via QE and Stimulus 2. There is no way that can be stopped. That will be added to by the results of QE 3 in 2013. We wish it won't be this way, but it is.

There has been an inevitability since August 15,1971, that America and the western world would move from crisis to crisis until the financial and economic system eventually collapsed.

For those who have been objective over those years what we are seeing today is no surprise.

No one in America wants the merry-go-round to stop. Americans are not prepared to face the music. They naturally want more debt creation, but interestingly by 70%, they did not want a short-term debt extension. That is understandably confusing and the reason is that when it comes to economy and finance they are really in the dark. What they truly do not understand along with much of Wall Street is that the debt problem is much worse and deeper then they believe.

The problems in Europe are never ending. The solvent countries are discovering what we discovered a year ago May. The cost of the six-country bailout we projected at $4 trillion. A month ago we increased that to $4 to $6 trillion. When we said $4 trillion Germany said $1 trillion. This past week they said $3.5 trillion. We wonder why it took them so long to catch up. As of this writing the Greeks have signed a bailout deal but the lenders still do not know what they want to do. They are finally reaching the realization that they cannot be serviced never mind be repaid. You can cut wages and spending 40% or 50% and not expect revenues to fall. That means the bankers get paid and no one else does. That is what Wall Street's game is all about.

US consumer sentiment deteriorated in early July to the lowest level since March 2009 on increasing pessimism over falling income and rising unemployment, a survey released on Friday showed.

Confidence in government economic policies also curdled, the Thomson Reuters/ University of Michigan survey showed. U.S. lawmakers are wrangling over a budget deal that would allow the government to raise the debt ceiling -- needed so the United States can fund its obligations next month.

The preliminary reading for the consumer sentiment index dropped to 63.8 in July from 71.5 the month before, falling far short of expectations of an increase to 72.5, according to a Reuters poll of economists.

The survey's barometer of current economic conditions fell to 76.3, the lowest since November 2009, from 82.0. The gauge of consumer expectations was also at its lowest since March 2009, tumbling to 55.8 from 64.8.

"Whenever the Expectations Index has been this low in the past, the economy has been in recession," survey director Richard Curtin said in a statement.

"Nonetheless, one month's data is insufficient to signal a renewed downturn, particularly if a last-minute agreement on the debt ceiling results in a partial restoration of confidence."

Overall, the data suggests real consumer spending in the second half of the year may be barely higher than the first half, the survey said.

The proportion of consumers that rated government economic policies as poor rose to 52 percent in early July, up from 40 percent in June.

The inflation outlook improved with the survey's one-year inflation expectation easing to 3.4 percent from 3.8. The five-to-10-year inflation outlook was at 2.8 percent from 3.0 percent.

The U.S. Federal Reserve's balance sheet grew to a record size in the week ended July 13 as the central bank bought more bonds in an attempt to support a fragile recovery, Fed data released on Thursday showed.

The central bank's $600 billion Treasury-buying scheme, known as QE2, ended on June 30. It now has to buy Treasuries under a program using the proceeds from maturing agency bonds and mortgage-backed securities.

The Fed's balance sheet -- a broad gauge of its lending to the financial system -- rose to $2.862 trillion in the week ended July 13 from $2.853 trillion in the week ended July 6.

Americans' access to basic needs, ranging from food and shelter to clean water and healthcare, has not significantly improved since the height of the recession, according to a Gallup study released on Friday.

The Basic Access Index, a 13-item measure of Americans' access to basic necessities, was at 82.0 in June, only slightly better than the low point of 81.5 recorded in February and March of 2009.

In June 2008, before the recession, the score was 83.6.

"The continued lack of recovery in the Basic Access Index metrics overall in 2011 shows that Americans are still lagging behind prior years in terms of their access to the basic necessities that foster a healthy, productive life," Dan Witters, a Gallup writer, said on its website.

The index is based on around 29,000 interviews conducted each month from January 2008 until June 2011.

The score's most recent movement is mainly due to large decreases in the percentage of adult Americans who have health insurance coverage, have a personal doctor, visited a dentist in the past year and have had enough money to buy food at all times in the last year.

There have also been small decreases in the percentage of Americans with enough money to provide adequate shelter.

Access to affordable fresh fruits and vegetables have made a significant 2.6 percent gain since June 2008. However, the 91.1 percentage is down from June 2010 when that rate was 92.8.

Federal officials have reached out to banks and investors to discuss the government's plans for its paying obligations after August 2 in the event the debt ceiling isn't raise, The Washington Post reports.

Among the options being considered to raise revenues while borrowing is prohibited, are the suspension of non-critical payments, and the sale of federally-owned student loans, mortgages, and even gold reserves.

The government is facing a $159 billion deficit in August, according to the Bipartisan Policy Center.

The Post is reporting that financial firms and investors were skeptical of the plans when briefed by Treasury Department officials, arguing there would be chaos in the markets due to speculators quick to scoop up valuable assets at low prices from a cash-starved government.

Rating agencies have said any partial default on its obligations, or steps to pay only some of the nation's bills could be met by a downgrade of federal debt — which would cause further economic turmoil.

Moody’s Investors Service said Wednesday it has put the U.S. government’s top-notch credit rating on review for a possible downgrade because of the risk that Washington will not raise the federal debt ceiling in time to avoid a default.

The firm added that even a brief failure of the government to pay its bills would mean that the United States's Aaa rating "would likely no longer be appropriate."

During a press briefing Wednesday, White House Press Secretary Jay Carney says President Obama expects a compromise on the debt deal, similar to the Clinton-Dole era.

U.S. Representative Barney Frank, a Massachusetts Democrat, talks about negotiations between lawmakers to raise the U.S. debt ceiling. Frank also discusses Federal Reserve Chairman Ben S. Bernanke's testimony today before Congress. He speaks with Michael McKee on Bloomberg Television's "Fast Forward." (Source: Bloomberg)

The announcement comes after Standard & Poor's, another of the major credit rating agencies, has said that it would dramatically downgrade the U.S. government's credit rating if payments were missed.

The U.S. has long been able to borrow money cheaply because global investors believe the government can be counted on to repay its debts. If credit rating agencies downgrade the U.S. and investors lose their faith in the creditworthiness of the government, the cost of borrowing money — in other words, the interest rate — could rise.

President Barack Obama abruptly walked out of a stormy debt-limit meeting with congressional leaders Wednesday, a dramatic setback to the already shaky negotiations, according to GOP sources.

On a day when the Moody's rating agency warned that American debt could be downgraded, the White House talks blew up amid a new round of sniping between Obama and Cantor, who are fast becoming bitter enemies.

Obama abruptly ended a tense budget meeting with Republican leaders by walking out of the room, a Republican aide familiar with the talks said.

The aide said the session was the most tense of the week as House of Representatives Speaker John Boehner, the top Republican in Congress, dismissed spending cuts offered by the White House as "gimmicks and accounting tricks."

JPMorgan Chase & Co. (JPM) Chief Executive Officer Jamie Dimon said clashes over faulty mortgages may drag on as investors and regulators demand compensation for soured loans issued at the peak of the housing market.

“There have been so many flaws in mortgages that it’s been an unmitigated disaster,” Dimon said during a conference call today. “We just really need to clean it up for the sake of everybody. And everybody is going to sue everybody else, and it’s going to go on for a long time.”

JPMorgan disclosed about $2.5 billion in second-quarter costs tied to faulty mortgages and foreclosures. The bank added $1.27 billion to litigation reserves, mostly for mortgage matters, and incurred $1 billion of expenses tied to foreclosures, according to a slide show accompanying today’s earnings report. Repurchase losses were $223 million, according to the company, which ranks second by assets among U.S. banks.

Banks are struggling to stanch losses tied to loans based on missing or wrong data about borrowers and properties and are facing probes of foreclosures that may have used falsified documents. Lenders led by Bank of America Corp. (BAC) have reimbursed investors for losses on mortgages, and New York-based JPMorgan said it has $3.3 billion in costs so far on repurchases from government-backed firms such as Fannie Mae.

JPMorgan’s additional litigation reserve may help cover “fees and assessments related to foreclosure delays and payments for other settlements,” including probes by the U.S. Department of Justice and the state attorneys general, the bank said. Litigation reserves also cover projected costs tied to so- called private-label mortgage bonds that may have contained faulty loans, the lender said.

“The private-label stuff will probably go up a little bit,” Dimon said when asked about future expenses to resolve disputes tied to the securities. “But I doubt it will go up more than the reserves we’re going to have to take down in the next 12 months.”

The litigation reserves aren’t earmarked for liabilities tied to Washington Mutual, the lender that JPMorgan acquired after it collapsed during the financial crisis in 2008. JPMorgan said those are the responsibility of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., adding that the “FDIC has contested this position.”

The outstanding balance of the Washington Mutual loans was approximately $70 billion as of March 31, with about $24 billion overdue by 60 days or more, according to JPMorgan’s first- quarter regulatory filing.

JPMorgan’s second-quarter net income climbed 13 percent to $5.43 billion as investment banking profit surged and more customers paid credit cards on time, the company said today. The lender advanced $1.08, or 2.7 percent, to $40.70 at 2:41 p.m. in New York Stock Exchange composite trading. The bank declined 6.6 percent this year through yesterday.

Central banks have bought more gold in the first half of this year than in all of 2010 as a long-anticipated reversal in so-called "official sector" sales gathers pace, a gold group reported on Thursday.

The World Gold Council provided no specific figures, but the rise will be little surprise after the so-called "official sector" became net buyers of bullion last year for the first time in two decades as a means to diversify their dollar holdings, a trend that has aided a long price rally.

"It was not a sudden shift. It was a trend that was gathering in pace as Europeans were starting to sell less and emerging markets and developing nations were starting to acquire more," Juan Carlos Artigas, WGC's investment research manager, said prior to the release of its quarterly Gold Investment Digest.

Mexico has led the charge this year in ramping up its gold reserves, buying over $4 billion of bullion in early May, while the International Monetary Fund has ended a one-year effort to sell down its stocks at the end of last year.

Global central banks as a whole bought 73 tonnes of gold in 2010, according to metals research firm GFMS Ltd, which has not released figures for this year. Net official-sector sales were 34 tonnes in 2009 and 235 tonnes in 2008.

Renewed central banks' interest in gold have powered the metal's record rally in the past few years, as lingering economic uncertainties and market stimulus by policymakers increased bullion's appeal as an alternative investment.

Central banks as a group became net buyers for the first time in the second quarter of 2008. On a yearly basis, official-sector buying swung to positive in 2010, the first time in more than two decades.

"In the same way, investors look to diversify their portfolios and find a way to manage risks effectively, gold has been one of the choices with central bankers especially in developing economies to create that balance," Artigas said.

Gold's average volatility was 13.4 percent for the second quarter, well below its long-term 20-year average of 15.8 percent, according to the WGC report.

WGC is a trade group funded by gold mining companies to spur bullion demand. It also sponsors SPDR Gold Trust , the world's largest gold-backed ETF which the group helped launch in 2004.

Artigas said that the positive trend of official-sector buying will likely continue in the near future.

"We believe that as a whole, central bank net buying is a result of the structural shift in reserve asset management," he said.

At least 7,000 top-rated municipal credits would have their ratings cut if the U.S. government loses its Aaa grade, Moody's Investors Service said.

An "automatic" downgrade affecting $130 billion in municipal debt directly linked to the U.S. would occur if the federal level is reduced, Moody's said yesterday in a report. Additionally, top-rated securities with no direct links to the national government will be reviewed for similar action.

Municipal debt including mortgage-backed bonds secured by the U.S. or agencies such as Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, would be trimmed with the federal government, Moody's said. It didn't provide a total value for other state and local credits that may be affected, including housing authorities and nonprofits.

"Between now and the end of July, we're going to evaluate all of those issuers using the same quantitative metrics that we have developed," Naomi Richman, Moody's managing director of public finance, said yesterday by telephone from New York about the indirectly linked securities.

"In the event that the U.S. government is downgraded, we won't automatically downgrade those," she said. "We'll do a full review that we would normally do on a state rating."

Moody's put the U.S. rating under review as talks stalled in Washington on raising the government's $14.3 trillion debt limit. Democrats including President Barack Obama want to raise taxes to curb the national deficit while congressional Republicans have sought deeper spending cuts.

The company rates 15 states at Aaa. It also gives top marks to 440 local governments, 100 state housing bond programs, 43 higher-education and nonprofit institutions, a like number of state revolving-fund bond programs, and the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Bonneville Power Administration.

Issuers that are partially dependent on the federal government, such as states receiving Medicaid matching funds, also will be reviewed for vulnerability. Medicaid is a health-care program for the poor that is jointly funded by the states and the U.S. Moody's said Aaa-rated states on average rely on the federal government for a quarter of total spending.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: A fate worse than debt ceiling

Title: A fate worse than debt ceiling

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 01:35 AM (GMT)

A fate worse than debt ceiling

Republicans find themselves trapped between the tea party and increasingly hostile public opinion over a US debt ceiling deal http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/richard-ad...icans-tea-party

Starting a war is one thing but ending it is an entirely different matter, as Republicans in Congress are discovering in the fight over raising the US debt ceiling.

Republicans marched into battle with the Obama administration over the debt limit confident of exploiting their political strength and public concern over the size of the US budget deficit.

But after firing off most of their ammunition with little to show for it, the GOP is finding that US public opinion remains unimpressed, and has shifted towards the White House the longer the campaign has gone on.

Most Americans, it seems, want a debt deal to be done that includes increases in government revenues – or taxes, if you prefer – as well as cuts. Overall, opinion is hardening in favour of a deal of some sort. According to at least one poll, a majority wants a debt ceiling deal even if they don't like it themselves:

Two-thirds of all Americans want an agreement to contain both spending cuts and tax increases, including majorities across party lines, and most would prefer that lawmakers reach an agreement, even if it's one respondents do not fully support, rather than have the United States default.

A poll from CBS News this week found that just 21% of those surveyed approved of the way the Republicans have behaved, with 71% disapproving. Even among Republicans surveyed, 51% said they didn't like how their party had handled the negotiations in Congress.

Another new poll for the Washington Post and ABC found very similar results:

There is also growing dissatisfaction among Republicans with the hard-line stance of their congressional representatives: 58% say their leaders are not doing enough to strike a deal, up from 42% in March.

It's true that Democrats or President Obama don't come out well either. But the polls suggest the GOP will bear much of the brunt of blame for any failure to raise the debt limit.

Republicans can read opinion polls as well as anyone else, and enough of them know that the party in Congress is treading a very fine line – and are equally well aware of what happened during Newt Gingrich's damaging budget battles with the Clinton administration.

The problem for the GOP is how to rein in its more enthusiastic foot soldiers.

When the likes of Michele Bachmann won't even vote for the leaderhsip's carefully-focus-grouped "cut, cap and balance" policy in Congress because it doesn't go far enough, and rejects any raising of the debt ceiling, then the dangers are obvious.

Mitch McConnell, the Republican leader in the Senate, has a plan that could work – but it would struggle to get passed the Republican dominated House over the opposition of tea party supporters. The Senate's so-called Gang of Six plan has similar problems – especially once Obama himself gave it qualified support, thus making it toxic for some Republicans.

(By the way, if you're not confused by the variety of competing plans, then you should be. The New York Times has a handy guide to all eight – yes, eight – right here.)

Could a debt default still happen? Yes, it's a possibility – a small but non-negligible possibility. With the 2 August default deadline getting closer, the pressure will increase for a deal, any deal. But whether the red-meat conservatives in the House of Representatives have a rush of sanity remains to be seen – or at least if enough of them do to pass whatever deal finally emerges from the Senate.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Ratings agencies running the show in Ireland and Title: Ratings agencies running the show in Ireland and Description: Europe

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 01:30 AM (GMT)

Ratings agencies running the show in Ireland and Europe

It seems like madness that the credit ratings are running the show across Europe and the US, but they are not to blame for the debt crisis, says guest blogger, economist Megan Greene

http://www.guardian.co.uk/business/ireland...-ireland-europe

The three main credit ratings agencies—Moody's, Fitch and Standard & Poor's—are heavily influencing fiscal policy in the eurozone and the United States. Objectively, this is madness. That is what finance ministries and departments are for. Still, the credit ratings agencies are not to be blamed for the debt crises in the euro area or the US. Why do we care what they say?

Having completely dropped the ball and failed to predict the global financial crisis that kicked off in 2008, the main three credit ratings agencies lost significant credibility. Rather than rely on the big ratings agencies, a number of buy-side investment firms have established their own research teams.

If the credit ratings agencies have been asleep at the wheel and investors are doing more of their own research in-house, why does anyone care what the credit ratings agencies say?

First, a downgrade by a credit ratings agency or a negative outlook provides a tangible signal for investors when intangible things—such as political negotiations—are going badly. Second, ratings downgrades can trigger huge sell-offs for funds that passively track indices based on the big agencies' ratings.

To compensate for being behind the curve at the outset of the global financial crisis, it seems the three agencies have been over-eager to downgrade or threaten to downgrade countries in Europe and the US in recent weeks.
Flurry of downgrades in Europe

On 5 July, Moody's downgraded Portugal to junk status with a negative outlook. A week later on 12 July, Moody's downgraded Ireland to junk with a negative outlook as well. On 13 July, Fitch downgraded Greece to a rating of CCC, just above default.

These downgrades came at seemingly random times. The press release to announce Portugal's downgrade spoke primarily of developments in Greece. The presser accompanying Ireland's downgrade referred mostly to developments at the EU level. Fitch's downgrade of Greece occurred just after EU leaders and the IMF had committed to agreeing a second bailout for the country, a positive development by all accounts.

The specific timings of the downgrades seemed random, but they did reflect two aspects of the euro crisis that EU leaders themselves have not yet managed to fully grasp: the swiftness and force with which the euro crisis can spread from one country to another and the role that dithering at the EU level serves to catalyse this.

The credit ratings agencies have put significant pressure on peripheral eurozone countries already snapping under the weight of harsh austerity programmes. They are also influencing fiscal policy at the EU level. Earlier this month, the main agencies poured cold water on a number of different proposals for involving the private sector in a second bailout package for Greece.

Livid about the influence of the main ratings agencies on investors, European commission president Jose Emanuel Barroso and other policy makers have called for the creation of a European rating agency. The most common argument is that the three main ratings agencies are all based in the US, and therefore have vested interests that are not aligned with those of the EU.

In reality, only Moody's and Standard & Poor's are based in the US, while Fitch is majority owned by a French company.

Influence in the US

Furthermore, the three main agencies have proven they are willing to ruffle feathers in the US as well, despite their investor base being largely American.

On 13 July, Moody's placed the US on a negative watch and said it would downgrade the country if the US missed any debt payments. A few days later, Standard & Poor's also warned there was a 50-50 chance it would downgrade the US if a deal on increasing the US debt ceiling is not agreed soon. On 18 July, Fitch jumped on the bandwagon to say that failure to reach a deal on the debt ceiling by 2 August would cause it to place the US on negative watch.

The past week has been characterized by tense negotiations between the Republicans and the Obama administration about the debt ceiling, but there has been no particular spark to justify this recent flurry of ratings agency threats. Instead, it seems the three main agencies aim to put pressure on US politicians to find agreement on the debt ceiling.
Still not to blame

While the credit ratings agencies arguably have too much influence over fiscal policy in the eurozone and the US and a downgrade or a threat to downgrade can influence markets, the agencies cannot be blamed for the debt crises on either side of the Atlantic.

As a country comes under pressure in the markets, the onus is on that country's government to ensure that it implements the policies necessary to restore confidence in credit ratings agencies and investors alike.

Downgrades by credit ratings agencies, no matter how spurious the timing may seem, cannot be considered a fundamental cause of the debt crisis in either Europe or the US. Perhaps Citibank's chief economist Willem Buiter put it best when he said that blaming the credit ratings agencies was like throwing out a thermometer just because it showed you had a fever. No good comes of shooting the messenger.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Wall Street paralysed by US debt talks

Title: Wall Street paralysed by US debt talks

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 01:28 AM (GMT)

Wall Street paralysed by US debt talks

Wall Street was reduced to a state of virtual paralysis on Wednesday, as hopes of Congress striking a multi-trillion dollar deal to avoid a US default changed by the hour.

By Richard Blackden, US Business Editor
9:00PM BST 20 Jul 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/finance/economi...debt-talks.html

The S&P 500 and the Dow Jones Industrial Average opened higher in New York as President Barack Obama voiced his support for a last-ditch plan proposed by a group of Senators.

But a volatile day's trading saw markets give up those gains as it became clear that the plan – which calls for a $3.7trillion (£2.29 trillion) cut in the deficit – would fail to win backing in the Republican-controlled House of Representatives. The S&P closed down 0.89 - just under 0.1pc - at 1,325.84, while the Dow ended the day down 15.51 - 0.1pc - at 12,571.91.

The White House and Republicans and Democrats in Congress have 10 days to raise America's $14.3trillion debt ceiling. Failure to do so would see the government default on its debts, which Federal Reserve chairman Ben Bernanke has warned would be a catastrophe.

Investors' confidence that politicians would avoid that outcome has dwindled as the deadline approaches.

"There's no real way to come up with a trading strategy right now," said Jim Vogel, an analyst at FTN Financial in New York. "So many pieces of the puzzle on being recut every single hour."

The confusion on Wall Street has intensified as the main debt talks in Washington have been joined by parallel efforts in the Senate and the House. The $3.7trillion plan devised by a group dubbed the Gang of Six in the Senate calls for a mix of spending cuts and tax increases.

Republicans warned yesterday that there's little chance of tax rises winning support in the House, which on Tuesday voted 234-190 in favour of a plan that would see spending cuts do all the work. President Obama said that "the problem we have now is we're in the 11th hour and we don't have a lot more time left."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Eurozone has liquidity - and that should buy us

Title: Eurozone has liquidity - and that should buy us
Description: some time [DOWN WITH THE EURO]

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 01:28 AM (GMT)

Eurozone has liquidity - and that should buy us some time

Few disasters have been so well trailed, or firmly predicted, as Europe's sovereign debt blow-up.

By Damian Reece
9:11PM BST 20 Jul 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/finance/comment...-some-time.html

Mutually assured destruction seems inevitable as Europe's power blocs come to blows on Thursday. Sarkozy, Merkel, Trichet are fiddling while Rome, not to mention Athens, burns.

But if Armageddon is approaching, markets are remarkably calm – with the exception of peripheral eurozone debt markets, such as Greece, where two-year yields broke through 40pc.

Surely, if Europe's debt crisis is as real as received wisdom suggests then it ought to be every bit as bad as the credit crunch of 2008 and the collapse of Lehman Brothers. Yet the dislocation in markets is nothing like that of three years ago.

Back then we were as familiar with widening Libor spreads as we were with the latest football results. Stockmarkets were replaced as the barometer of crisis by interbank lending markets as liquidity dried up. The system ran out of cash.

If worries over the creditworthiness of mere banks could bring the monetary system to its knees in 2008, what havoc will the creditworthiness of governments, such as those in Greece, Ireland, even Italy, have on the banking system now?

The short answer is remarkably little. The interbank markets are awash with cash. Based on the experience of three years ago, today's sovereign crisis ought to have shut the cash machines some time ago as confidence collapsed around fears of a sovereign default and subsequent banking crisis.

But that's not happening.

To be fair there is some tension now being detected in money markets.

Rates in the overnight unsecured euro cash markets have widened, in a process traders call "name tiering". Different banks are charged different rates of interest to borrow overnight money. Normally it's a tight range of 10 to 15 basis points (bp). But recently that range has widened to 50bp with a high of 130bp being charged and a low of 80bp as individual banks' creditworthiness come under the microscope.

Another indication that the interbank markets are getting cooler, if not the 2008 freeze up, is the European Central Bank's main refinancing operation (MRO). Last Wednesday the ECB made available €153bn (£135bn) of cash to banks looking to refinance short-term funding. Wednesday's weekly allotment was €197bn. That's the highest level since February and the €44bn week-on-week increase was a big leap. At 150bp it's not cheap money either. Banks are either going to the ECB because they can't get the cash they need elsewhere, and they know the ECB accepts a wider range of collateral than more stringent commercial counterparts. Or banks are making a dash for cash ahead of Thursday's summit.

Another sign of increased tension is the major cash investors, such as the US money market mutual funds, which are seeing their own clients moving into much shorter dated securities and moving funds away from European issuers to ones closer to home. They see European debt yields as too low given the risks emerging.

But there's no stampede. Interbank rates are broadly stable. In fact contract prices in the three-month euro interbank offered rate (euribor) fell on Wednesday, sending rates up. At the beginning of July the rate was 1.56pc. On Wednesday it closed at 1.6pc on the expectation of higher interest rates in Europe. If the world really was going to end on Thursday then the opposite would be true on the expectation that the ECB would be slashing rates. That said, the ECB has got it wrong before, most famously in, ahem, 2008 when it raised rates before the Lehman collapse.

What the money markets are expecting from Merkel & Co is that Greece gets some more money and lower rates on its debt while the European Financial Stability Facility is extended so it can buy more sovereign debt.

Clearly, however, there is political risk, hence tensions in money markets are beginning to surface. The ECB fundamentally wants to avoid a Greek default as that would have solvency implications for itself. Some politicians, however, may be less squeamish about creditors sharing the pain. The biggest difference with 2008 is the amount of cash in the system, be it banks' own liquidity buffers having been forced up by regulators, or the liquidity being made available by central banks. At the very least that buys the system time, should things deteriorate from here. Two months? Two weeks? I don't know. But markets are better prepared this time, but time is certainly running out.

damian.reece@telegraph.co.uk

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Eurozone leaders set for crunch debt summit

Title: Eurozone leaders set for crunch debt summit

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:46 AM (GMT)

Eurozone leaders set for crunch debt summit

Angela Merkel wants private investors to share taxpayers' burden if Greece restructures its debts

20 July 2011 Last updated at 22:30
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/business-14219976

Eurozone leaders will meet on Thursday for a crunch summit to try to resolve the Greek debt crisis and prevent any further contagion to other so-called peripheral economies.

Policymakers will discuss a range of measures, including a new loan package to Greece and the role of private investors in any debt restructuring.

Reports suggest a new tax on banks will also be debated.

But German Chancellor Angela Merkel has cautioned against over optimism.
'Very serious'

Greece received its first aid package in May last year, but the debt crisis continues to undermine confidence in global financial markets, with some commentators suggesting it threatens the future of the euro itself.

Politicians and investors are calling for decisive action to help bring the crisis to an end.

"Nobody should be under any illusion; the situation is very serious," European Commission President Jose Manuel Barroso said on Wednesday.

"It requires a response. Otherwise, the negative consequences will be felt in all corners of Europe and beyond."

The Governor of the Bank of England, Sir Mervyn King, has said that the crisis in the eurozone posed the most serious and immediate risk to the UK's financial system.

President Barack Obama has also weighed in, calling Mrs Merkel on Tuesday night to stress the importance of tackling the debt crisis in sustaining the global economic recovery.

The International Monetary Fund has also called on European leaders to take swift and decisive action.

Delaying such action further would be "very costly" for the world economy, it said.
Spending cuts

However, there are divisions among policymakers about the best way to resolve the crisis.

There appears to be consensus on the need for a new loan agreement, analysts say, thought to be similar in size to the 110bn euro ($156bn; £97bn) package agreed last year.

However, there is also a growing consensus that this will merely act a sticking plaster, and that the fundamental problem of Greece's indebtedness needs to be addressed.

Athens has already implemented a raft of wide ranging austerity measures, including spending cuts and tax rises, and earlier this month agreed to further drastic action to cut its debt.
Bank tax

But there is a growing sense that these will not be enough. The only way to resolve the problem is to restructure Greece's debts, many observers argue.

Germany has proposed allowing Athens more time to repay, effectively rolling over existing debts into new bonds.

It wants private investors, largely banks, to participate in this restructuring.

But the European Central Bank has strongly opposed this plan, arguing that such a rollover would constitute a default in the eyes of the international credit ratings agencies and, as such, would undermine investor confidence and the euro itself.

An alternative way get private investors to contribute to any aid package would be to introduce a new bank tax.

Reports suggest leaders will discuss precisely such a tax, even though this would prove hugely unpopular with the banks.

It is these divisions that explain Mrs Merkel's attempts to dampen expectations ahead of the summit.

The summit will take place in Brussels at 1300 local time

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Interest rate rise unlikely in near term, says

Title: Interest rate rise unlikely in near term, says
Description: Bank

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:41 AM (GMT)

Interest rate rise unlikely in near term, says Bank

The Bank of England has now held interest rates at 0.5% for more than two years

20 July 2011 Last updated at 12:03
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/business-14214630

There is a reduced chance of a rise in interest rates in the near term, given recent economic weakness, Bank of England policymakers have said.

Minutes from its July meeting showed the Monetary Policy Committee voted seven to two in favour of holding rates at 0.5% for the second month in a row.

Spencer Dale and Martin Weale voted again to raise rates to 0.75%

Adam Posen again voted to increase the Bank's quantitative easing programme by £50bn to a total of £250bn.

The voting pattern came as no surprise as the MPC has been split on monetary policy for some time.

From February to May, three members had voted to raise rates - Mr Spencer, Mr Weale and Andrew Sentance.

Mr Sentance, who had been the MPC's most hawkish member, having voted to raise rates to 1%, was replaced after the May meeting by Ben Broadbent, a former Goldman Sachs economist .

Mr Broadbent voted to hold rates in both June and July.

Eurozone risks

The MPC said business surveys had pointed towards "continued modest underlying economic growth in the second quarter", but some softening in the outlook for the third quarter, in both manufacturing and services.

It said the risks posed by an escalation of the eurozone debt crisis remained "substantial".

"The funding costs faced by the major UK banks remained elevated, in part reflecting those risks emanating from within the euro area, and were likely to continue to affect the price and availability of credit to many households and businesses adversely," the minutes said.

"Recent developments had reduced the likelihood that a tightening in policy would be warranted in the near term," it added.

David Kern, chief economist at the British Chambers of Commerce, said if rates were kept on hold until early 2012 it would be a welcome development.

"With wage pressures remaining modest, and with businesses and consumers facing acute pressures, it is right to wait before raising rates," he said.

"At present, only one member of the committee has voted for increasing the QE programme, but if the economy continues to shows sign of weakness in the next few months, the MPC should consider this option more seriously to avoid a setback."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: UK bank ring-fencing plans 'unclear'

Title: UK bank ring-fencing plans 'unclear'

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:37 AM (GMT)

UK bank ring-fencing plans 'unclear'

The ICB was set up to review UK banks after the financial crisis

20 July 2011 Last updated at 11:52
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/business-14217988

Proposals to ring-fence retail banking in the UK need to be more clearly spelled out, MPs have said.

The Treasury Committee raised a number of concerns, including the effect ring-fencing would have on the competitiveness of UK banking and the cost of credit to business.

The Independent Commission on Banking (ICB) put forward its proposals in its interim report in April.

But the committee said a number of areas required further consideration.

One area highlighted by the committee is how corporate governance in banks could be improved to enhance the stability of the financial system.

Andrew Tyrie, the committee's chairman, said the failure of the ICB to address this issue in its interim report was "a serious omission".

The ICB, chaired by Sir John Vickers, was set up by the government last year to look at reforms in the banking sector in the wake of the financial crisis.

It will publish its final recommendations in September, though they are not binding on the government.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Number of Scottish people going bust rises by 25%

Title: Number of Scottish people going bust rises by 25%
Description: [SOUND LIKE A RECOVERY TO YOU? HAHAHA]

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:33 AM (GMT)

Number of Scottish people going bust rises by 25%

The number of personal bankruptcies rose at the start of the year

20 July 2011 Last updated at 15:04
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-scotland-scot...siness-14214320

The number of people going bust in Scotland rose by a quarter in the first few months of this year, according to official figures.

The Accountant in Bankruptcy said more than 5,000 people were declared insolvent between April and June.

That figure was up 25% on the previous quarter, but down 1% on the same period last year.

The number of people opting for the voluntary protected trust deed to help write off their debts rose up by 51%.

A trust deed is an alternative to bankruptcy for people unable to repay their debts. It involves a monthly payment arrangement with some creditors and often involves some of the debt being written-off.

Meanwhile, the number of companies declared insolvent increased by 17% to 343 in the first quarter of 2011/12.

Enterprise Minister Fergus Ewing said: "While these new figures mark an increase in personal bankruptcies this quarter, I am encouraged that there has been reduction on levels when compared to this time last year.

"The recent increase in individual bankruptcies can perhaps be explained by the success of the Certificate for Sequestration, introduced in November last year through the Home Owner and Debtor Protection Act to help people in need of debt relief who previously didn't qualify."

Bryan Jackson, corporate recovery partner with accountants PKF, said it appeared that the better-off were now being hit hardest.

"Whilst the savings on mortgage payments have undoubtedly delayed the rise in bankruptcies among more affluent Scots, it is clear that many have been simply treading water, only barely able to keep afloat financially," he said.

"Now we are starting to see very high increases in the numbers being made bankrupt, which is likely to be among those who have had severe debts which they have been maintaining but not reducing - and increased living costs have pushed them over the edge."

He predicted that the number of bankruptcies would continue to rise for some time, adding: "Given that we have yet to see full implementation of public sector job cuts, these figures would tend to indicate the start of a trend rather than the end."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Obama Open to Short-Term Debt Increase

Title: Obama Open to Short-Term Debt Increase

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:33 AM (GMT)

Obama Open to Short-Term Debt Increase

By Kate Andersen Brower and Julie Hirschfeld Davis - Jul 21, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-07-20/d...umes-talks.html

The Obama administration signaled it may accept a short-term increase in the U.S. debt limit only if lawmakers need a few days to finish work on a broader agreement to cut the deficit.

President Barack Obama “must have a firm commitment to something big” on cutting the deficit before he would sign a short-term rise in the debt ceiling, White House spokesman Jay Carney told reporters at a briefing. He released a written statement later saying Obama “does not support a short-term extension” unless “a few days” are needed “for a bill to work its way through the legislative process.”

The president called congressional leaders to the White House today as the Aug. 2 deadline for raising the $14.3 trillion debt limit nears.

Obama met today for just under an hour with Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, second-ranking Senate Democrat Dick Durbin, House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi and second-ranking House Democrat Steny Hoyer. That meeting followed by a session of about 90 minutes with Speaker John Boehner and Majority Leader Eric Cantor, the top two House Republicans. Obama spoke by telephone with congressional leaders from both parties yesterday, Carney said.
Matter of Timing

Durbin said afterward that it’s “not practical” to write and pass legislation based on a $3.7 trillion deficit-cutting plan proposed by a bipartisan group of senators in time to meet the debt-ceiling deadline.

“Let’s be honest about this,” Durbin said at the Capitol. “It’s not written, it’s not scored, and we are down to 13 days.”

Reid is open to incorporating it in debt limit legislation “by reference,” perhaps directing a later deficit-reduction vote or turning the matter over to a new joint committee, he said.

Senator Tom Coburn, an Oklahoma Republican who helped negotiate the proposal, said he wants Congress to “go all-out” to accomplish cutting spending and raising the debt limit.

“My preference would be that we go all-out to try to accomplish this, to solve the problem,” Coburn said in an interview on Bloomberg Television. He acknowledged the resistance that the plan from the so-called Gang of Six senators faces within his own party: “We have made changes that some people cannot accept,” Coburn said.
Shares Slip

The Standard & Poor’s 500 Index slipped 0.1 percent to 1,325.84 in New York, a day after its biggest rally since March. A drop in Treasuries sent the 10-year yield up five basis points to 2.94 percent, erasing yesterday’s decrease.

Kent Conrad, a North Dakota Democrat and chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, said on Bloomberg Television that lawmakers have drafted legislation for the Senate proposal that could advance more quickly than some observers believe.

The plan, which calls for tax increases and spending cuts, was gaining momentum on Capitol Hill, where Republican lawmakers who have opposed using increased revenue to shrink the deficit said they were seriously looking at it.

“There are some good things in there,” Representative Dave Camp of Michigan, the Republican chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee, said in an interview. “I certainly like the lower rates and a simpler tax code, but I do think that revenue increases are an issue that we’ll have to deal with. We’re just not going to increase taxes.”

Republican Senator Marco Rubio of Florida, a fiscal conservative elected last year with Tea Party backing, said he too was looking at the plan to see whether he could support something that envisions $1 trillion more revenue.
‘Benefit of the Doubt’

“They would argue that this is not a tax increase, so I want to give them the benefit of the doubt,” Rubio said in an interview.

House Armed Services Committee Chairman Howard “Buck” McKeon said in a memo to Republicans on the panel that he doesn't support the proposal "in its current form" because it would mandate $886 billion in defense and other security spending cuts over a decade. He also said he objected to the plan's proposal to change military retirement benefits.

The proposal would require Senate committees to produce legislation to reduce spending and raise revenue. The Senate Finance Committee would be instructed to lower tax rates, eliminate the alternative minimum tax, and "reform" tax breaks for health care, charitable giving and homeownership.
Tax Brackets

The outline calls for three individual income tax brackets with a top rate between 23 percent and 29 percent, down from 35 percent today. The corporate rate would drop to a single rate of between 23 percent and 29 percent, down from a top rate of 35 percent today. The tax system would need to retain its current progressivity and retain benefits for low-income workers such as the earned income tax credit.

Some lawmakers hold out hope for the compromise offered by three Senate Republicans and three Democrats after months of opposition to new revenue among House Republicans.

"The fact that Republicans are coming out for revenues is certainly something of a breakthrough. They haven't done that before," Senator Charles Schumer, a New York Democrat, said today. "We hope it shows they're willing to compromise. But of course we are running out of time. We need to assure the world we will not default on our debt."

While House Republican leaders indicated a willingness to consider the proposal, they and other members of their fiscally conservative caucus continue to stress opposition to more taxes.

"Tax increases aren't going to fly in the House," said Representative Kevin Brady, a Texas Republican and a member of the Ways and Means Committee.
Backup Plan

That suggests a backup plan along the lines of one still being worked out by Reid and Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell may offer the best chance for a compromise before Aug. 2, when the Treasury Department says the government will hit the debt limit. The plan would give Obama $2.4 trillion in new borrowing authority in installments.

Carney said that while the bigger accord is still possible, "we have to make sure there's a backup plan."

More than a dozen Senate Republicans have signed a bipartisan letter of support for the gang's efforts, said Senator John Hoeven of North Dakota.

Most Republican leaders have been noncommittal, yet have signaled openness to some of the plan's elements. Only one, third-ranking Republican Senator Lamar Alexander of Tennessee, has endorsed the plan.

Step Forward

"In this Congress, with this president, from the Republican point of view, this would be a big step forward," Alexander said.

An NBC News/Wall Street Journal poll released yesterday showed that most Americans favor Obama's approach to a compromise rather than Republicans' position. According to the survey, conducted July 14-17, 58 percent backed Obama's push for reducing the deficit by $4 trillion over the next decade through a combination of budget cuts and a tax increase, while 36 percent supported the Republican proposal to shave the deficit by $2.5 trillion solely by reining in spending. The poll's error margin is plus-or-minus 3.1 percentage points.

The plan released yesterday by the Senate's Gang of Six, led by Republican Saxby Chambliss of Georgia and Democrat Mark Warner of Virginia, proposes $500 billion in immediate spending cuts.

It then lays out targets and enforcement mechanisms for compelling future reductions, including between $85 billion and $202 billion in Medicare and other health spending, $80 billion from defense, $70 billion from education and labor programs and $11 billion from agriculture programs, according to a summary.

Tax Overhaul

It calls for a broad tax overhaul that would raise $1 trillion by limiting breaks for health, charitable giving, home ownership and retirement, while lowering individual and corporate tax rates. It would scrap the Alternative Minimum Tax, a system designed to prevent higher-earners from avoiding taxes.

Colorado Democratic Senator Michael Bennet said the proposal is the "best bipartisan plan that we've seen -- the only one." Members of both parties in the Senate are pushing for an agreement that avoids a government default, Bennet said on Bloomberg TV.

"'No' is not an answer for the American people," he said.

McConnell was noncommittal. "I don't have an opinion yet," he told reporters yesterday.

Boehner, an Ohio Republican, also tempered his reaction. The "plan shares many similarities with the framework" Boehner has discussed with Obama "but also appears to fall short in some important areas," Boehner's spokesman, Michael Steel, said in an e-mail yesterday.

Credit-Default Swaps

The cost of insuring Treasuries with credit-default swaps for five years fell to the lowest in a week, declining 1.7 basis points to 52.5 basis points as of 2:30 p.m. in New York, according to data provider CMA, which is owned by CME Group Inc. and compiles prices quoted by dealers in the privately negotiated market.

Reid said today he will schedule a test vote for July 23 on a plan by House Republicans to raise the debt limit only if Congress approves a balanced-budget constitutional amendment. Senate Democrats say the plan won't pass in their chamber. Reid said the vote may be held earlier if members agree.

To contact the reporters on this story: Kate Andersen Brower in Washington at kandersen7@bloomberg.net; Julie Hirschfeld Davis in Washington at Jdavis159@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Mark Silva at msilva@bloomberg.net

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: EU Said to Weigh Bailout Fund Use for Emergency

Title: EU Said to Weigh Bailout Fund Use for Emergency Description: Credit to Thwart Contagion

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:31 AM (GMT)

EU Said to Weigh Bailout Fund Use for Emergency Credit to Thwart Contagion

By James G. Neuger - Jul 20, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-07-20/e...-contagion.html

European officials are considering steps previously rejected by Germany, including the use of precautionary credit lines, to prevent the spread of the region's debt crisis, a person close to the talks said.

Other options up for discussion at tomorrow's Brussels summit include enabling the main 440 billion euro ($626 billion) rescue fund to lend to recapitalize banks, said the person, who declined to be named because negotiations are in progress. Nothing will be decided until leaders convene.

Together with a second Greek aid package, the goal is to prove to markets that Europe has the will and the tools to prevent the 21-month sovereign debt crisis from engulfing Spain and Italy. The euro today rose against the dollar for a second day and Spanish and Italian bonds also gained as investors signaled optimism that policy makers are moving toward a deal. The cost of insuring against default on the sovereign debt of Greece, Portugal, Italy and Spain declined.

"There needs to be a program with a certain amount of shock and awe to impress the market that the leaders are on top of the crisis," said Robin Marshall, a London-based money manager at Smith & Williamson Investment Management in London.

(For a related story on Greek Prime Minister George Papandreou's view of the summit, click here. To read a story on the German-French pre-summit meeting, click here. For a story on how the euro-area debt crisis may affect Iceland's accession plans, click here.)
'Very Serious'

European Commission President Jose Barroso said the Greek situation is “very serious” and requires a response. “Otherwise, the negative consequences will be felt in all corners of Europe and beyond.”

The start of tomorrow’s summit was delayed by an hour to 1 p.m. to allow more time for preparations, an EU official said. A working group meeting of euro-area officials was also pushed back to 9 a.m. tomorrow from 6 p.m. today, the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity because negotiations are still under way.

Talk of new rescue measures raises the pressure on German Chancellor Angela Merkel, who vetoed proposals to put more weapons in the rescue fund’s arsenal earlier this year amid misplaced optimism that Greece was turning the corner.

Merkel will meet today with French president Nicolas Sarkozy, who has swayed her stance on crisis-fighting in the past. U.S. President Barack Obama weighed in yesterday on a phone call with his German counterpart during which they agreed Europe needed to deal with its problems “effectively.”
More Flexibility

Discussions of more flexibility for the European Financial Stability Facility come on the heels of last month’s accord to boost its lending power to its original target. International Monetary Fund-style credit lines would better enable countries with stronger fundamentals than Greece to ward off speculative attacks.

Rescues for Ireland and Portugal partly funded by the EFSF already include some funds for helping banks, while Greece’s separate program also earmarks aid for its banks. Greater support for European banks may be necessary after stress tests on 90 left as many as 24 under pressure to show they can raise capital. Investors said Deutsche Bank AG, UniCredit SpA and Societe Generale SA should consider boosting capital after scraping through the probes.
‘Make-or-Break’

As floated by finance ministers on July 11, the leaders will also look at empowering the EFSF to buy bonds in the secondary market and to enable crisis-hit countries to buy back their own debt, measures that may help reduce nations’ borrowing burdens. Spanish Finance Minister Elena Salgado, who is battling to prevent the crisis from engulfing her country, today said she supported such steps.

The extra yield that investors demand to hold 10-year Spanish bonds over German bunds rose to a euro era record of 367 basis points on July 18. The Italian spread hit 332 basis points.

Credit-default swaps on Greece, which decline as investor confidence improves, dropped 138 basis points to 2,361 as of 2:30 p.m. in New York, according to data provider CMA.

Contracts protecting the debt of Ireland tumbled 90.5 to 1,066 basis points, Portugal decreased 78 to 1103, and Spain fell 18 to 340, while Italy declined 17.8 to 287.5, according to CMA, which is owned by CME Group Inc. and compiles prices quoted by dealers in the privately negotiated market.
Beyond Greece

With Greek Prime Minister George Papandreou saying in an interview yesterday that leaders face a “make-or-break” moment at the summit, success hinges on going beyond a second Greek package, which national officials continue to work on today. The IMF said yesterday that Greece’s crisis still risks contaminating the rest of the euro region even if officials avert a default there.

The main sticking point is how to get bondholders and banks to foot a share of the bill without sparking a new wave of financial turmoil. European Central Bank President Jean-Claude Trichet says any default risks sparking a crisis on a par with the collapse of Lehman Brothers Holdings Inc. German policy makers, who are reluctant to keep forcing their taxpayers to aid the spendthrift, signal a restructuring may be unavoidable.

EU officials are aiming to narrow down a list of options to be presented to the leaders in Brussels, the person familiar with the talks said. Sarkozy and Merkel will meet for talks and dinner in Berlin, repeating the one-on-one talks the leaders of the two-largest euro-area economies have adopted in the past when trying to steer their region out of trouble.

One approach would see governments taxing financial institutions to fund a new bailout in addition to a voluntary rollover of Greek debt, according to an EU paper obtained by Bloomberg News. The other two options in the document involve either a partial or outright default.

To contact the reporters on this story: James G. Neuger in Brussels at jneuger@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: John Fraher at jfraher@bloomberg.net

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Papandreou Sees Make-or-Break Time in Debt Crisis

Title: Papandreou Sees Make-or-Break Time in Debt Crisis
Description: on Eve of Europe Summit

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:30 AM (GMT)

Papandreou Sees Make-or-Break Time in Debt Crisis on Eve of Europe Summit

By Maria Petrakis - Jul 20, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-07-19/p...ope-summit.html

Greek Prime Minister George Papandreou says Europe's leaders need to show tomorrow that they can resolve the European Union debt crisis to avoid a contagion enveloping Italy and Spain.

"It could be a make-or-break moment for where Europe is going," Papandreou said during an interview in his Athens office at Parliament yesterday. "Markets are saying pretty much what I'm saying too: that Greece is doing what it can, but that Greece is not going to be able to carry the weight of all of Europe and the other problems that Europe has."

Papandreou plans to meet with EU leaders in Brussels tomorrow as officials struggle to agree on measures to restore confidence in the euro region's creditworthiness after the last year's financial rescue of Greece. Policy makers are divided on how to prod investors into financing a new bailout package and whether the 17-nation euro area should issue eurobonds to help debt-laden nations across the bloc tap markets.

German Chancellor Angela Merkel said yesterday Europe's fiscal crisis can't be solved in one go. European officials are considering steps previously rejected by Germany, including the use of precautionary credit lines, to help stabilize the region's debt market, a person close to the talks said.

"Nobody should be under any illusion; the situation is very serious," European Commission President Jose Barroso told reporters in Brussels today. "It requires a response. Otherwise, the negative consequences will be felt in all corners of Europe and beyond."

Rising Yields

Spanish and Italian 10-year bond yields have climbed more than 70 basis points since the end of June and the Treasury in Madrid said yesterday it sold 3.8 billion euros ($5.4 billion) of 12-month bills at a yield of 3.702 percent, up from 2.695 percent the last time the securities were sold on June 14. The yield on two-year Greek notes rose above 40 percent earlier today for the first time.

"We have to look at the wider issues," Papandreou said. "If the spreads in Italy and in Spain go up, these are questions that Greece is not going to solve solving its internal deficiencies, which it's doing."

The extra yield that investors demand to hold 10-year Italian bonds over German bunds rose to a euro-era record of 332 basis points on July 18. The Spanish spread hit 367. The premium on Greek debt was 1,556 basis points.

Political Survival

The 59-year-old premier battled for political survival in June as the EU and International Monetary Fund held back approval of a 12 billion-euro payment in return for parliamentary backing for a new 78 billion-euro, five-year package of budget cuts and state asset sales. Papandreou changed his cabinet, replaced his finance minister, won a confidence vote and then backing for the austerity measures, amid protests and slumping support in opinion polls.

"We have done what is necessary and are doing what is necessary to put our house in order," Papandreou said. "There are certain systemic issues within the euro that we have to deal with where we have a common currency but different borrowing policies, different tax policies, different competitiveness of our economies."

EU President Herman van Rompuy called leaders to a second summit meeting in a month to discuss "the financial stability of the euro area as a whole and the future financing of the Greek program." Stocks declined around the world on July 18, the euro fell and the cost of insuring European sovereign debt rose to records amid concern the euro region isn't any closer to solving the crisis a year after Greece's initial rescue.

Focus on Eurobonds

The situation worsened this month as EU governments squabbled with each other and the European Central Bank. ECB President Jean-Claude Trichet said July 10 that Europe is at the "epicenter" of a debt crisis that concerns the entire developed world and urged the euro area to do the "maximum" in terms of governance reforms.

Some finance ministers have started to focus on eurobonds as part of the solution.

While jointly issuing bonds with the most creditworthy European countries may help debt-laden nations tap markets at lower interest rates, it could also raise borrowing costs for Europe's largest economy, Germany.

Papandreou, who has spoken in favor of issuing such securities, said such sales would create "a sense of security." His office said today he's spoken to Barroso and to the prime ministers of Italy, Portugal, Spain and Ireland over the past two days, as well as with van Rompuy.

Merkel Ally

Eurobonds would "overstretch solidarity" between the region's members, said Thomas Silberhorn, European Affairs spokesman for Merkel's Bavarian Christian Social Union ally, yesterday. They would force donor countries such as Germany to accept liability for the debts of all other members, he said.

Papandreou, who met with U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton in Athens on July 17, said there was "direct interest" from the U.S. in solving the debt problem and that its experience in Latin America and its involvement in the IMF may aid Europe in dealing with its "new" problem.

"Europe is a strong market for the U.S.," he said. "If it has problems, if there's a lack of consumer confidence, if there's a deeper recession, this will deeply affect jobs in the U. S."

To contact the reporters on this story: Maria Petrakis at mpetrakis@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: John Fraher at jfraher@bloomberg.net

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Moody's eyes rating cuts for 5 US states

Title: Moody's eyes rating cuts for 5 US states

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 04:00 AM (GMT)

Moody's eyes rating cuts for 5 US states

Wed Jul 20, 2011 12:47AM GMT
http://www.presstv.ir/detail/189886.html

Moody's credit rating agency has warned it may cut the ratings of five US states if the country defaults on its debt after the August 2 deadline.

The present Aaa bond rating of 15 states in the country may be at risk, but Moody's said on Tuesday that Maryland, New Mexico, South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia were put on review for their high federal employment levels and Medicaid exposure -- factors playing a major role in the country's potential default on its debt, Reuters reported.

"A triple-A rating is the highest for debt and tells investors an institutional borrower presents a minimal credit risk," Moody's writes in its website.

Moody's has announced it will place the 5 states on a second review if the US fails to raise its debt ceiling by the deadline.

According to the agency, the other 10 states with an Aaa rating are at a much lower risk of degradation since they are "resilient enough to withstand a one-notch downgrade" in the US government's rating; however, if the rating agency lowers the country's rating by more than one notch, "the status of those 10 states could change."

"The remaining 35 states and the District of Columbia have lower credit ratings," the Moody's says.

Moody's has said in a statement that it sees a "rising possibility that the statutory debt limit will not be raised on a timely basis, leading to a default on US Treasury debt obligations."

The US rating would likely be reduced to the Aa1 range, and there is no assurance that Moody's would return its top-notch credit rating even if a default is quickly cured.

The US debt ceiling is capped at $14.3 trillion, up from $10.6 trillion when US President Barack Obama took office in 2009, and the administration says that if it is not elevated by August 2, the government would default on its obligations.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: UK on the verge of Bankruptcy !!!!!! [Vd]

Title: UK on the verge of Bankruptcy !!!!!! [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 03:43 AM (GMT)

UK on the verge of Bankruptcy !!!!!!

http://revolutionarypolitics.tv/video/view...?video_id=15751

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: AP: Mortgage 'robo-signing' continues in Michigan

Title: AP: Mortgage 'robo-signing' continues in Michigan
Description: other states

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 03:41 AM (GMT)

AP: Mortgage 'robo-signing' continues in Michigan, other states

By MICHELLE CONLIN, PALLAVI GOGOI
July 19, 2011 9:29 AM
http://www.crainsdetroit.com/article/20110...n-other-states#

Mortgage industry employees are still signing documents they haven't read and using fake signatures more than eight months after big banks and mortgage companies promised to stop the illegal practices that led to a nationwide halt of home foreclosures.

County officials in at least three states say they have received thousands of mortgage documents with questionable signatures since last fall, suggesting that the practices, known collectively as "robo-signing," remain widespread in the industry.

The documents have come from several companies that process mortgage paperwork, and have been filed on behalf of several major banks. One name, "Linda Green," was signed almost two dozen different ways.

Lenders say they are working with regulators to fix the problem but cannot explain why it has persisted.

Last fall, the nation's largest banks and mortgage lenders, including JPMorgan Chase, Wells Fargo, Bank of America and an arm of Goldman Sachs, suspended foreclosures while they investigated how corners were cut to keep pace with the crush of foreclosure paperwork.

Since then, suspect paperwork has been filed not only with foreclosures, but also with new purchases and refinancings. Critics say the new findings point to a systemic problem with the paperwork involved in home mortgages and titles. And they say it shows that banks and mortgage processors haven't acted aggressively enough to put an end to widespread document fraud in the mortgage industry.

"Robo-signing is not even close to over," says Curtis Hertel, the recorder of deeds in Ingham County, Mich., which includes Lansing. "It's still an epidemic."

In Essex County, Mass., the office that handles property deeds has received almost 1,300 documents since October with the signature of "Linda Green," but in 22 different handwriting styles and with many different titles.

Linda Green worked for a company called DocX that processed mortgage paperwork and was shut down in the spring of 2010. County officials say they believe Green hasn't worked in the industry since. Why her signature remains in use is not clear.

"My office is a crime scene," says John O'Brien, the registrar of deeds in Essex County, which is north of Boston and includes the city of Salem.

In Guilford County, N.C., the office that records deeds says it received 456 documents with suspect signatures from Oct. 1, 2010, through June 30. The documents, mortgage assignments and certificates of satisfaction, transfer loans from one bank to another or certify a loan has been paid off.

Suspect signatures on the paperwork include 290 signed by Bryan Bly and 155 by Crystal Moore. In the mortgage investigations last fall, both admitted signing their names to mortgage documents without having read them. Neither was charged with a crime.

And in Michigan, a fraud investigator who works on behalf of homeowners says he has uncovered documents filed this year bearing the purported signature of Marshall Isaacs, an attorney with foreclosure law firm Orlans Associates P.C. in Troy. Isaacs' name did not come up in last year's investigations, but county officials across Michigan believe his name is being robo-signed.

O'Brien caused a stir in June at a national convention of county clerks by presenting his findings and encouraging his counterparts to investigate continued robo-signing.

The nation's foreclosure machine almost came to a standstill when the nation's largest banks suspended foreclosures last fall. Part of the problem, banks contended, was that foreclosures became so rampant in 2009 and 2010 that they were overwhelmed with paperwork.

The banks reviewed thousands of foreclosure filings, and where they found problems, they submitted new paperwork to courts handling the cases, with signatures they said were valid. The banks slowly started to resume foreclosures this winter and spring.

The 14 biggest U.S. banks reached a settlement with federal regulators in April in which they promised to clean up their mistakes and pay restitution to homeowners who had been wrongly foreclosed upon. The full amount of the settlement has not been determined. But it will not involve independent mortgage processing firms, the companies that some banks use to handle and file paperwork for mortgages.

So far, no individuals, lenders or paperwork processors have been charged with a crime over the robo-signed signatures found on documents last year. Critics such as April Charney, a Florida homeowner and defense lawyer, called the settlement a farce because no real punishment was meted out, making it easy for lenders and mortgage processors to continue the practice of robo-signing.

Robo-signing refers to a variety of practices. It can mean a qualified executive in the mortgage industry signs a mortgage affidavit document without verifying the information. It can mean someone forges an executive's signature, or a lower-level employee signs his or her own name with a fake title. It can mean failing to comply with notary procedures. In all of these cases, robo-signing involves people signing documents and swearing to their accuracy without verifying any of the information.

Most of the tainted mortgage documents in question last fall were related to homes in foreclosure. But much of the suspect paperwork that has been filed since then is for refinancing or for new purchases by people who are in good standing in the eyes of the bank. In addition, foreclosures are down 30 percent this year from last. Home sales have also fallen. So the new suspect documents come at a time when much less paperwork is streaming through the nation's mortgage machinery.

None of the almost 1,300 suspect Linda Green-signed documents from O'Brien's office, for example, involve foreclosures. And Jeff Thigpen, the register of deeds in North Carolina's Guilford County, says fewer than 40 of the 456 suspect documents filed to his office since October involved foreclosures.

Banks and their partner firms file mortgage documents with county deeds offices to prove that there are no liens on a property, that the bank owns a mortgage or that a bank filing for foreclosure has the authority to do so.

The signature of a qualified bank or mortgage official on these legal documents is supposed to guarantee that this information is accurate. The paper trail ensures a legal chain of title on a property and has been the backbone of U.S. property ownership for more than 300 years.

The county officials say the problem could be even worse than what they're reporting. That's because they are working off lists of known robo-signed names, such as Linda Green and Crystal Moore, that were identified during the investigation that began last fall. Officials suspect that other names on documents they have received since then are also robo-signed.

It is a federal crime to sign someone else's name to a legal document. It is also illegal to sign your name to an affidavit if you have not verified the information you're swearing to. Both are punishable by prison.

In Michigan, the attorney general took the rare step in June of filing criminal subpoenas to out-of-state mortgage processing companies after 23 county registers of deeds filed a criminal complaint with his office over robo-signed documents they say they have received. New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman's office has said it is conducting a banking probe that could lead to criminal charges against financial executives. The attorneys general of Delaware, California and Illinois are conducting their own probes.

The legal issues are grave, deeds officials across the country say. At worst, legal experts say, the document debacle has opened the property system to legal liability well beyond the nation's foreclosure crisis. So someone buying a home and trying to obtain title insurance might be delayed or denied if robo-signed documents turn up in the property's history. That's because forged signatures call into question who owns mortgages and the properties they are attached to.

"The banks have completely screwed up property records," says L. Randall Wray, an economics professor and senior scholar at the University of Missouri-Kansas City.

In the Massachusetts case, The Associated Press tried to reach Linda Green, whose name was purportedly signed 1,300 times since October. The AP, using a phone number provided by lawyers who have been investigating the documents since last year, reached a person who said she was Linda Green, but not the Linda Green involved in the mortgage investigation.

In the Michigan case, a lawyer for the Orlans Associates law firm, where Isaacs works, denies that Isaacs or the firm has done anything wrong. "People have signatures that change," says Terry Cramer, general counsel for the firm. "We do not engage in 'robo-signing' at Orlans."

To combat the stream of suspect filings, O'Brien and Jeff Thigpen, the register of deeds in North Carolina's Guilford County, stopped accepting questionable paperwork June 7. They say they had no choice after complaining to federal and state authorities for months without getting anywhere.

Since then, O'Brien has received nine documents from Bank of America purportedly signed by Linda Burton, another name on authorities' list of known robo-signers. For years, his office has regularly received documents signed with Burton's name but written in such vastly different handwriting that two forensic investigators say it's highly unlikely it all came from the same person.

O'Brien returned the nine Burton documents to Bank of America in mid-June. He told the bank he would not file them unless the bank signed an affidavit certifying the signature and accepting responsibility if the title was called into question down the road. Instead, Bank of America sent new documents with new signatures and new notaries.

A Bank of America spokesman says Burton is an assistant vice president with a subsidiary, ReconTrust. That company handles mortgage paperwork processing for Bank of America.

"She signed the documents on behalf of the bank," spokesman Richard Simon says. The bank says providing the affidavit O'Brien asked for would have been costly and time-consuming. Instead, Simon says Bank of America sent a new set of documents "signed by an authorized associate who Mr. O'Brien wasn't challenging."

The bank didn't respond to questions about why Burton's name has been signed in different ways or why her signature appeared on documents that investigators in at least two states have deemed invalid.

Several attempts by the AP to reach Burton at ReconTrust were unsuccessful.

O'Brien says the bank's actions show "consciousness of guilt." Earlier this year, he hired Marie McDonnell, a mortgage fraud investigator and forensic document analyst, to verify his suspicions about Burton's and other names on suspect paperwork.

She compared valid copies of Burton's signature with the documents O'Brien had received in 2008, 2009 and 2010 and found that Burton's name was fraudulently signed on hundreds of documents.

Most of the documents reviewed by McDonnell were mortgage discharges, which are issued when a home changes hands or is refinanced by a new lender and are supposed to confirm that the previous mortgage has been paid off. Bank of America declined comment on McDonnell's findings.

In Michigan, recorder of deeds Hertel and his counterparts in 23 other counties found numerous suspect signatures on documents filed since the beginning of the year.

In June, their findings led the Michigan attorney general to issue criminal subpoenas to several firms that process mortgages for banks, including Lender Processing Services, the parent company of DocX, where Linda Green worked. On July 6, the CEO of that company, which is also under investigation by the Florida Attorney General's office, resigned, citing health reasons.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Must Watch Video: Debunking The Bullshit Corporate

Title: Must Watch Video: Debunking The Bullshit Corporate Description: Media Lies We Are Told About Greece

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 03:22 AM (GMT)

Must Watch Video: Debunking The Bullshit Corporate Media Lies We Are Told About Greece

Posted by Alexander Higgins - July 19, 2011 at 7:24 pm - Permalink - Source via Alexander
http://blog.alexanderhiggins.com/2011/07/1...s-greece-36171/

A video and a list of other FACTS to set the record straight on the bullshit stories the corporate media continues to run to justify the banker enslavement of the people of Greece..

The corporate media continues to run bullshit stories about Greece to justify the banker enslavement of the people of Greece.

Popular talking points range from the people of Greece are lazy and don't want to work, to Greece produces nothing and has no natural resources.

This video goes along way in debunking the bullshit.

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/ppJW01LeRrk?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/ppJW01LeRrk?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

Of course there are other points that need to be straightened out as well.

The media likes to run stories saying the Greeks are rioting because they changed the retirement age to 50 years and make no mention of being forced to pay for a banker bailout. Truth is the retirement age was changed during the first round of austerity measures passed a long time ago so it really is no longer an issue and deceptive when the media continues to say that is the reason for the riots.

Another truth is the retirement age was changed to be pegged to the average life expectancy and not to 55 or 50 as the corporate media likes to falsely report. Here in the U.S that would be like pegging retirement, eg. social security, pensions, 401k, etc. to be based on the 78 year old average life expectancy of a male and the 81 year old average life expectancy of a female. To translate that people will be forced to work their entire lives and pay into these instruments and die before they ever get to retire and collect the money they paid in or earned.

Another point is that needs to be highlight is people in Greece are being forced to take additional austerity measures to receive international aid loans just to pay back the interest alone for the original banker bailout loans. Make no mistake, the bailout loans are to save the bankers asses and not the people of Greece.

Here are some highlights from the original austerity measures. I still need to modify these and make a list that includes the latest round of austerity measures that were passed.
America – Are You Ready For Greece Style Austerity Measures?

[...]
Here are the facts of the Greek Austerity Measures:

PUBLIC SECTOR SPENDING CUTS

- Public sector pay freeze extended until 2014.

- Christmas, Easter and summer holiday bonuses in the public sector, also known as 13th and 14th salaries, are abolished for those earning above 3,000 euros a month and will be capped at 1,000 euros for those earning less. These bonus salaries had already been cut by 30 percent under a previous set of austerity measures announced in March.

- Public sector allowances to be cut by an additional 8 percent. These allowances, which account for a significant part of civil servants' overall income, were already cut by 12 percent under the latest round of austerity measures announced in March.

ADDITIONAL TAX MEASURES

- The main VAT rate is increased by 2 percentage points to 23 percent. It had already been raised to 21 percent from 19 percent in March.

- Excise taxes on fuel, cigarettes and alcohol are increased by a further 10 percent.

- The government expects to generate additional revenues through another one-off tax on highly profitable companies, as well as new gambling and gaming licenses, more property taxes and green taxes.

PRIVATE SECTOR

- The government said it will revise laws which currently bar companies from firing more than 2 percent of their total work force each month. Other changes will be made regarding severance payments. A new (lower) minimum wage will be introduced, applying to the young and the long-term unemployed.

STRUCTURAL REFORMS

- Liberalization in the energy, transport markets and opening up of closed professions.

PENSIONS

- The retirement age, currently 65 years for men and 60 years for women, will be linked to average life expectancy.

- Minimum contribution period to qualify for full pension will be gradually increased to 40 years from 37 years by 2015.

- Early retirement will be curtailed, with a view to banning any retirement below 60.

- Pensions will be cut, to reflect a pensioner's average pay over the entire working life rather than his or her final salary level.

Don't kid yourself. There is no real crisis going on here.

This is a manufactured guise. It's purpose is to allow the government to coerce us into making these extreme sacrifices without the forces behind the scenes taking the heat for forcing what can only be described as indentured servitude.

The situation is so bad that nation of Greece is being forced to pay for a banker bailout by borrowing money at interest rates up at nearly 40% on a 2 year government bond. That money that government borrows is then used to pay back the just interest on the original bailout loans. Do you see the vicious never ending downward spiral here?

Zero hedge speculates that the near 40% interest rate may send Greece into a temporary default within then next 48 hours.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Greece Bonds Collapse, Interest Rates Surge To

Title: Greece Bonds Collapse, Interest Rates Surge To Description: Near 40% As ECB Announces They Will Allo

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 03:16 AM (GMT)

Greece Bonds Collapse, Interest Rates Surge To Near 40% As ECB Announces They Will Allow "Temporary Default"

Posted by Alexander Higgins - July 19, 2011 at 7:17 pm - Permalink - Source via Alexander
http://blog.alexanderhiggins.com/2011/07/1...-default-36211/

European bankers have announced they will allow a temporary default on Greece sovereign debt which in turn caused Greek bonds to crash and send interest rates for the nation skyrocketing to a nearly 40% yield on their 2 year bond.

Even thought Greek Politicians have allowed themselves to be blackmailed into forcing harsh austerity measures on the people of Greece to secure a banker bailout loan to pay off the interest on their original bailout loan the bankers continue their oppression of the Greek government.

Now, the Euro-banker scum have announced a plan that will allow Greek to temporarily default on their sovereign debt as the corporate media continues with their chants to "Give Greece What They Deserve".

Of course, the announcement by the bankers have caused Greek bonds to collapse sending the interest rates that Greece must pay to burrow money from the bankers to almost a 40% yield on a 2 year bond.

Greece Bonds Collapse. Interest Rates Soar With Yeild On 2 Year Greek Bond Nears 40%

Source: Business Insider

Of course that means record profits for the bankers who have forced Greece into taking that bailout loans. Now the markets run amuck with the normal fear mongering of the threat that an eminent complete freeze in liquidity causing a worldwide bank collapse.

That make little sense considering the Euro-bank borrowings has just reached a 2011 high, nearing the highest levels since the 2008 financial collapse.

That is of course, unless the fear is meant to inspire panic among the masses and force the government to open taxpayer wallets to hand over even more money to the banker establishment.

Zero Hedge reports:
Greek Bonds Collapse As ECB's Nowotny Announces Bank Will Compromise, Agree To "Temporary" Greek Default

Submitted by Tyler Durden on 07/19/2011 08:29 -0400

Wonder why the Greek 2 Year bond just plunged, sending its yield to a laughable all time high 39.09% (a 312 bps move today alone)? Wonder no more. According to the ECB's Ewald Novotny the central bank has folded to German demands, and will now allow a "temporary" Greek default. Of course, what happens next will be a complete freeze in capital markets (see the chart below which shows borrowings on the ECB's Main Refinancing Operation while itis still available) but who cares: the central planners think they have it all under control.

From Bloomberg:

European Central Bank council member Ewald Nowotny suggested the bank may compromise and allow a temporary Greek default as officials scramble to fix a sovereign debt crisis that's spreading to Italy and Spain before a leaders' summit in two days.

As Spanish financing costs surged at a 4.45 billion euro ($6.31 billion) treasury bill auction today, policy makers are trying to ease a split that's pushed interest rates on Spanish and Italian 10-year debt above 6 percent for the first time since the euro debuted 12 years ago. The ECB has until now argued that any Greek default could spark a new financial crisis, derailing a German push to make investors help foot the bill for a second bailout of the country.

"This has to be studied in a very serious way," he told CNBC in an interview broadcast today. "There are some proposals that deal with a very short-lived selective default situation that will not have major negative consequences."

Ironically, the ECB is correct about the consequences, which explains its unwillingness to push forward with this plan. However, Germany's realization that none of its banks are pregnant with Greek debt is waht has allowed the follow through. The problem however, as everyone who dabbles in these things, is known as unintended consequences. And despite what you may have read in various books by assorted namedropping anchormen, the administration was 100% confident it could contain Lehman when it failed as well. Oh well, it was bound to happen sooner or later.

We still have a sinking feeling that a "temporary" Greek default may be announced as soon as 48 hours from now when the EU leader meeting concludes on Thursday.

One thing is certain: European banks arent taking any chances, with borrowings under the ECB's weekly MRO just surging to a 2011 high of €197 billion as everyone seeks to shore up capital in advance of what could be a complete liquidity freeze later this week.

European Banks Seek To Shore Up Capital As They Face A Complete Liquidity Freeze Later This Week

Source: Zero Hedge

Truth be told, the corporate media reports on the situation in Greece is full of lies and the non-coverage of the protests on the ground.

For those who don't know what is really going on in Greece, this video is a great start in setting the record straight and does a good job in debunking some of the most popular corporate media lies about Greece.

Of course, such propaganda is needed to win the moral support of the masses and convince them that the raping of the people of Greece is necessary.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Greek Bonds Collapse As ECB’s Nowotny Announces

Title: Greek Bonds Collapse As ECB’s Nowotny Announces

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 03:15 AM (GMT)

Greek Bonds Collapse As ECB’s Nowotny Announces Bank Will Compromise, Agree To “Temporary” Greek Default

Published on July 19, 2011 by Michael Vail · No Comments http://theintelhubradio.com/2011/07/19/gre...-greek-default/

Wonder why the Greek 2 Year bond just plunged, sending its yield to a laughable all time high 39.09% (a 312 bps move today alone)? Wonder no more.

According to the ECB’s Ewald Novotny the central bank has folded to German demands, and will now allow a “temporary” Greek default. Of course, what happens next will be a complete freeze in capital markets (see the chart below which shows borrowings on the ECB’s Main Refinancing Operation while itis still available) but who cares: the central planners think they have it all under control.

From Bloomberg:

European Central Bank council member Ewald Nowotny suggested the bank may compromise and allow a temporary Greek default as officials scramble to fix a sovereign debt crisis that’s spreading to Italy and Spain before a leaders’ summit in two days.

As Spanish financing costs surged at a 4.45 billion euro ($6.31 billion) treasury bill auction today, policy makers are trying to ease a split that’s pushed interest rates on Spanish and Italian 10-year debt above 6 percent for the first time since the euro debuted 12 years ago.

The ECB has until now argued that any Greek default could spark a new financial crisis, derailing a German push to make investors help foot the bill for a second bailout of the country.

"This has to be studied in a very serious way," he told CNBC in an interview broadcast today. "There are some proposals that deal with a very short-lived selective default situation that will not have major negative consequences."

Ironically, the ECB is correct about the consequences, which explains its unwillingness to push forward with this plan. However, Germany's realization that none of its banks are pregnant with Greek debt is waht has allowed the follow through.

The problem however, as everyone who dabbles in these things, is known as unintended consequences. And despite what you may have read in various books by assorted namedropping anchormen, the administration was 100% confident it could contain Lehman when it failed as well.

Oh well, it was bound to happen sooner or later.

We still have a sinking feeling that a "temporary" Greek default may be announced as soon as 48 hours from now when the EU leader meeting concludes on Thursday.

One thing is certain: European banks arent taking any chances, with borrowings under the ECB's weekly MRO just surging to a 2011 high of €197 billion as everyone seeks to shore up capital in advance of what could be a complete liquidity freeze later this week.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Sign of the Times: San Francisco Court System

Title: Sign of the Times: San Francisco Court System
Description: "Essentially Out of Business"

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 03:13 AM (GMT)

Sign of the Times: San Francisco Court System "Essentially Out of Business"

Tuesday, July 19, 2011
http://www.washingtonsblog.com/2011/07/sig...isco-court.html

ABC news notes:

The presiding judge of San Francisco's court system announced Monday she is preparing to dismantle operations in the civil division of her court and she is warning the layoffs and closures will be drastic.

What is in store is plenty of pain. Pain for the public and pain for court workers, who face unprecedented layoffs. Courtrooms will be closed. Clerk's offices will be shuttered. And the hallways will be quiet.

Presiding judge Katherine Feinstein broke the bad news that 25 of 63 courtrooms will close and 200 employees will be laid off.

"The civil division will essentially be out of business," Feinstein said. "The cases will sit on shelves piled high and will not make it into a courtroom for close to five years. It will for all practical purposes dismantle our court. Paying a traffic ticket for a criminal fine at the Hall of Justice will take hours standing in line. There will be fewer clerks there to process your payment. Obtaining a copy of a criminal or civil court record will take months. Obtaining a divorce will take at least a year and a half.

Feinstein says this was the only option. San Francisco's courts face a deficit of almost $14 million. In recent years, the court dipped into its reserves to prevent layoffs, but its reserves have dried up. Now, their budget will be cut by almost $5 million.

AP reports:

"The civil justice system in San Francisco is collapsing," Feinstein said.

***

"The future is very, very bleak for our courts" ....

In a press release issued yesterday, the Court said:

“Equal access to justice is one of the fundamental underpinnings of our democracy,” Judge Feinstein said.

***

We will be a shell of what we once were.

***

The Court will close:

•12 Civil Trial Departments;

•Two Complex Litigation Departments;

•One Law & Motion/Discovery Department;

•One Case Management Department;

•One Juvenile Dependency Department; and

• One Juvenile Traffic Department;

Metropolitan News-Enterprise points out that other California courts are in the same boat:

Los Angeles Superior Court Presiding Judge Lee Edmon said yesterday such drastic measures are not being ruled out locally in the wake of larger-than-anticipated state budget cuts.

“All options are on the table at this point,” Edmon said, adding that the court leadership has not yet decided how to proceed.

***

Edmon acknowledged “trial courts have been cut to the bone” already, noting the superior court “laid off 500 people not too long ago”....

***

“This year is bad and next year is worse,” she said" ....

***

San Diego Superior Court Judge Daniel Goldstein ... predicted “more staff is going to be laid off in more counties to come”....

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Marc Faber - financial Sense Newshour 15 july 2011

Title: Marc Faber - financial Sense Newshour 15 july 2011
Description: [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 12:57 AM (GMT)

Marc Faber - financial Sense Newshour 15 july 2011

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=v7TctLPrOzA

[dohtml]<iframe width="425" height="349" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/v7TctLPrOzA" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Obama Embraces Senators' Deficit-Cutting Plan

Title: Obama Embraces Senators' Deficit-Cutting Plan

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 12:56 AM (GMT)

Obama Embraces Senators' Deficit-Cutting Plan

By Julie Hirschfeld Davis and Julianna Goldman - Jul 20, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-07-19/u...l-imminent.html

President Barack Obama embraced a $3.7 trillion debt-cutting plan by a bipartisan group of senators that would combine tax increases and spending cuts, saying it could offer a way out of the congressional deadlock over raising the U.S. borrowing limit.

"We now are seeing the potential for a bipartisan consensus," Obama said today at the White House. He called the proposal by the so-called Gang of Six "broadly consistent" with what he has sought and "a very significant step" in so far fruitless negotiations between Republicans and Democrats over boosting the nation's $14.3 trillion borrowing authority before a threatened default on Aug 2.

Obama said talks with congressional leaders from both parties would resume at the White House this week. U.S. stocks and Treasuries extended gains after the president spoke, signaling optimism that lawmakers can reach an agreement.

At the Capitol, the bipartisan group led by Republican Senator Saxby Chambliss of Georgia and Senator Mark Warner of Virginia pitched its plan for an immediate $500 billion in spending cuts followed by a longer-term effort to force bigger reductions and $1 trillion in tax increases. The plan calls for lowering tax rates and limiting the growth of entitlement programs such as Medicare and Social Security.
Closed-Door Briefing

About 50 senators, roughly evenly divided between the two parties, attended a closed-door briefing on the plan, a sign of potentially widespread support for the kind of "grand bargain" to reduce the debt that Obama is urging. One member of the Republican leadership, third-ranking Senator Lamar Alexander of Tennessee, publicly endorsed the plan.

"In the next 24 hours, you're going to see a significant portion of the Senate come behind this -- bipartisan -- maybe 60 members, and let's see how things roll," said Republican Senator Tom Coburn of Oklahoma, who rejoined the Gang of Six today after he abandoned the talks in May over an impasse on Medicare cuts. "This doesn't solve our problems, but this creates the way forward where we can," he said.

Senator Joseph Lieberman, a Connecticut independent, said in the "best of all worlds" the proposal would be approved as part of the debt-ceiling increase.

Still, Tea Party-backed fiscal conservatives oppose any debt compromise that includes more taxes.
It Won't Fly

"Tax increases aren't going to fly in the House," said Republican Representative Kevin Brady of Texas, a member of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee. "That's not going to change."

Some lawmakers cast doubt on whether it would offer a quick solution to the current conflict, in which Republicans have insisted on coupling spending cuts with any borrowing boost.

"There are a lot of practical, procedural difficulties" to advancing the plan during the next 13 days, and "I'm just being practical, trying to be realistic," said Senator Max Baucus of Montana, the Democratic chairman of the Finance Committee, which has jurisdiction over taxes. "The real question is: What can we accomplish prior to Aug. 2?"

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid of Nevada said he asked Warner to report back to him by tomorrow about which elements of the group's plan might be included in a backstop proposal he is working on with Republican leader Mitch McConnell to provide $2.4 trillion in new borrowing authority in installments.
No Quick Vote

Reid said the Senate's rules wouldn't allow such a plan to be passed quickly. "I don't want to do anything to jeopardize the enthusiasm people have for the Gang of Six, but I am the person who runs the Senate."

The White House believes the plan can help Obama make the case for a "balanced" approach -- including tax increases as well as spending cuts -- to cutting the deficit, according to an administration official who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss internal deliberations. Still, it will need more vocal public support from Republican senators to overcome House Republicans' resistance to tax increases, the official said.

McConnell of Kentucky was noncommittal. "I don't have an opinion yet," he told reporters.

House Speaker John Boehner, an Ohio Republican, was also leaving his options open. "This plan shares many similarities with the framework the speaker discussed with the president, but also appears to fall short in some important areas," spokesman Michael Steel said in an e-mail.
'Constructive Ideas'

House Majority Leader Eric Cantor, a Virginia Republican, said in a statement issued tonight on the Gang of Six proposal that "while there are still portions that are unclear and need more detail, this bipartisan plan does seem to include some constructive ideas to deal with our debt."

The House remained focused on a measure that would slash spending while conditioning a $2.4 trillion debt-ceiling increase on passage of a constitutional amendment to balance the budget and make it more difficult to raise taxes. That bill -- to be voted on by the House later tonight -- stands little chance of being endorsed by the Democratic-controlled Senate, and Obama said he would veto it.

Boehner said he was considering what would follow the House vote.

"It's responsible for us to look at what Plan B would look like" because "there are a lot of options available to us," the speaker said.

McConnell and Reid are negotiating on a separate track on their plan to let Obama raise the debt ceiling unilaterally while proposing commensurate spending cuts. They were discussing empowering a bipartisan group of lawmakers to propose those reductions and setting out consequences if the debt savings weren't achieved.
Weekend Sessions

Reid is keeping keep the Senate in session daily -- including weekends -- until the debt ceiling impasse is resolved. The House's Republican leaders informed members today that the chamber may be in session this weekend.

The re-emergence of the Gang of Six, which had faded as its work dragged on without an agreement, held out hope for a longer-term agreement on reining in the debt.

It would institute an initial $500 billion of spending cuts, then lay out targets and enforcement mechanisms for forcing more future reductions, including between $85 billion and $202 billion in Medicare and other health spending, $80 billion from defense, $70 billion from education and labor programs and $11 billion from agriculture programs, according to a summary.
Tax Overhaul

It would also call for a broad tax overhaul that would raise $1 trillion by limiting breaks for health, charitable giving, homeownership and retirement while lowering individual and corporate tax rates. And it would scrap the Alternative Minimum Tax, a parallel system designed to prevent higher- earners from avoiding taxes.

The plan and Obama's endorsement boosted optimism in the markets.

"This is the biggest on-the-announcement move we've had" in the debt-limit negotiations, said Carl Lantz, New York-based head of interest rate strategy Credit Suisse Securities USA LLC.

Stocks surged, sending the Standard & Poor's 500 Index to its biggest gain in four months, and Treasuries rallied amid optimism lawmakers were moving closer to a deal.

The S&P 500 jumped 1.6 percent to 1,326.73 at 4 p.m. in New York. Ten-year Treasury note yields lost five basis points to 2.88 percent, and 30-year bond yields fell 12 basis points to 4.19 percent at 5:03 p.m. in New York, according to Bloomberg Bond Trader prices.
'Robust Proposal'

"The upside in Treasuries has been a function of this new, more robust proposal from the Gang of Six," said Ian Lyngen, a government bond strategist at CRT Capital Group LLC in Stamford, Connecticut. "There's a reasonable amount of perceived momentum behind that, the concept being that's the type of proposal needed to keep the credit-rating agencies at bay."

Still, some analysts said there was less to the outline than meets the eye, noting that while the group laid out goals for long-term savings, it doesn't actually make the promised cuts.

"The market completely overreacted to this Senate plan," said Tom Porcelli, chief economist at RBC Capital Markets. "There's an idea that could easily go nowhere."

To contact the reporters on this story: Julie Hirschfeld Davis in Washington at Jdavis159@bloomberg.net; James Rowley in Washington at jarowle@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Mark Silva at msilva@bloomberg.net

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 18 Signs That Global Financial Markets Smell Blood

Title: 18 Signs That Global Financial Markets Smell Blood
Description: In The Water

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 12:52 AM (GMT)

18 Signs That Global Financial Markets Smell Blood In The Water

July 19, 2011
By Michael Snyder
http://hawaiinewsdaily.com/2011/07/18-sign...d-in-the-water/

Can you smell it? There is blood in the water. Global financial markets are in turmoil. Banking stocks are getting slaughtered right now. European bond yields are absolutely soaring. Major corporations are announcing huge layoffs. The entire global financial system appears to be racing toward another major crisis. So could we potentially see a repeat of 2008? Sadly, when the next big financial crisis happens it might be worse than 2008. Back in the middle of 2008, the U.S. national debt was less than 10 trillion dollars. Today it is over 14 trillion dollars. Back in 2008, none of the countries in the EU were on the verge of financial collapse. Today, several of them are. This time if the global financial system starts falling apart the big governments around the world are not going to be able to do nearly as much to support it. That is why what is happening right now is so alarming. As signs of weakness spread, the short sellers and the speculators are starting to circle. They can smell the money.

Back in 2008, bank stocks led the decline. Today, that appears to be happening again. The “too big to fail” banks are getting absolutely pummeled right now. Most people don’t have much sympathy for the banksters, but if we do see a repeat of 2008 they are going to be cutting off credit and begging for massive bailouts once again, and that would not be good news for the economy.

In Europe, the EU sovereign debt crisis just seems to get worse by the day. Bond yields for the PIIGS are going haywire. The higher the yields go, the worse the crisis is going to get.

Meanwhile, as I have written about previously, a bad mood has descended on world financial markets. Pessimism is everywhere and fear is spreading. The short sellers and the speculators are eager to jump on any sign of weakness. Investors all over the globe are extremely nervous right now.

So what happens next?

Well, nobody knows for sure.

But things certainly do not look good.

The following are 18 signs that global financial markets smell blood in the water….

#1 Banks stocks are absolutely getting hammered right now. Bank of America hit a 52 week low on Monday. Bank of America shares declined 4 percent to $9.61.

#2 So far this year, Bank of America stock is down about 27 percent.

#3 Bloomberg is reporting that Bank of America may be forced to increase its capital cushion by 50 billion dollars.

#4 Shares of Goldman Sachs and Morgan Stanley are near two year lows.

#5 Shares in Citigroup fell 2.5 percent on Monday.

#6 Moody's recently warned that it may be forced to downgrade the debt ratings of Bank of America, Citigroup and Wells Fargo.

#7 Barclays Capital, Goldman Sachs, Bank of America, JPMorgan Chase and Morgan Stanley are all either considering staff cuts or are already laying workers off.

#8 The deputy European director of the International Monetary Fund says that the Greek debt crisis is "on a knife's edge".

#9 Moody's has slashed Ireland's bond rating all the way to junk status.

#10 The yield on 2 year Portuguese bonds is now over 20 percent, the yield on 2 year Irish bonds is now over 23 percent and the yield on 2 year Greek bonds is now over 35 percent.

#11 Shares of Italy's largest bank dropped by a whopping 6.4% on Monday.

#12 On Monday, the yield on 10 year Italian bonds was the highest it has been since the euro was adopted.

#13 On Monday, the yield on 10 year Spanish bonds was also the highest it has been since the euro was adopted.

#14 Shares of Germany's largest bank fell by a staggering 7% on Monday and are down a total of 22% so far this month.

#15 Citigroup's chief economist, William Buiter, says that without direct intervention by the ECB there is going to be a wave of sovereign defaults across Europe….

"Nothing stands in the way of multiple sovereign defaults except the ECB: they are the only game in town, there is nothing else"

#16 Cisco has announced plans to axe 16 percent of its workers.

#17 Borders Group has announced that it will be liquidating all remaining assets. That means that 399 stores will be closed and 10,700 workers will lose their jobs.

#18 During times of great crisis, many investors seek safe havens for their money. On Monday, the price of gold shot past $1600 an ounce.

These are not normal financial times. The worldwide debt bubble is starting to burst and nobody is quite sure what is going to happen next. Certainly we are going to continue to see financial authorities all over the world do their best to keep the system going. But as we saw in 2008, things can spiral out of control very quickly.

Just remember, back at the beginning of 2008 very few people would have ever imagined that the biggest financial institutions in America would be begging for hundreds of billions of dollars in bailouts by the end of that year.

When confidence disappears, the game can change very quickly. To the vast majority of economists it would have been unimaginable that the yield on 2 year Greek bonds would be over 35 percent in mid-2011.

But here we are.

The entire global financial system is a house of cards built on a foundation of sand. It is more vulnerable today than it has been at any other time since World War II. When a couple of major dominoes fall, it is likely to set off a massive chain reaction.

The global financial system of today was not designed with safety and security in mind. It was designed for greedy people to be able to make as much money as possible as quickly as possible. The banksters don't care about the greater good of mankind. What they care about is making huge piles of cash.

There is way too much risk, way too much debt and way too much leverage in the global financial marketplace. You would have thought that 2008 should have been a major wake up call for financial authorities around the world, but very few significant changes have been made since that time.

The financial news is just going to keep getting worse. This financial system is simply unsustainable. It is fundamentally unsound. The reality is that financial bubbles cannot keep expanding forever. Eventually they must burst.

Over the next few weeks, keep a close eye on banking stocks and keep a close eye on European bond yields.

Hopefully things will stabilize.

Hopefully the next wave of the financial collapse is not about to hit us.

Hopefully the entire global financial system is not on the verge of a major implosion.

But you might want to get prepared just in case.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 10 Signs That The American People Are Starting To

Title: 10 Signs That The American People Are Starting To Description: Freak Out About The Condition Of the Eco

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 12:51 AM (GMT)

10 Signs That The American People Are Starting To Freak Out About The Condition Of The Economy

July 16, 2011
By Michael Snyder - BLN Contributing Writer
http://theeconomiccollapseblog.com/archive...-of-the-economy

All over America, restlessness and frustration are growing. It has now been almost three years since the great financial crash of 2008, and yet the U.S. economy is still a complete and total mess. In fact, there are all sorts of signs that things are about to get even worse, and the American people are just about fed up.

Virtually every major poll, survey and measure of consumer confidence shows that the American people are becoming more pessimistic about the economy. Millions of hard working Americans that worked their fingers to the bone for their employers and that did everything “right” are sitting at home on their couches tonight staring blankly at the television. Many of them still have a hard time believing that they were laid off and that there is nobody out there that wants to give them a good job. There are millions of other Americans that won’t get much sleep tonight because they will spend much of the night rolling around in bed wondering how they are possibly going to be able to pay the mortgage. We have never faced such an extended economic downturn in modern U.S. history, and a lot of people are starting to freak out about the condition of the economy. As Gerald Celente likes to say: “When people lose everything and have nothing left to lose – they lose it.”

Every single month, the number of good jobs continues to go down. Wall Street actually rewards companies that have a good “outsourcing strategy”. As I have written about previously, a growing percentage of the jobs that are being “created” these days are very low paying jobs. But you can't support a family, pay a mortgage or even afford decent health insurance on what you would make stocking shelves at Target or passing out buckets of chicken for KFC.

The American people keep waiting for "hope" and "change" to show up, but all they get instead are more helpings of "despair" and "frustration".

Sadly, most Americans still cling to the hope that if the "next election" will just turn out the right way that things will be okay. But the truth is that things seem to stay on pretty much the same course no matter who we put into office.

For many years the status quo seemed to be okay for most people, but now we are starting to reap the results of the economic seeds that we have sown.

Now our economic decline is starting to accelerate and people are starting to panic. Most Americans may not know why all of this is happening, but what many of them do know is that something in their gut is telling them that things have gone terribly, terribly wrong somehow.

The following are 10 signs that the American people are starting to freak out about the condition of the economy….

#1 Things have already gotten so bad that Americans will literally trample one another just to get on a waiting list for rental assistance vouchers. Just check out the following excerpt from a local news report about a recent incident in Texas….

At least eight people were hurt Thursday morning while scrambling to line up for a limited number of Dallas County rental vouchers — after waiting for hours in their cars.

People lined up Thursday morning to apply for Dallas County Section 8 housing vouchers. Dallas County sheriff's spokesman Kim Leach estimated the crowd at about 5,000.

Video of this incident is posted below. One of the people that was trampled was a pregnant woman….

[dohtml]<object style="height: 390px; width: 640px"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/Tjc2YCoUD_8?version=3"><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/Tjc2YCoUD_8?version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></object>[/dohtml]

#2 Almost every measurement of consumer confidence is going down. For example, the Conference Board's consumer confidence index fell from 61.7 in May to 58.5 in June.

#3 The Reuters/University of Michigan consumer sentiment index has fallen to 63.8 after being at 71.5 in June. It is now the lowest that it has been since the last recession "ended".

#4 The Rasmussen Consumer Index is down 9 points from a month ago.

#5 A recent poll taken by Rasmussen found that 68 percent of Americans believe that we are actually in a recession right now.
#6 According to Gallup, the percentage of Americans that lack confidence in U.S. banks is now at an all-time high of 36%.

#7 In many areas of the United States this summer, just about anything that is not bolted down is being stolen by people that are desperate for money.

#8 According to one recent poll, 39 percent of Americans believe that the U.S. economy has now entered a "permanent decline".

#9 Another recent survey found that 48 percent of Americans believe that it is likely that another great Depression will begin within the next 12 months.

#10 According to a brand new Reuters/Ipsos poll, 63 percent of Americansbelieve that the nation is on the wrong track. That figure is three percent higher than it was last month.

One of the only things preventing chaos from breaking out in the streets of our cities from coast to coast is government handouts.

Today, almost 20 percent of all personal income in the United States comes from benefits provided by the federal government.

You don't believe this? Just check out what the New York Times recently had to say….

Close to $2 of every $10 that went into Americans' wallets last year were payments like jobless benefits, food stamps, Social Security and disability, according to an analysis by Moody's Analytics.

There are tens of millions of Americans that are living "on the edge", but at least the massive government handout programs are enabling most of them to survive.

So what happens when the checks from the government stop coming?

Look, I am not advocating that the "welfare society" that we have become is a good thing. Today, Americans receive more in direct government benefits than they pay in taxes. That is not even close to sustainable.

What I am pointing out is that tens of millions of Americans that are deeply suffering are currently being pacified by these government handouts. Once the handouts are cut significantly or taken away completely it is going to unleash a lot of anger and frustration.

Of course what the American people really need are good jobs that will give them dignity and allow them to provide for their families, but millions of those keep getting shipped out of the country.

So the only thing that millions of Americans still have to hang on to are their government benefits. Once that changes a whole lot of people are going to throw a fit.

In fact, we are already seeing some really bizarre behavior across the United States. In many areas of the country we are literally watching society crumble right in front of our very eyes.

If you doubt this, just check out these two articles….

1) “Americans Gone Wild”

2) “18 Signs The Collapse Of Society Is Accelerating”

But not all Americans will resort to lawless behavior. In fact, there are a lot of really good, hard working people out there that this economy has left behind.

There are some people that have put in decades of hard work only to see their dreams shrivel up over the past few years.

Some of the stories people send me are absolutely heartbreaking. I have looked at each and every comment that has been left on The Economic Collapse over the past couple of years. Needless to say, it has taken a huge investment of my time to go through more than 20,000 comments. But in the process I have gotten a very good idea of what people are going through across the nation.

So how badly are people hurting? Well, a reader identified as “Anna44″recently shared with us what some of her family members have been going through in this economy….

My B-I-L was a dealership owner/manager who worked long hours over 38 years and had to close his doors when Saturn was dissolved. When his dealership went under, 72 others lost their job. That’s 72 families who took a hit. He lost his home, everything. A few of his former employees lost their homes as well eventually. They were not lazy or WORTHLESS. It took him a year and a half to finally find something, but now he lives in a hotel unable to qualify for a house or apartment. This is an educated man who competed nationwide for top dog and got it more then once. His biggest fault? He's almost 60, young enough to need the work, but too old to be hired.

As for my husband- 26 years AF officer, handling millions & billions on International & National levels has just entered his 7th month of unemployment. Two tours abroad- lazy he is NOT. He doesn't qualify for unemployment, nor is he counted because he gets a retirement check. He wants and needs to work- yet there is little out there. If he doesn't find something soon, we too will lose the home we sunk every cent into after 20 years of saving for it!

All across America tonight there are similar stories. People have done everything "right" all of their lives and they are frustrated that now they have been pushed to the edge of poverty by this economy.

Unfortunately, it looks like things may soon get even worse. Economist David Rosenberg recently told CNBC the following….

"We're just one small shock away from the economy going back into recession."

That is not what the American people want to hear.

What they want to hear is that things are about to get better.

What they want to hear is that things are going to get back to normal soon.

Sadly, that is just not going to be the case.

The economy is going to get worse and worse, and the frustration and the anger of the American people is just going to continue to grow.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: The Head Of The World's Biggest Hedge Fund Sees "E Title: The Head Of The World's Biggest Hedge Fund Sees "E

Description: "Economic Collapse" Due To Money Printin

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 12:42 AM (GMT)

The Head Of The World's Biggest Hedge Fund Sees "Economic Collapse" Due To Money Printing By Early 2013

Submitted by Tyler Durden on 07/18/2011 15:56 -0400
http://www.zerohedge.com/article/head-worl...ting-early-2013

As part of its most recent issue the New Yorker has released a must read interview with Ray Dalio - head of the world's biggest hedge fund, Bridgewater. Dalio's fund, which according to some may now be as large as $80 billion, continues to outperform even in this problematic environment, indicating that unlike various other managers who shall remain nameless, and whose wealth is built up almost exclusively on one trade (and that belonging to someone else in the first place), Dalio, despite rumors that he is preparing to leave his current position and is actively seeking a replacement, is still keenly able to adapt to changing macro conditions. Which is why his warning about future rounds of QE, which he sees as a certainty, should be heeded. Especially since it conforms 100% with the warnings of Zero Hedge - Dalio believes that future inevitable money printing will "lead to a collapse in currencies and bond markets." Dalio is even kind enough to give a time frame. "I think late 2012 or early 2013 is going to be another very difficult period." He is, to say the least, quite diplomatic.

From the full interview:

Dalio believes that some heavily indebted countries, including the United States, will eventually opt for printing money as a way to deal with their debts, which will lead to a collapse in their currency and in their bond markets. “There hasn’t been a case in history where they haven’t eventually printed money and devalued their currency,” he said. Other developed countries, particularly those tied to the euro and thus to the European Central Bank, don’t have the option of printing money and are destined to undergo “classic depressions,” Dalio said. The recent deal to avoid an immediate debt default by Greece didn’t alter his pessimistic view. “People concentrate on the particular thing of the moment, and they forget the larger underlying forces,” he said. “That’s what got us into the debt crisis. It’s just today, today.”

Dalio’s assessment sounded alarmingly plausible. But when one plays the global financial markets a thorough economic analysis is only the first stage of the game. At least as important is getting the timing right. I asked Dalio when all this would start to come together. “I think late 2012 or early 2013 is going to be another very difficult period,” he said.

Translation: enjoy your -0.002% Bills and paying uncle Sam to hold your money while you can.

h/t A B

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Too Big To Fail?: 10 Banks Own 77 Percent Of All

Title: Too Big To Fail?: 10 Banks Own 77 Percent Of All Description: U.S. Banking Assets

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 12:40 AM (GMT)

Too Big To Fail?: 10 Banks Own 77 Percent Of All U.S. Banking Assets

http://theeconomiccollapseblog.com/archive...-banking-assets

Back during the financial crisis of 2008, the American people were told that the largest banks in the United States were "too big to fail" and that was why it was necessary for the federal government to step in and bail them out. The idea was that if several of our biggest banks collapsed at the same time the financial system would not be strong enough to keep things going and economic activity all across America would simply come to a standstill. Congress was told that if the "too big to fail" banks did not receive bailouts that there would be chaos in the streets and this country would plunge into another Great Depression. Since that time, however, essentially no efforts have been made to decentralize the U.S. banking system. Instead, the "too big to fail" banks just keep getting larger and larger and larger. Back in 2002, the top 10 banks controlled 55 percent of all U.S. banking assets. Today, the top 10 banks control 77 percent of all U. S. banking assets. Unfortunately, these giant banks are also colossal mountains of risk, debt and leverage. They are incredibly unstable and they could start coming apart again at any time. None of the major problems that caused the crash of 2008 have been fixed. In fact, the U.S. banking system is more centralized and more vulnerable today than it ever has been before.

It really is difficult for ordinary Americans to get a handle on just how large these financial institutions are. For example, the "big six" U.S. banks (Goldman Sachs, Morgan Stanley, JPMorgan Chase, Citigroup, Bank of America, and Wells Fargo) now possess assets equivalent to approximately 60 percent of America's gross national product.

These huge banks are giant financial vacuum cleaners. Over the past couple of decades we have witnessed a financial consolidation in this country that is absolutely unprecedented.

This trend accelerated during the recent financial crisis. While the big boys were receiving massive bailouts, the hundreds of small banks that were failing were either allowed to collapse or they were told that they should find a big bank that was willing to buy them.

As a group, Citigroup, JPMorgan Chase, Bank of America and Wells Fargo held approximately 22 percent of all banking deposits in FDIC-insured institutions back in 2000.

By the middle of 2009 that figure was up to 39 percent.

That is not just a trend - that is a landslide.

Sadly, smaller banks continue to fail in large numbers and the big banks just keep growing and getting more power.

Today, there are more than 1,000 U.S. banks that are on the "unofficial list" of problem banking institutions.

In the absence of fundamental changes, the consolidation of the banking industry is going to continue.

Meanwhile, the "too big to fail" banks are flush with cash and they are getting serious about expanding. The Federal Reserve has been extremely good to the big boys and they are eager to grow.

For example, Citigroup is becoming extremely aggressive about expanding....

Citigroup has been hiring dozens of investment bankers, dialing up advertising and drawing up plans to add several hundred branches worldwide, including more than 200 in major cities across the United States.

Hopefully the big banks will start lending again. The whole idea behind the bailouts and all of the "quantitative easing" that the Federal Reserve did was to get money into the hands of the big banks so that they would lend it out to ordinary Americans and get the economy rolling again.

Well, a funny thing happened. The big banks just sat on a lot of that money.

In particular, what they did was they deposited much of it at the Fed and drew interest on it.

Since 2008, excess reserves parked at the Fed have grown by nearly 1.7 trillion dollars. Just check out the chart posted below....

The American people were promised that TARP and all of the other bailouts would enable the big banks to lend out lots of money which would help get the economy going for ordinary Americans again.

Well, it turns out that in 2009 (the first full year after Congress passed the bailout legislation) U.S. banks posted their sharpest decline in lending since 1942.

Lending has never fully recovered since the crash of 2008. The big financial institutions like Goldman Sachs, Morgan Stanley and JPMorgan Chase have been able to get all the cash that they need, but they have not passed that generosity along to ordinary Americans.

In fact, the biggest U.S. banks have actually reduced small business lending by about 50 percent since the crash of 2008.

That doesn't sound like what we were promised.

These "too big to fail" banks have been able to borrow gigantic amounts of money from the Fed for next to nothing and yet they still refuse to let credit flow to local communities. Instead, the big banks have found other purposes for all of the super cheap money that they have been getting from the Fed as Ellen Brown recently explained....

It can be very profitable indeed for the big Wall Street banks, but the purpose of the near-zero interest rates was supposed to be to get banks to lend again. Instead, they are, indeed, paying “outrageous bonuses to their top executives;” using the money to engage in the same sort of unregulated speculation that nearly brought down the economy in 2008; buying up smaller banks; or investing this virtually interest-free money in risk-free government bonds, on which taxpayers are paying 2.5 percent interest (more for longer-term securities).

What makes things even worse is that these big banks often pay next to nothing in taxes.

For example, between 2008 and 2010, Wells Fargo made a total profit of 49.37 billion dollars.

Over that same time period, their tax bill was negative 681 million dollars.

Do you understand what that means? Over that 3 year time period, Wells Fargo actually got 681 million dollars back from the U.S. government.

Isn't that just peachy?

Meanwhile, the big financial giants have not learned their lessons and they continue to do business pretty much as they did it prior to 2008.

The big banks continue to roll up massive amounts of risk, debt and leverage.

Today, Wall Street has become one giant financial casino. More money is made on Wall Street by making side bets (commonly referred to as "derivatives") than on the investments themselves.

If the bets pay off for the big financial institutions, mind blowing profits can be made. But if the bets go against the big financial institutions (as we saw in 2008), firms can collapse almost overnight.

In fact, it was derivatives that almost brought down AIG. The biggest insurance company in the world almost folded in 2008 because of a whole bunch of really bad bets.

The danger from derivatives is so great that Warren Buffet once called them "financial weapons of mass destruction". It has been estimated that the notional value of the worldwide derivatives market is somewhere in the neighborhood of a quadrillion dollars.

The largest banks have tens of trillions of dollars of exposure to derivatives. When the next great financial collapse happens, derivatives will almost certainly be at the center of it once again. These side bets do not create anything real for the economy - they just make and lose huge amounts of money. We never know when the next great derivatives crisis will strike. Derivatives are essentially like a "sword of Damocles" that perpetually hangs over the U.S. financial system.

When I start talking about derivatives I get a lot of people in the financial community mad at me. On Wall Street today you can bet on just about anything you can imagine. Almost everyone in the financial world has gotten so used to making wild bets that they couldn't even imagine a world without them. If anyone even tried to put significant limits on futures, options and swaps it would cause Wall Street to throw a hissy fit.

But someday the dominoes are going to start to fall and the house of cards is going to come crashing down. It is an open secret that our financial system is fundamentally unsound. Even a lot of people working on Wall Street will admit that. It is just that people are so busy making such big piles of money that nobody wants the party to stop.

It is only a matter of time until some of these big banks get into a huge amount of trouble again. When that happens, we might really find out whether they are "too big to fail" or whether we could get along just fine without them.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Greece debt: Merkel dampens expectations of deal

Title: Greece debt: Merkel dampens expectations of deal

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 06:29 PM (GMT)

Greece debt: Merkel dampens expectations of deal

German Chancellor Angela Merkel wants private investors to share the pain of Greece's debt crisis

19 July 2011 Last updated at 16:02
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/business-14204529

German Chancellor Angela Merkel has played down the chances of Thursday's emergency eurozone summit resolving Greece's debt crisis.

She told a news conference that there would not be anything as "spectacular" as a restructuring of Greek debt.

The meeting will attempt to agree a second bail-out of Greece in a hope of calming financial markets and stop contagion spreading.

She said: "Thursday will help in this, but further steps will be needed."

At the weekend Mrs Merkel indicated that she may not attend the meeting unless there was a likelihood of a concrete deal on a second Greek rescue.

Germany has been at odds with the European Central Bank (ECB) over its insistence that private investors in Greek bonds share the pain of another rescue deal.

The ECB believes that forcing private investors to take losses on their loans is effectively a default by Greece on its debts.

But Germany, Finland and the Netherlands are in the forefront of calls for private investors to share the burden rather than just leave it to the taxpayer.

It has emerged that one possible compromise being considered is the raising of money through a special tax on eurozone banks.

France's European Affairs Minister Jean Leonetti said the bank tax proposal "would have the advantage of not involving the private banks directly and so avoid the problem of a potential default".

French banks are heavily exposed to the Greece economy.

But the French Banking Federation said on Tuesday that the idea was a "strange logic".
Compromise

Jean-Claude Trichet, ECB president, repeated his strong belief that a "credit event", or default, must be avoided. Otherwise the ECB would cease financing the Greek bank sector.

However, ECB council member Ewald Nowotny appeared to break ranks with a suggestion on Tuesday that the bank may compromise and allow a temporary credit event.

"There are some proposals that deal with a very short-lived selective default situation that will not have major negative consequences," he told CNBC television.

Eurozone officials have also considered a complex plan to lend Greece money to allow Athens to buy back its own debt at a reduced price on secondary bond markets.

This would help Greece to delay debt repayments.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Bank of America posts record quarterly loss of Title: Bank of America posts record quarterly loss of Description: $8.6nb [REMOVE FROM BANKING]

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 06:27 PM (GMT)

Bank of America posts record quarterly loss of $8.8bn

The bank has had to pay investors who claimed they had used misleading information

19 July 2011 Last updated at 13:33
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/business-14203304

Bank of America (BoA) has posted its biggest quarterly loss after agreeing an $8.5bn (£5.2bn) settlement related to sub-prime mortgages.

The US's largest bank made a loss of $8.8bn in the three months to the end of June, lower than analysts had expected.

Included in the losses are payments to investors and insurers, and charges for future claims over home loans.

The bank's revenues for the quarter were $13.2bn, down 55% from a year ago.

On 29 June, BoA announced it would take a series of one-off charges after private investors demanded the bank repurchase toxic home loans held in mortgage-backed securities.

The investors claimed BoA's home loans division used misleading information when it sold mortgage-backed securities that later defaulted during the global financial crisis.

Excluding the charges, analysts said the BoA's core operations were making progress.

"At least they're making progress. Their losses do continue to come down, away from mortgages," said Brian Charles, analyst at RW Pressprich.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Goldman Sachs profits 'disappoint'

Title: Goldman Sachs profits 'disappoint'
Description: [THEY SHOULD BE REMOVED FROM BANKING]

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 06:27 PM (GMT)

Goldman Sachs profits 'disappoint'

Shares in Goldman fell in New York

19 July 2011 Last updated at 15:22
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/business-14201987

Second-quarter profits at Goldman Sachs have missed expectations as the Wall Street bank's revenues from fixed income trading dropped sharply.

Net profit for the three months to June rose 77% on a year ago to $1.09bn (£676m), but this was below forecasts.

Revenues in the fixed income, currency and commodities segment fell 53% from a year ago, hurt by slower activity because of weak economic growth.

Goldman said the results in some divisions were "disappointing".

Overall net revenues fell 18% to $7.28bn.

Shares in Goldman fell 2.2% when trading began in New York.

Meanwhile, Bank of America reported a record quarterly loss of $8.8bn, after agreeing an $8.5bn settlement related to sub-prime mortgages.
Industry leader

Goldman chief executive Lloyd Blankfein said the operating environment in the second quarter had been "more difficult given global macro-economic concerns".

"In addition, certain of our businesses had disappointing results as we reduced our market risk in response to attempting to manage fluctuations in prices and market liquidity," he said.

Michelle Gibley, an analyst at Schwab Center for Financial Research, said: "They're seen as an industry leader and are expected to print better numbers than this."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

24107

PLEASE MOVE OVER TO THE NEW SITE:

http://z15.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mind_III/

18 JULY 2011 .. GOLD HITS NEW HIGH OF $1604 AS SILVER RAISES TO $40.38 PER OUNCE. THE OVERT DEPRESSION IS ON, ALL READY FOR THE COMING COLLAPSE BETWEEN OCT 2011 - OCT 2012! THE LIKES OF WHICH HAS NEVER BEEN WITNESSED BEFORE WORLDWIDE, ARE YOU READY? MENTALLY? YOU SURE? GET HARDENED NOW AND PREPARE ASAP.....

THE UNHIVED MIND
This site is dedicated to the truthsayers assassinated such as William Cooper, Jim Arrabito, Alberto Rivera, Joe Vialls, Brian Downing Quig, Phil Schneider etc.

KING 'FARNESE' CARLOS
World War III
The Unhived Mind

THE KNIGHTS OF MALTA
DEUTSCHE VERTEIDIGUNGS DIENST
HOMELAND
DEPARTMENT
CARPATHIA HOSTINGS INC CYBERNAZIS

CARDINAL RATZINGER
And his Oslo Accords
UHM

C.I.A (D.V.D) PREPARE TO
TESLA ATTACK U.K
EXERCISE ORION
SEPTEMBER 2010
UHM

WTC nuclear demolition
Dimitri Khalezov

WATCH OUT MIDDLE EAST
KING JUAN CARLOS IS
IN RUSSIA 24/25 FEB

LATEST INFO

The Unhived Mind Ii->WORLD CONTROL->Knights of Malta Temporal Power Crusade

Pages: (46) [1] 2 3 ... Last »

NEW TOPIC NEW POLL

Knights of Malta Temporal Power Crusade

		Topic Title	Topic Starter	Replies	Views	Last Action
		Important Topics
		MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF WAR	TheUnhivedMind	0	569	13th September 2008 - 11:45 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Forum Topics
		Manufacturing Justification for the NATO Takeover of Central Asia	TheUnhivedMind	0	30	21st July 2011 - 04:14 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		MASSIVE PAKISTAN WAR LEADING TO WW3 (Pages 1 2 3 ...8)	TheUnhivedMind	106	1,770	21st July 2011 - 03:50 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		What a let down! Russia tricks enemies with inflatable army of tanks and planes	TheUnhivedMind	1	20	21st July 2011 - 01:12 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Pakistan Spy Agency Aided by Two Men in U.S., Prosecutors Say	TheUnhivedMind	0	9	21st July 2011 - 12:27 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Liberals see opportunity for big cuts in defense	TheUnhivedMind	0	19	20th July 2011 - 04:07 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		'US suspicious of China-Iraq ties'	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	20th July 2011 - 03:58 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		US Senators Warn Beijing On South China Sea Clashe	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	20th July 2011 - 03:30 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Ron Paul "This Military Spending Doesn't Defend Us IT MAKES THINGS WORSE!" [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	20th July 2011 - 03:12 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Austerity For Everyone, Except The DOD	TheUnhivedMind	0	13	20th July 2011 - 01:14 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		UK announces early warning system to prevent conflict	TheUnhivedMind	0	14	19th July 2011 - 05:42 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Lashkar Gah handover: police station targeted in bomb attack	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	19th July 2011 - 05:37 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		15,000 US Troops to Remain In Iraq, Renamed "Diplomats" [KING JUAN CARLOS PUPPETS]	TheUnhivedMind	0	22	19th July 2011 - 03:28 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Brazil to build nuclear submarines which will dramatically alter balance of power in S	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	19th July 2011 - 02:26 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		U.N. Briefed on Syria's Alleged Nuclear Activities	TheUnhivedMind	0	7	18th July 2011 - 06:22 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		17,000 TROOPS AXED TO BOOST TERRITORIAL ARMY	TheUnhivedMind	0	12	18th July 2011 - 05:22 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		We won't ease up on Taliban, pledges new US commander	TheUnhivedMind	0	8	18th July 2011 - 05:15 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		With Friends Like AFRICOM, Who Needs Enemies?	TheUnhivedMind	0	17	18th July 2011 - 03:06 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		US Attack on Yemen Police Station Killed 50	TheUnhivedMind	0	6	18th July 2011 - 03:00 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Afghanistan: Senior aide to President Karzai killed	TheUnhivedMind	0	12	17th July 2011 - 10:20 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Afghanistan: Bamiyan province handed to local forces	TheUnhivedMind	0	9	17th July 2011 - 10:19 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Warning over early Afghan pull-out by British forces	TheUnhivedMind	0	6	17th July 2011 - 10:18 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Iran says it can block 'Internet in a suitcase'	TheUnhivedMind	0	23	16th July 2011 - 02:10 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Tehran ready to give Syria $5.8 billion: report	TheUnhivedMind	0	30	16th July 2011 - 02:09 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		PIIGS, Presstitutes And The Global Meltdown	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	16th July 2011 - 12:35 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		New Brown University Report Pegs The Real Cost Of Current Wars At $4 Trillion	TheUnhivedMind	0	13	15th July 2011 - 06:51 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		To improve relations, US must respect China's core interests	TheUnhivedMind	0	13	15th July 2011 - 05:57 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Vietnam: Chinese soldiers attack fishermen	TheUnhivedMind	0	9	15th July 2011 - 05:57 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Federal Reserve Causes Middle East Unrest [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	1	18	15th July 2011 - 05:14 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		CHINA MISSILE SALES	TheUnhivedMind	0	9	15th July 2011 - 05:00 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Karzai brother service hit by Kandahar suicide bomber	TheUnhivedMind	0	19	15th July 2011 - 02:15 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Israeli warplanes attack Rafah	TheUnhivedMind	0	35	14th July 2011 - 03:29 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Jordan: Egypt to fix pipeline in 10 days	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	14th July 2011 - 03:28 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Over a Fifth of Navy Ships Aren't Ready to Fight	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	14th July 2011 - 03:26 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Officials: NATO Kills 16 Civilians in Afghan Air Strike	TheUnhivedMind	0	8	14th July 2011 - 03:07 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Why the US won't leave Afghanistan	TheUnhivedMind	0	17	14th July 2011 - 03:06 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Russia's Medvedev urges army to import weapons	TheUnhivedMind	0	19	13th July 2011 - 06:47 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Lavrov: Missile defense remains the biggest irritant in US-Russian relations	TheUnhivedMind	0	9	13th July 2011 - 06:46 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		China rejects Manila offer to bring dispute to UN	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	13th July 2011 - 06:45 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		THE NORTH KOREA MAY 2009 INCIDENT ROOM! (Pages 1 2 3 ...72) [NUCLEAR STRIKES ON NK? DEFCON 2?]	craig-oxley	1,069	14,980	13th July 2011 - 06:44 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Sarkozy's Karzai visit: 1,000 troops to leave by 2012	TheUnhivedMind	0	12	13th July 2011 - 06:41 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Iran moves nuclear enrichment programme to underground bunker	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	13th July 2011 - 05:42 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Israeli airstrike hits eastern Gaza	TheUnhivedMind	0	20	13th July 2011 - 03:50 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Rockets hit Kuwaiti embassy in Baghdad	TheUnhivedMind	0	14	13th July 2011 - 03:49 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Drone strikes are police work, not an act of war?	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	13th July 2011 - 03:40 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		China says US spends too much money on military	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	13th July 2011 - 02:22 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Panetta's Iraq Visit Reveals his Lack of Knowledge	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	13th July 2011 - 01:50 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Egypt army detains four US nationals: military official	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	12th July 2011 - 11:41 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		China rejects Philippine proposal on Spratlys	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	12th July 2011 - 11:33 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		China Says U.S. Navy Drills in Region 'Inappropria Amid Island Disputes	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	12th July 2011 - 11:32 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		US Military Chief Tours Chinese Bases	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	12th July 2011 - 11:32 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		China offers rare glimpse of military HQ	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	12th July 2011 - 11:32 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		China advancing military capability at sea, in skies	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	12th July 2011 - 11:31 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		China ramps up military use of space with new Satellites	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	12th July 2011 - 11:31 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Egyptian pipeline hit by fourth explosive attack since January	TheUnhivedMind	0	17	12th July 2011 - 06:12 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Report: Hezbollah on high alert for fear of Israel (Pages 1 2 3 ...28) attack	kalongi	415	4,247	12th July 2011 - 05:15 PM Last Post by: kalongi
		Bernie Sanders "People In This Country Are Sick & Tired of TWO Wars That Go ON AND ON!"	TheUnhivedMind	0	11	12th July 2011 - 01:57 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		America's Dirty War On Islam	TheUnhivedMind	0	17	12th July 2011 - 12:04 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		M-1A1 Abrams To Be Sold To The Muslim Brotherhood	TheUnhivedMind	0	19	11th July 2011 - 10:30 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Knight of Malta, Panetta lands in Iraq	TheUnhivedMind	0	29	10th July 2011 - 11:17 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Tony Hayward in talks to buy Iraqi oil fields	TheUnhivedMind	0	13	10th July 2011 - 10:47 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Top U.S. military officer heads to China for visit	TheUnhivedMind	0	40	10th July 2011 - 04:20 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		House Overwhelmingly Approves Record $649 Billion Military Spending Bill [FROM WHERE?]	TheUnhivedMind	0	18	10th July 2011 - 02:06 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Turkey, Israel still at table despite deadlock	TheUnhivedMind	0	29	8th July 2011 - 11:47 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Japan grounds F-15 fighter fleet after crash	TheUnhivedMind	0	14	8th July 2011 - 11:41 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Philippine foreign secretary visits China amid tensions over disputed islands	TheUnhivedMind	0	16	8th July 2011 - 11:25 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Maiden voyage of China's first aircraft carrier delayed	TheUnhivedMind	0	10	8th July 2011 - 11:24 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Russia criticizes U.S. over abuses in wars abroad	TheUnhivedMind	0	15	8th July 2011 - 04:44 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Cameron to pull more military personnel from Afghanistan	TheUnhivedMind	0	26	6th July 2011 - 09:39 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		UK confirms killing Afghan civilians	TheUnhivedMind	0	24	6th July 2011 - 01:52 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Karzai hints at instant US withdrawal	TheUnhivedMind	0	13	6th July 2011 - 01:48 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		U.S. Air Force on a Mission to Save Money	TheUnhivedMind	0	15	6th July 2011 - 12:43 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Minister Vilnai: Next war will test home front	kalongi	0	29	5th July 2011 - 09:21 PM Last Post by: kalongi
		[vid] Israelis back new strike on Gaza (Pages 1 2 3 ...50)	kalongi	735	5,274	5th July 2011 - 09:21 PM Last Post by: kalongi
		Russia warns NATO against going alone on missile defence	TheUnhivedMind	0	19	5th July 2011 - 07:05 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Russia admits no chance of sectoral missile defens with NATO	TheUnhivedMind	0	12	5th July 2011 - 07:04 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Will Spratlys tension pave the way for US troops in Philippines	TheUnhivedMind	0	13	5th July 2011 - 07:04 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Plane 'buzzes' Philippine boat in South China Sea	TheUnhivedMind	0	17	5th July 2011 - 07:03 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		British Military 'Lost' Billions in Weapons, Equipment [WELCOME TO DVD LAND]	TheUnhivedMind	0	16	5th July 2011 - 07:03 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Turkey to double size of its army	TheUnhivedMind	0	18	5th July 2011 - 06:59 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Turkey reaches out to the new Middle East	TheUnhivedMind	0	15	5th July 2011 - 06:57 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Afghan War will Shift to India?	TheUnhivedMind	0	19	5th July 2011 - 06:54 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		'War is a war even if they call it a humanitarian mission' [Vd]	TheUnhivedMind	0	31	5th July 2011 - 01:02 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Putin reiterates Russia's expansion into Arctic	TheUnhivedMind	0	20	4th July 2011 - 05:38 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Arctic borders to get more Russian troops	TheUnhivedMind	0	26	4th July 2011 - 05:38 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Japan Foreign Minister Expresses Concern About South China Sea	TheUnhivedMind	0	14	4th July 2011 - 05:33 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		My Time in the US Navy: "Service" to Whom?	TheUnhivedMind	0	72	4th July 2011 - 01:23 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Somalia: US took bodies of militants after strike	TheUnhivedMind	0	17	4th July 2011 - 12:10 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Australia military may scrap all gender barriers	TheUnhivedMind	0	21	3rd July 2011 - 11:13 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		US envoy says Iraq critical to global energy needs	TheUnhivedMind	0	16	3rd July 2011 - 11:04 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Germany to sell S Arabia battle tanks	TheUnhivedMind	0	40	3rd July 2011 - 04:30 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Afghan district governor kidnapped	TheUnhivedMind	0	21	3rd July 2011 - 04:29 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		World War 3 Written On The Wind	TheUnhivedMind	0	46	3rd July 2011 - 03:14 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		China Opens Oil Field in Iraq	TheUnhivedMind	0	19	3rd July 2011 - 02:42 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Prime Minister to order further troop reductions in Helmand	TheUnhivedMind	0	19	3rd July 2011 - 01:42 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		War Is in the Air	kalongi	0	43	2nd July 2011 - 11:24 PM Last Post by: kalongi
		Israel violates Lebanon's airspace	TheUnhivedMind	0	28	2nd July 2011 - 03:48 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Georgia, Abandoned by Russia, in the U.S. Navy's Gentle Embrace	TheUnhivedMind	0	24	1st July 2011 - 10:47 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind
		Medvedev Could Join Russia-NATO Antimissile Talks	TheUnhivedMind	0	14	1st July 2011 - 10:47 PM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

		Taliban freed French hostages 'for prisoners and money'	TheUnhivedMind	0	21	1st July 2011 - 02:24 AM Last Post by: TheUnhivedMind

Showing 100 of 4533 topics sorted by last post date in descending order from the beginning Go!

Pages: (46) [1] 2 3 ... Last »

NEW TOPIC NEW POLL

Open Topic (new replies)

Open Topic (no new replies)

Hot Topic (new replies)

Hot Topic (no new replies)

Poll (new votes)

Poll (no new votes)

Locked Topic

Moved Topic

Search this forum: Enter Keywords Go

- Knights of Malta Temporal Power Crusade Go

Mark this forum as read

Hosted for free by InvisionFree (Terms of Use: Updated 2/10/2010) | Powered by Invision Power Board v1.3 Final © 2003 IPS, Inc.
Page creation time: 0.0989 seconds | Archive

The Orsini Skin by Bunthius Zeta Board mods

0

View Full Version: Knights of Malta Temporal Power Crusade

51. US Military Chief Tours Chinese Bases
52. China offers rare glimpse of military HQ
53. China advancing military capability at sea, in
54. China ramps up military use of space with new
55. Egyptian pipeline hit by fourth explosive attack
56. Report: Hezbollah on high alert for fear of Israel
57. Bernie Sanders "People In This Country Are Sick &
58. America's Dirty War On Islam
59. M-1A1 Abrams To Be Sold To The Muslim Brotherhood
60. Knight of Malta, Panetta lands in Iraq
61. Tony Hayward in talks to buy Iraqi oil fields
62. Top U.S. military officer heads to China for visit
63. House Overwhelmingly Approves Record $649 Billion
64. Turkey, Israel still at table despite deadlock
65. Japan grounds F-15 fighter fleet after crash
66. Philippine foreign secretary visits China amid
67. Maiden voyage of China’s first aircraft carrier
68. Russia criticizes U.S. over abuses in wars abroad
69. Cameron to pull more military personnel from
70. UK confirms killing Afghan civilians
71. Karzai hints at instant US withdrawal
72. U.S. Air Force on a Mission to Save Money
73. Minister Vilnai: Next war will test home front
74. [vid] Israelis back new strike on Gaza
75. Russia warns NATO against going alone on missile
76. Russia admits no chance of sectoral missile defens
77. Will Spratlys tension pave the way for US troops
78. Plane 'buzzes' Philippine boat in South China Sea
79. British Military ‘Lost’ Billions in Weapons,
80. Turkey to double size of its army

81. Turkey reaches out to the new Middle East
82. Afghan War will Shift to India?
83. 'War is a war even if they call it a humanitarian
84. Putin reiterates Russia's expansion into Arctic
85. Arctic borders to get more Russian troops
86. Japan Foreign Minister Expresses Concern About
87. My Time in the US Navy: "Service" to Whom?
88. Somalia: US took bodies of militants after strike
89. Australia military may scrap all gender barriers
90. US envoy says Iraq critical to global energy needs
91. Germany to sell S Arabia battle tanks
92. Afghan district governor kidnapped
93. World War 3 Written On The Wind
94. China Opens Oil Field in Iraq
95. Prime Minister to order further troop reductions
96. War Is in the Air
97. Israel violates Lebanon's airspace
98. Georgia, Abandoned by Russia, in the U.S. Navy's
99. Medvedev Could Join Russia-NATO Antimissile Talks
100. Taliban freed French hostages 'for prisoners and

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta Temporal Power Crusade

101. David Cameron ponders armed forces reservists
102. US extends drone strikes to Somalia
103. Nobel Peace Prize President Attacks Somalia and
104. Iraq compensation bid is blocked
105. Afghanistan - WarOnWant Executive Director Speaks
106. Piracy at Sea:A tale of two crews
107. North Korea to Head U.N. Conference on Disarmament
108. This Is The End of Counterinsurgency in Afghanista
109. China rejects US involvement in South China Sea
110. US, Philippines hold drills near South China Sea
111. French journalists freed in Afghanistan
112. Nato helicopters end siege at Kabul Intercontinent
113. U.S. MILITARY FILMS AS CIVILIANS ARE BEING EXECUTE
114. South China Sea Disputes Could Lead to War: Report
115. [vid] Israel, Lebanon, Syria: Lull before War?
116. Bernie Sanders "Military Budget Has Tripled Since
117. Malaysia calls for Israeli leaders to be prosecute
118. War Is in the Air
119. Kabul's Intercontinental Hotel attacked by gunmen
120. South China Sea disputes could lead to war in Asia
121. Hezbollah in Latin America – Implications for Home
122. America is The Biggest Terrorist State of The Worl
123. ‘Frantic’ Arms Race in Middle East, Says Air Force
124. Can Obama say 9 Orwellian lies in 3 Afghanistan
125. What has the war in Afghanistan really achieved?
126. Vietnam and China Pledge to Peacefully Resolve
127. WWIII in Libya AND Syria in Days
128. US says won't rule out options on Venezuela
129. What China Knows That We Don't: The Case for a New
130. Russia Watches The Arab Spring

131. Spanish troops to withdraw from Afghanistan by
132. Afghanistan: Deadly attack on Logar hospital
133. Concerns Continue to Mount on U.S. Bioweapons
134. Guns For Hire In Afghanistan [Vd]
135. U.S. Military – The NWO Protectorate?
136. Permanent US Iraq And Afghanistan Occupations
137. In fleeing Afghanistan, the West relinquishes its
138. China warns U.S. to stay clear of regional dispute
139. Afghanistan: France follows US in troop withdrawal
140. Press TV's interview with US spies
141. Ahmadinejad Launches New Group To Crackdown On
142. EU targets Iran for supporting Syrian protest
143. War Savings for U.S. 'Nation-Building' Years Away
144. Baghdad: Bombs hail 'worst violence for months'
145. Vilna'i: We've never been better prepared for 146. Record Number Of Americans Want Troops Out Of 147. Dennis Kucinich "It's Time That We Defended Our
148. The Real War vs The Illusions
149. Global War Racketeering
150. F-16s Threaten Konigsberg

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta Temporal Power Crusade

151. AZ Sheriff: Why More Troops at Korean Border Than
152. India, China end freeze in military exchanges
153. After F-16 rejection, US offers 5th gen jets to
154. Australia's military looks north to protect oil
155. China Warns Vietnam of Possible Military Response
156. China, Vietnam engage in joint naval patrols
157. U.S. Urges Negotiation in South China Sea Disputes
158. Russia blasts U.S. Navy maneuvers near Georgia
159. France transfers sensitive warship technology to
160. CIA Director Panetta Gets Senate Approval as Next
161. Americans are tired of wars [Vd]
162. Lies, Damn Lies And Liberating Wars
163. Raytheon Plans Microwave Warhead to Fry Air Defens
164. A Firestorm On The Eastern Horizon
165. Barack Obama to announce withdrawal of 33,000
166. US gives Karzai a rare dressing down over 'occupat
167. Turkey to host NATO ground forces
168. Making a Killing: UK war-wallet bomb-doors open
169. Killing Iraqis Like Flies In Fallujah ~ Oh Dude!
170. Lifting The Hood ~ Iraq [Vd]
171. Good Fire Hit Him! [Vd]
172. Vietnam should wake up to Danger !
173. Vietnam allows foreign naval vessels to use Cam
174. Eisenhower's worst fears came true. We invent
175. Headed to the beach? Heads up for an invasion
176. Chinese train to kill American soldiers
177. U.S. Mayors To Push For First Anti-War Resolution
178. Karzai slams US, links hands with Pakistan, Saudi
179. U.S.-Saudi rivalry intensifies
180. War Is Not Far from Us and Is the Midwife of the

181. U.S. mayors: End wars in Afghanistan and Iraq
182. As West labors in Libya and Syria, Russia seizes
183. U.S. congresswoman says Russian-French Mistral
184. Chinese naval maneuvers seen as warning to Vietnam
185. U.S. Navy in South China Sea exercise with ASEAN
186. Afghanistan's Karzai: US 'in peace talks with
187. China to boost coastal forces amid sea tensions
188. Philippines Sends Warship After China Boat Heads
189. Navy Finds ‘Aggressive’ Corrosion on New Ship
190. Key US senators slam China on military parts probe
191. Was The Iraq War Merely A Smokescreen For "The
192. Why Is Obama Giving Missile Defense Secrets To
193. The Secret History of Iraq’s Invisible War
194. Czechs to exit US missile shield plan
195. Washington to send U.S. servicemen to maintain
196. India signs pact with US to buy 10 C-17 airlifters
197. China warns outside nations to stay out of sea
198. Vietnam outlines terms of possible military draft
199. Philippines to hold joint naval exercises with US
200. Philippines Removes Foreign Markers From Disputed

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta Temporal Power Crusade

201. Turkmenistan: Russia, US at Odds Over Trans-Caspia
202. Russia, China warn West against Arab interference
203. Russia Revives A Cold War Laser Project That
204. Nuclear Bomb Refurbishment May Alarm Russia
205. Iraq says U.S. congressman, delegation not welcome
206. Iraqis Blast U.S. Congressman's War Repayment Idea
207. 'Israel threatens neighbors with nukes'
208. 'The War You Don't See' - Pilger Film Banned By
209. War, devastation, and who’s cashing in on them
210. Russia Objects to U.S. Navy Cruiser in Black Sea
211. Clinton warns against "new colonialism" in Africa
212. China Communist Party newspaper cautions Vietnam
213. President Zardari welcomes Afghan President Karzai
214. Where America goes, Australia goes, especially on
215. US 'concerned' about China business practices in
216. Russian Unease Over U.S. Missile Defense Plans
217. Stand-off between Vietnam and China over oil
218. US Destroyer sent to South China Sea amid tension
219. Vietnam welcomes international help as sea dispute
220. Vietnam plans live-fire drill amid sea dispute
221. Palace reiterates peaceful resolution to Spratlys
222. China Rebuts CIA Director's Remarks, Accuses US
223. Afghanistan: UN says May deadliest month for
224. Will Washington foment war between China & India?
225. India tests nuke capable Prithvi II missile
226. NATO FACES 'DISMAL FUTURE' SAYS US DEFENCE SECRETA
227. Gates says no hasty U.S. troop cut in Afghanistan
228. Medvedev warns US of new arms race without shield
229. New US-Russia arms race? Battle lines grow over
230. Egypt and Hamas Reach Accord on Rafah Crossing

231. The Bravery of Targeting Unarmed Civilians
232. Chinese army forces chief ’confirms first China
233. War Is Not Far from Us and Is the Midwife of the
234. Tensions Flare Up Between White House, Pentagon as
235. US Planing to Grab Venezuela’s Oil
236. Medvedev approves Russian-U.S. plutonium disposal
237. U.S. and Ukraine Conduct Naval Exercises in Russia
238. Russia, NATO planes chase 'renegade' aircraft in
239. China May Sign Deal to Import Russian Gas Before
240. China, Russia Could Make U.S. Stealth Tech Obsolet
241. US remains top military spender, institute says
242. Russia 'key player' in move towards Afghanistan
243. How the empire will prevail: Will Washington
244. US 'considering greater troop reduction in Afghani
245. Lebanon fires on Israeli warplanes: security
246. Vietnam stands ground in sea dispute, survey ship
247. The Secret History of Boeing’s Killer Drone
248. Canada plans to open military bases abroad
249. Gates Warns of South China Sea Clashes Without
250. Making peace with the Taliban? UN pressed to lift

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Knights of Malta Temporal Power Crusade

4501. Top US advisor 'not convinced we're winning' in 4502. Iran, Syria in talks amid stand-off with West 4503. Russia says no to war, sanctions on Iran
4504. Pakistani troops fire on U.S. helicopters
4505. Israel Military To Acquire M72A7s And Patriot
4506. Dogs of War: It's fun being a mercenary 4507. Russian Army Adopts New Reconnaissance Drones
4508. India wary of being US card in China play: analyst
4509. F-35 Redefining National Strategic Capabilities 4510. Air force urged to put nuclear forces under single 4511. Iran still stalling on nuclear probe, IAEA says
4512. US: Iran courting new sanctions with IAEA stalemat
4513. Iranian foreign minister to meet German counterpar 4514. US drones bring fear and firepower to Qaeda war in 4515. US Navy's New Submarine Class Conducts Tomahawk
4516. US agrees to sell mini bunker-busters to Israel
4517. UN nuclear agency criticises Iran
4518. Soviet plan for WW3 nuclear attack unearthed
4519. Secret Assassination Program is Key in Iraq
4520. Russian strategic bombers land in Venezuela
4521. U.S. warplanes to patrol Baltic airspace from Octo 4522. Israel asks US for arms air corridor to attack Ira 4523. RIP, AFRICOM?
4524. VIDEO: Sarah Palin Talks Lightly About Nuclear War
4525. Yankee hegemony finished says Chavez
4526. Russia to launch rockets in the North Pacific 4527. CSTO to deploy troops and missile defense shield
4528. On Morning Of 9/11 Attacks, McCain Immediately
4529. With White House Push, U.S. Arms Sales Rise
4530. Syrian commandos invade seven N. Lebanese villages

4531. India successfully test-fires missile 'Astra'
4532. Deaths make 2008 deadliest for US in Afghanistan
4533. Palin takes tough stance on Russia
4534. Venezuela to expel U.S. ambassador

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF WAR

Title: MASSIVE ARCHIVE OF WAR

craig-oxley - September 13, 2008 11:45 PM (GMT)

http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...hp?showforum=18

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Manufacturing Justification for the NATO Takeover

Title: Manufacturing Justification for the NATO Takeover
Description: of Central Asia

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 04:14 AM (GMT)

Manufacturing Justification for the NATO Takeover of Central Asia–Smashing Greater Central Asia – (Part One)
21 07 2011
Manufacturing Justification for the NATO Takeover of Central Asia–
Smashing Greater Central Asia – (Part One)

Peter Chamberlin
http://therearenosunglasses.wordpress.com/...sia-–-part-one/

After ten years of raging warfare in Afghanistan, watching the fight slowly ooze across the invisible Durand Line into Pakistan, we have the right to wonder whether the war is any closer to ending today? It is perfectly reasonable to suspect that if we were allowed to know the truth we would understand that the American government has no plans to end the war in the near future. Trying to make sense of relentless Western news reports on the disaster of the impending American “withdrawal from Afghanistan,” even though other reports reveal that super-bases have been constructed, leaveing most observers completely bewildered about whether the Afgan war is ending or expanding. The only thing that is obvious is that there is to be no “withdrawal” from Afghanistan, at least not from the northern half of the country (SEE: Plan B In Afghanistan).

If it was true that US forces were planning to eventually leave Afghanistan, then CENTCOM would not be allocating $100 million to build a Special Forces base in Mazar i-Sharif. This is to be a massive, permanent structure, intended to serve as a Special Forces operations center for many years to come. The majority of analysts who have focused upon this SOCOM facility, have drawn the conclusion that this and the other super-bases are intended to provide protection to the pipelines which are planned, in addition to providing Green Berets and Navy Seals to send on night raids into Pakistan. My own research into the subject reveals something far more sinister than just the intentional prolonging of the occupation of Afghanistan.

From the bid solicitations which are cited below, the US Army has big plans for Central Asia, most of them are scheduled to take place after the official Afghan withdrawal date of 2014. Ongoing military construction contracts are proof of military intent. CENTCOM has just awarded KBR a contract for $3.8 billion for constructing unspecified new facilities in an “area of responsibility” which encompasses the following countries:

Afghanistan, Bahrain, Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Oman, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, United Arab Emirates, Uzbekistan and Yemen.

This contract (which is supplemented by the other contracts given below) is something known as a MATOC contract (Multiple Award Task Order Contract). To initiate this major omnibus contract, ninety-nine security-cleared companies were solicited to participate in the contract program, which is scheduled to continue until the year 2016. The majority of these ninety-nine companies specialized in wartime construction, but many of them had exotic specialties, ranging from electronic prototype construction, to aerial drone manufacturing and operations, to private security contractors specializing in “irregular warfare.” There were even a couple of them dealing with “directed energy weaponry,” in addition to one image consultant.

From this list of approved, experienced contractors fourteen construction contractors were selected to form a pool of ready bidders to bid on each project as it reached approval stage. Somehow, since the solicitation was announced, KBR has apparently eliminated the competition, winning the whole construction contract. It was also announced that five electronic contractors would form a bidding pool for the component manufacturing, maintenance and operations of the experimental prototype network. It may turn out, that the electronics are handled like the building, SAIC (Science Applications International Corporation) may have landed the entire package. (It does seem strange that both contract winners have been charged with wrongdoing on previous contracts.) SAIC has also been awarded another separate contract which is a companion to this big operation:

SAIC, Tetra Tech Joint Venture Gets Criminal Justice Program Support (CJPS) Contract

Science Applications International Corporation (SAIC) (NYSE:SAI) and Tetra Tech, Inc. (NASDAQ:TTEK) announced that their joint venture, Integrated Justice Systems International, LLC (IJSI), has been awarded a contract to render worldwide civilian police and criminal justice assistance to the U.S. Department of State’s Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs (INL). The total contract limit for this multiple-award, indefinite delivery/indefinite quantity (IDIQ) contract is worth $10 billion, consisting one base year and four option years.

To compete for task orders to supply INL with program management, criminal justice, and life and mission support to countries emerging from conflict or otherwise facing instability challenges the abovementioned joint venture was chosen.

IJSI shall render technical assistance, training, logistics and infrastructure services to support the Department of State's efforts to strengthen criminal justice systems in select partner countries under this new contract. IJSI is one of six teams that can compete for task orders under the contract.

Chuck Zang, SAIC senior vice president and business unit general manager explained that our joint venture renders the experience required for successful international criminal justice training and worldwide logistics. He added that SAIC has critical experience supporting the U.S. government's overseas law enforcement initiatives; including antiterrorism training and technical assistance and that they expect to support this important effort, and using their expertise to help ensure stability and safety through professional criminal justice entities, and training personnel to ensure modernization of their programs.

Washington's New Foxy Plan To Sneak Into the Central Asian Hen House

"Counternarcotics officials in Washington have unveiled a plan to help combat the flow of drugs from Afghanistan, through Central Asia, and into Russia…The plan, still in draft form, is known as "The Central Asian Counternarcotics Initiative" (CACI). It envisions the establishment of counternarcotics task forces in the five Central Asian countries — Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, and Uzbekistan — which would communicate with similar existing units in Afghanistan and Russia…The seven groups would share sensitive information, improve coordination on joint and cross-border operations, and help build cases against wanted or arrested traffickers…for the Russian Federation 'it is a means by which they can link into the efforts both in the source country, Afghanistan, and transit countries, the Central Asian five, in a way that they currently cannot do.'"

According to other advertised contracts, whatever work is in the pipeline for KBR, the operation will involve major investments in a prototype experimental electronic network. The official government website for the General Services Administration is soliciting contract bids for work for the Quick Reaction and Battle Command Support Division (QR&BCSD), which does everything from surveillance, to Special Forces missions, to conducting "irregular warfare," to running aerial drones.

ENGINEERING, INSTALLATION/INTEGRATION, TECHNOLOGY INSERTION AND LOGISTICAL SUPPORT TO THE QUICK REACTION & BATTLE COMMAND SUPPORT DIVISION (QR&BCSD)

Solicitation Number: 4QDS21110084

Agency: General Services Administration
Office: Federal Acquisition Service (FAS)
Location: Assisted Acquisition Services Division (4QFA)

This contract is also for unspecified work in the following countries, covering the same projected timeframe (contracts to be completed by 2016):

Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Dubai, Egypt, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Ukraine, Uzbekistan and Pakistan.

In narrowing the list down, we can rule-out the construction of these new facilities in Afghanistan or Pakistan, since such assets are already deployed there. Under a new plan unveiled Thursday, the Defense Dept. said that it is preparing to treat cyberspace as another “operational domain.” In this domain, China has been identified as America’s primary “cyber-enemy.” That should shrink the list, ruling-out the Middle Eastern, African and European countries, as the battlefield for any new net-centric operations, leaving only “the Stans” as the planned construction sites. Whatever the US military has planned for Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, or Uzbekistan will definitely be net-centric, in a big way. It is unlikely that the host governments will be apprised of any special operations which are outside the parameters of fighting narco-terrorism.

It is important at this point that we examine the “Quick Reaction Forces,” so that we may understand how they will be used. We have already summarized what they do (everything from surveillance, to Special Forces missions, to running aerial drones), but we now need to take a closer look at what those jobs entail, comparing that to the specific technicians being sought for the jobs.

The government is soliciting private contractors with experience in combat zones, to build a private electronics network to be used by US Special Forces in the same Central Asian countries. Again, the work conditions and terms given for these job listings matches the MATOC contract solicitation.

Getting back to the Quick Reaction contract notice, there is a more detailed pdf included, which really fleshes-out exactly what is being sought. The following national organizations will be connected with the planned tasks:

“The Afghanistan training efforts include the Border Mentoring Task Force, DEA SCIF, Counter Narcotics Academy and the Border Services Communications training. Other programs requiring C4ISR training include the Kyrgyzstan Information Sharing Communications System, Turkmenistan State Border Service Communications, and Tajikistan Intra-Agency Communications System Training.”

The purpose of these secret and semi-secret operations will be to establish American military dominance over the energy-laden CIS states. Contrary to popular opinion, these dangerous covert measures are not necessarily just to enable American oil companies to “steal the oil,” but are more likely intended to simply give American blackmailers the opportunity to assert similar control of the Asian oil and gas pipelines which Russia has over European gas lines. American military penetration of Central Asia will give US leaders the power to shut-down China, as well as India and Pakistan, whenever the new pipelines become operational. This military penetration is being hotly pursued on all fronts.

As a first step to obtaining veto power over energy to China, the US Army is creating for SOCOM the first “big network” of sensors and communication media (net-centric combat system), tied directly into the Global Information Grid (GIG).

Larger image

This is what “full-spectrum dominance” (the battlefield of the future) looks like. This is not speculation; it is a fact, taken directly from the General Services website.

The following job descriptions are copied from the Quick Reaction pdf:

Performance Work Statement (PWS) summarizes the jobs that this private network will perform for SOCOM:

engineering, integration, technology insertion, installation, testing, logistical, material acquisition and other support activities as required in support of a variety of C4ISR technology insertion and support projects.

Research and Development

• Technology Insertion, Systems Integration

• Engineering and Technical Documentation Support

• Software/Hardware Engineering

• Systems Engineering Support

• Engineering Contingencies

• Test and Evaluation

• Logistics Support

• Business Operations Support

Provide In-Country C4ISR experts to station/deploy into USCENTCOM and other countries to perform C4ISR and Counter Narcotics communication systems quality assurance tasks, witness testing, and assist in training events., NIU firing and training range management, and provide liaison/coordination between customer nations, embassies and C2D. The C2D Counter Narcotics Program Coordinators shall report back to CENTCOM

HQ,

C4ISR stands for Command, Control, Communication, Computers, Intelligence, Surveillance and Reconnaissance. MASINT is “measurement and signals intelligence” obtained from air-dropped or ground-placed sensors, which measure and report movement on the ground or in the sky to the Special Forces network.

Early air-dropped prototypes

Ground sensors

Or, perhaps something more exotic, like this Israeli rock version.

Under cover of joint operations with host governments, pursuing narco-terrorists, or interdicting drugs or arms traffickers, American air support will be secretly mapping terrain and acquiring GPS coordinates, as they air-drop MASINT sensors across the countryside.

US-contracted construction companies will erect permanent border control and other security facilities. These facilities will be in addition to Special Forces training centers, like the one in Tokmok, Kyrgyzstan, and the new one being built in Qaratogh, Tajikistan. Both of these facilities will belong to the host governments, but they will also be providing space for US technicians to occupy, as they monitor and coordinate efforts within the country, bringing those governments in line with the the other six national groups participating in the CACI initiative.

Into these fledgling counter-terror/counter-narcotics networks, American and British

Special Forces trainers will be inserted, serving as instructors in the new state-of-the-art centers. From these operational centers, “training missions” will be dispatched into the surrounding hills, facilitating the emplacement of ground-installed sensors, some of which have a battery life of six months or more.

In Central Asia, we will be hunting the IMU terrorists (Islamic Movement of Uzbekistan is the new “al-Qaeda”), as the means to permanently entrench American power in the region. The claim that “targets have been identified” from the alleged bin Laden raid is a complete fabrication, since the new enemies (those who are willing to take-up arms against American occupiers) have not as yet been identified. Whenever the time for killing begins, the victims will all be identified as “militants” by the complicit Western media, after they demonstrate their willingness to take-up arms and resist the encroaching Empire. For now, they remain simple folks facing a low-level invasion, who have not yet made the conscious personal decisions to resist. This is the real nature of a war against terrorism, it is based on an erroneous definition of “terrorism.” Civilians who resist invasion are classified as “terrorists.” Identifying them for later elimination is a primary objective of the opening (“tickling”) phase of the war.

The wars in Afghanistan and Pakistan have both been co-opted to this greater mission, allowing both wars to fester and stalemate until the new, greater war in Central Asia could be brought online. By “online,” I mean that preliminary groundwork could be laid, even as the destabilization programs were being guided to fruition. From the Tajik civil war, to the early colored revolutions and riots which have been engineered on the former Soviet real estate, to the more recent upheavals in Kyrghzstan and in China’s western regions. Social tensions in the region have been slowly percolated to the current boiling point, closely approximating the conditions arranged for the “Arab spring” movements. Destabilization is the primary weapon in “limited warfare” doctrine.

Afghan drugs have also served as another primary weapon in the CIA/Pentagon psywar destabilization program, their movement across borders and their corrupting influence have laid the foundations for joint counter-terrorism and counter-narcotics efforts from Afghanistan to Russia and beyond, anywhere that American-enabled opioids flow. In order to fight all the problems associated with these drugs and other fallout of America’s failed Afghan war plan, partnerships have been formed with US and NATO forces, making these governments all partners in plans for their own destruction and servitude. As a direct result of these partnerships, the doors have flung wide-open for a full-scale US military penetration of all of the “Stans,” and that planned penetration is getting underway.

In a strange twist of dictatorships striving to save their fledgling democracies from an Imperial penetration and net-centric psywar operations, governments which have found themselves under attack, have been turning to censorship of the Internet, as a last line of defense. In the past twenty-four hours three major Central Asian news websites have been taken-down by unknown entities in major cyber-attacks (Chronicles of Turkmenistan, NewsCentralAsia and Avesta.Tj).

In a mystifying arrogance that leaves decent folks grasping for the proper words to describe what we are witnessing, the American administration has revealed to the world that it has some unwritten right to take actions meant to undermine any government that tries to protect itself against the intensive, organized assault.

“The United States is funding the development of new technologies to circumvent unwanted controls, sponsoring training programs for Internet activists, and launching diplomatic initiatives to build “a global coalition of governments committed to advancing Internet freedom.”

The New York Times reports that the US State Department will have spent upwards of $70 million on “shadow networks” which would allow protesters to communicate even if powers that be pull the traditional plug — so far, it’s spent at least $50 million on a independent cell phone network for Afghanistan, and given a $2 million grant to members of the New America Foundation creating the “internet in a suitcase” pictured above. It’s a batch of mesh networking equipment designed to be spirited into a country to set up a private network.”

It is the nature of psywar (psychological warfare) that each small operation builds upon the previous operations, in a kind of inverted pyramidal edifice, where all building blocks rest upon one original faulty foundation stone. In the case of the global war on terror (GWOT), everything rests upon the American definition of the word “terrorism.”

In the grand psyop, war is perpetuated and sometimes escalated, but it is never ended. In order to accomplish the perpetuation of persistent warfare, American forces are never allowed to obtain anything approximating ultimate victory. In the scheme labeled “asymmetric warfare,” the impossible becomes an everyday occurrence. The flea is portrayed as the equal to the wolf pack. Small, poorly armed militant groups like the Taliban, somehow manage to hold-off and sometimes defeat the world’s most powerful military, even with its overwhelming air superiority. Even in mountainous terrain, where there are vast distances between targets, the overaccommodating Western media paints a misleading picture of militants who are armed with RPGs and AK-47s, surviving against military forces which operate under the principle of “full-spectrum dominance.”

Maintaining the illusion is the key to maintaining perpetual war. The psywar is far more important than the real war. The war against minds has more far-reaching effects than the war against the flesh. With one bullet, or one-hundred bullets, you can kill one man (or several), but with the right combination of words you can destroy or disable the minds of hundreds, even thousands of men. This is the reason why the US Army maintains 40 psychological warfare reserve units. Even the most deadly arm of the American military, the Special Forces divisions rely upon psyop battalions to prepare their battles for them. Full-spectrum cyber-warfare brings every resource to bear upon making the enemy think whatever you want them to think. In the case of the global terror war, America's real intentions are hidden behind a façade of ineptitude and near-incompetence, while the most sophisticated warfighting system ever dreamed-up by the minds of martial man have concentrated on overcoming the minds of the world.

They do this by creating the contradictory impression that our military is more concerned with perpetuating our enemies than in defeating them. We fight against "militant Islamists," even while our every action is cued towards increasing the number of militants. American policies of staging overwhelming punitive attacks upon our adversaries, knowing that countless numbers of Muslim males will rush forward in reaction, seeking vengeance for murdered family members, increases the resistance, instead of decreasing it. A policy which focuses upon provocation aims to drive the insurgencies. It is little wonder that so many researchers draw the conclusion that the CIA and military intelligence are behind the militant/terrorist groups, if not in actual deeds, then in intentions. This "intelligence-driven war" is a perpetual motion machine.

By driving the "Islamic" militant groups, wherever policy-makers wish to go, the doors are opened wide to US and NATO forces. The staged mock "killing of bin Laden" has set the next stage in the grand Pentagon psywar, a massive "manhunt" deep into Central Asia. World opinion is now pre-primed to expect US Special Forces kill teams to pursue Osama's alleged associates wherever they can be spotted in CENTCOM's area of operations.

The "killing of bin Laden" scam is being augmented by further US government machinations, which are centered around circumstances arising from the "failing" Afghan war–drugs and gun-running, narco-terrorism, regional instability. Under the pretense of assisting local governments deal with this Afghan-related chaos (through American and NATO support in improving national technological capabilities, especially in tightening border security), inroads are made into each of the targeted states military and police forces, justifying intensive penetration of the countryside under peaceful "aid" programs.

The American construction of massive bases in foreign countries (often against the will of the host governments) is one of those "national security" issues that our "free press" normally chooses to avoid. Despite claims that media in Western democracies are free to report on whatever they want, the corporate-owned press chooses to avoid stories of outright government duplicity, such as the contradictions inherent in the base construction issue. America is not so generous that it builds multi- million military bases with the intention to simply give them away as soon as they are completed. The tracks which have been left, confirm to us all, that the Afghan war is not slated to end in 2014, it is instead, going to be shifted into interior Central Asia. There is not yet any reason for world opinion to accept that major shifting of forces, but reasons (or at least excuses) are being created to shift those opinions, by means of the problems being cooked-up in the boiling pot of Afghanistan and Pakistan.

While the world's attention will remain riveted to potential military actions in Pakistan and the Persian Gulf, the real war will erupt elsewhere, seemingly out of nowhere.

chamberlinpeter@hotmail.com

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: MASSIVE PAKISTAN WAR LEADING TO WW3

Title: MASSIVE PAKISTAN WAR LEADING TO WW3

TheUnhivedMind - May 17, 2011 04:50 PM (GMT)

Pakistan lodges ‘strong protest’ over Nato violation

17 May 2011
http://www.dawn.com/2011/05/17/two-securit...waziristan.html

MIRAMSHAH: A Nato helicopter from Afghanistan intruded into Pakistan’s North Waziristan region on Tuesday, wounding two troops, local intelligence officials said, adding to tensions between Islamabad and the West.

“It happened early morning,” a Pakistani intelligence official in the region, who declined to be identified, told Reuters. “The helicopter hit a Pakistani check post on the border in the Datta Khel area.”

Another intelligence official said several Pakistani helicopters took off from Miranshah, the main town in North Waziristan, towards the site of the attack. The purpose of the Pakistani mobilisation was unclear.

The Pakistan army lodged a “strong protest” with Nato in Afghanistan over what it said was a violation of Pakistani air space by two helicopters, a military statement said.

The military condemned the violation and has requested for a flag meeting with Nato officials, DawnNews quoted ISPR spokesman Athar Abbas as saying.

Lieutenant-Commander Colette Murphy, a spokeswoman for the Nato-led International Security Assistance Force (Isaf), said in Kabul that the coalition was aware of the reports and looking into them, but had no immediate comment.

North Waziristan is the base of the Haqqani network blamed for the insurgency in eastern Afghanistan. US-led drone aircraft have repeatedly targeted the area over the past year.

Many militants, including foreign fighters loyal to al Qaeda, are based in Datta Khel. It is a stronghold of fighters loyal to Hafiz Gul Bahadur and has been a frequent target of US drone strikes.

Pakistan's private news channel said the checkpost targeted in the latest attack was located right on the border between Afghanistan and Pakistan.

It quoted officials as saying that the helicopters were just about to intrude into Pakistani territory when aerial gunshots were fired. They subsequently moved back but fired a retaliatory shot due to which rubble fell from the nearby mountains and wounded the security personnel.

The reported incursion came a day after unmanned US drone aircraft fired missiles in Datta Khel killing 12 militants, Pakistani officials said.

An intelligence official said that one of the dead militants, an Arab, was the son of an al Qaeda operative identified as Abu Kashif. There was no way to verify the death toll. Militants often dispute official accounts of drone attacks.

Relations between the US and Pakistan have been pushed almost to the breaking point after the secret May 2 raid on Abbottabad that killed Osama bin Laden, embarrassing and humiliating the powerful Pakistani Army and intelligence service.

Before that, in late January, undercover CIA contractor Raymond Davis killed two Pakistanis in Lahore, resulting in a six-week standoff over diplomatic immunity.

A previous incursion on Sept. 30, 2010, killed two Pakistani troops and wounded four more when Nato helicopters crossed the border while pursing insurgents. Pakistan retaliated by shutting down the supply route for Nato troops in Afghanistan.

Washington sees the rugged border region between Afghanistan and Pakistan as a critical battleground against al Qaeda and the Taliban.

TheUnhivedMind - May 17, 2011 04:52 PM (GMT)

Pakistan under Attack: Now NATO gunships

Global Research, September 28, 2010
http://www.globalresearch.ca/index.php?context=va&aid=21230

As so many had been predicting, if the Pakistani state does not delink itself from the misguided US 'war on terror', the US would eventually shift the centre of gravity of the war from Afghanistan to Pakistan and move militarily into Pakistani territory.

This is exactly what is now happening. Already the US has been carrying out drone attacks against Pakistanis, killing thousands of innocent citizens in their wake and perhaps in the process a few militants also.

Meanwhile, US covert operatives and Special Forces have spread themselves all over Pakistan and these revelations and warnings in the Pakistani media have been there for some time.

Now the US has begun the next phase of its agenda targeting Pakistan and that is the aerial gunship attacks from across the Afghan border into Pakistan.

On Friday NATO admitted that two gunship helicopters had entered Pakistan and killed 30 people – euphemistically termed "suspected militants" – just as Dr Aafia has been penalised for being a "suspected terrorist"!

Since the government of Pakistan has to its eternal shame kept silent on this new military targeting of Pakistani citizens, NATO has undoubtedly become emboldened and on Monday two gunship helicopters again came into Pakistani territory and killed a few more citizens – so far the tally is five killed in Kurram Agency.

Accompanying this new upping of the military ante inside Pakistan, the US drone attacks continue – with their frequency rising rapidly especially after Obama's coming to power in the US.

Almost daily there are reports of 10 people or more killed by these unmanned drones – as if Pakistani lives were worth nothing. Perhaps the US is right about this as far as Pakistani rulers are concerned since President Zardari is said to have told the CIA chief that collateral damage from the drones was not an issue that bothered him!

TheUnhivedMind - May 17, 2011 04:53 PM (GMT)

Pakistan military protests after NATO incursion wounds soldiers

By Emma Graham-Harrison and Haji Mujtaba – Tue May 17, 8:58 am ET http://news.yahoo.com/s/nm/20110517/ts_nm/us_pakistan_nato

MIRANSHAH, Pakistan/KABUL (Reuters) – NATO helicopters from Afghanistan intruded into northwest Pakistan Tuesday, wounding two soldiers, officials said, prompting a protest from the military already seething over the secret U.S. operation to kill Osama bin Laden.

The Pakistani Army said it had lodged a "strong protest" and sought a flag meeting with NATO commanders over the incursion in Pakistan's North Waziristan near the Afghan border which has been repeatedly targeted by U.S. drone aircraft as a hub of al Qaeda linked militants.

A Western military official in Kabul, however, said two NATO helicopters supporting a base in eastern Afghanistan had returned fire after being attacked from Pakistan, but declined to say whether they had crossed into Pakistani airspace.

A senior Pakistani security official said NATO has lodged its own complaint with Pakistan, accusing its forces of "unprovoked firing." Western military officials in Kabul had no immediate comment about the possible complaint.

The incident is certain to weigh on relations between the U.S. and Pakistan have been pushed almost to the breaking point after the May 2 raid on Abbottabad that killed bin Laden, with Pakistan's parliament condemning the operation as a violation of the nation's sovereignty.

It also came hours after Pakistani Prime Minister Yusuf Raza Gilani landed in Beijing for a visit that underlines Islamabad's close and productive ties with another major power.

A Western military official, who asked to remain anonymous, said NATO helicopters had fired at targets inside Pakistan, but only after they were attacked from across the border.

Pakistan's frontier has been described as a global hub for militants, and Tuesday, police said they had killed five suspected al Qaeda militants who had tried to carry out a suicide bombing at a paramilitary checkpoint in the southwestern city of Quetta.

The would-be bombers included three women and were believed to be foreigners, police said.

Quetta is believed to be a base for the Afghan Taliban leadership and if the attack had been carried out, it would have been the second targeting Pakistan's military since bin Laden was killed and the Pakistan Taliban vowed to avenge his death.

BREACH OF AIRSPACE?

A local government official said two NATO helicopters crossed into North Waziristan and remained for about 10 minutes in the area, known to be a hub for al Qaeda-linked fighters including the Haqqani network that is leading the insurgency in eastern Afghanistan.

The helicopters retreated after Pakistani border forces opened fire in the Datta Khel area about 40 km (24 miles) west of the main town of Miranshah, a security official said.

"A shell struck a mountain nearby and two of our soldiers were wounded by the rubble," the official said.

The Western military official said the helicopters came under fire first.

"Our initial reports indicate that two ISAF helicopters were in the area in support of FOB (forward operating base) Tillman, as the FOB had been receiving intermittent direct and indirect fire from across the Pakistani border," he said.

"Upon arrival the helicopter received fire from across the border but did not immediately return fire. Upon receiving fire from across the border a second time, the helicopter returned fire," he added.

The official said the NATO-led coalition had received reports two Pakistani troops had been wounded. He declined further comment, including on whether the helicopters had entered Pakistan airspace.

Pakistan has in the past reacted angrily to incursions by NATO aircraft, even though its air space is routinely breached by unmanned drone aircraft.

A previous incursion on September 30, 2010, killed two Pakistani troops and wounded four more when NATO helicopters crossed the border while pursing insurgents. Pakistan retaliated by shutting down the supply route for NATO troops in Afghanistan.

TENSE US TIES

In Pakistan this week, Senator John Kerry who is close to U.S. President Barack Obama, tried to smooth relations in the wake of the bin Laden raid, but also warned that Washington would not tolerate any of Pakistan's alleged double-dealings with militant groups.

Bin Laden's discovery in the comfortable garrison town of Abbottabad, only 50 km (30 miles) from the capital, has deeply embarrassed the military and spy agency, reviving suspicion that Pakistan knew where he was and has been playing a double game.

Pakistan has rejected that as absurd, but the United States has stepped up drone attacks against suspected militants since bin Laden's killing despite Islamabad's objections.

Several Pakistani helicopters took off from Waziristan's main town of Miranshah toward the site of Tuesday's reported incursion, a Pakistani officials said.

"After the May 2 incident, there is a high alert on the border," a security official said.

"Forces have been ordered to respond quickly if there is any attempt of intrusion."

Separately, a Pakistani helicopter gunship destroyed a wireless communication installation established by militants in mountains near Miranshah town in an strike Tuesday, an intelligence official in the region said.

North Waziristan is the base of the Haqqani network blamed for the insurgency in eastern Afghanistan. U.S.-led drone aircraft have targeted the area over the past year and Washington has repeatedly urged the Pakistan military to launch a ground operation.

Many militants, including foreign fighters loyal to al Qaeda, are based in Datta Khel. It is a stronghold of fighters loyal to Hafiz Gul Bahadur and has been a frequent target of U. S. drone strikes.

Monday, unmanned U.S. drone aircraft fired missiles in Datta Khel killing 12 militants, Pakistani officials said.

An intelligence official said that one of the dead militants, an Arab, was the son of an al Qaeda operative identified as Abu Kashif. There was no way to verify the death toll. Militants often dispute official accounts of drone attacks.

(Writing by Chris Allbritton; Additional reporting by Zeeshan Haider and Kamran Haider in Islamabad and Emma Graham-Harrison in Kabul; Editing by Sanjeev Miglani)

TheUnhivedMind - May 17, 2011 04:54 PM (GMT)

Russia to Include Pakistan in the SCO Puzzle

Submitted by Aurangzeb on May 14, 2011 – 3:01 pm http://www.pakistankakhudahafiz.com/2011/0...the-sco-puzzle/

Quite unexpectedly, Russia has been pursuing closer ties with countries which have been seen entirely as US clients. Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov just returned from an ice-breaking visit to Iraq, where different ideas for economic cooperation were discussed. And Russian President Dmitry Medvedev received his Pakistani counterpart, Asif Ali Zardari, with whom he discussed a range of economic issues, including cooperation in the energy sector (electricity and gas) as well as industrial projects. But the main declaration from the Moscow meeting was political and not economic. Medvedev publicly endorsed Pakistan's claim to join the Shanghai Cooperation Organization (SCO). This is a remarkable move indicating a new stage in the organization's development.

Russian-Pakistani relations have historically been frosty, but have improved recently. The additional intrigue surrounding Zardari's Moscow meeting stemmed from the crisis in relations between Pakistan and its main patron, the US. Despite all differences in the past, rooted mainly in the experience from the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan in the 1980s, current Russian interest in Pakistan is tied to attempts to clarify the Afghan situation, which determines the atmosphere in Central Asia. For now it is becoming increasingly unpredictable. The US strategy is vague, the situation inside Afghanistan is unstable, and the possibility of coordinating efforts with neighboring states remains unclear.

Russia and neighboring countries are not interested in a quick US withdrawal, as it could lead to the Taliban's return to power, or – probably even worse – chaotic civil war in the country with inevitable spillover into all bordering territories. Meanwhile, neighboring countries do not want US bases permanently stationed in Afghanistan either. Russia, China, India and Iran have all supported a "regional" solution, advocating in the middle-term a reliance on authorities in Kabul rather than on Western troops. The format of that solution is very vague. Zardari's Moscow trip, made immediately after the strategic Chinese-Pakistani consultations in late April and Chinese Foreign Minister Yang Jiechi's visit to Moscow last week, was expected to give a boost to the discussions.

One of Moscow's ideas for a regional solution involves an enhanced role for the SCO, the most representative organization in the region. During the upcoming SCO summit in Astana in June, member states are expected to lift the unofficial moratorium on the admission of new members that was imposed in 2006. India and Pakistan are the most likely candidates. The possible admission of those two countries is a delicate issue because of their very tense bilateral relations. Until recently, Russia would have liked to see India become a full member, while China preferred Pakistan. Medvedev's statement shows that Moscow's position is actually changing in favor of Islamabad, while New Delhi's endorsement remains. Indian nervous reaction is easy to predict, but it can be addressed by the Chinese lifting their objections to India's membership.

The Afghan question is perceived as something that has the potential to unite the SCO member states. The interests of India and Pakistan in the region are unlikely to coincide, but a multilateral format could ease their bilateral tensions by introducing external factors. Besides, if relations between Pakistan and the US continue to deteriorate, Islamabad could be forced to be more active in diversifying its contacts.

To be frank, the US has good reason to mistrust its Asian partner, due to its very dubious commitment to fight terrorists. At the same time, the enormous complicity of Pakistani society must be taken into account – putting more pressure on Islamabad to force it to up the ante in its fight against the radicals might fatally destabilize the country and its government. The Pakistani leadership's efforts to reduce external pressure by diversifying its international contacts have provoked ire in Washington, but it can be useful in order to restore a certain ability to govern in a very tricky region.

TheUnhivedMind - May 17, 2011 04:56 PM (GMT)

NATO Helicopters Strike Inside NorthWest Pakistan May 17th 2011

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=7P0SGcR6wC8

[dohtml]<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/7P0SGcR6wC8" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - May 17, 2011 04:59 PM (GMT)

Pakistan Troops, NATO Helicopters Clash at Border

By Haris Anwar and James Rupert - May 17, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-05-17/p...der-region.html

Two NATO helicopters entered Pakistani airspace and triggered a firefight that injured two soldiers, Pakistan's military said, in a further setback to ties strained by the U.S. raid that killed Osama bin Laden.

Pakistan troops at a border post in the North Waziristan region shot at the aircraft of the U.S.-led force in Afghanistan and were injured in a return of fire, according to an e-mail sent by Inter-Services Public Relations, the press office at Pakistan's army headquarters in Rawalpindi. The army has lodged a "strong protest" with NATO's Kabul-based International Security Assistance Force, the statement said. ISAF is aware of the incident and is investigating, spokesman Lieutenant John Harden said by phone.

North Waziristan is a mountainous district from where Afghan and Pakistani Taliban guerrillas attack U.S. troops across the border in Afghanistan. Last September, Pakistan closed its border to U.S. military supplies for 10 days after a similar exchange of fire between a U.S. helicopter and Pakistani border troops.

The incident added to already heightened tensions between the U.S. and Pakistan in their nine-year joint effort to subdue some Islamic militant guerrilla groups in the Afghanistan- Pakistan region. U.S. Senator John Kerry met Pakistan's army chief, General Ashfaq Parvez Kayani, and civilian leaders this week in an effort to improve dialogue after U.S. commandos raided a house deep in Pakistan May 2 to kill al-Qaeda leader bin Laden.
Sovereignty Protests

Pakistan's leaders have protested the violation of the country's sovereignty, and lawmakers in Parliament on May 14 asked the government to consider ending a transit route used by NATO to supply forces in Afghanistan.

“Pakistan has made it clear that they are going to protect their borders,” after the bin Laden incident, said Shaheen Akhter, a research fellow at Institute of Regional Studies in Islamabad. Still, with the U.S. needing Pakistan’s help to “make its exit from Afghanistan as smooth as possible” and Pakistan not wanting to escalate confrontations on its western border, it will be “business as usual,” Akhter said.

Hours after Kerry completed his talks in Islamabad yesterday, missiles fired by U.S. unmanned aircraft killed seven suspected militants in North Waziristan, Pakistani officials said. Such strikes in the border area are very unpopular among Pakistanis for the civilian casualties they have caused.

A joint statement released by the Pakistan president’s office and the U.S. Embassy in Islamabad said the governments held “a constructive exchange.”
Clinton Visit

It said U.S. officials will visit Pakistan soon to prepare for a trip by Secretary of State Hillary Clinton. In Washington, State Department spokesman Mark Toner confirmed that Clinton will visit Pakistan on a date to be announced.

While the joint statement on cooperation appeared to rule out any repeat of the unilateral U.S. attack into the country, it did not explicitly address that point or the U.S. missile attacks from drones.

Although Pakistan’s army didn’t identify the nationality of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization helicopter in today’s firefight, the ISAF forces deployed across the border from North Waziristan, in the Afghan provinces of Khost and Paktika, are Americans.

The firefight erupted at Admi Kot in the Pakistani border area of Datta Khel, which is controlled by Taliban commander Hafiz Gul Bahadur.

Bahadur hosts fighters from al-Qaeda and allied guerrilla groups, and his territory has been targeted by 65 of the 143 U.S. missile attacks launched by unmanned aircraft since the beginning of 2010, according to the Long War Journal, a private U.S. website that monitors the war.

U.S. officials said they didn’t inform their Pakistani counterparts of the attack on bin Laden because they feared sympathizers in Pakistan’s government or military might tip him off.

To contact the reporter on this story: Haris Anwar in Islamabad at hanwar2@bloomberg.net; James Rupert in New Delhi at jrupert3@bloomberg.net

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Peter Hirschberg in Hong Kong at phirschberg@bloomberg.net

TheUnhivedMind - May 17, 2011 04:59 PM (GMT)

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=9QUfYEoNcPI

[dohtml]<object width="640" height="390"><param name="movie" value="http://www.youtube.com/v/9QUfYEoNcPI&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3"></param><param name="allowFullScreen" value="true"></param><param name="allowScriptAccess" value="always"></param><embed src="http://www.youtube.com/v/9QUfYEoNcPI&hl=en_US&feature=player_embedded&version=3" type="application/x-shockwave-flash" allowfullscreen="true" allowScriptAccess="always" width="640" height="390"></embed></object>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - May 17, 2011 05:01 PM (GMT)

14 May 2011

Listen to Webster Tarpley on World Crisis Radio talking about current events including the U.S. desire to de-nuke Pakistan so the U.S. can invade without fear of nuclear attack.

Parts 1-5:
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=DE561G7gDVc
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=CTLytxU8hrM http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=kDA002B8kVg http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Fm2LANdt_e4
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=0n6Bh1cdmU4

[dohtml]<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/DE561G7gDVc" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/CTLytxU8hrM" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/kDA002B8kVg" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/Fm2LANdt_e4" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/0n6Bh1cdmU4"

frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - May 17, 2011 05:02 PM (GMT)

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=UnH3VT6muYQ

[dohtml]<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/UnH3VT6muYQ" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - May 17, 2011 05:04 PM (GMT)

Pakistan's Prime Minister visits to China to strengthen ties

17 May 2011
http://www.thejournal.ie/pakistans-prime-m...137679-May2011/

PAKISTAN'S PRIME MINISTER has begun a visit to China amid reports of increasing tensions between Pakistan and the United States.

The US killing of Osama bin Laden has further strained Islamabad and Washington's ties, with China one of the only nations to stand by Pakistan in the face of growing criticism about the country's intelligence in relation to Osama bin Laden's whereabouts

China now in the process of shoring up its relations with Islamabad, Afghanistan and several other Central Asia states in step with an expected diminished US presence as it winds down military operations in Afghanistan, reports the AP.

For Pakistan, Beijing represents an uncritical friend ready to provide aid, investment and military assistance. To the leaders in Beijing, ties with Pakistan and other countries in its neighborhood offer a bigger diplomatic footprint, better access to resources and a larger stable of allies to challenge US dominance.

Although Prime Minister Yousuf Raza Gilani's four-day visit, starting today, was planned well in advance, it nevertheless comes at a critical time for his country's relations with the US, which have been thrown into crisis over the American raid that killed bin Laden in the northern Pakistani city of Abbottabad on May 2. Pakistan has called the raid a violation of its sovereignty and threatened to retaliate if there are any similar operations in future.

While American politicians served up withering criticisms over Pakistan's failure to find bin Laden's hide-out — or the possibility that officials were protecting him — China offered welcome reassurance.

"The Pakistani government is firm in resolve and strong in action when it comes to counterterrorism," Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Jiang Yu told reporters at a May 3 news conference.

Days later, Gilani made Pakistan's appreciation clear, singling out China in a testy May 9 speech to parliament as Islamabad's "all-weather friend."

China's accomplishments are a "source of inspiration and strength for the people of Pakistan," said Gilani, who is expected to hold talks with Chinese leaders and oversee the signing of a series of agreements.

China-Pakistan ties were forged shortly after the founding of the People's Republic in 1949 and have thrived in part on both countries distrust of their mutual neighbor India.

Along with billions of dollars in investment — up to $30 billion over the next five years, according to agreements signed last year — China supports Pakistan's nuclear power industry and sells it military hardware including surface-to-air missiles, navy frigates and fighter jets.

TheUnhivedMind - May 18, 2011 12:09 AM (GMT)

Pakistani PM hails China as his country's 'best friend'

17 May 2011 Last updated at 14:08
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-south-asia-13418957

Pakistani Prime Minister Yousuf Raza Gilani has arrived in China on a four-day visit to commemorate 60 years of diplomatic ties between the countries.

Earlier, he described China as Pakistan's "best friend".

Although the visit was planned long ago, correspondents say it is especially timely for Islamabad because of strains with the US over the killing of Osama Bin Laden.

China is one of Pakistan's staunchest allies and trading partners.

"We appreciate that in all difficult circumstances, China stood with Pakistan. Therefore we call China a true friend and a time-tested and all-weather friend," Mr Gilani told China's official Xinhua news agency.

"We are proud to have China as our best and most trusted friend, and China will always find Pakistan standing beside it at all times," he said in an interview released on Tuesday.

The BBC's Jill McGivering says this latest display of warmth seems designed to reflect Pakistan's appreciation for China's uncompromising support in recent days.

Any divisions between Pakistan and the United States could be an opportunity for China - Pakistan is desperate for foreign investment, especially in infrastructure, one of China's specialities, our correspondent adds.
Diplomatic balance

Mr Gilani's first stop is Shanghai. On Wednesday he is due to speak at a cultural forum in the eastern city of Suzhou. He will then travel to Beijing, where he will meet Chinese leaders, including President Hu Jintao and Premier Wen Jiabao.

The two sides are expected to sign a series of agreements and discuss how they can fight extremism.

Trade between the two countries is increasing significantly. It reached $8.6bn (£5.3bn) last year, an increase of nearly 30% compared with 2009.

China is now believed to be Pakistan's biggest supplier of military equipment, providing surface-to-air missiles, warships and fighter jets.

Last week Pakistan opened a new nuclear reactor in Punjab, built with Chinese help. At least two more are planned.

Chinese officials and state media have hinted that they will use Mr Gilani's visit to portray Beijing as a steadfast and reliable partner in contrast to Washington, described in one editorial as a fickle and demanding interloper.

"US opinion has not only failed to criticise its own unilateralism in this action [against Bin Laden] violating Pakistani territorial sovereignty, it has vilified Pakistan as a scapegoat for its own rough going in its war against terror," an editorial said on Monday in the overseas edition of the People's Daily, China's main official newspaper.

TheUnhivedMind - May 18, 2011 12:14 AM (GMT)

U.S. Senators Question Aid to Pakistan

By Roxana Tiron and Laura Litvan - May 18, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-05-17/u...o-pakistan.html

The Senate Armed Services Committee chairman, Carl Levin, said the U.S. should curtail economic aid to Pakistan unless that government stops harboring insurgent groups that target American troops in neighboring Afghanistan.

Levin, a Michigan Democrat, said that continued U.S. financial support to Pakistan should hinge on whether the Pakistani military takes action against the Haqqani network, an Afghan Taliban-allied group based in Pakistan's northwestern border region with Afghanistan.

"There is a real problem with continuing financial support for Pakistan when they continue to support the Haqqani network," Levin told reporters in Washington yesterday. "These are people killing us. These people are killing us. And this is open."

Levin spoke to reporters after Senator John Kerry, the Massachusetts Democrat who leads the Foreign Relations Committee, briefed members of the Senate Democratic Caucus about his weekend trip to Pakistan and Afghanistan -- the first high- level official visit to that country since a team of U.S. Navy SEALs killed Osama bin Laden in Pakistan on May 2.

Pakistan should also arrest members of the Quetta Shura, a group of Afghan Taliban leaders, thought to be based in Pakistan, Levin said.
Securing Oil Port

Levin didn't elaborate on exactly how much and what he would cut from U.S. economic aid to Pakistan. He said he would allow "certain kinds of military aid" to continue. In particular, he said he supports reimbursing Pakistan for securing the port where U.S. oil is delivered and subsequently the routes leading into Afghanistan where the U.S. and NATO troops are conducting fighting the Taliban. Levin said he is also willing to support Pakistani military training along the border regions with Afghanistan.

Levin isn't alone in questioning the U.S. aid to Pakistan. At a Senate Foreign Relations hearing held by Kerry yesterday, several senators, including Republicans Bob Corker of Tennessee, James Risch of Idaho, as well as Democrats Chris Coons of Delaware and Robert Menendez of New Jersey raised questions about U.S. aid to Pakistan.

Kerry said that during his meetings with Pakistan's leaders on May 15 he "emphasized, at every step of the way, this relationship will not be measured by words or by communiques after meetings like the ones that I engaged in; it will only be measured by actions," Kerry said during the hearing.

Kerry is one of the architects of a 2009 bill that tripled non-military aid to Pakistan, committing $1.5 billion annually for five years. After bin Laden's killing, he called for a new round of hearings to "assess the strategic relationship" between the two countries and to examine how to arrive at an "acceptable end-state" in Afghanistan.
Troop Training

President Barack Obama's 2012 budget proposes $1.2 billion in assistance for Pakistan, largely to support counterinsurgency training for troops posted along the border with Afghanistan.

While members from both parties questioned continued U.S. assistance to Pakistan, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid and the Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell cautioned against threats to withdraw aid.

Reid, Democrat of Nevada, said the U.S. should “withhold judgment” and wait for hearings and other fact-finding first. “We need a good relationship with Pakistan, and hope we can have a good relationship with Pakistan,” he said. “But this isn’t the time to start flexing our muscle.”

McConnell, a Kentucky Republican, warned against pulling back from Pakistan.

“I don’t think disengaging from Pakistan, a nuclear power, is in America’s best interests,” he said. “There are certainly as we have learned a lot of different factions in Pakistan, some of which are friendly to us and some of which are not. We knew that before the Osama bin Laden raid, we still know that.”

-- Editors: Terry Atlas, Robin Meszoly

To contact the reporter on this story: Roxana Tiron in Washington at rtiron@bloomberg.net.

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Mark Silva at msilva34@bloomberg.net.

TheUnhivedMind - May 19, 2011 12:33 AM (GMT)

CIA in collaboration with RAW destabilising Pakistan

ISI is target; DG ISI vindicates confidence in people’s power; Demand for presenting defence budget in Parliament dangerously placed Interview Liaqat Toor

http://pakobserver.net/detailnews.asp?id=92580

Islamabad—In a great game going on in the region, CIA in collaboration with RAW is destabilising Pakistan to ultimately achieve its objectives of having a strong foothold in Afghanistan, containing China, and controlling Iran and oil reserves in the Middle East. In an exclusive interview with Pakistan Observer, Brig (Retd) Imtiaz Ahmed, who has to his credit seventeen years of long experience in intelligence service of the country including his appointment as the top man in the Intelligence Bureau (IB) while giving his views on post-Osama period said Pakistan is passing through a difficult time when CIA has unleashed its onslaught against ISI to malign it in the eyes of the people of Pakistan and the world.Imtiaz said war on terrorism, in fact was war on Osama by CIA in collaboration with Raw. The situation is clearing up now as Osama has been eliminated, who was in fact non-functional. Ayman al-Zawahiri and other top-ranking leaders were in the driving seat carrying out their missions.

Following Osama's death, Al-Qaeda and its associates who will feel handicapped, are bound to take revenge with fall out on Pakistan. He cited the example of Shabqader terror incident on Thursday where more than eighty men of Para- military force were perished in two suicide attacks.Basically, he said the Abbottabad episode has plunged the country into a new state of affairs after the US military invasion deep into Pakistan's territory. Now, Pakistan has to fight on two fronts— terrorism and brute force of America. When asked how Pakistan could face this American brutalism, he said Pakistan's domestic political scene is overcast by holocaust created by CIA and its collaborators causing misgivings and feeling of insecurity across the entire national canvass. The whole national scene has to be seen in the strategic plan conceived by the US in collaboration with India to establish its writ in South Asia. Their objectives are confinement of China, influence on Iran, strong foothold in Afghanistan and controlling oil reserves of Arab world. To execute this plan, the US has chosen India to be pushed as a military giant in the region and act as watchdog. The immediate visit of Indian Prime Minister Manmohan Singh to Kabul carried its own connotations. It is also reflected from malicious and baseless propaganda on Indian media against Pakistan about Abbottabad episode.Pakistan, he said, by virtue of its God-gifted geographical location and being nuclear state is being pushed by Americans in a pliable status. Since ISI is a hurdle in their way, consequently, CIA has made of late, Pakistan armed forces and ISI the target of their well- orchestrated and baseless sinister campaign of allegations, he said. The leadership of armed forces and ISI are possessed with high value of professionalism and dedication to build up strong fortress of defence of national sovereignty against the onslaught of Pakistan by the US spearheaded by CIA. The leadership has already refused to yield to US pressure of "do more" and had even considered the Kerry Lugar bill not favourable to Pakistan's war on terror.In this connection, he said recently, the Army Chief Gen. Ashfaq Parvez Kayani and ISI Chief Lt. Gen. Ahmad Shuja Pasha had asked the US to revisit their policy on drone attacks and stop operating their covert intelligence network in Pakistan as unfolded in the Davis Raymond ugly incident.He said the dynamics of the American violations of territorial limits of Pakistan find roots in CIA's venomous dislike for our military and ISI leadership. The US drive against Pakistan's internal stability and the two state institutions, which are guarantee to our collective defence is brining politico-religious forces, the people, armed forces and intelligence agencies together to thwart this move. To a question about government's response to Abbottabad episode, Imtiaz said no doubt, during the first 48 hours there was inertia at government level which gave open field to the US and India to unleash "misinformation missiles" which swept the peoples' perception and a section of media. In this backdrop, some political and religious forces found a fertile land to push their political agenda rather than national demand. However, in-camera briefing of the parliament by leadership of army, PAF and ISI followed by marathon question and answer session is unique precedence which unveiled hard facts so that it should not leave any ambiguity anywhere, be at home or abroad. The offering of accountability to Parliament or any other forum by Lt. Gen Pasha has brought in focus his leadership quality, courage, conviction and confidence in people's faith.

Nevertheless, he said some political elements influenced by their political cravings are damaging national harmony. Their inaptitude to the national scene unwittingly served the designs of CIA and RAW. The recent press conference by the top leadership of PML (N) has come as blow to national unity and national institutions. Amazingly, their series of political romance in the past with those who are now being criticised by them are littered with power and money. The demand made in the press conference for presenting budget of armed forces and ISI in the Parliament is dangerously placed as it will cause a jubilation for CIA and RAW.

He said the armed forces have a very strong and strict monitoring and accountability procedures of its budget. Pakistan is at a cross- road of history facing strategic threat of American collaboration by India and some other geo-political forces inimical to Pakistan. The armed forces and ISI have the strength to thwart such threats as no dent is created in their power potential by false play of Osama by the CIA.

Imtiaz said the history has provided an opportunity to Pakistan to rehash its policies relating to foreign, economic, war on terror and future intelligence sharing cooperation.

TheUnhivedMind - May 19, 2011 12:33 AM (GMT)

Pakistan Rushes to Finish Construction of Fourth Nuclear Reactor

By Jennifer Griffin
Published May 17, 2011
http://www.foxnews.com/world/2011/05/17/pa...uclear-reactor/

KHUSHAB, PAKISTAN – Recent satellite images obtained by Fox News from the aerial imagery company GEOEYE show an expanding nuclear facility at the Khushab facility about 100 miles south of Pakistan's capital city of Islamabad. The pictures were taken on April 20 and indicate Pakistan is building a fourth nuclear reactor to produce plutonium.

Paul Brannan, a nuclear analyst with the Institute for Science and International Security, explains how U.S. officials and other nuclear experts have been able to document the alarming expansion of Pakistan's nuclear program in the past two years.

"They have a telltale sign," Brannan said, looking at the images. "I mean you can see the square of the reactor building, you can see the inner square of the reactor hall where the actual reactor goes, and if you measure the dimensions of the building it matches up exactly to the second and the third reactors."

In 2009 it was a barren site.

Pakistan first revealed the Khushab site and its plutonium production facility in 1998 after the country's first nuclear test. That is when Pakistan's official nuclear program turned from the highly enriched uranium model established by the father of that program, A.Q. Khan, to plutonium production. Plutonium weapons are lighter, more mobile and easier to deliver than those based on highly enriched uranium.

Pakistan already has 100 nuclear weapons. Experts, such as Brannan, say that the new reactors could give Pakistan enough fissile material to build somewhere between eight and 20 more nuclear weapons per year.

But it's the cost of the reactors and the speed at which they have been built in the last two years that is raising eyebrows. Just how high is the cost? "It would be in the billions," Brannan said. "This is a military reactor. It's outside of the civilian program."

U.S. officials have been watching the Khushab facility for some time, but say there is no good explanation how Pakistan is paying for this. The United States has given Pakistan $20 billion in military and economic aid since September 11, 2001. Sen. John Kerry, who chairs the Foreign Relations Committee, returned from Islamabad Tuesday morning after Pakistan agreed to return the stealth helicopter tail of the downed Blackhawk MH-60 damaged in the raid that killed Usama bin Laden.

On Tuesday, Kerry warned against cutting off aid to Pakistan.

"Right now, we have about 100,000 reasons for worrying about our relationship with Pakistan," Kerry said during a hearing with former National Security Adviser Gen. Jim Jones. "And they're called our young men and women, and they're in uniform in Afghanistan."

Pakistan controls 70 percent of the supply routes into Afghanistan, according to Pentagon officials. Defense Secretary Robert Gates and others have warned that cutting off relations or aid to Pakistan would be dangerous because the government and military of Pakistan could fall under more influence from Islamic radicals who are sympathetic to Al Qaeda and those proliferating nuclear weapons could fall into the wrong hands.

TheUnhivedMind - May 19, 2011 09:45 PM (GMT)

US should respect Pak sovereignty: China

Thursday May 19, 2011 (1159 PST)
http://www.paktribune.com/news/index.shtml?239475

BEIJING: China has warned in unequivocal terms that any attack on Pakistan would be construed as an attack on China. Beijing has advised Washington to respect Pakistan•s sovereignty and solidarity and this was formally conveyed to the United States at last week•s China-US strategic dialogue and economic talks.

The Chinese foreign minister, who represented his country in the talks, conveyed the Chinese feelings to the United States. Chinese Prime Minister Wen Jiabao disclosed this during his two-hour-long formal talks with Prime Minister Yousuf Raza Gilani at the Great Hall of the People. The two prime ministers also held a 45-minute one-to-one meeting before beginning the talks with their respective delegations.

Highly-placed diplomatic sources told here in Beijing that the Chinese leadership was extremely forthcoming in assuring its unprecedented support to Pakistan for its national cause and security and discussed with PM Gilani all subjects of mutual interests.

The Chinese prime minister announced that the Chinese leadership was sending a special envoy to Islamabad to express solidarity with Pakistan at this crucial period in its history. The envoy, a senior level minister, will also take part in the celebrations for the 60th anniversary of diplomatic ties between the two countries.

Sources disclosed that China had also agreed to provide Pakistan 50 new JF-17 Thunder multi-role fighter planes for its air force. The Block-58 planes would be produced in Pakistan under a co-production agreement. It is likely that the production of the planes would start in June next year and till then China will complete the supply of 50 JF-17 planes for which an agreement was signed earlier.

The two countries are also in the process of discussing the supply of J-20 Stealth and Xiaolong/FC-1 multi-purpose light fighter aircraft to Pakistan. They are discussing the mode of payment and the number of planes to be provided to Pakistan, the sources said.

The two countries have also agreed to step up work on Pakistan•s satellite currently being built in China, which would be launched into orbit on August 14. The satellite will supply multifarious data to Pakistan, the sources added.

Prime Minister Gilani has termed Pakistan-China relations and friendship as •unique•. Talking to the accompanying journalists after his talks with the Chinese premier, he said that China, besides acknowledging the contribution and sacrifices of Pakistan in the war against terrorism, had supported the country•s cause at the international level.

•China supported Pakistan•s cause on its own accord,• Gilani said with reference to the recent Sino-US strategic and economic dialogue in Washington where the Chinese side conveyed to the US that keeping in view Pakistan•s sacrifices and concerns, it should be helped and its national honour be respected. In the wake of challenges faced by Pakistan after the killing of Osama bin Laden (OBL), Premier Wen was categorical in supporting Pakistan•s stance and strategy as well as its concerns over national honour and sovereignty.

The prime minister said that China has also asked the US to work for improving its relations with Pakistan keeping in view the present scenario. Pakistan, he said, has reiterated its position on one-China policy and said Pakistan fully supports China on the issues of Taiwan and Tibet. He said both sides had agreed to continue their consultations on the UN reforms.

He said the two countries were in agreement to enhance economic and trade relations and complete all ongoing development projects in Pakistan under the five-year development programme. The prime minister said it was also decided that fast track work would be done on the second five-year programme beginning next year. It was also agreed that the dialogue on the second phase of the Free Trade Agreement would be launched soon. It was also agreed that both countries would formulate a long-term joint energy mechanism for electricity generation in Pakistan through various means, including nuclear.

To a question, the prime minister said both sides had also agreed to increase defence cooperation and China had assured Pakistan help in enhancing capacity of its armed forces. He said Pakistan•s trade with China had registered a significant increase in the last two years and efforts were being made to raise it to US$15 billion a year.

Gilani said Pakistani exports to China increased by 37 percent last year while the Chinese exports increased by 28 percent.

To a question about Pak-US relations after the Abbottabad operation, the prime minister referred to the resolution adopted by the joint sitting of parliament, and said Pakistan will revisit it relations with the United States with regard to counter-terrorism cooperation. He, however, also mentioned the recent visit of Senator John Kerry to Pakistan as well as the joint statement issued after his meetings with the Pakistani leadership and said that it was decided that Pakistan and the US will conduct joint operations if any information was received about a •High Value Target• (HVT).

The prime minister said that Pakistan had the capability and capacity to defend its frontiers, adding Pakistan•s armed forces are fully vigilant and no such incident will happen in the future. He said the issue of drone attacks was also raised during the visit of Senator Kerry and Pakistan will continue its efforts to stop these attacks, which have proved to be counter-productive.

To a question, Gilani said that the political and military leadership would take a decision about a military operation in North Waziristan. No pressure would be accepted in this regard and Pakistan alone would decide on this, he added.

About the relations with other countries, the prime minister said Pakistan desires good relations with all its neighbours including India, Afghanistan and Iran.

Pakistan•s Ambassador to China Masood Khan told the media China will help Pakistan check its trade deficit and will send a special purchase mission for procurement of Pakistani goods to enhance its exports to China.

He said China will provide Pakistan over $400 million, including $100 million soft credit and a grant of 70 million RMB, for the post-flood reconstruction and development projects. He said that the ICBC (Bank of China) will open two branches in Pakistan and the National Bank of Pakistan will also open its branch in China.

Ambassador Masood Khan said that China had agreed to provide 500 scholarships to Pakistani students. Both countries have also decided to set up cultural centres in each other•s countries to promote cultural cooperation. He said China would provide treatment to 1,000 cataract patients from Pakistan.

End.

TheUnhivedMind - May 20, 2011 04:37 PM (GMT)

US consulate vehicles attacked in Pakistan

• Taliban claims responsibility for Peshawar blast
• Bystander killed and 12 people wounded
• US officials say bomber on motorbike rammed vehicles

Declan Walsh
guardian.co.uk, Friday 20 May 2011 07.43 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/may/2...tacked-pakistan

The Taliban has claimed responsibility for a bomb attack on a US convoy in Peshawar, the first attack on Americans in Pakistan since the death of Osama bin Laden on 2 May.

A bystander was killed and 12 people, two of them American, were wounded when a blast hit two armoured jeeps as they travelled to the US consulate, which is believed to house a large CIA station.

"We had warned that we will avenge the martyrdom of Osama," a Taliban spokesman, Ahsanullah Ahsan, told AP in a phone call from an undisclosed location. "We say to the Americans and Nato that we will carry out more deadly attacks and we can do it."

A US embassy spokesman said the Americans were not seriously hurt. He did not identify their function, but a police superintendent, Ijaz Khan, said two US security guards were being treated at an American medical facility.

The attack took place in University Town, a wealthy neighbourhood inhabited by westerners. US officials said a Taliban suicide bomber had rammed his motorbike into one of the US vehicles. Television pictures showed a white bulletproof jeep that had crashed into an electricity pylon.

It was not the first reprisal for Bin Laden's death claimed by the Taliban. A week ago two suicide bombers killed at least 91 recruits and wounded 100 outside a military training centre in Shabqadar, 10 miles north of Peshawar. On Wednesday more than 100 heavily armed militants stormed a checkpost on the outskirts of Peshawar, triggering a gun fight that left two police and 15 militants dead.

The attack was credited to Lashkar-i-Islam, a criminal-militant group that holds sway in parts of the nearby Khyber tribal agency.

Meanwhile, in Islamabad, US officials are trying to patch up their battered relationship with Pakistan's military and intelligence services while refusing to promise that the US will not carry out another unilateral raid similar to the one that killed Bin Laden.

On Thursday the US regional envoy, Marc Grossman, and the CIA deputy chief, Michael Morrell, held meetings with the Pakistan army chief, General Ashfaq Kayani, and the head of Pakistani intelligence.

Pakistan's military and civilian leaders have expressed outrage and described the Navy Seals raid in Abbottabad, 35 miles north of Islamabad, as a gross violation of sovereignty. The storm of anger has also served to obscure pressing questions about how Bin Laden managed to shelter inside Pakistan for at least six years.

The US is pressing Pakistan to take action against other militant leaders including the al-Qaida number two, Ayman al-Zawahiri, and Sirajuddin Haqqani, a militant warlord responsible for multiple attacks on western forces in Afghanistan. Meanwhile the CIA is combing a trove of computer disks seized from Bin Laden's house for intelligence on al-Qaida militants and future plots.

US officials are also checking the computers for any "smoking gun" – an indication that Bin Laden was being sheltered by Pakistani officials – but say that, so far, no such proof has emerged. Some intelligence gleaned from the disks has already been shared with Pakistan.

The highly protected Peshawar consulate, believed to house a major CIA station that assists with drone strikes in the nearby tribal belt, has been hit by the Taliban before.

In August 2008 the consul general survived a gun attack on her armoured vehicle as she left her house. In April 2010 militants launched a grenade and gunfire attack on the consulate, killing eight people including security guards but no Americans.

TheUnhivedMind - May 21, 2011 01:15 AM (GMT)

Pakistan and China to Strengthen Military Ties

By Bloomberg News - May 20, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-05-20/g...itary-ties.html

Pakistan Prime Minister Yousuf Raza Gilani is to meet Chinese President Hu Jintao today in Beijing amid signs the countries are boosting already close military ties in the wake of the U.S. raid that killed Osama bin Laden.

Pakistani Defense Minister Ahmad Mukhtar said in a May 18 interview in Beijing that his country was in talks to buy FC-20 jets from China and that teams led by Gilani and Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao had discussed boosting production of the jointly produced JF-17 fighter aircraft. The New York Times said China will provide 50 JF-17 fighters immediately for free, citing Pakistan officials it didn't name.

Gilani's visit to China comes as Pakistan's relations with the U.S. have come under strain following the raid on the garrison town of Abbottabad earlier this month that killed al- Qaeda chief bin Laden. Abbottabad is 48 kilometers (30 miles) from Pakistan's capital, Islamabad. Chinese officials have said anti-terrorist operations should respect national sovereignty.

Pakistan's delegation told Wen "that our sovereignty had to be accepted by everybody," Mukhtar said at Beijing's Great Hall of the People. "We will not let anybody come into our territory without announcing who they are."

Wen told Gilani that "no matter what changes might take place in the international landscape, China and Pakistan will remain forever good neighbors, good friends, good partners and good brothers."

U.S. Aid

President Barack Obama has proposed $1.2 billion in aid to Pakistan next year for programs that include counterinsurgency training for its military forces. Five Democratic U.S. senators, including California's Dianne Feinstein, wrote a May 17 letter to Secretary of State Hillary Clinton and Defense Secretary Robert Gates questioning the need for such assistance, saying they were "gravely concerned about the commitment of Pakistan's security establishment to fighting terrorism."

Almost half of Chinese arms exports between 2001 and 2010, totaling $3.13 billion, went to Pakistan, according to the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute.

China has had diplomatic ties with Pakistan for six decades, helping the country build power stations, roads and a deepwater port. Ahead of the visit, Gilani told the official Xinhua News Agency that China was Pakistan's "time-tested and all-weather friend." Gilani told Xinhua that China was the first country to show support for Pakistan following the raid against bin Laden.

The FC-20 fighter, known as the J-10 in China, is roughly equivalent to the U.S. F-16C fighter, according to the Asian Defence blog, which tracks Asian military developments.

--Michael Forsythe, Daniel Ten Kate. Editors: Ben Richardson, John Brinsley

To contact the reporter on this story: Michael Forsythe at mforsythe@bloomberg.net;

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Peter Hirschberg in Hong Kong at phirschberg@bloomberg.net

TheUnhivedMind - May 21, 2011 01:35 AM (GMT)

China Gives Pakistan 50 Fighter Jets

By JANE PERLEZ
Published: May 19, 2011
http://www.nytimes.com/2011/05/20/world/as...istan.html?_r=3

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — China has agreed to immediately provide 50 JF-17 fighter jets to Pakistan, a major outcome of a visit by Prime Minister Yousaf Raza Gilani to Beijing this week, Pakistani officials said Thursday.

China and Pakistan have jointly produced the JF-17 aircraft, but the new planes would be equipped with more sophisticated avionics, the officials said. The latest jet fighters would be paid for by China, they said.

The announcement came as Pakistan's already tense relations with the United States soured further after the killing of Osama bin Laden deep inside Pakistan on May 2.

Last week, Pakistan's spy chief denounced the United States in a rare briefing before Parliament in which he condemned the American raid for breaching Pakistan's sovereignty. Parliament, in turn, called for the government to revisit relations with the United States.

Mr. Gilani's visit to Beijing served as a pointed reminder of Pakistani suggestions that the government might seek to recalibrate relations with the United States, using China to offset what many here view as an overdependence on Washington.

The United States has provided Pakistan with some $20 billion in aid, mostly military, for its cooperation in fighting terrorism since the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001. Much of that aid has come in the form of reimbursements for Pakistani counterterrorism operations.

Both the aid and the effectiveness of Pakistan's cooperation have been called into question by the discovery that Bin Laden had lived for years in a large compound adjacent to a top military academy in the city of Abbottabad, a two-hour drive from the capital, Islamabad.

While the Obama administration would still like Pakistan's cooperation to wind down the war in Afghanistan and to root out terrorist groups, some American lawmakers are now calling for aid to Pakistan to be cut or suspended.

For their part, Pakistani officials were incensed that the Obama administration gave them no notice of the raid until helicopters bearing a Navy Seal team had already left the country.

Mr. Gilani's four-day visit to China may help Pakistan as it tries to regain leverage with the United States. During his visit, Mr. Gilani met with Premier Wen Jiabao of China, who bolstered Pakistan by saying the United States should respect Pakistan's sovereignty.

The news about the JF-17 aircraft is clearly a signal that Pakistan is shopping for alternatives to Washington, though the value of the deal may be more symbolic than decisive in terms of Pakistan's military capacity.

Pakistani military officials have consistently complained that American aid, which they would nonetheless like to keep flowing, falls short on many essential military items that the Americans have been reluctant to offer.

The United States provides Pakistan with F-16 fighter jets to help the country match the air power of its archrival India, but Pakistani military officials have complained that their F-16 fleet is aging.

The deal is another sign that Pakistan's relations with China are frequently far less encumbered than those with the United States, and that in many ways the interests of Pakistan and China coincide more easily.

The United States may be Pakistan's largest benefactor, but China is Pakistan's largest trading partner, and for years the Chinese have heavily invested in building a deep-water port in the Pakistani city of Gwadar.

China is often referred to as Pakistan's "all-weather friend," a contrast to the common depiction of its up-and-down relationship with the United States, which is deeply unpopular here.

The United States has invested in a special relationship with India. Both China and Pakistan, on the other hand, view India as a rival. They share an interest in containing India's regional influence, particularly as the United States draws down its forces in Afghanistan, a process the Obama administration says it will start this summer.

At a landmark meeting on April 16 in the Afghan capital, Kabul, top Pakistani officials suggested to Afghan leaders that they, too, needed to look to China, an ascendant power, rather than align themselves closely with the United States, according to Afghan officials.

"You couldn't tell exactly what they meant, whether China could possibly be an alternative to the United States, but they were saying it could help both countries," an Afghan official said afterward.

TheUnhivedMind - May 21, 2011 11:23 PM (GMT)

Pakistan orders some US military trainers to leave: WP

By: Special Correspondent
http://nation.com.pk/pakistan-news-newspap...deteriorated-WP

WASHINGTON - Pakistan has ordered up to 20 per cent of the US Special Operations forces trainers to leave the country in the wake of a series of clashes between the two governments, The Washington Post reported Saturday.

Citing an unnamed US military official, the newspaper said in a dispatch that between 25 and 30 trainers were "told to leave" in the weeks before the U.S. commando raid that killed Osama bin Laden this month, in response to an earlier incident involving a CIA employee who shot and killed two Pakistanis in Lahore.

Since bin Laden, who had evaded capture for a decade, was killed on May 2 in a top-secret US unilateral military operation in Abbottabad, relations between the two countries have become even more frayed.

The Obama administration has asked pointed questions about bin Laden's support system in Pakistan, and the Pakistanis assert that US raiders violated their sovereignty, it said.
Meanwhile, leaked confidential American diplomatic cables say that U.S. special forces were embedded with Pakistani troops on intelligence-gathering missions by the summer of 2009.

The disclosure comes a day after another set of cables claimed that Pakistan Army chief Gen. Ashfaq Kayani not only tacitly agreed to the covert U.S. drone campaign against militants, but asked for "continuous Predator coverage" of the tribal areas by these aircraft. The army denied the contents.

The published dispatches from WikiLeaks also reveal that U.S. special operations forces were deployed with Pakistani troops in joint operations in Pakistan by September of 2009.

"Through these embeds, we are assisting the Pakistanis collect and coordinate existing intelligence assets, the cables quoted then American ambassador to Pakistan Anne Patterson as saying.

Pakistan's powerful military faced rare criticism after the unilateral raid that killed bin Laden.
The infuriated army said the assault, which has severely strained ties between the two countries, was a violation of Pakistan's sovereignty. But Pakistanis politicians and media lashed out at the generals because they did not know about the raid.

TheUnhivedMind - May 21, 2011 11:23 PM (GMT)

China Gives Pakistan 50 Fighter Jets

By JANE PERLEZ
Published: May 19, 2011
http://www.nytimes.com/2011/05/20/world/as...istan.html?_r=4

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — China has agreed to immediately provide 50 JF-17 fighter jets to Pakistan, a major outcome of a visit by Prime Minister Yousaf Raza Gilani to Beijing this week, Pakistani officials said Thursday.

China and Pakistan have jointly produced the JF-17 aircraft, but the new planes would be equipped with more sophisticated avionics, the officials said. The latest jet fighters would be paid for by China, they said.

The announcement came as Pakistan’s already tense relations with the United States soured further after the killing of Osama bin Laden deep inside Pakistan on May 2.

Last week, Pakistan’s spy chief denounced the United States in a rare briefing before Parliament in which he condemned the American raid for breaching Pakistan’s sovereignty. Parliament, in turn, called for the government to revisit relations with the United States.

Mr. Gilani's visit to Beijing served as a pointed reminder of Pakistani suggestions that the government might seek to recalibrate relations with the United States, using China to offset what many here view as an overdependence on Washington.

The United States has provided Pakistan with some $20 billion in aid, mostly military, for its cooperation in fighting terrorism since the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001. Much of that aid has come in the form of reimbursements for Pakistani counterterrorism operations.

Both the aid and the effectiveness of Pakistan's cooperation have been called into question by the discovery that Bin Laden had lived for years in a large compound adjacent to a top military academy in the city of Abbottabad, a two-hour drive from the capital, Islamabad.

While the Obama administration would still like Pakistan's cooperation to wind down the war in Afghanistan and to root out terrorist groups, some American lawmakers are now calling for aid to Pakistan to be cut or suspended.

For their part, Pakistani officials were incensed that the Obama administration gave them no notice of the raid until helicopters bearing a Navy Seal team had already left the country.

Mr. Gilani's four-day visit to China may help Pakistan as it tries to regain leverage with the United States. During his visit, Mr. Gilani met with Premier Wen Jiabao of China, who bolstered Pakistan by saying the United States should respect Pakistan's sovereignty.

The news about the JF-17 aircraft is clearly a signal that Pakistan is shopping for alternatives to Washington, though the value of the deal may be more symbolic than decisive in terms of Pakistan's military capacity.

Pakistani military officials have consistently complained that American aid, which they would nonetheless like to keep flowing, falls short on many essential military items that the Americans have been reluctant to offer.

The United States provides Pakistan with F-16 fighter jets to help the country match the air power of its archrival India, but Pakistani military officials have complained that their F-16 fleet is aging.

The deal is another sign that Pakistan's relations with China are frequently far less encumbered than those with the United States, and that in many ways the interests of Pakistan and China coincide more easily.

The United States may be Pakistan's largest benefactor, but China is Pakistan's largest trading partner, and for years the Chinese have heavily invested in building a deep-water port in the Pakistani city of Gwadar.

China is often referred to as Pakistan's "all-weather friend," a contrast to the common depiction of its up-and-down relationship with the United States, which is deeply unpopular here.

The United States has invested in a special relationship with India. Both China and Pakistan, on the other hand, view India as a rival. They share an interest in containing India's regional influence, particularly as the United States draws down its forces in Afghanistan, a process the Obama administration says it will start this summer.

At a landmark meeting on April 16 in the Afghan capital, Kabul, top Pakistani officials suggested to Afghan leaders that they, too, needed to look to China, an ascendant power, rather than align themselves closely with the United States, according to Afghan officials.

"You couldn't tell exactly what they meant, whether China could possibly be an alternative to the United States, but they were saying it could help both countries," an Afghan official said afterward.

TheUnhivedMind - May 22, 2011 01:49 AM (GMT)

WEBSTER TARPLEY - PAKISTAN IS THE ROAD TO WW3

Listen to Webster Tarpley highlight the serious dangers stemming from the Pakistan problems at this current time. This broadcast took place on May 21st 2011 on World Crisis Radio

Parts 1-6:
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=qqKKGfeZucI
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=x1FzFeyVXZ8 http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=cOehEKrGuLM http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=GTFrx9VMX78
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=tfhnWPu7u3w http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=YRD7CZcG5Pg

[dohtml]<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/qqKKGfeZucI" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/x1FzFeyVXZ8" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/

cOehEKrGuLM" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/GTFrx9VMX78" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/tfhnWPu7u3w" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/YRD7CZcG5Pg" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - May 22, 2011 01:54 AM (GMT)

QUOTE

Alex Jones - RAND/Pentagon/Illuminati want World War to save US Empire and Economy (Pakistan/

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=YYu7Z6sdso0

[dohtml]<iframe width="480" height="390" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/YYu7Z6sdso0" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

RAND Lobbies Pentagon: Start War To Save U.S. Economy

Paul Joseph Watson & Yihan Dai
Thursday, October 30, 2008
http://www.infowars.com/rand-lobbies-penta...s-economy/?cp=9

According to reports out of top Chinese mainstream news outlets, the RAND Corporation recently presented a shocking proposal to the Pentagon in which it lobbied for a war to be started with a major foreign power in an attempt to stimulate the American economy and prevent a recession.

A fierce debate has now ensued in China about who that foreign power may be, with China itself as well as Russia and even Japan suspected to be the targets of aggression.

The reports cite French media news sources as having uncovered the proposal, in which RAND suggested that the $700 billion dollars that has been earmarked to bailout Wall Street and failing banks instead be used to finance a new war which would in turn re-invigorate the flagging stock markets.

The RAND Corporation is a notoriously powerful NGO with deep ties to the U.S. military-industrial complex as well as interlocking connections with the Ford, Rockefeller, and Carnegie foundations.

Current directors of RAND include Frank Charles Carlucci III, former Defense Secretary and Deputy Director of the CIA, Ronald L. Olson, Council on Foreign Relations luminary and former Secretary of Labor, and Carl Bildt, top Bilderberg member and former Swedish Prime Minister.

Carlucci was chairman of the Carlyle Group from 1989-2005 and oversaw gargantuan profits the defense contractor made in the aftermath of 9/11 following the invasion of Afghanistan. The Carlyle Group has also received investment money from the Bin Laden family.

Reportedly, the RAND proposal brazenly urged that a new war could be launched to benefit the economy, but stressed that the target country would have to be a major influential power, and not a smaller country on the scale of Afghanistan or Iraq.

The reports have prompted a surge of public debate and tension in China about the possibility that a new global conflict is on the horizon.

China's biggest media outlet, Sohu.com, speculated that the target of the new war would probably be China or Russia, but that it could also be Iran or another middle eastern country. Japan was also mentioned as a potential target for the reason that Japan holds the most U.S. debt.

North Korea was considered as a target but ruled out because the scale of such a war would not be large enough for RAND's requirements.

The reported RAND proposal dovetails with recent comments made by Joe Biden, Colin Powell, Madeleine Albright and others, concerning the "guarantee" that Barack Obama will face a major "international crisis" soon after taking office.

It also arrives following a warning from Michael Bayer, chairman of a key Pentagon advisory panel, who echoed the statement that the next administration will face an international crisis within months of taking office.

One would hope that good people, or at least sane people who don't wish to start a global nuclear war, will oppose the RAND proposal, such as top the military generals who threatened to quit if Bush ordered an attack on Iran. Admiral William Fallon, the head of US Central Command, quit in March last year as a result of his opposition to Bush administration policy on Iran.

Translations from Chinese provided by Yihan Dai.

SOURCES

Sohu.com – http://news.sohu.com/20081030/n260330741.shtml

Ifeng.com – http://news.ifeng.com/mil/4/200810/1029_342_851523.shtml

TheUnhivedMind - May 22, 2011 02:08 AM (GMT)

Please remember that the U.S. will shortly bring up 9/11 and Mohammed Atta once again. This time they'll push in the media about the $100,000 being wired into his account by the Pakistani ISI. This was all planned from day one ready for when they could use it in their attack against Pakistan which is a hub for The Golden Crescent heroin drug trade which King Juan Carlos wants overt control of rather than covert. Juan Carlos is on a mission with his Union for the Mediterranean and it's Crusades.

TheUnhivedMind - May 22, 2011 02:17 AM (GMT)

ALERT - TEMPLAR ATTACK ON THE MIDDLE EAST FROM FEB 26 2011 ONWARDS
http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...showtopic=52691

TheUnhivedMind - May 22, 2011 02:32 AM (GMT)

The Pakistan connection

There is evidence of foreign intelligence backing for the 9/11 hijackers. Why is the US government so keen to cover it up?

Michael Meacher
The Guardian, Thursday 22 July 2004 00.01 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2004/jul/22/usa.september11

Omar Sheikh, a British-born Islamist militant, is waiting to be hanged in Pakistan for a murder he almost certainly didn't commit - of the Wall Street Journal reporter Daniel Pearl in 2002. Both the US government and Pearl's wife have since acknowledged that Sheikh was not responsible. Yet the Pakistani government is refusing to try other suspects newly implicated in Pearl's kidnap and murder for fear the evidence they produce in court might acquit Sheikh and reveal too much.

Significantly, Sheikh is also the man who, on the instructions of General Mahmoud Ahmed, the then head of Pakistan's Inter-Services Intelligence (ISI), wired $100,000 before the 9/11 attacks to Mohammed Atta, the lead hijacker. It is extraordinary that neither Ahmed nor Sheikh have been charged and brought to trial on this count. Why not?

Ahmed, the paymaster for the hijackers, was actually in Washington on 9/11, and had a series of pre-9/11 top-level meetings in the White House, the Pentagon, the national security council, and with George Tenet, then head of the CIA, and Marc Grossman, the under-secretary of state for political affairs. When Ahmed was exposed by the Wall Street Journal as having sent the money to the hijackers, he was forced to "retire" by President Pervez Musharraf. Why hasn't the US demanded that he be questioned and tried in court?

Another person who must know a great deal about what led up to 9/11 is Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, allegedly arrested in Rawalpindi on March 1 2003. A joint Senate-House intelligence select committee inquiry in July 2003 stated: "KSM appears to be one of Bin Laden's most trusted lieutenants and was active in recruiting people to travel outside Afghanistan, including to the US, on behalf of Bin Laden." According to the report, the clear implication was that they would be engaged in planning terrorist-related activities.

The report was sent from the CIA to the FBI, but neither agency apparently recognised the significance of a Bin Laden lieutenant sending terrorists to the US and asking them to establish contacts with colleagues already there. Yet the New York Times has since noted that "American officials said that KSM, once al-Qaida's top operational commander, personally executed Daniel Pearl ... but he was unlikely to be accused of the crime in an American criminal court because of the risk of divulging classified information". Indeed, he may never be brought to trial.

A fourth witness is Sibel Edmonds. She is a 33-year-old Turkish-American former FBI translator of intelligence, fluent in Farsi, the language spoken mainly in Iran and Afghanistan, who had top-secret security clearance. She tried to blow the whistle on the cover-up of intelligence that names some of the culprits who orchestrated the 9/11 attacks, but is now under two gagging orders that forbid her from testifying in court or mentioning the names of the people or the countries involved. She has been quoted as saying: "My translations of the 9/11 intercepts included [terrorist] money laundering, detailed and date-specific information ... if they were to do real investigations, we would see several significant high-level criminal prosecutions in this country [the US] ... and believe me, they will do everything to cover this up".

Furthermore, the trial in the US of Zacharias Moussaoui (allegedly the 20th hijacker) is in danger of collapse apparently because of "the CIA's reluctance to allow key lieutenants of Osama bin Laden to testify at the trial". Two of the alleged conspirators have already been set free in Germany for the same reason.

The FBI, illegally, continues to refuse the to release of their agent Robert Wright's 500-page manuscript Fatal Betrayals of the Intelligence Mission, and has even refused to turn the manuscript over to Senator Shelby, vice-chairman of the joint intelligence committee charged with investigating America's 9/11 intelligence failures. And the US government still refuses to declassify 28 secret pages of a recent report on 9/11.

It has been rumoured that Pearl was especially interested in any role played by the US in training or backing the ISI. Daniel Ellsberg, the former US defence department whistleblower who has accompanied Edmonds in court, has stated: "It seems to me quite plausible that Pakistan was quite involved in this ... To say Pakistan is, to me, to say CIA because ... it's hard to say that the ISI knew something that the CIA had no knowledge of." Ahmed's close relations with the CIA would seem to confirm this. For years the CIA used the ISI as a conduit to pump billions of dollars into militant Islamist groups in Afghanistan, both before and after the Soviet invasion of 1979.

W ith CIA backing, the ISI has developed, since the early 1980s, into a parallel structure, a state within a state, with staff and informers estimated by some at 150,000. It wields enormous power over all aspects of government. The case of Ahmed confirms that parts of the ISI directly supported and financed al-Qaida, and it has long been established that the ISI has acted as go-between in intelligence operations on behalf of the CIA.

Senator Bob Graham, chairman of the Senate select committee on intelligence, has said: "I think there is very compelling evidence that at least some of the terrorists were assisted, not just in financing ... by a sovereign foreign government." In that context, Horst Ehmke, former coordinator of the West German secret services, observed: "Terrorists could not have carried out such an operation with four hijacked planes without the support of a secret service."

That might give meaning to the reaction on 9/11 of Richard Clarke, the White House counter-terrorism chief, when he saw the passenger lists later on the day itself: "I was stunned ... that there were al-Qaida operatives on board using names that the FBI knew were al-Qaida." It was just that, as Dale Watson, head of counter-terrorism at the FBI told him, the "CIA forgot to tell us about them".

· Michael Meacher is Labour MP for Oldham West and Royton. He was environment minister 1997-2003

massonm@parliament.uk

TheUnhivedMind - May 22, 2011 02:45 AM (GMT)

U.K. PREPARING FOR GREAT WAR OF THE GLOBE:
http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...showtopic=64003

TheUnhivedMind - May 22, 2011 09:39 PM (GMT)

US 'would repeat Bin Laden raid'

US President Barack Obama: "We are respectful of Pakistani authority"

22 May 2011 Last updated at 13:55
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/13478318

US President Barack Obama has said he would order a similar operation to that which killed Osama Bin Laden if another militant leader was found in Pakistan.

He said the US was mindful of Pakistani sovereignty but said the US could not allow "active plans to come to fruition without us taking some action".

The killing of Bin Laden by US forces in a Pakistani garrison town on 2 May strained ties between the two allies.

President Obama was speaking to the BBC ahead of a European visit.

Asked what he would do if one of al-Qaeda's top leaders, or the Taliban leader Mullah Omar, was tracked down to a location in Pakistan or another sovereign territory, he said the US would take unilateral action if required.

"Our job is to secure the United States," he told the BBC's Andrew Marr during a wide-ranging interview.

"We are very respectful of the sovereignty of Pakistan. But we cannot allow someone who is actively planning to kill our people or our allies' people.

"We can't allow those kind of active plans to come to fruition without us taking some action."
Tense partnership

Bin Laden, the Saudi-born leader of al-Qaeda, was killed in a raid by US Navy Seal commandos. They stormed the compound where he was living in Abbottabad, a town that is home to Pakistan's main military academy.

The discovery that Bin Laden had been living there embarrassed the Pakistani military, and led to renewed suspicions that he had enjoyed protection from some members of the Pakistani security forces.

The Islamabad government strongly denied such suggestions and said the US raid had undermined the country's sovereignty.

A resolution approved by Pakistani MPs earlier this month said the country would "no longer tolerate such actions and a repeat of unilateral measures could have dire consequences for peace and security in the region and the world".

Pakistan has been a major ally in the war against militants in neighbouring Afghanistan.

But US-Pakistani relations have also been strained by drone strikes targeting militants in the border area in recent years.

Reflecting on the raid - which he and his aides followed from the White House - Mr Obama said "that was as long a 40 minutes as I care to experience during my presidency".

He added that the killing of Bin Laden could be a "wake-up call where we start seeing a more effective co-operative relationship" with Pakistan.
Talking to the Taliban

On Afghanistan, Mr Obama said that while the conflict could not be solved militarily, raising troop levels had put the Taliban "back on its heels" in a way that could facilitate the brokering of a political reconciliation.

President Obama on whether the Taliban have a future in Afghanistan

"Ultimately it means talking to the Taliban," he said, adding that the "Taliban would have to cut all ties to al-Qaeda, renounce violence and they would have to respect the Afghan constitution".

Afghan presidential spokesman Waheed Omar welcomed this suggestion, saying it reflected Kabul's long-held view. "We're glad that we now have clear words from the president of the United States about it," Mr Omar told the BBC.

In a discussion that ranged from the US economy to Middle East peace talks and his family's fondness for the British monarch, Mr Obama:
Restated that the 1967 border between Israel and the Palestinian territories must be the basis for negotiations to set up a future Palestinian state
Praised the popular uprisings across the Middle East, saying that as long as people struggled for democracy non-violently the US would be "strongly supportive of their efforts"
Described America's economy as his "number-one focus" in the run-up to the 2012 presidential election; "My main concern day to day is how do we make sure the American economy is growing," he said
Praised domestic successes on health care, education and clean energy Acknowledged that the US had unfinished business over immigration and the energy bill.

President Obama is due to leave for Europe later on Sunday. He will first visit the Irish Republic, then the UK, France, and Poland.

He is expected to discuss a range of issues, including the upheavals in the Middle east and North Africa, the war in Afghanistan, and the downturn that has forced European governments to adopt austerity measures.

TheUnhivedMind - May 22, 2011 10:23 PM (GMT)

Gunmen storm Karachi military base

Gunmen attacked Pakistan's naval aviation base on Sunday, starting fires, setting off explosions and fighting pitched gun battles inside one of the country's most heavily guarded military installations.

10:58PM BST 22 May 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...itary-base.html

Officials said at least two people had been killed in the attack on PNS Mehran in the southern city of Karachi.

Between 15 to 20 gunmen entered the high-security facility before splitting up into smaller groups, setting off explosions and hiding in the sprawling facility.

Witnesses said they could hear gunshots and see smoke rising from the base.

"They were equipped with sophisticated weapons," said navy spokesman Commodore Irfan ul-Haq.

Another spokesman said that one P-3C Orion, a maritime patrol aircraft, had been destroyed.

"The attackers are still inside and intermittent firing is continuing."

Interior Minister Rehman Malik said the militants had attacked from the rear of the base.

"We have been able to confine them to one building and an operation is under way either to kill or capture them."

The Karachi attack evoked memories of an assault on Pakistan's army headquarters in the town of Rawalpindi in 2009, and revived concerns that even the most well-guarded installations in the country remain vulnerable to militants.

Taliban militants, who have vowed to avenge the killing of al Qaeda leader Osama bin Laden by US special forces, have carried out several attacks since his death on May 2.

Almost three hours after the start of the attack, gun battles between presumed militants and commandos continued.

A least a dozen ambulances were parked outside the base, waiting to take wounded to hospital.

Pakistani military and paramilitary reinforcements were pouring in, with four vehicles carrying about 10 troops each moving into the base.

Prime Minister Yusuf Raza Gilani condemned the "terrorist" attack.

"Such a cowardly act of terror could not deter the commitment of the government and people of Pakistan to fight terrorism," Mr Gilani said in statement.

TheUnhivedMind - May 22, 2011 10:36 PM (GMT)

QUOTE (TheUnhivedMind @ May 22 2011, 02:08 AM)

Please remember that the U.S. will shortly bring up 9/11 and Mohammed Atta once again. This time they'll push in the media about the $100,000 being wired into his account by the Pakistani ISI. This was all planned from day one ready for when they could use it in their attack against Pakistan which is a hub for The Golden Crescent heroin drug trade which King Juan Carlos wants overt control of rather than covert. Juan Carlos is on a mission with his Union for the Mediterranean and it's Crusades.

Mumbai terror attack: US trial puts Pakistan spy agency in the dock

Star witness David Headley set to claim ISI helped Lashkar-e-Taiba extremists carry out 2008 Mumbai massacre

Sebastian Rotella in Chicago guardian.co.uk, Sunday 22 May 2011 23.00 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/may/2...kistan-us-trial

Allegations that Pakistan's intelligence service was involved in the Mumbai terror attacks will be scrutinised in an American court case starting on Monday when the man who helped plan the 2008 strikes testifies against his alleged accomplice.

David Headley, a Pakistani-American businessman who has confessed to his involvement in the attacks, will be the star witness in the trial of Tahawwur Rana, his childhood friend, in Chicago.

Rana is charged with providing material support for terrorism in the assaults, which killed 166 people, as well as a plot in Denmark that was never carried out. Opening arguments in the case, based on the deaths of six Americans in Mumbai, will begin on Monday.

The case has drawn international attention because Headley's testimony is expected to reinforce allegations that Pakistan plays a double game in the fight against terrorism. Its success will depend largely on how the jury views Headley, 50, who is said to have juggled relationships with multiple wives, terrorist groups and intelligence agencies.

Headley is a former informant for the US Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA). He pleaded guilty last year to conducting reconnaissance for the Mumbai attacks and for the Danish plot. His confessions painted a devastating portrait of Pakistan's Inter-Services Intelligence Directorate (ISI) – he says ISI officers helped the Lashkar-e-Taiba (LeT) terrorist group plot the commando-style attacks on Mumbai.

Rana's defence will centre on the ISI links. His lawyers say Headley duped Rana into thinking he was helping an ISI espionage operation in India, then betrayed him to escape the death penalty. The defence will argue Rana had no idea Headley was plotting mass murder.

"They are using a whale to catch a minnow," said defence attorney Charles Swift, calling Headley "a master manipulator".

Prosecutors recently raised the political stakes by indicting a suspected ISI officer for the murders in Mumbai. The officer, identified only as Major Iqbal, allegedly oversaw Headley's scouting in India.

The decision to indict Iqbal was made at high levels in Washington, sending a signal from Barack Obama's administration, which had expressed frustration about Pakistan's reliability even before Osama bin Laden was found and killed in Abbottabad.

"I think [the indictment] shows the government believes Headley when he says his handler was an ISI officer," said James Kreindler, a former federal prosecutor who is suing the Pakistani spy agency in New York on behalf of the Mumbai victims and their families in a separate case.

"At some point in time there is not going to be any doubt whatsoever that the ISI coordinated the attack with Lashkar."The indictment does not mention the ISI, part of a calculated low-key approach, according to an Obama administration official who requested anonymity because of the pending trial. But the prosecutors are likely to address the allegations about the ISI, especially as the defence has emphasised them.

"The decision not to name the ISI does not reflect second thoughts about the evidence," the official said. "There are no second thoughts about the evidence."

The prosecution's case is based on a secretive international investigation by the FBI and about 30,000 pages of court documents, most of them classified. Headley's testimony is backed by corroborating evidence including other witnesses and communications intercepts. If there is strong evidence that the ISI helped kill Americans, it would inflict further damage on an endangered alliance with Pakistan into which Washington has poured billions of dollars.

Pakistani officials deny any links to terrorism and question Headley's credibility because of his past as a double agent and criminal.

The Pakistani major and five of the six other alleged leaders of the Mumbai attacks charged in Chicago remain at large. The FBI has photos of some of them, intercepts of their voices and emails, and information about their whereabouts, but Pakistani authorities have done little to pursue the fugitives, US officials say. Pakistan's prosecution of several Lashkar chiefs arrested in 2009, including one now under US indictment, has stalled.

Rana, a doctor by training, met Headley when they attended an elite military school in Pakistan. He is the lowest-ranking suspect and is said to have let Headley use his immigration consulting firm as a cover overseas.

In her first media interview, Rana's wife, Samraz, who also has a medical degree, said she met Headley in the 1990s after she emigrated to the US. Although he was a convicted heroin dealer and recovering addict, he charmed her conservative family, she said from their bungalow near Devon Avenue, the heart of Chicago's South Asian community.

The bespectacled 48-year-old mother of three teenagers smiled wearily as she recalled Headley's relationship with her children.

"He was like a gateway to American culture for us," she said. "He was like a second father for my kids. My kids would say, 'he's cool, this guy'. He was taking them to the movies, Chuck E Cheese, all this fun stuff … He talked to me like a brother. He knows what I liked. He knows what my husband liked. He knows what my children like … He has different faces."

Headley, formerly Daood Sayed Gilani, was born to a mother from a rich Philadelphia family and a father who was a renowned, politically influential Pakistani broadcaster. Headley told investigators that he had a distant Pakistani relative who was a former deputy director of the ISI and an army general, according to Indian and US officials. If that link is confirmed, it could help explain why the agency later recruited Headley and how he had access to senior officers and militant chiefs.

At 17, he returned to the United States, where he managed bars and owned a video rental store. Multilingual and gregarious, he has shown a con man's gift for winning over accomplices, investigators and romantic conquests.

"He was a tall, handsome guy," Samraz Rana said. "He was wearing very expensive clothes and, I mean, he was really impressive."

After a 1997 arrest for heroin smuggling, Headley became a prized DEA informant who targeted Pakistani traffickers.

Immediately after the 11 September 2001 attacks, the DEA directed him to collect intelligence on terrorists as well as drugs. That December, the US government ended his probation early and rushed him to Pakistan, where he began training in Lashkar terror camps weeks later, according to court documents and his associates.

Some federal officials say he remained an informant for at least three more years until 2005, but the DEA says he was deactivated in early 2002.

Between 2001 and 2008, federal authorities were warned six times by his wives and associates that he was involved in terrorism. None of the resulting inquiries yielded anything. The FBI and CIA say he never worked for them.

Headley's personal life has also been dramatic. He has four children, including a son named Osama with a Pakistani wife from an arranged marriage in 1999. But he has been married to three other women and several of those relationships overlapped.

At times, Headley has worn a full beard and traditional garb and expressed warlike beliefs, quoting the Qur'an, praising al-Qaida and declaring his hatred for India. But he has often gone clean-shaven and behaved like a high-rolling entrepreneur with a taste for champagne and luxury.

After he began training with Lashkar, he joked with his third wife, a New York makeup artist, that their pet dog could be a good "jihadi dog," according to a close associate. Hardcore extremists shun dogs because they see them as un-Islamic and unclean, making dog ownership a possible cover for terrorists.

When the DEA arrested Headley in 1987 and 1997, Rana put up his house as bond. When the Ranas ran into financial trouble in 2005, Headley came to the rescue with a loan of more than $60,000 (£37,000), Rana's wife said.

"We were like almost at the border of bankruptcy," she said. "So my husband he became more close to him. And he said: 'Oh, he is my true friend because he helped me at this time when I really need money'."

But Headley had traits that made her uneasy. She said her husband told her Headley had once used an elderly aunt to smuggle drugs on a flight overseas, hiding the package in her pocket without her knowledge.

In 2006, the ISI recruited Headley in Pakistan, according to his confession. In addition to Iqbal, his trainer and handler, he said he met ISI officers named Major Samir Ali, Lt Col Hamza and Col Shah. After specialised ISI training, he undertook two years of missions in India directed by Iqbal and Sajid Mir, a Lashkar chief who is the suspected project manager of the plot.

Mir's voice was caught on wiretaps overseeing the three-day slaughter in Mumbai by phone. Some US and European anti-terror officials believe Mir once belonged to the military or ISI; others say he only had close ties to the security forces.

Iqbal is said to have assigned Headley to gather military intelligence, giving him about $28,000 to establish an office of Rana's firm in Mumbai as a cover and for other expenses, the indictment says.

Samraz Rana insists her husband had no idea about the plot. The Ranas travelled to Mumbai, where she has family, days before the attack in November 2008.

"It's a zero per cent chance that my husband is involved in this thing," she said. "My relatives are there … I was there. My husband was there. We [could have been] killed in that attack."

The defence, however, will have to explain wiretaps in which Rana appears to praise the Mumbai masterminds. Evidence indicates he communicated with Iqbal and helped Headley maintain his cover in Denmark in January 2009 by sending an email to an advertising representative at the Jyllands Posten newspaper, which Lashkar targeted because it had published caricatures of the prophet Muhammad, according to the indictment.

Iqbal met Headley at least twice about the Denmark plot, expressing enthusiasm about attacking the newspaper, according to Headley's account. The officer cut off contact with Headley when Mir, the lead plotter, backed away from the operation in March 2009, documents say. But Headley continued meeting and communicating with Shah and Samir Ali as the Denmark plot was taken over by al-Qaida, according to officials and an Indian court document.

Shortly before the Mumbai attack, Headley had brought his Pakistani wife and children to Chicago. They lived with the Ranas for 20 days before moving into a nearby apartment.

"They become very close to my kids," Samraz Rana said. "And the wife was nice. And we have like sort of family relationship at that time … Dave was not here, he only sent his family. So we were taking care of his family."

During this period, documents show, Headley was spending most of his time in Pakistan, where he had a Moroccan wife. The Ranas paid rent for Headley's family as part of the strict conditions he had imposed for repaying the money he had loaned them, she said.

The FBI arrested Headley and Rana in October 2009. A DEA agent who had handled Headley when he was a drug informant was present when investigators brought Headley in, perhaps in a strategy to induce co-operation. Headley quickly did what he had done in the past: he changed sides and spent weeks detailing his role in the Mumbai massacre.Despite Headley's guilty plea, Samraz Rana finds it difficult to believe that her jovial family friend helped plan the carnage of Mumbai. She recalled an anecdote her husband told about their military school days, when Headley would avoid morning prayers.

"Dave, he knocks on all the doors of students and he says, 'Get up, get up, it's time for prayer'," she said. "And then when everybody gets up, he went to his room and went to sleep, you know. So he was laughing. He was like that."

Now, though, Samraz Rana sees Headley as a predator.

"He just thinks about himself," she said. "I think he [studies] human beings more as compared to the ordinary person. He can understand what [someone] likes and he changes himself according to that… Now I realise what intention he had."

Insurgent - May 23, 2011 05:18 AM (GMT)

http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-south-asia-13495127

The attackers are now holding hostages, including Chinese military personnel, at the Mehran naval aviation base.

TheUnhivedMind - May 23, 2011 04:22 PM (GMT)

Pakistan Commandos Remove Taliban Guerrillas From Karachi Naval Air Base

By Khurrum Anis and Farhan Sharif - May 23, 2011
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-05-22/e...der-attack.html

Pakistani commandos ended a Taliban siege of a navy base in the country's largest city after a 16- hour battle that the militants said was in part to avenge the killing of al-Qaeda leader Osama bin Laden.

Ten members of Pakistan's security forces were killed along with four guerrillas, Interior Minister Rehman Malik told reporters in Karachi. The "terrorists were 20-22 years of age and wore Western clothes with suicide jackets beneath them," Malik said. They were armed with rocket launchers and grenades, he said.

Pakistani Taliban had pledged to attack government and military installations after U.S. forces killed al-Qaeda leader bin Laden in a raid in Abbottabad, 30 miles (50 kilometers) north of Islamabad, on May 2. The American raid exacerbated tensions between the two countries, as the U.S. questioned whether Pakistani officials had protected bin Laden and Pakistan protested the violation of its territory.

The insurgents in Karachi damaged surveillance aircraft provided by the U.S. in the biggest strike against a leading Pakistani military installation since guerrillas attacked the army's Rawalpindi headquarters in October 2009.

"This attack shows that the Taliban have sympathizers and insiders in the security establishment," said Talat Masood, a retired army lieutenant general and security analyst in Islamabad. "This also shows that they have become more powerful and sophisticated in their planning and attacks."
Americans, Chinese

Six Americans, involved in training Pakistani forces, and 11 Chinese nationals were inside the base at the time of the attack, Malik said today. He said four militants had launched the raid, a far smaller number than claimed by the Taliban.

"Fifteen of our fighters entered the naval air base and we don't expect them to return," Ehsanullah Ehsan, a spokesman for the Tehreek-e-Taliban Pakistan, said earlier by telephone from an undisclosed location. "They are there to kill. Our issue with Pakistan is its secular policies and friendship with America."

Last night's attack began with several explosions at the Mehran naval base around 11 p. m., followed by gunfire. Malik said that militants had entered from the back of the base by cutting through wires, before carrying out the attack like "movie stars."

Two P-3C Orions, a maritime surveillance aircraft, were targeted and damaged in the attack, Haq said. The U.S. handed over the aircraft to the Pakistan navy in April 2010 and said it will give a total of eight by 2012, according to the U.S. Central Command website.
Surveillance Role

The Taliban may have hit the navy station for its role in helping conduct surveillance against movements by militant groups along Pakistan's coast, said Bahukutumbi Raman, an Indian security analyst and retired counter-terrorism chief of India's main intelligence agency.

Pakistan's naval air unit, including the U.S.-supplied Orion aircraft, has been providing "air surveillance to prevent any sea-borne intrusions of al-Qaeda and to detect any terrorist plans for attacks on ships bringing supplies for the NATO forces in Afghanistan," Raman wrote in an e-mailed analysis.

Trucks carrying soldiers entered the base soon after the attack began. Flames and black smoke rose into the air and dozens of ambulances waited outside the base.

Tensions between the U.S. and Pakistan have escalated with American officials saying they were worried that Pakistan's intelligence agency maintains ties to guerrillas fighting American-led forces in Afghanistan. The U.S. military says its war against the Taliban is hindered by Pakistan's failure to shut down militant havens.
Drone Attacks

Also straining relations is Pakistan's opposition to U.S. drone attacks on Taliban targets that have killed civilians and American insistence that the strikes continue.

Pakistan's leaders have rejected accusations they are not doing enough to defeat insurgents. The army's offensives against the local Taliban movement and allied guerrillas have triggered retaliatory bombings and gun battles in cities nationwide that the government says have killed thousands of Pakistani citizens and security personnel.

Twin bombings on May 13 at a Pakistani paramilitary police academy killed 80 people in what the Pakistan Taliban said was in part revenge for the killing of bin Laden and a precursor to attacks against the U.S.

The PNS Mehran Base is 10 kilometers from Karachi's Quaid- e-Azam International Airport. It provides all the logistic and administrative support to the aviation unit of the Pakistan navy, according to the navy's website.

On Oct. 10, 2009, the Pakistani military freed 39 hostages after soldiers stormed a building in the army's Rawalpindi headquarters, ending a 22-hour siege by militants.

Yesterday's attack comes less than a month after militants attacked navy buses in Karachi, killing four people and injuring 56. Two days later, four navy personnel and one civilian were killed in a bomb attack on a navy bus in the financial capital.

To contact the reporters on this story: Khurrum Anis in Karachi News at kkhan14@bloomberg.net; Farhan Sharif in Karachi, Pakistan at Fsharif2@bloomberg.net

To contact the editors responsible for this story: Naween Mangi at nmangi1@bloomberg.net Peter Hirschberg at phirschberg@bloomberg.net

TheUnhivedMind - May 23, 2011 04:53 PM (GMT)

Here we go with round two of the Al-CIA-dah propaganda against Pakistan:

QUOTE

Taliban leader Mullah Omar killed in Pakistan

English.news.cn 2011-05-23 13:06:27 FeedbackPrintRSS
http://news.xinhuanet.com/english2010/worl.../c_13889429.htm

KABUL, May 23 (Xinhua) -- Afghan Taliban leader Mullah Mohammad Omar has been killed in Pakistan, a private television channel reported Monday.

"Mullah Omar was killed on way from Quetta to North Waziristan, " TOLO television said in its news bulletin.

However, it did not provide details on how he was killed and by whom.

Meanwhile, a security official confirmed the killing, saying, " It is correct that Mullah Omar has been killed."

The official emphasized that Mullah Omar was killed inside Pakistan.

Taliban militants fighting Afghan and NATO-led troops in Afghanistan have yet to make comment.

Mullah Omar has survived massive U.S. military manhunt since the collapse of Taliban regime by U.S-led invasion in late 2001 for sheltering al-Qaida chief Osama Bin Laden.

U.S. commandos killed Bin Laden in a raid on his hideout in Pakistan on May 2.

TheUnhivedMind - May 23, 2011 05:26 PM (GMT)

Pakistan turns to China for naval base

By Farhan Bokhari in Islamabad and Kathrin Hille in Beijing
Published: May 22 2011 13:22 | Last updated: May 22 2011 19:46
http://www.ft.com/cms/s/0/3914bd36-8467-11...l#axzz1NCIxzdYc

Pakistan has asked China to build a naval base at its south-western port of Gwadar and expects the Chinese navy to maintain a regular presence there, a plan likely to alarm both India and the US.

“We have asked our Chinese brothers to please build a naval base at Gwadar,” Chaudhary Ahmed Mukhtar, Pakistan’s defence minister, told the Financial Times, confirming that the request was conveyed to China during a visit last week by Yusuf Raza Gilani, Pakistan’s prime minister.

Hitherto, China has shied away from moves that might alienate the US and Beijing's neighbours, such as India, Malaysia and Indonesia. "China's rise is a beneficial force for peace and we have no hegemonic ambitions," said a Chinese official familiar with Beijing's security policy.

But Christopher Yung, senior research fellow at National Defense University in Washington, said in a recent paper "the nature and degree of China's access to out-of-area bases will be the ultimate indication and warning" of its eventual intention to become a global military power. A Pentagon official said: "We have questions and concerns about this development and [China's] intentions. But that is why we believe it is important to have a healthy, stable and continuous military-to-military relationship."

A senior Pakistani official familiar with Sino-Pakistani discussions on naval co-operation said: "The naval base is something we hope will allow Chinese vessels to regularly visit in [the] future and also use the place for repair and maintenance of their fleet in the [Indian Ocean region]."

Such a foothold would be the first overseas location offering support to the People's Liberation Army navy for future out-of-area missions and so would be likely to reinforce international concerns over Beijing's longer-term military ambitions.

"This will definitely be a 'game changer' in China's defence and security relationships," said Rahul Roy-Chaudhury, a south Asia security expert at the International Institute for Strategic Studies. "The construction of a naval base in Gwadar would provide its own ships and possibly submarines with 'permanent' basing rights, along with the possibility of regular patrols and exercises in the Arabian Sea to protect the growing number of Chinese-flagged oil tankers traversing the region to meet its increasing energy demands from the Gulf region."

As anti-piracy operations in the Gulf of Aden have made the PLA Navy aware that it lacks port access for restocking with food and water, swapping staff and maintenance, the force is lobbying for the construction of foreign bases.

The proposed port could meet some of the PLA navy's needs but is less aggressive than a Chinese-owned base on foreign soil. The existing commercial port at Gwadar was built by China but is run by the Singapore Port Authority. But it could antagonise India as it comes amid a strengthening of China's military ties with Pakistan.

During Mr Gilani's visit last week, Beijing agreed to accelerate delivery of 50 fighter jets to Pakistan

Pakistan's defence officials are keen for the PLA Navy to build up its presence in the Indian Ocean and the northern Arabia sea, mainly to counterbalance India's naval forces.

Additional reporting by Daniel Dombey in Washington

TheUnhivedMind - May 24, 2011 12:22 AM (GMT)

US, Pakistan Near Open War; Chinese Ultimatum Warns Washington Against Attack [Translate]

Webster G. Tarpley, Ph.D.
May 20, 2011
http://tarpley.net/2011/05/21/us-pakistan-...against-attack/

China has officially put the United States on notice that Washington's planned attack on Pakistan will be interpreted as an act of aggression against Beijing. This blunt warning represents the first known strategic ultimatum received by the United States in half a century, going back to Soviet warnings during the Berlin crisis of 1958-1961, and indicates the grave danger of general war growing out of the US-Pakistan confrontation.
"Any Attack on Pakistan Would be Construed as an Attack on China"

Responding to reports that China has asked the US to respect Pakistan's sovereignty in the aftermath of the Bin Laden operation, Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesperson Jiang Yu used a May 19 press briefing to state Beijing's categorical demand that the "sovereignty and territorial integrity of Pakistan must be respected." According to Pakistani diplomatic sources cited by the Times of India, China has "warned in unequivocal terms that any attack on Pakistan would be construed as an attack on China." This ultimatum was reportedly delivered at the May 9 China-US strategic dialogue and economic talks in Washington, where the Chinese delegation was led by Vice Prime Minister Wang Qishan and State Councilor Dai Bingguo.1 Chinese warnings are implicitly backed up by that nation's nuclear missiles, including an estimated 66 ICBMs, some capable of striking the United States, plus 118 intermediate-range missiles, 36 submarine-launched missiles, and numerous shorter-range systems.

Support from China is seen by regional observers as critically important for Pakistan, which is otherwise caught in a pincers between the US and India: "If US and Indian pressure continues, Pakistan can say 'China is behind us. Don't think we are isolated, we have a potential superpower with us,'" Talat Masood, a political analyst and retired Pakistani general, told AFP.2

The Chinese ultimatum came during the visit of Pakistani Prime Minister Gilani in Beijing, during which the host government announced the transfer of 50 state-of-the-art JF-17 fighter jets to Pakistan, immediately and without cost.3 Before his departure, Gilani had stressed the importance of the Pakistan-China alliance, proclaiming: "We are proud to have China as our best and most trusted friend. And China will always find Pakistan standing beside it at all times….When we speak of this friendship as being taller than the Himalayas and deeper than the oceans it truly captures the essence of our relationship."4 These remarks were greeted by whining from US spokesmen, including Idaho Republican Senator Risch.

The simmering strategic crisis between the United States and Pakistan exploded with full force on May 1, with the unilateral and unauthorized US commando raid alleged to have killed the phantomatic Osama bin Laden in a compound at Abottabad, a flagrant violation of Pakistan's national sovereignty. The timing of this military stunt designed to inflame tensions between the two countries had nothing to do with any alleged Global War on Terror, and everything to do with the late March visit to Pakistan of Prince Bandar, the Saudi Arabian National Security Council chief. This visit had resulted in a de facto alliance between Islamabad and Riyadh, with Pakistan promising troops to put down any US-backed color revolution in the kingdom, while extending nuclear protection to the Saudis, thus making them less vulnerable to US extortion threats to abandon the oil-rich monarchy to the tender mercies of Tehran. A joint move by Pakistan and Saudi Arabia to break out of the US empire, whatever one may think of these regimes, would represent a fatal blow for the fading US empire in South Asia.

As for the US claims concerning the supposed Bin Laden raid of May 1, they are a mass of hopeless contradictions which changes from day to day. An analysis of this story is best left to literary critics and writers of theatrical reviews. The only solid and uncontestable fact which emerges is that Pakistan is the leading US target — thus intensifying the anti-Pakistan US policy which has been in place since Obama's infamous December 2009 West Point speech.
Gilani: Full Force Retaliation to Defend Pakistan's Strategic Assets

The Chinese warning to Washington came on the heels of Gilani's statement to the Pakistan Parliament declaring: "Let no one draw any wrong conclusions. Any attack against Pakistan's strategic assets, whether overt or covert, will find a matching response…. Pakistan reserves the right to retaliate with full force. No one should underestimate the resolve and capability of our nation and armed forces to defend our sacred homeland."5 A warning of full force retaliation from a nuclear power such as Pakistan needs to be taken seriously, even by the hardened aggressors of the Obama regime.

The strategic assets Gilani is talking about are the Pakistani nuclear forces, the key to the country's deterrent strategy against possible aggression by India, egged on by Washington in the framework of the US-India nuclear cooperation accord. The US forces in Afghanistan have not been able to conceal their extensive planning for attempts to seize or destroy Pakistan's nuclear bombs and warheads. According to a 2009 Fox News report, "The United States has a detailed plan for infiltrating Pakistan and securing its mobile arsenal of nuclear warheads if it appears the country is about to fall under the control of the Taliban, Al Qaeda or other Islamic extremists." This plan was developed by General Stanley McChrystal when he headed the US Joint Special Operations Command at Fort Bragg, North Carolina. JSOC, the force reportedly involved in the Bin Laden operation. is composed of Army Delta Force, Navy SEALs and “a high-tech special intelligence unit known as Task Force Orange.” “Small units could seize [Pakistan’s nukes], disable them, and then centralize them in a secure location,” claimed a source quoted by Fox.6

Obama Has Already Approved Sneak Attack on Pakistan’s Nukes

According to the London Sunday Express, Obama has already approved an aggressive move along these lines: “US troops will be deployed in Pakistan if the nation’s nuclear installations come under threat from terrorists out to avenge the killing of Osama Bin Laden… The plan, which would be activated without President Zardari’s consent, provoked an angry reaction from Pakistan officials… Barack Obama would order troops to parachute in to protect key nuclear missile sites. These include the air force’s central Sargodha HQ, home base for nuclear-capable F-16 combat aircraft and at least 80 ballistic missiles.” According to a US official, “The plan is green lit and the President has already shown he is willing to deploy troops in Pakistan if he feels it is important for national security.”7

Extreme tension over this issue highlights the brinksmanship and incalculable folly of Obama’s May 1 unilateral raid, which might easily have been interpreted by the Pakistanis as the long-awaited attack on their nuclear forces. According to the New York Times, Obama knew very well he was courting immediate shooting war with Pakistan, and “insisted that the assault force hunting down Osama bin Laden last week be large enough to fight its way out of Pakistan if confronted by hostile local police officers and troops.”

The Shooting Has Already Started

The shooting between US and Pakistani forces escalated on Tuesday May 17, when a US NATO helicopter violated Pakistani airspace in Waziristan. Pakistani forces showed heightened alert status, and opened fire immediately, with the US helicopter shooting back. Two soldiers at a Pakistani check post on the border in the Datta Khel area were wounded.8

Possible Pakistani retaliation for this border incursion came in Peshawar on Friday, May 20, when a car bomb apparently targeted a 2-car US consulate convoy, but caused no American deaths or injuries. One Pakistani bystander was killed, and several wounded. In other intelligence warfare, Ary One television reported the name of the CIA station chief in Islamabad, the second top US resident spook there to have his cover blown in six months.

US Envoy Grossman Rejects Pakistani Calls To Stop Border Violations

US Special Representative to Afghanistan and Pakistan Marc Grossman, the replacement for the late Richard Holbrooke, on May 19 arrogantly rejected Pakistani calls for guarantees that no more Abottabad-style unilateral operations would be mounted in Pakistan.9 In refusing to offer such assurances, Grossman claimed that Pakistani officials had never demanded respect for their border in recent years.10

In the midst of this strategic crisis, India has gone ahead with inherently provocative scheduled military maneuvers targeting Pakistan. This is the “Vijayee Bhava” (Be Victorious) drill, held in the Thar desert of north Rajastan,. This atomic-biological-chemical Blitzkrieg drill involves the Second Armored Corps, “considered to be the most crucial of the Indian Army’s three principal strike formations tasked with virtually cutting Pakistan in two during a full-fledged war.”11

The Nation: A CIA-RAW-Mossad Pseudo-Taliban Countergang

One way to provide the provocation needed to justify a US-Indian attack on Pakistan would be through an increase in terrorist actions attributable to the so-called Taliban. According to the mainstream Pakistani media, the CIA, the Israeli Mossad, and the Indian RAW (Research and Analysis Wing) have created their own version of the Taliban in the form of a terrorist countergang which they control and direct. According to one account, “Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) operatives have infiltrated the Taliban and Al-Qaeda networks, and have created their own Tehrik-e-Taliban Pakistan (TTP) force in order to destabilize Pakistan.” The former Punjab Regional Commander of the Pakistani Inter-Service Intelligence (ISI), retired Brigadier General Aslam Ghuman, commented: “During my visit to the US, I learned that the Israeli spy agency Mossad, in connivance with Indian agency RAW, under the direct supervision of CIA, planned to destabilize Pakistan at any cost.”12 Was this countergang responsible for last week’s double bombing in Waziristan, which killed 80 paramilitary police?

According to the same account, Russian intelligence “disclosed that CIA contractor Raymond Davis and his network had provided Al-Qaeda operatives with chemical, nuclear and biological weapons, so that US installations may be targeted and Pakistan be blamed….” Davis, a JSOC veteran himself, was arrested for the murder of two ISI agents, but then released by the Pakistani government after a suspicious hue and cry by the State Department.

CIA Claims The New Al Qaeda Boss Lives in Waziristan

If the US needs a further pretext for additional raids, it will also be easy to cite the alleged presence in Waziristan of Saif al-Adel, now touted by the CIA as bin Laden’s likely successor as boss of al Qaeda.13 It is doubtless convenient for Obama’s aggressive intentions that Saif al-Adel can be claimed to reside so close to what is now the hottest border in the world, and not in Finsbury or Flatbush.

In the wake of the unauthorized May 1 US raid, the Pakistani military chief General Kayani had issued his own warning that similar “misadventures” could not be repeated, while announcing that US personnel inside Pakistan would be sharply reduced. In the estimate of one ISI source, there are currently about 7,000 CIA operatives in country, many of them unknown to the Pakistani government. US-Pakistan intelligence sharing has reportedly been downgraded. In response to Kayani's moves, the CIA limited hangout operation known as Wikileaks once again showed its real nature by attempting to discredit the Pakistan commander with dubious US cable reports that he had demanded more Predator drone attacks, not fewer, in recent years.

Especially since Obama's West Point speech, the CIA has used Predator drone attacks to slaughter civilians with the goal of fomenting civil war inside Pakistan, leading to a breakup of the country along the ethnic lines of Punjab, Sind, Baluchistan, and Pushtunistan. The geopolitical goal is to destroy Pakistan's potential to be the energy corridor between Iran and China. Selig Harrison has emerged as a top US advocate for Baluchistan succession.

Since May 1, six reported US Predator drones attacks have slain some 42 Pakistani civilians, goading public opinion into a frenzy of anti-US hatred. In response, a joint session of the Pakistani parliament voted unanimously on May 14 to demand an end to American missile strikes, calling on the government to cut NATO's supply line to Afghanistan if the attacks should continue.14 Since the Karachi to Khyber Pass supply line carries as much as two thirds of the supplies needed by the Afghanistan invaders, such a cutoff would cause chaos among the NATO forces. All of this points to the inherent insanity of provoking war with the country your supply line runs through.
US Wants to Use Taliban Boss Mullah Omar Against Pakistan

The State Department dropped all preconditions for negotiating with the Taliban back in February, and the US is now reported by the Washington Post to be talking with envoys of Mullah Omar, the legendary one-eyed leader of the Quetta Shura or Taliban ruling council. It is apparent that the US is offering the Taliban an alliance against Pakistan. US regional envoy Grossman is hostile to the Pakistanis, but when it comes to the Taliban he has been nicknamed "Mr. Reconciliation."15 By contrast, the US is said to be determined to assassinate the head of the Haqqani network using a Bin Laden-type raid. The Pakistanis are equally determined to keep the Haqqani as an ally.

If China stands behind Pakistan, then Russia might be said to stand behind China. Looking forward to the upcoming June 15 meeting of the Shanghai Cooperation Organization, Chinese President Hu praised Sino-Russian relations as being "at an unprecedented high point," with an "obvious strategic ingredient." In a press conference this week, Russian President Medvedev was obliged indirectly to acknowledge that the much-hyped Obama "reset" with Russia had amounted to very little, since the US ABM missile program in Romania and the rest of eastern Europe, so obviously directed against Russia, means that the START treaty is of dubious value, thus raising the specter of a "new Cold War." Given the NATO assault on Libya, there would be no UN resolution against Syria, said Medvedev. Putin has been right all along, and Medvedev is trying to imitate Putin to salvage some chance of remaining in power.
Are We in July 1914?

The crisis leading to World War I began with the Sarajevo assassinations of June 28, 1914, but the first major declaration of war did not occur until August 1. In the interim month of July 1914, large parts of European public opinion retreated into a dreamlike trance, an idyllic la-la land of elegiac illusion, even as the deadly crisis gathered momentum. Something similar can be seen today. Many Americans fondly imagine that the alleged death of Bin Laden marks the end of the war on terror and the Afghan War. Instead, the Bin Laden operation has clearly ushered in a new strategic emergency. Forces which had opposed the Iraq war, from MSNBC to many left liberals of the peace movement, are variously supporting Obama's bloody aggression in Libya, or even celebrating him as a more effective warmonger than Bush-Cheney because of his supposed success at the expense of Bin Laden. In reality, if there were ever a time to mobilize to stop a new and wider war, this is it.

References

1 http://economictimes.indiatimes.com/news/p...how/8454577.cms
2 "China-Pakistan alliance strengthened post bin Laden," AFP, May 15, 2011, http://www.sundaytimes.lk/index.php/analys...-post-bin-laden
3 http://www.nytimes.com/2011/05/20/world/as...istan.html?_r=3
4 http://www.upi.com/Top_News/World-News/201...96101304911435/
5 http://www.nypost.com/p/news/international...C-rss&FEEDNAME=
6 Rowan Scarborough,"U.S. Has Plan to Secure Pakistan Nukes if Country Falls to Taliban, Fox News, May 14, 2009.
7 "US 'To Protect Pakistan," London Sunday Express, May 15, 2011, http://www.express.co.uk/posts/view/246717...otect-Pakistan-
8 http://www.reuters.com/article/2011/05/17/...E74G0PS20110517
9 "US refuses to assure it will not act unilaterally," http://thenews.jang.com.pk/NewsDetail.aspx?ID=15758
10 "No US assurance on unilateral ops," http://nation.com.pk/pakistan-news-newspap...-unilateral-ops
11 "Getting leaner and meaner? Army practices blitzkrieg to strike hard at enemy," Times of India, May 10, 2011, http://articles.timesofindia.indiatimes.co...ransformational
12 "CIA has created own Taliban to wreak terror havoc on Pakistan, claims Pak paper," ANI, May 12, http://my.news.yahoo.com/cia-created-own-t...-091621821.html
13 "New al-Qaeda chief in North Waziristan," May 19, 2011
14 http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/43033985/ns/wo...d_central_asia/
15 http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...th-Taliban.html

TheUnhivedMind - May 26, 2011 03:48 PM (GMT)

US cuts troop numbers in Pakistan

Pakistan asks US to reduce military footprint in a sign of its annoyance over how raid that killed Bin Laden was carried out

James Meikle and agencies guardian.co.uk, Thursday 26 May 2011 10.26 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2011/may/2...umbers-pakistan

The US is reducing its military force in Pakistan at the request of Islamabad after US special forces killed Osama bin Laden, the Pentagon has said.

More than 200 American troops are in the country helping to train the army in counter-insurgency, but there are also said to be intelligence and special forces there.

No details have been given on the size of the reduction, the type of troops involved, nor whether Pakistan has set a new limit on US numbers.

Pentagon spokesman Colonel David Lapan said: "We were recently (within the past two weeks) notified in writing the government of Pakistan wished for the US to reduce its footprint in Pakistan. Accordingly we have begun those reductions."

The request will be taken as a sign of Islamabad's annoyance that the raid on Bin Laden's compound at Abbottabad was carried out without its knowledge. There have been suspicions in Washington that some in Pakistan knew the al-Qaida leader's hideout.

But Pervez Musharraf, the former president of Pakistan, denied that the country's ISI intelligence service knew, at any level, of the presence of the world's most wanted man in the garrison city. However, in an interview with BBC's Newsnight on Wednesday, he admitted that it was "very difficult to prove non-complicity".

Musharraf said he had been surprised and shocked to discover where Bin Laden had been hiding. He added that neither he nor senior government officials had colluded in providing refuge for the fugitive while he was in power between 1999 and 2007. "I can't imagine in my wildest dreams that the intelligence agency was doing something without telling me, so therefore there was no complicity at the strategic level."

However, the intelligence service had demonstrated "negligence, ineptitude and failure" in its failure to detect Bin Laden, he said.

TheUnhivedMind - May 29, 2011 01:17 AM (GMT)

WEBSTER TARPLEY - PAKISTAN ARENA FOR GLOBAL CONFLICT

28 May 2011

Listen to Webster Tarpley on World Crisis Radio May 28th 2011. Webster highlights the current events in the Middle East and more whilst explaining the possible events which may lead to a new Global conflict.

Parts 1-5:
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=pTJOLqvTfIo
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=BPmXVEBWILE http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=66LYQUsepkg http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=1IbEr7O15lU
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=nnntwPIXDu4

[dohtml]<iframe width="425" height="349" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/pTJOLqvTfIo" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="425" height="349" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/BPmXVEBWILE" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="425" height="349" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/66LYQUsepkg" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="425" height="349" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/1IbEr7O15lU" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>

<iframe width="425" height="349" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/nnntwPIXDu4" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - May 29, 2011 04:38 PM (GMT)

France halts arms sales to Pakistan

Mail Today Bureau | New Delhi, May 28, 2011 | Updated 13:13 I http://indiatoday.intoday.in/site/story/fr...n/1/139629.html

Signalling a temporary freeze on arms sales to India's arch rival in a post-Osama bin Laden development, France on Friday said it is discouraging requests for heavy military equipment from Pakistan.

French defence minister Gerard Longuet, who wrapped up a two-day visit to New Delhi on Friday, claimed his country was only supplying interception equipment to Pakistan for use against terrorists. This equipment is meant to intercept light communication equipment being used by the terrorists.

In the past, France has supplied heavy military equipment to Pakistan, including advanced conventional submarines Augusta 90Bs. Pakistan Air Force also flies Mirage III and V combat jets.

France, Longuet said, would closely watch the dialogue between US secretary of state Hillary Clinton and the Pakistan government over possible support provided to Osama by a section of the establishment in Islamabad.

But this instability has not stopped France from engaging India in a big way.

Longuet said the French government has fully backed its companies competing for Indian arms contracts as New Delhi was a strategic ally. French company Dassault is in the fray for Indian Air Force's combat jet contract.

After the air force and the navy, the two countries are also going to launch land forces exercise (called Shakti) later this year.

Longuet also discussed progress of the Scorpene submarine project of the Indian navy. Six French submarines are being built at Mumbai's Mazgaon Dock Limited under this programme.

TheUnhivedMind - May 29, 2011 04:39 PM (GMT)

US, India, Israel out to destroy Pakistan: Nizami

Published: May 28, 2011
http://nation.com.pk/pakistan-news-newspap...Pakistan-Nizami

OUR STAFF REPORTER
LAHORE – TheNation Editor-in-Chief and Nazria Pakistan Trust Chairman Majid Nizami has expressed his desire for the formation of a bloc comprising Pakistan, Iran, Turkey and Afghanistan to counter the conspiracies of America, India and Israel and to secure the future of Islam in the region.

Presiding over a special sitting on the eve of Youm-e-Takbeer (the day Pakistan conducted nuclear tests on May 28, 1998, in reply to the Indian nuclear explosions), he said, ‘atomic assets are secure and no one can harm them.’

Nazria Pakistan Trust and Pakistan Movement Workers Trust jointly organised the sitting at Aiwan-e-Karkunan Tehrik-e-Pakistan on Friday, which was largely participated by the people from different walks of life.

Majid Nizami remembered that on May 1998, when India had conducted nuclear tests, Pakistan was under extreme public pressure for not reciprocating.

However, he added, the then Nawaz Sharif-led government made the defence of Pakistan invincible and 'the credit goes to Dr AQ Khan.' The US had not wanted an atomic Pakistan, so they offered bribe to the then Pakistani government for not conducting nuclear tests, he told the gathering.

He recalled that Nawaz Sharif had consulted with the prominent personalities and when the former prime minister had called the meeting of the editors to discuss the situation, "I made clear upon him to conduct tests otherwise people will explode him."

Nizami said that to live with honour in the world, we should not avoid waging atomic war against India.

We should smashed Indian hydel projects with missiles, which were being constructed at our rivers, he stressed upon the government.

Muslims had ruled over subcontinent for 1,000 years and the Hindus were still feeling the pain of that era and they were against the sovereignty of Pakistan, he said.

Nizami further said that India was now targeting Pakistan in connivance with the United States and Israel. Pakistan is the only Islamic power having an atomic bomb, and it is the duty of Pakistanis to break the hands of India, he added.

TheUnhivedMind - May 29, 2011 04:40 PM (GMT)

Pakistan shuts down U.S. 'intelligence fusion' cells

Pakistan also tells the U.S. to cut back its troops in the country, in a move amid deepening mistrust after the U.S. raid to kill Osama bin Laden and a CIA contractor's shooting of two Pakistani men. Joints Chiefs Chairman Adm. Mike Mullen heads to Pakistan for talks.

By David S. Cloud, Los Angeles Times
May 27, 2011
http://www.latimes.com/news/nationworld/wo...0,5278634.story

Reporting from Washington— In a clear sign of Pakistan's deepening mistrust of the United States, Islamabad has told the Obama administration to reduce the number of U. S. troops in the country and has moved to close three military intelligence liaison centers, setting back American efforts to eliminate insurgent sanctuaries in largely lawless areas bordering Afghanistan, U.S. officials said.

The liaison centers, also known as intelligence fusion cells, in Quetta and Peshawar are the main conduits for the United States to share satellite imagery, target data and other intelligence with Pakistani ground forces conducting operations against militants, including Taliban fighters who slip into Afghanistan to attack U.S. and allied forces.

U.S. special operations units have relied on the three facilities, two in Peshawar and one in Quetta, to help coordinate operations on both sides of the border, senior U.S. officials said. The U.S. units are now being withdrawn from all three sites, the officials said, and the centers are being shut down.

It wasn't immediately clear whether the steps are permanent. Adm. Mike Mullen, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, flew Thursday to Pakistan for a hastily arranged meeting with Gen. Ashfaq Kayani, the head of the Pakistani army. A Pentagon official said the two will probably discuss Pakistan's demands for a smaller U.S. military presence.

The closures, which have not been publicly announced, remove U.S. advisors from the front lines of the war against militant groups in Pakistan. U.S. Army Gen. David Petraeus spearheaded the effort to increase the U.S. presence in the border areas two years ago out of frustration with Pakistan's failure to control the militants.

The collapse of the effort will probably hinder the Obama administration's efforts to gradually push Pakistan toward conducting ground operations against insurgent strongholds in North Waziristan and elsewhere, U.S. officials said.

The Pakistani decision has not affected the CIA's ability to launch missiles from drone aircraft in northwest Pakistan. Those flights, which the CIA has never publicly acknowledged, receive assistance from Pakistan through intelligence channels separate from the fusion centers, current and former officials said.

The move to close the three facilities, plus a recent written demand by Pakistan to reduce the number of U.S. military personnel in the country from approximately 200, signals mounting anger in Pakistan over a series of incidents.

In January, Raymond Davis, a CIA contractor, shot dead two men in Lahore who he said were attempting to rob him. He was arrested on charges of murder but was released and left the country in mid-March, prompting violent protests in several cities.

Soon after, Pakistan ordered several dozen U.S. special operations trainers to leave the country in what U.S. officials believe was retaliation for the Davis case, according to a senior U.S. military officer.

Then, on May 2, five U.S. helicopters secretly entered Pakistani airspace and a team of U.S. Navy SEALs killed Osama bin Laden and four others at a compound in Abbottabad, a military garrison city near the capital, Islamabad. The raid deeply embarrassed Pakistan's military and inflamed anti-U.S. sentiment across the country.

Javed Hussain, a retired Pakistani brigadier, blamed the decision to close the three intelligence centers on the mistrust that has plagued U.S.-Pakistani relations in recent months. Washington's decision to carry out the raid against Bin Laden without informing Pakistan's security establishment brought that mistrust to a new low, he said.

"There is lot of discontent within Pakistan's armed forces with regard to the fact they've done so much in the war on terror, and yet they are not trusted," Hussain said. "Particularly after the Abbottabad raid … the image of the armed forces in the eyes of the people has gone down. And they hold the U.S. responsible."

The two intelligence centers in Peshawar were set up in 2009, one with the Pakistani army's 11th Corps and the other with the paramilitary Frontier Corps, which are both headquartered in the city, capital of the troubled Khyber-Pakhtunkhwa province.

The third fusion cell was opened last year at the Pakistani army's 12th Corps headquarters in Quetta, a city long used by Taliban fighters to mount attacks in Afghanistan's southern provinces. U.S. troops have staffed the Quetta facility only intermittently, U.S. officials said.

The closures have effectively stopped the U.S. training of the Frontier Corps, a force that American officials had hoped could help halt infiltration of Taliban and other militants into Afghanistan, a senior U.S. military officer said.

The Frontier Corps' facility in Peshawar, staffed by a handful of U.S. special operations personnel, was located at Bala Hissar, an old fort, according to a classified U.S. Embassy cable from 2009 that was recently made public by WikiLeaks.

The cable, which was first disclosed by Pakistan's Dawn newspaper, hinted at U.S. hopes that special operations teams would be allowed to join the paramilitary units and the Special Services Group, a Pakistani army commando unit, in operations against militants.

"We have created Intelligence Fusion cells with embedded U.S. Special Forces with both the SSG and Frontier Corps" at Bala Hissar, Peshawar, the 2009 cable says. "But we have not been given Pakistani military permission to accompany the Pakistani forces on deployments as yet. Through these embeds, we are assisting the Pakistanis [to] collect and coordinate existing intelligence assets."

Another U.S. Embassy cable said that a "U.S. Special Operations Command Force" was providing the Frontier Corps with "imagery, target packages and operational planning" in a campaign against Taliban insurgents in Lower Dir, an area of northwest Pakistan considered an insurgent stronghold.

In September 2009, then U.S. ambassador, Anne W. Patterson, wrote in another classified message that the fusion cells provided "enhanced capacity to share real-time intelligence with units engaged in counter-insurgency operations" and were "a significant step forward for the Pakistan military."

The intelligence fusion cell in Quetta was not nearly as active as the facilities in Peshawar, current and former U.S. officials said. Pakistan has long resisted pressure to intensify operations against Taliban militants in Quetta. The city, capital of Baluchistan, is outside the tribal area, which explains Pakistan's reluctance to permit a permanent U. S. military presence, a U.S. official said.

Despite the ongoing tensions, Pakistani authorities have agreed to allow a CIA team to inspect the compound where Bin Laden was killed, according to a U.S. official. The Pakistanis have signaled they will allow U.S. intelligence analysts to examine documents and other material that Pakistani authorities found at the site.

A U.S. official briefed on intelligence matters said the reams of documents and electronic data that the SEALs seized at the compound have sparked "dozens" of intelligence investigations and have produced new insights into schisms among Al Qaeda leaders.

david.cloud@latimes.com

Times staff writers Alex Rodriguez in Islamabad and Ken Dilanian in Washington contributed to this report.

TheUnhivedMind - May 30, 2011 05:56 PM (GMT)

Pakistan under pressure to launch attacks on Islamist militants

A deadly bomb attack struck a hotel in North Waziristan on Monday where Pakistan is under increasing US pressure to launch a major operation against Islamist militants.

By Rob Crilly, Islamabad 4:56PM BST 30 May 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...-militants.html

American officials believe that Islamabad is dragging its heels on plans to root out groups linked to al-Qaeda and may retains ties to extremists.

However, a Pakistani newspaper yesterday claimed Pakistan was ready to begin operations against sanctuaries for al-Qaeda and the Taliban in North Waziristan apparently after Hillary Clinton, US Secretary of State, secured an agreement during her visit last week.

One person was killed and eight wounded in a blast at the hotel in Miranshah, the main town of North Waziristan.

"An improvised explosive device that was planted in one of the rooms went off, initially wounding nine people," according to an intelligence official.

The United States has long put pressure on Pakistan to mount an air and ground offensive in the region to deny insurgents bases from which to attack international forces in Afghanistan.

Pakistan has always maintained that any such operation would be of its own time and choosing, arguing that its 140,000 troops committed to the northwest are already overstretched.

Instead, the US uses a secret drone programme to kill suspected militants.

No one from the Pakistani military was available to comment on the planned offensive.

* Pakistan is passing through the most difficult phase in its history when even "bearded and turbaned" people were not safe, according Maulana Fazlur Rehman, the head of the country's biggest Islamist party and a long-standing ally of the Afghan Taliban movement.

Speaking at a meeting of his Jamiat Ulema-I-Islam party, he said madrassas and Islamic scholars were being targeted by the US and said the strife resulted from the reign of Pervez Musharraf.

"The decision taken by a military dictator to take part in the US war against terror has made the entire nation suffer," he said.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: What a let down! Russia tricks enemies with Title: What a let down! Russia tricks enemies with Description: inflatable army of tanks and planes

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 01:11 AM (GMT)

What a let down! Russia tricks enemies with inflatable army of tanks and planes

By Lee Moran
Last updated at 11:23 PM on 20th July 2011
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-20...nks-planes.html

The Russian army is blowing up everything in sight - from rocket launchers to radar stations, fighter jets and arms factories.

But those fearful of a new world war need not worry as the Red Army has simply developed a fetish for rubber - with a new military arsenal stocked full of inflatable weapons.

Defence bosses are toying with the flexible firearms in a bid to bamboozle satellites and surveillance aircraft into thinking its forces are more powerful than they actually are.

Limp: The Inflatable Army of Russia is defending the motherland at a fraction of the price it would cost to deploy real tanks, jets and arms factories

And the good news for Moscow's money-men is they are extremely effective, and come at a fraction of the price of deploying the real thing.

The blow-up ballistics fool enemy radar and trick thermal imaging sensors into thinking they are the real deal through its special material.

Created at former hot-air balloon factories out of Oxford cloth, the elastic artillery is carried about in giant duffel bags.

Stretching out: The blow-up ballistics fool enemy radar and trick thermal imaging sensors into thinking they are the real deal through its special material

Elastic: The rubber weapons are stitched out of Oxford cloth at former hot-air balloon factories, and can be carried about in giant duffel bags

Trickery: From afar this fighter jet appears to be the real deal, but in fact it is an inflatable

And they can spring into action, within minutes of a call to arms, in the same way as a bouncy castle - by placing a pump onto the nozzle.

Russia's new fighting force includes tanks, complete with gun barrels, an S-300 missile launching truck, MiG fighter jets and entire radar stations.

Manufacturer Rusbal has been dealing with defence bosses since 1995 but refused to say how many air-filled models have been made, sold and deployed.

At the ready: The inflatable artillery can spring into action within minutes of a call to action - perfect for fast-developing situations

But it seems the price is certainly right for recession-hit Russia, as a T80 tank, normally costing £600,000, can be blown up for just £3,700.

Russia's army, pictured here being trained how to deploy the fake firepower, is not the first to use fantasy ammunition on the battlefield.

During World War I Britain mocked up wooden tanks which were towed around the country by horses, using a set of concealed wheels behind their pretend tracks.

And in World War II disused British airfields were dressed up like military runways, complete with dummy planes and fuel resources, to confuse German bombers and soldiers.

Deflated: It is not known how the Russian army deals with punctures to its platoon of fake firearms

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 01:12 AM (GMT)

Not convincing enough and I'm sure they can ping the ground to check for metallic objects knowing what stealth weaponry the opposition has and doesn't have so waste of time.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Pakistan Spy Agency Aided by Two Men in U.S.,

Title: Pakistan Spy Agency Aided by Two Men in U.S., Description: Prosecutors Say

TheUnhivedMind - July 21, 2011 12:27 AM (GMT)

Pakistan Spy Agency Aided by Two Men in U.S., Prosecutors Say

By Tom Schoenberg - Jul 20, 2011 5:01 AM GMT+0100
http://www.bloomberg.com/news/2011-07-19/p...ors-charge.html

A “decades-long” operation by Pakistan’s spy agency to influence U.S. policy on Kashmir was aided by two American citizens who funneled money to members of Congress and illegally hid their foreign connections, U.S. prosecutors said.

Syed Ghulam Nabi Fai, 62, and Zaheer Ahmad, 63, were charged yesterday in federal court in Alexandria, Virginia, with conspiracy to violate the Foreign Agents Registration Act and lying to federal agents. Prosecutors said the two moved about $4 million from Pakistan’s government through the Washington- based Kashmiri American Council to sway U.S. lawmakers with campaign contributions and other lobbying activities.

The council, headed by Fai, is “actually run” by elements of the Pakistani government, including Pakistan’s military intelligence service, the Inter-Services Intelligence Agency, or ISI, the Justice Department said in a statement.

“Foreign governments who try to influence the United States by using unregistered agents threaten our national security,” James McJunkin, the assistant FBI director overseeing the Washington field office, said in a statement. “Mr. Fai’s alleged conduct illustrates the risk to our fair and open government.”
Pakistan Affiliations

The pair failed to disclose their affiliation with Pakistan’s government as required by law, and Fai gave false answers in 2007 when asked about the links by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the government charged.

In an interview with FBI agents at his home on March 3, Fai “implied that he had no relationship with anyone in the government of Pakistan,” Sarah Webb Linden, an FBI Special Agent, said in an affidavit.

A search of Fai’s home, office and a storage facility turned up documents detailing the council’s Washington strategies, including budget requirements for contributions to members of Congress and trips to Kashmir for lawmakers, money for opinion pieces distributed to the media, as well as money for seminars and conferences. One document allegedly called for $100,000 for contributions to members of Congress in the 2009.

In the affidavit, Linden said the strategy documents for 2008 and 2009 were given to Fai’s handlers in Pakistan.

Since the mid-1990s, Ahmad, an American living in Pakistan, has moved government funds through a network he ran to Fai and the council, which also has offices in London and Brussels, prosecutors said.
Build Support

The council’s goal is to build support for Pakistani interests in Kashmir and offset lobbying by India over the disputed territory, the U.S. said in court papers.

“Mr. Fai is not a Pakistani citizen and the government and embassy of Pakistan have no knowledge of the case involving him,” Imran Gardezi, a spokesman for Pakistan’s Embassy in Washington, said in an e-mail.

No one answered the phone at the Kashmiri American Council.

Fai has donated more than $10,000 to federal politicians in the past five years, according to data compiled by the Washington-based Center for Responsive Politics.

Among his political contributions, Fai, in 2008 and again in 2010, gave $2,000 to U.S. Representative Dan Burton, an Indiana Republican. He also gave $5,000 to the National Republican Senatorial Committee in 2006, followed by a $1,000 contribution in 2008. He gave $250 to President Barack Obama’s campaign in 2008 and $250 to the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee in 2009.

Fai of Fairfax, Virginia, was arrested this morning and Ahmad remains at large. Both face a potential sentence of five years in prison if convicted.
Held in Custody

Fai, who appeared yesterday before Magistrate Judge Theresa Buchanan in Alexandria, was ordered to remain in custody and a detention hearing was scheduled for July 21, according to Peter Carr, a spokesman for U.S. Attorney Neil MacBride.

The most recent criminal prosecution under the Foreign Agents Registration Act was last year in Missouri, said Dean Boyd, a Justice Department spokesman.

Mark Siljander, a former congressman and U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, pleaded guilty on July 10, 2010, to violations stemming from lobbying to remove an Islamic charity from a Senate list of those suspected of having terrorist ties. He failed to register with the U.S., according to the Justice Department. A second man, Abdel Azim El-Siddig, also pleaded guilty in connection with hiring Siljander.

The case against Fai and Ahmad originated with information provided to the FBI from a confidential witness in 2005. The informant, who was looking to have his jail sentence reduced, told investigators that Pakistan's spy agency was using the Kashmiri American Council to further the interests of the government of Pakistan.
Peace Talks

Control of Kashmir, a disputed territory between India and Pakistan, is divided between the two countries. The two nations are slated for peace talks at foreign minister level at the end of this month.

A second informant told investigators that the ISI created the council to "propagandize on behalf of the government of Pakistan with the goal of uniting Kashmir," according to the charging document. This witness said the ISI had been directing Fai's activities for the past 25 years, prosecutors said.

One of the informants described how on two occasions he was told by Ahmad how much money to transfer to Fai, according to charges. The informant took cash from his own business in $50 and $100 bills and placed it in a brown paper bag for Fai to pick up. Ahmad would then pay back the informant usually through a wire transfer from Pakistan, prosecutors said.
Telephone Records

Electronic surveillance and Internet service provider and telephone records show that from 2006 to 2011, Fai was contacted by an alleged ISI official almost 2,000 times, according to charging documents. Fai was in contact with his "handlers" in Pakistan more than 4,000 times since June 2008, the document alleges.

Ahmad arranged for his contacts in the U.S. to provide money to Fai and repaid those individuals when they traveled to Pakistan, according to the charging documents. The charging papers list 11 unnamed donors, who the government alleges helped Pakistan funnel money into Washington. These "straw donors" include two physicians and their medical group.

"These other individuals assisted Ahmad in routing money to Fai because doing so ostensibly enables them to take tax deductions for the amounts that they transfer to the KAC as charitable donations," Linden, the FBI agent, said in her affidavit.

Linden, who said Fai received from $500,000 to $700,000 per year from the government of Pakistan, said this network of individuals has been in place since 1993.

The case is U.S. v. Fai, 11-mj-00558, U.S. District Court, Eastern District of Virginia (Alexandria).

To contact the reporter on this story: Tom Schoenberg in Washington at tschoenberg@bloomberg.net.

To contact the editor responsible for this story: Michael Hytha at mhytha@bloomberg.net.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Liberals see opportunity for big cuts in defense

Title: Liberals see opportunity for big cuts in defense

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 04:07 AM (GMT)

Liberals see opportunity for big cuts in defense

Push for troop, arms levels after Cold War

Jul 18 2011
http://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2011/j...uts-in-defense/

The political left is pressing the White House and Congress to inflict a wave of Pentagon budget cuts not seen since the post-Cold War 1990s.

Liberals are citing the debt crisis and troop drawdowns from Iraq and Afghanistan to argue that now is the time for the Defense Department to shed people, missions and weapons after a decade of doubling arms spending after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

The proposals, including one from the Center for America Progress, go well beyond President Obama's call in April for $400 billion in defense cuts over 12 years. The center — run by John Podesta, who served as chief of staff to President Clinton — wants that much in reductions over the next three years and $1 trillion from what had been projected increases over the next decade.

Some House Democrats, led by Rep. Barney Frank of Massachusetts, also have called for $1 trillion in cuts.

"I think this is the time because of a combination of the deficit and the changing way in which we're going to deal with threats from groups like al Qaeda," said American Progress' Lawrence Korb, a longtime defense analyst in Washington.

Mr. Korb said the Obama administration has dumped President George W. Bush's overall war strategy of preemptive attacks against terrorist states, and he cited just-retired Defense Secretary Robert M. Gates' warning against any future land wars in the Middle East.

The bottom line is that the center wants projected increases ended and the overall arms budget reduced to $500 billion by 2016, which would be $111 billion below the Pentagon's already pared-down projection.

"Gates said we don't have to go back to Cold War levels," Mr. Korb said. "Well, we're above Cold War levels. And that's part of the problem."

Gordon Adams, a defense budget official in the Clinton White House, told the House Budget Committee this month that Mr. Obama's $400 billion number "is a very small step." He endorsed more than doubling that figure.

The Pentagon has not heard such rhetoric since the Berlin Wall fell and Presidents Clinton and George H.W. Bush squeezed as much as 35 percent out of intelligence and defense spending.

After al Qaeda's attack on the United States, defense proponents said such a deep downturn had been a mistake, leaving intelligence agencies and some aspects of the military not ready to fight a global war against terrorists. Now, they say, America is about to repeat the mistake, as China and Iran flex their muscles and radical Islam remains a global threat.

Daniel Goure, an analyst at the pro-business Lexington Institute, said the left has it all wrong. The Pentagon needs more money, unless it abandons or curtails its presence in Europe, the Middle East and Asia, he said.

"You'd better change our military approach to the world," said Mr. Goure. "If you do what we did the last time — which is essentially salami slice, take bits and pieces from everything and everybody — then you are essentially going to back where you were after Vietnam and at the end of the Cold War drawdown. Too many missions. Too many deployments. Not enough stuff. Not enough people."

The Center for American Progress also proposes a list of weapons terminations and troop cutbacks.

The number of V-22 tilt-rotor aircraft would be stopped at about 150. The next-generation workhorse jet fighter, the F-35 — which is mired in big cost overruns — would be bought only for the Air Force, not the Navy or Marine Corps.

The Navy's 11 carriers — a key way America projects immediate air power overseas — would be trimmed to nine, and with it other surface ships. A full third of 150,000 troops in Europe and Asia would be ordered home.

“You may not be able to keep as many carriers forward-deployed,” said Mr. Korb. “You would have to surge them, but I don’t see any missions you could not do.”

However, reducing the number of active carriers to nine means only three typically would be deployed at one time, possibly leaving the Pacific without a surface ship strike force.

“If the Chinese are going to threaten Taiwan, they’re going to do it with short-legged stuff, short-range ballistic missiles, right from shore,” Mr. Korb said. “We can’t do it that way. If the threat were Mexico, not to worry. We build diesel submarines and short-range fighters, and we’d call it a day.”

Such drastic cuts would face strong Republican opposition.

A spokesman for Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell, Kentucky Republican, said the GOP would never approve cuts of $1 trillion.

House Budget Committee Chairman Paul Ryan, Wisconsin Republican, released a detailed budget plan that calls for modest defense drawdowns over five years. He argued that the Defense Department’s total budget share already has decreased from 25 percent to 20 percent.

A smattering of conservatives are advocating more shrinkage. Some Republicans on Mr. Obama’s deficit commission supported cuts above $400 million.

With all troops due to be pulled out of Iraq this year and Afghanistan by 2014, the Pentagon could save $100 billion annually on those two accounts alone. Mr. Gates instituted more than $100 billion in savings, although some of that money was redirected into other arms programs.

The next phase is likely to be revealed in Mr. Obama’s fiscal 2013 budget in February or in some grand deficit-reduction agreement between him and Congress.

Adm. Mike Mullen, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said this year: “We can’t hold ourselves exempt from the belt-tightening. Neither can we allow ourselves to contribute to the very debt that puts our long-term security at risk.”

Defense Secretary Leon E. Panetta, who proved a hawkish director of the CIA, vowed to Congress that he would not let the military go hollow as it did in the late 1970s.

On July 8, he urged the White House and Congress to base cuts on a strategy. He expressed his concern about negotiators who would just “just pick a number and throw it at the Defense Department without really looking at policy, without looking at what makes sense.”

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 'US suspicious of China-Iraq ties'

Title: 'US suspicious of China-Iraq ties'

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 03:58 AM (GMT)

'US suspicious of China-Iraq ties'

Tue Jul 19, 2011 8:57PM GMT
http://www.presstv.ir/detail/189865.html

US will not look favorably upon the recent surge of China-Iraq relations despite both sides reaping mutual benefits from the ties, an former US ambassador says.

“I know America looks with some suspicion, at least in the newspapers, as to what it is that China is doing worldwide,” Edward Peck, former US Ambassador to Iraq, told Press TV in an interview.

He saw China's pursuit of its interests as legitimate, saying “China is looking out for its own interests. And if it can do so while helping Iraq, nobody should complain too much about that.”

“I would think that from the point of view of helping Iraq out of the problems that it now faces -- some of them of course the result of America's invasion -- this would be a good thing,” Peck added.

Elsewhere in the interview the ex-US ambassador referred to America's incapability to undertake the reconstruction of Iraq single-handedly.

“America has limited resources and a limited patience and infrastructure projects have a major meaning in Iraq,” he noted.

“So much has been destroyed or rendered useless that it will be a long time and [will need] a lot of effort, money and a lot of people involved to get the economy back to where it was before the wars, before the invasion, because so much of the country has just been shattered from the power systems to the water supply to the sewage treatment to the roads."

China and Iraq, during Iraqi Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki's visit to Beijing on Monday, vowed to enhance their bilateral economic cooperation.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: US Senators Warn Beijing On South China Sea Clashe

Title: US Senators Warn Beijing On South China Sea Clashe

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 03:30 AM (GMT)

US Senators Warn Beijing On South China Sea Clashes -FT

Published July 19, 2011
http://www.foxbusiness.com/industries/2011...sea-clashes-ft/

Two influential U.S. senators are warning China that the country's recent naval clashes with neighbors in the South China Sea could escalate and jeopardize U.S. "national interests," the Financial Times reported Tuesday on its website, citing a letter from the two politicians to a Chinese official.

Sens. John Kerry, (D., Mass.), chairman of the Senate foreign relations committee, and John McCain, (R., Ariz.), a former presidential candidate, in a letter dated July 14 and sent to Dai Bingguo, China's top foreign policy official, warned of events in the region.

"We are concerned that a series of naval incidents in recent months has raised tensions in the region," the two said. "If appropriate steps are not taken to calm the situation, future incidents could escalate, jeopardizing the vital national interests of the United States."

Vietnam and the Philippines of late have claimed that China has harassed fishing and survey vessels. The area also serves as a sea lane for northeast Asian oil imports.

Full story at: www.ft.com/intl/cms/s/0/aceccff2-b1e2-11e0-a06c-00144feabdc0.html#axzz1SYkYHTBc

-Dow Jones Newswires; 212-416-2900

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Ron Paul "This Military Spending Doesn't Defend Us Title: Ron Paul "This Military Spending Doesn't Defend Us Description: IT MAKES THINGS WORSE!" [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 03:12 AM (GMT)

Ron Paul "This Military Spending Doesn't Defend Us IT MAKES THINGS WORSE!"

http://revolutionarypolitics.tv/video/view...?video_id=15758

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Austerity For Everyone, Except The DOD

Title: Austerity For Everyone, Except The DOD

TheUnhivedMind - July 20, 2011 01:14 AM (GMT)

Austerity For Everyone, Except The DOD

07.13.2011
http://www.diatribemedia.com/2011/07/13/au...except-the-dod/

While Congress and the President fight it out over the debt ceiling and all of America quietly shudders over whether our economy will completely default on itself, at least one industry still hums along without a care in the world. Amidst a fiscal crisis of apparently apocalyptic proportions, where the GOP demands dollar for dollar spending cuts from the budget in order to raise our debt limit, the Pentagon asked Congress for $264 million to cover part of a $771 million overrun on the F-35 program. The Hill reports Republican Senator John McCain let the news slip via Twitter, saying “Congress notified that first F-35 jets have cost overruns of $771M. Outrageous! Pentagon asking for $264M down payment now. Disgraceful.”

Leaders of the program Lockheed Martin spat back on Twitter, contending “The F-35 team is focused on reducing costs of the jets and is showing significant improvement in key areas,” to which the ranking Senate Armed Services Committee member McCain said “taxpayers deserve better.”

So while Democrats and Republicans fight over who to blame for our economy once again heading towards the brink of destruction, the machinations of war continue to roll. As I pointed out back when the GOP first released their suggested budget cuts: the Pentagon spends nearly $122 million per plane building the F-35 fighter jet. The 2011 budget calls for more than $11 billion for the planes, none of which have been delivered since development and production began ten years ago. By 2016, the military wants 2,443 F-35s at an estimated cost of close to $329 billion. In other words, by scrapping just one percent of that order, a number that wouldn’t even dent our 20 to one lead in planes over the Chinese military, we would save most of the aforementioned social programs.

Of course, the Defense Department and its pet contractors believe any kind of spending cuts, even on a program to build a plane that has no mission, would be catastrophic. Top defense trade organization Aerospace Industries Association (AIA) President Marion Blakey argued in a letter to House Speaker John Boehner “understand the unique national security threats posed by skyrocketing debt, but we believe those threats will only be compounded if funding for the Department of Defense is cut precipitously during this critical stage of budget reduction negotiations.” Blakey went on to say “Any cuts to defense must be generated in a careful and thoughtful manner, guided by our military leaders.” In other words, if we stop spending mountains of money on pet defense projects, we’ll tank the economy, which will threaten our national security. If Congress really needs to perform a song and dance to show that everyone is pitching in, even the Pentagon, they need to let the wolves guard the hen house.

All of the bluster, talk of “tough decisions” and suggestions of sacrifice surrounding our continually sinking economy come with one big fat exemption – defense spending. If we’re truly nearing an economic apocalypse, why is one third of the budget still off the cutting board?

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: UK announces early warning system to prevent

Title: UK announces early warning system to prevent Description: conflict

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 05:42 PM (GMT)

UK announces early warning system to prevent conflict

Unrest in Arab world prompts British government to set up system to identify and prevent unrest in high-risk areas

Mark Tran
guardian.co.uk, Tuesday 19 July 2011 16.01 BST
http://www.guardian.co.uk/global-developme...-warning-system

Britain is to set up an early warning system in an effort to anticipate events that could trigger violence in areas where it has significant interests, as part of a strategy announced Tuesday.

Mindful of the momentous events in the Arab world, the move represents an attempt to pool the expertise and resources of the Foreign Office, the Ministry of Defence and the Department for International Development (DfID) in identifying and preventing conflict in high-risk areas.

"The publication of the government's building stability overseas strategy today could not be more timely," said William Hague, the foreign secretary. "The Arab spring has demonstrated just how uncertain the world can be and has highlighted the need for a strategic UK approach to early engagement in places at risk of instability. This strategy seeks to address the lessons we have learned from recent events and marks the first time that the government has put in place an integrated cross-government strategy to address conflict issues."

The strategy follows pressure from the military, which has complained for years to the Foreign Office and DfID about the lack of a co-ordinated approach that has burdened troops with humanitarian work as well as fighting, a point that emerged during the Chilcot inquiry into the Iraq war.

As part of its crisis prevention strategy, the government is to create a £20m annual early action facility (EAF) within what is called the conflict pool – money that is spent on conflict prevention, stabilisation and peacekeeping activities. Funding for the conflict pool came to £229m this financial year and is to be increased to £309m by 2014-15.

"The EAF will help us move swiftly in response to warnings and opportunities, for example, to fund quick assessments to lay the groundwork for more significant support and help leverage work by others," said the strategy document, which cites Libya as an example of swift government response in a crisis, notwithstanding criticism of the Foreign Office for being caught on the hop in the early days of the uprising. In May, the UK sent in a stabilisation response team (SRT) to Benghazi, the rebel stronghold against Muammar Gaddafi, to support the UN's post-conflict planning.

"The role that it has played there suggests that SRTs will be an important addition to the government's toolkit for dealing with instability and conflict," the document said.

The government is careful to say that it will focus on identifying areas of risk, rather than trying to predict events.

"We will pay more systematic attention to the tier of countries just below the threshold for regular NSC [national security attention] and strengthen our understanding of where the risks of conflict and instability are high," said the document.

The early warning system will take a view of countries in which political, economic and security shocks over the next 12 months could trigger violence. A steering group of officials from DfID, MoD and the Foreign Office will consider whether early warning signals demand a UK response, and the government will produce a new internal watchlist of "fragile" countries and officials will assess where the risks of conflict and insecurity are high and where the UK has significant interests.

"The building stability overseas strategy will help the UK to work more effectively to tackle instability upstream, helping to prevent conflict and the suffering it causes," said Andrew Mitchell, the international development secretary. "This goes to the heart of the drive to achieve better targeted, more effective aid."

Merlin, the NGO that specialises in health, welcomed the focus on fragile states.

"Merlin welcomes the increased investment in conflict-affected and fragile states, particularly in ensuring the provision of essential services, such as healthcare," said Juliet Milgate, policy and research adviser. "Merlin works predominately in fragile states ... and has first-hand experience of the impact that conflict and state fragility have on people's lives: undermining critical investment in health systems and affecting people's ability to access essential services – leading to the needless loss of mothers' lives."

The anti-poverty charity, War on Want, however, dismissed the government's new strategy.

"The British government needs a reality check. Britain has been one of the chief sources of conflict and instability in the 21st century, whether through its invasions of Iraq and Afghanistan, its heavy militarisation of fragile states, or its continuing promotion of arms sales in regions plagued by war," said John Hilary, its executive director. "The government has no credibility when it comes to conflict prevention. Its stability strategy reads like so much Orwellian newspeak."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Lashkar Gah handover: police station targeted in Title: Lashkar Gah handover: police station targeted in Description: bomb attack

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 05:37 PM (GMT)

Lashkar Gah handover: police station targeted in bomb attack

A bomb exploded near a police station outside a crucial city in Afghanistan's south on Tuesday where Afghan forces are readying to assume security responsibility within hours, another worrying sign as insurgents seek to disrupt a gradual transition process.

6:02PM BST 19 Jul 2011
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...omb-attack.html

The roadside bomb hit a police vehicle near a newly built police station in Bolan, just outside the bustling market city of Lashkar Gah.

Lashkar Gah is due to be handed to Afghan forces on Wednesday. It is the most contentious of seven areas on the list for handover this week in the first phase of a transition process that will end with all foreign combat troops leaving Afghanistan by the end of 2014.

Initial reports suggested there were no casualties in the blast, said Kamaluddin Khan, a senior provincial policeman.

But it was a worrying sign less than 24 hours before the formal handover from British to Afghan troops. Violence has spiked across Afghanistan in the lead-up to the transition process.

Mehtar Lam, another relatively peaceful district in Laghman province, east of Kabul, was handed over from U.S. forces on Tuesday in a flag-raising ceremony attended by Ashraf Ghani, the head of Afghanistan's transition process.

"The Afghan national army has had an enormous change both in quality and in numbers. For the seven locations which have been selected for tranche one, we are completely confident that the Afghan army will have the capability," Ghani said.

Of the seven areas – two provinces, three cities and two districts – to be handed over to Afghan control this week, most are in areas considered relatively safe.

Lashkar Gah, however, is the "most difficult" of the seven, Ghani said, and one that will be seen as a critical test of the readiness of Afghan forces to assume control.

Ghani said despite the difficulties, Afghan forces had already taken control of the city.

"Come with me tomorrow and you will see that in Lashkar Gah there are no international forces," he said.

British commanders in Lashkar Gah have said this week's handover was a formality and would change little on a day-to-day basis because Afghan forces have been gradually assuming control over the past year.

But there will still be a British troop presence in Lashkar Gah long after Wednesday's ceremony. The British have a large base inside the city and still conduct operations with Afghan forces in outlying districts.

The volatility in Lashkar Gah and surrounding areas hit home after Tuesday's blast and the killing of seven policemen near the city the previous day.

On Monday, seven policemen manning a checkpoint in a small town outside Lashkar Gah were poisoned and then shot dead by a police colleague, the spokesman for Helmand's governor said. The policeman who had also been manning the post then escaped with their weapons and a police vehicle, Daoud Ahmadi said.

A spokesman for the Nato-led International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) in Helmand said its troops were called in to assist after the incident at the request of Afghan police.

The Taliban initially claimed responsibility but the killings now appear to be the latest in a series of incidents where "rogue" Afghan soldiers and policemen have turned their weapons on their Afghan colleagues or foreign mentors.

President Hamid Karzai's spokesman, Waheed Omer, said on Monday insurgent infiltration in the army and police had become a "reality". He also warned efforts to disrupt the transition process and "disable the government" had increased.

In Nad Ali, a district neighbouring Lashkar Gah, two civilians were kidnapped and then killed, the Helmand governor's office said in a statement.

Violence across Afghanistan in 2010 hit its worst levels since the Taliban were overthrown by U.S.-led Afghan forces in 2001, with civilian and military casualties hitting record levels, and this year has followed a similar trend.

The first of the seven areas to be formally handed over on Sunday was Bamiyan, one of the safest of Afghanistan's 34 provinces and long an anti-Taliban redoubt.

The handover ceremony in Bamiyan, attended by senior Afghan ministers, was conducted in relative secrecy and with minimal media coverage, a reminder of how tense the country remains as violence increases and spreads to once-peaceful areas.

Facing criticism over Sunday's event, the Afghan government scrambled to make amends, with an ISAF helicopter shuttling journalists to Tuesday's ceremony in Mehtar Lam.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 15,000 US Troops to Remain In Iraq, Renamed

Title: 15,000 US Troops to Remain In Iraq, Renamed
Description: "Diplomats" [KING JUAN CARLOS PUPPETS]

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 03:28 AM (GMT)

15,000 US Troops to Remain In Iraq, Renamed “Diplomats”

Role will be to occupy military bases and protect oilfields

Paul Joseph Watson
Monday, July 18, 2011
http://www.prisonplanet.com/15000-us-troop...-diplomats.html

At least 15,000 US troops will stay in Iraq beyond the December 31 deadline which the Obama administration promised would bring a complete withdrawal of American forces. The majority of the troops will receive a “cover designation” and be labeled “diplomats,” but their job will be to protect oilfields and serve four giant military bases that will ensure the occupation remains permanent.

Confirming our earlier reports, the Israeli intelligence news source DebkaFile released a briefing to its subscribers this past weekend entitled, Four Big Air Bases, 15,000 Troops: For Defending Baghdad and Oil, and Facing Iran, which detailed how the occupation would be prolonged under false pretenses, with the Obama administration categorizing active duty US troops as “military trainers, expert advisers and diplomats.”

The report cites military intelligence sources in describing a meeting between US Defense Secretary Leon E. Panetta and Iraqi Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki, during which it was agreed that “15,000 US troops would be allowed to stay on in Iraq after December 2011.”

“The formation will be distributed as follows: 8,000 servicemen labeled US diplomats would be attached to operations command centers housed in secret, secure quarters at the embassy in Baghdad and in US consulates in Iraqi cities, including missions yet to be opened," states the report. "Another 7,000 troops were classified as US security officers – 4,000 for protecting "US diplomats" and 3,000 as military instructors."

Panetta's recent complaints about the Iraqi government's failure to make it clear whether it wanted US troops to remain in the country was apparently an act of "theatre" to camouflage the fact that a decision has already been made. Al-Maliki's failure to appoint a defense minister is also "a device for throwing off US demands to file a formal request for US forces to stay in Iraq," because the Iraqi government would not be in a position to formally respond to such a request, according to the briefing.

Last month we reported that the occupation of Iraq would be "prolonged indefinitely" and that a substantial number of U.S. troops would remain in the country beyond the December 31 deadline.

Shortly after, the Obama administration announced that it was considering how many troops to keep in Iraq despite promising that all US forces would be withdrawn at the end of the year.

This occurred just weeks after sources within the powerful Bilderberg Group intimated that the US had "no intentions of ever leaving Iraq" and that the country will merely be used as a launch pad for a wider regional war that will "include every nation in the Middle East except for Israel."

The target of that war is likely to be Iran. Rumors of an Israeli strike against Mahmoud Ahmadinejad's regime seem to surface almost every summer and this year is no different. On July 8, we first reported rumblings that an assault was being planned, citing intelligence sources that suggest Israel is preparing a surgical strike against Iran's nuclear facilities in September as a means of distracting from and ultimately derailing the prospect of Palestinian statehood.

In addition, Veteran CIA agent Robert Baer recently told KPFK Los Angeles that Israeli PM Benjamin Netanyahu was "likely to ignite a war with Iran in the very near future."

Indeed, one of the justifications cited by US officials behind maintaining a substantial US presence in Iraq is to defend against Shiite militias armed by Iran. Panetta is keen to ward off any "deepening of Iran's military penetration of Iraq," concerns that were heightened after Iraqi Prime Minister al-Maliki ordered Iraqi troops out of Baghdad and sent them to the Syrian border in aid of Tehran's ally, Syrian President Bashar Assad.

According to the Debka report, Panetta and Al-Maliki have agreed to maintain US control of four major military bases, in Halabja, Talil, Balad, and another east of Halabja, that will be used as outposts to protect oilfields in addition to defending against Iranian incursions. The fact that US bases will firmly remain staffed is unsurprising given that President Obama renamed such facilities "enduring presence posts" just last year.

Debka notes that “two of the four American air bases, Halabja and Talil, will therefore face Iran,” adding that thousands of extra US troops will be needed to service these bases in addition to the 15,000 that will already remain in Iraq. Like the 15,000, most of whom will be labeled “diplomats,” these extra forces will also be given a “cover-designation” to hide the fact that they are part of a massive remaining US presence.

Barack Obama swept to power on the promise that he would “immediately” withdraw troops from Iraq.

In reality, even before the August 2010 “withdrawal” of U.S. troops, the New York Times reported that, “Mr. Obama plans to leave behind a “residual force” of tens of thousands of troops to continue training Iraqi security forces, hunt down foreign terrorist cells and guard American institutions.”

When the supposed August 2010 “withdrawal” was announced, a senior military officer spelled it out more plainly to the Los Angeles Times, “‘When President Obama said we were going to get out within 16 months, some people heard, ‘get out,’ and everyone’s gone. But that is not going to happen,’ the officer said.”

****

Paul Joseph Watson is the editor and writer for Prison Planet.com. He is the author of Order Out Of Chaos. Watson is also a regular fill-in host for The Alex Jones Show.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Brazil to build nuclear submarines which will

Title: Brazil to build nuclear submarines which will Description: dramatically alter balance of power in S

TheUnhivedMind - July 19, 2011 02:26 AM (GMT)

Brazil to build nuclear submarines which will dramatically alter balance of power in South America

Last updated at 11:14 AM on 18th July 2011
http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-20...th-America.html

The Brazilian government has started work on a submarine programme which will include the construction of South America's first nuclear subs.

The move will boost Brazil's claim to be the strongest force in the region, and strengthen the country's military assertiveness.

This new-found power may harm Britain in the event of another flare-up over the Falklands, according to U.S. news agency Global Post, as Brazil thinks the islands should belong to Argentina.

The defence plan was announced in 2008, and will eventually involve the construction of five new submarines. Each will cost around $565 million.

The first, being built in collaboration with a French contractor, is due to come into service in 2016.

By the time the programme is complete, Brazil will have four extra conventional submarines as well as a nuclear-powered model. It would be only the seventh country in the world to build a nuclear sub.

Former president Luiz Inacio 'Lula' da Silva, who commissioned the programme, described the submarines as 'a necessity'.

Government officials claim that the subs will be used to protect the country's offshore oil reserves, and the exploration platforms which are intended to expand those reserves.

However, Brazil is an outspoken advocate of Argentina's right to claim the Falkland Islands - or Las Malvinas, as they are known in South America.

Tensions over the islands have risen in recent years as oil has been discovered close to the shore, making the tiny outcrop not only crucial to Argentinian national pride but also financially lucrative.

If the disagreement develops into military action, as it did in 1982, Brazil's new submarines would significantly reinforce the position of Argentina's closest ally.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: U.N. Briefed on Syria's Alleged Nuclear Activities

Title: U.N. Briefed on Syria's Alleged Nuclear Activities

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 06:22 PM (GMT)

U.N. Briefed on Syria's Alleged Nuclear Activities

by Naharnet Newsdesk 3 days ago http://www.naharnet.com/stories/en/10404-u...lear-activities

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) reported to U.N. Security Council members on Syria's suspected nuclear activities Thursday during a closed-door meeting.

"Council members were briefed by the IAEA, who provided the technical details that led to its conclusion of the violation by Syria of its nuclear non-proliferation obligations," said a French source.

On June 9, the IAEA decided to report Syria's "non-compliance" with IAEA safety agreements to the U.N. Security Council.

A U.N. diplomat said nothing concrete would come out of Thursday's meeting, but they wanted to continue the pressure.

The United States pushed for the IAEA resolution to report Syria to the Security Council and said the country was not meeting its obligations according to a recent agency report.

According to that report, the Syrian site Deir al-Zour (al-Kibar), which was destroyed by an Israeli plane in September 2007, was most likely used as an unregistered nuclear reactor.

Washington has been campaigning for sanctions against Syria with the support of European counties, Canada and South Korea.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: 17,000 TROOPS AXED TO BOOST TERRITORIAL ARMY

Title: 17,000 TROOPS AXED TO BOOST TERRITORIAL ARMY

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 05:22 PM (GMT)

17,000 TROOPS AXED TO BOOST TERRITORIAL ARMY

Monday July 18 2011 by Macer Hall, Political Editor
http://www.express.co.uk/posts/view/259531...erritorial-Army

THE Army is to lose 17,000 troops in a major shake-up to be announced today.

There will be just 84,000 regular troops by 2020 – the smallest force since before the Boer War in 1880.

Extra cash will be given instead to reserve forces like the Territorial Army.

Last night Tory Defence Secretary Dr Liam Fox dismissed accusations that the shift suggested that Britain was relying on a “Dad’s Army”.

On the eve of his major Commons announcement he said: “I do feel it’s a little offensive when we’ve used the reserves so successfully in Afghanistan to talk about them as Dad’s Army.

“One of the problems in the UK has been the rundown of the reserves.

“I have, in Opposition and during our time in Government, been very concerned to see that we are going to put the correct resources into the reserves to make sure they’re properly trained and equipped.”

One of the problems in the UK has been the rundown of the reserves.

Tory Defence Secretary Dr Liam Fox

A review is expected to recommend that 5,000 reservists – around one in seven – should be trained to be ready for frontline duties at a cost of around £150million.

The overall strength of the Territorial Army, Royal Navy Reserve and Royal Air Force Volunteers Reserve is expected to be kept at the current manpower level of around 36,000.

In total, an extra £1.5billion in investment for the armed forces is due to be announced by Dr Fox.

It will buy 14 Chinook helicopters, three new Rivet surveillance aircraft and pay for upgrades to the Army's ageing fleet of Warrior armoured personnel vehicles.

The shake-up comes as the Government is being warned by defence committee MPs against a premature withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan.

A British soldier from 9th/12th Royal Lancers (Prince of Wales's) has been shot and killed by a member of the Afghan National Army. Investigators are trying to establish if it was murder or an accident.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: We won't ease up on Taliban, pledges new US

Title: We won't ease up on Taliban, pledges new US
Description: commander

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 05:15 PM (GMT)

We won't ease up on Taliban, pledges new US commander

Richard Porritt
18 Jul 2011
http://www.thisislondon.co.uk/standard/art...us-commander.do

The new commander of the coalition forces in Afghanistan today promised not to ease up in the battle against the Taliban.

General John Allen took over from General David Petraeus - who is becoming director of the CIA - as the allies continue with plans to withdraw from the 10-year conflict.

Gen Petraeus was the architect of the counter-insurgency strategy that aimed to bring peace through an emphasis on decisive strikes against known insurgents and protecting the local population. Violent attacks have continued but military officials argue they are not as widespread or as intense as they would have been otherwise.

Gen Allen, who officially took command of the 140,000 American and international troops at a ceremony in Kabul this morning, said the "drawdown" of US forces that started this month and the transition of some areas to Afghan control this week do not mean that international forces are easing up in their campaign.

He said: "It is my intention to maintain the momentum of the campaign. There will be tough days ahead. I have no illusions about the challenges."

The handover ceremony came on a day when a bomb killed three international troops in east Afghanistan and only hours after security forces in the capital killed the last of two assassins who murdered a close adviser to President Hamid Karzai.

The Taliban claimed responsibility for the attack, in which two gunmen shot adviser Jan Mohammed Khan and a parliamentarian he was meeting in his house and then barricaded themselves inside. Police finally ended the siege this morning.

A Taliban video released today shows some of its fighters executing 16 Pakistani policemen. The policemen were captured in a raid in the north-west of Pakistan last month. They are lined up on a hillside, their hands tied, as one of the Taliban accuses them of executing children. Taliban soldiers then shoot them.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: With Friends Like AFRICOM, Who Needs Enemies?

Title: With Friends Like AFRICOM, Who Needs Enemies?

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 03:06 AM (GMT)

With Friends Like AFRICOM, Who Needs Enemies?

by Mark P. Fancher
BAR, July 15, 2011
http://uruknet.com/?p=m79609&hd=&size=1&l=e

Beware of Americans bearing gifts, guns, and an AFRICOM patch; their embrace can turn fatal. "One minute, Gadhafi was America's best friend in northern Africa and in the next minute he was an evil menace." The turnabout can be sudden. "Robert Mugabe too has been romanced by imperialism and then jilted." The results were highly inflationary, and may yet bring unwanted intrusions.

"If an African 'partner' were to attempt to give African interests priority over U.S. objectives, the partnership would be short-lived."

Public statements issued by U.S. Africa Command (AFRICOM) frequently refer to Africa's governments and military forces as "our African partners." The following AFRICOM website excerpts are typical:

"An important part of this approach is that we learn from our African partners what is important to them."

"Our African partners have expressed four common, defense-oriented goals that are consistent with U.S. interests and AFRICOM objectives…"

"U.S. AFRICOM's programs and activities support the development of capable, professional partner military forces…"

Partnerships typically involve trust, mutual respect and shared decision-making. These may be hard to find in relationships that AFRICOM has with Africa's armies because history and circumstances have determined that Africa's true, best interests and U.S. interests will always diverge. Consequently, in any relationship between Africa and the U.S., one set of interests will likely dominate the other.

For its part, AFRICOM has declared: "As a military organization, our responsibility to the American people is to support U.S. national security priorities." Africa's security priorities were forced to yield to so-called U.S. national security priorities when AFRICOM initiated military attacks against Libya at the same time that the African Union was calling for dialogue as a means of resolving conflicts in that country. This provides the best clue that if an African "partner" were to attempt to give African interests priority over U.S. objectives, the partnership would be short-lived.

Historically U.S. imperialism has embraced selected governments as "allies," or "friends," or "partners" when there is something to be gained from the relationship. But when these "friends" in some way jump ship, the U.S. turns on them like an enraged schizophrenic. Libya is the latest example.

Although the U.S. is waging an intense war in Libya at the moment, as recently as 2008, then-Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice traveled to Libya, broke bread with Moammar Gadhafi, and declared: "…I think, after many, many years, it's a very good thing that the United States and Libya are establishing a way forward."

"In any relationship between Africa and the U.S., one set of interests will likely dominate the other."

There were also reports that in 2009, Gadhafi did not rule out the possibility of cooperation with AFRICOM in selected missions.

One short month before the first U.S. attacks on Libya, President Obama requested that Congress increase U.S. aid to Libya's military to $1.7 million. Then, with blinding speed, the U.S. launched its war against that country, and Secretary of State Hilary Clinton made the following dubious if not baseless accusations:

"We have seen Colonel Gadhafi's security forces open fire on peaceful protesters. They have used heavy weapons on unarmed civilians. Mercenaries and thugs have been turned loose to attack demonstrators. The result of these human rights abuses is that they have lost the legitimacy to govern."

What happened? One minute, Gadhafi was America's best friend in northern Africa and in the next minute he was an evil menace. Various analysts have suggested that the causes for this radical change are rooted in everything from Libya's oil to Gadhafi's call for a united Africa to the Libyan leader's proposals for changing Africa's currency. The precise reasons are less significant than the fact that when it comes to fickle friends, the U.S. has no peer, and this should give pause to any African country considering a relationship with AFRICOM.

Lest any would-be AFRICOM "partner" assume that Libya is an aberration, it is important to recall that Gadhafi is not the only African leader to be kicked to the curb. Robert Mugabe too has been romanced by imperialism and then jilted. In an uncomplimentary essay about Zimbabwe's president, journalist Belinda Maswikwa said that in the aftermath of Zimbabwe's independence: "Zimbabwe was soon identified as an African success model, and Mugabe became the 'Darling of the West,' meeting with President Ronald Reagan in September, 1983, George H.W. Bush in July 1991 and Bill Clinton in 1995."

"When it comes to fickle friends, the U.S. has no peer."

Maswikwa also explained: "Mugabe was highly educated, eloquent, spoke the language of reconciliation and showed a willingness to respect the Lancaster Constitution. Furthermore he seemed to have abandoned Marxist rhetoric in favor of a predominantly capitalistic model that incorporated 'acceptable' elements of social democratic states, such as increasing public spending on education, health-care and social services. Mugabe was therefore showered with international praise, honors and awards in the early years…"

Maswikwa attributes Mugabe's fall from grace to alleged human rights abuses, but her collateral descriptions of Zimbabwe's circumstances probably do more to explain the changed relationship. She places events in the context of the agreement reached by freedom fighters and western powers to cooperate in the transfer of land held by white settlers to black Zimbabweans.

"[Zimbabwe's] relations with the United Kingdom only soured in 1998 when Tony Blair's Labor government refused to honor the land reform deal that Mugabe had negotiated with John Major and Margaret Thatcher's conservative governments. Britain thus decided to stop funding the land reform as dictated by the Lancaster House Agreement of 1979."

When the U.K. reneged on its agreement, liberation war veterans and others took matters into their own hands and began to occupy settlers' farms. Mugabe responded by developing an orderly system for land redistribution. Maswikwa observed:

"It is interesting to note that America's relationship with Zimbabwe became strained in 2000, when the U.S. ambassador criticized the compulsory land seizures." She wrote that ultimately, "…[t]he Bush administration imposed sanctions and by 2005, Zimbabwe had become 'an outpost of tyranny.'"

"It is worth contemplating the dangers of having to tell AFRICOM 'no' one day."

African countries considering "partnerships" would do well to engage in sober analysis when AFRICOM arrives bearing gifts of humanitarian assistance and military training. Given the treatment accorded other U.S. "friends" who have fallen out of favor, it is worth contemplating the dangers of having to tell AFRICOM "no" if one day a request is made to participate in a mission that is clearly contrary to Africa's best interests. This is not a far-fetched potential dilemma.

AFRICOM announced that one of its exercises for this summer is called "Shared Accord." Its purpose is to train "…U.S. and African forces to conduct peacekeeping operations in sub-Saharan Africa." Once trained, who will be the targets of these "peace keepers"? Will they include the Movement to Emancipate the Niger Delta (MEND)? According to reports, MEND recently vowed to attack facilities of an Italian company that MEND accuses of theft of Nigeria's oil. MEND claims its attacks are in solidarity with Libyans enduring imperialist attacks by Italy and others.

Or then again, perhaps AFRICOM will decide to move militarily against Robert Mugabe. Whatever the target, if prospective "partners" don't have the stomach for anti-African imperialist missions, or the wherewithal to resist U.S. retaliation for refusing to cooperate, they should probably refuse to answer the door when AFRICOM comes a knocking.

Mark P. Fancher is an attorney and African affairs analyst. He is the author of the book "I Ain't Got Tired Yet," He can be contacted at mfancher@comcast.net.

:: Article nr. 79609 sent on 16-jul-2011 01:25 ECT

www.uruknet.info?p=79609

:: The views expressed in this article are the sole responsibility of the author and do not necessarily reflect those of this website.

The section for the comments of our readers has been closed, because of many out-of-topics.
Now you can post your own comments into our Facebook page: www.facebook.com/uruknet

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: US Attack on Yemen Police Station Killed 50

Title: US Attack on Yemen Police Station Killed 50

TheUnhivedMind - July 18, 2011 03:00 AM (GMT)

US Attack on Yemen Police Station Killed 50

Yemeni Troops Attack Taiz as Protests Continue

by Jason Ditz, July 15, 2011
http://news.antiwar.com/2011/07/15/us-atta...till-killed-50/

Yesterday's report that the US killed eight in a combined drone and warplane attack on a Yemeni police station in the southern town of Wadyia has been dramatically revised upwards, with reports now putting the death toll at 50.

Yemeni reports say that the police station, which had been taken over by an opposition faction (which controls much of that province) and some media outlets termed all 50 slain as "al-Qaea militants," though obviously their identities could not be confirmed.

The Ansar al-Sharia, the opposition faction in question, is accused of having close ties with al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula. They are also accused of having designs on taking over the major city of Aden, though their ability to do so is still very much in doubt.

At the same time, Yemen's military is hard at work attacking civilian protestersm with attacks on the city of Taiz killing seven and wounding 30. The military's inability to retake the south even as it continues to attack peaceful demonstrations has led many in the opposition to conclude the loss of territory was deliberate to bring the US into the civil war on their side. Still the military has made efforts to retake those towns, and has failed miserably, so the simpler explanation may be weakness rather than a ploy.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Afghanistan: Senior aide to President Karzai

Title: Afghanistan: Senior aide to President Karzai
Description: killed

TheUnhivedMind - July 17, 2011 10:20 PM (GMT)

Afghanistan: Senior aide to President Karzai killed

Jan Mohammad Khan was said to be a trusted adviser of President Karzai

17 July 2011 Last updated at 20:45
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-south-asia-14179224

A senior aide to Afghan President Hamid Karzai, Jan Mohammad Khan, has been killed in an attack on his home in Kabul, say officials.

Lawmaker Hasham Atanwal also died in the attack, said police, as men stormed the house in the capital.

The incident comes less than a week after Mr Karzai's brother, Ahmed Wali Karzai, was assassinated.

Earlier Nato forces began handing the province of Bamiyan to Afghan security forces, the first move of its kind.

Some time after the attack on Mr Khan, the chief of police said security forces and the attackers were still exchanging fire around his house in the western Karti Char district of the city.

Interior ministry spokesman Siddiq Siddiqi said at least two gunmen had been involved in the attack, which began at about 8pm local time (1530 GMT).

"They were not suicide bombers, they were carrying weapons. One of them is dead, one other is still resisting," the AFP news agency quoted him as saying.

He said one man carrying an AK47 and a grenade launcher had been captured.

Kabul police chief Gen Ayub Salangi told the BBC one attacker was still alive and fighting from a bathroom in the house.

"We are trying to take over the house and clear it from these terrorists," he said.

Defence Minstry official Gen Zahir Wardak said the attackers had been wearing suicide vests, the Associated Press reports.
Security concerns

The BBC's Bilal Sarwary in Kabul says Mr Khan - a former governor of Uruzgan province - was a close ally of the president, but he was also a controversial figure.

Earlier on Sunday, Nato began handing over control of Bamiyan province, west of Kabul, to the Afghan National Army (AMA).

It is the first of seven areas to be passed to local forces under a plan announced by President Karzai in March.

The handover is seen as a critical step in a transition of power before foreign troops end combat operations in 2014.

Correspondents say that despite rising casualty numbers, security has improved in a number of areas of the country following a surge of extra American troops and tens of thousands of new Afghan police and soldiers.

However the quality of Afghan police and soldiers is patchy and correspondents warn of fears that they will be unable to withstand a renewed summer offensive from the Taliban.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Afghanistan: Bamiyan province handed to local Title: Afghanistan: Bamiyan province handed to local Description: forces

TheUnhivedMind - July 17, 2011 10:19 PM (GMT)

Afghanistan: Bamiyan province handed to local forces

The BBC's Jonathan Beale is at the handover ceremony

17 July 2011 Last updated at 15:36
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-south-asia-14175988

Nato has handed over control of the central Afghan province of Bamiyan to Afghan security forces.

It is the first of seven areas to be passed to local forces under a plan announced by President Karzai in March.

Bamiyan is one of the country's most secure provinces but it is a poor region, heavily reliant on foreign aid.

The handover is seen as a critical step in a transition of power before foreign troops end combat operations in 2014.

Senior Afghan ministers and foreign ambassadors flew down from the capital, Kabul to take part in a transition ceremony that for security reasons was not announced in advance and was not broadcast live.

The ceremony was held at Bamiyan's police headquarters. The police will take responsibility for security in the province as there are no army units stationed there.

International forces from New Zealand will remain in the area for the time being, but they will be under Afghan control.

Local fears

Six areas are still to be handed over to Afghan forces in this first phase of the transition. They include:
Kabul province
Panjshir province
Herat city
Mazar-e Sharif city
Lashkar Gah city
Mehtar Lam town

The greatest challenge for Afghan forces is likely to be faced in Lashkar Gah, the capital of volatile Helmand province in the south where Taliban insurgents remain active.

On Saturday a British soldier was killed near Lashkar Gah while on patrol with the Afghan army - reports suggest that he might have been shot by a man in an Afghan army uniform.

And just weeks after President Karzai's announcement in March, seven UN staff were killed during a deadly protest in Mazar-e Sharif in northern Afghanistan.
Continue reading the main story
“
Start Quote

Time to time armed men try to come from the unsecure neighbouring provinces but our police deals with them”
Habiba Sorabi
Governor of Bamiyan

The BBC's Jonathan Beale, in Bamiyan, says that if the transition here does not work well, it is hard to see it taking root in less secure parts of the country.

But the governor of Bamiyan was optimistic, pointing out that Bamiyan has not been badly affected by the Taliban offensive over the years.

"We don't have much of security issues here, Bamiyan is a secure province. From time to time armed men try to come from the unsecure neighbouring provinces but our police deal with them," Habiba Sorabi told the BBC's Afghan Stream.

Bamiyan still has many problems with around 50% of the population not getting enough food to eat. Many Afghans who live here are worried that transition will mean more corruption, less employment and less security, our correspondent says.
Taliban offensive

At the time of the initial handover announcement, Nato Secretary General Anders Fogh

Rasmussen said that every step of the transition would be "determined by conditions on the ground".

Correspondents say that despite rising casualty numbers, the surge of extra American troops and tens of thousands of new Afghan police and soldiers have improved security in a number of areas in the country.

However the quality of Afghan police and soldiers is patchy and correspondents warn of fears that they will be unable to withstand a renewed summer offensive from the Taliban.

There have been a number of high-profile attacks in the country including an assault by militants on a luxury hotel in Kabul that left 22 people dead. On Tuesday, President Karzai's half-brother was shot dead in Kandahar by his own head of security.

The Bamiyan handover is the first step in a long process of withdrawal, after which the primary role of foreign troops will be to train and equip Afghan security forces. Nato troops will cease to engage in battle.

Analysts say Nato will find it difficult to effect a successful transition without an end to the war and some kind of political settlement with the Taliban.

There are currently around 140,000 foreign troops in Afghanistan, nearly 100,000 of whom are from the US, still battling the Taliban insurgency.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Warning over early Afghan pull-out by British Title: Warning over early Afghan pull-out by British Description: forces

TheUnhivedMind - July 17, 2011 10:18 PM (GMT)

Warning over early Afghan pull-out by British forces

James Arbuthnot said the military "failed to give the proper advice that was needed to politicians"

17 July 2011 Last updated at 10:43
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-14175600

Pulling British troops out prematurely from Afghanistan could "dangerously weaken" remaining forces, MPs said.

The Commons Defence Committee said David Cameron's plan to withdraw by the end of 2014 could undermine the international coalition's strategy.

And the MPs said they were still not yet convinced the troops now in Afghanistan had sufficient helicopters.

Defence Secretary Dr Liam Fox said while there was "still much to do", the pull-out target was achievable.

On a visit earlier this month to Afghanistan, the prime minister announced the withdrawal of 500 troops, cutting total force numbers to 9,000 by September 2012.

He said he wants British soldiers to end combat operations in the country by 2014.

On Sunday, Bamiyan province became the first area in the country to be handed over to Afghan security forces from Nato.

The formal process of transfer of power to Afghan control is due to be completed by the end of 2014.

But in their report, the MPs say there are still concerns about how ready the Afghan national army and police are to take over security and that withdrawal of British troops must depend on the situation on the ground.

They also said that the government's scope for any more troop reductions was "necessarily limited" in the short term, as a more significant withdrawal would have to involve a complete battle group - a "dangerous move".

"It is important that the government's clear determination to withdraw combat forces should not undermine the military strategy by causing the Afghan population to fear that the international coalition might abandon them or by allowing the Taliban and others to think that all they have to do is bide their time until International Security Assistance Force (Isaf) withdraws," the report said.
'Fighting for their lives'

The Ministry of Defence (MoD) is criticised for failing to warn ministers of the dangers facing troops when they were first deployed to Helmand province in 2006 under Tony Blair's government - a time when British soldiers were still fighting in Iraq.

The MPs say that for three years British forces lacked the necessary numbers and equipment after senior commanders in the UK told the then defence secretary John (now Lord) Reid that those on the ground had what they needed.

The MPs said it appeared "unlikely" commanders had sought ministerial authorisation for a change of tactics which saw British troops "fighting for their lives".

This tactical change should have gone to cabinet for endorsement, the MPs said.

"We are disturbed by the fact that the secretary of state was being told that commanders on the ground were content with the support they were being given in Helmand when clearly they were not.

"We regard it as unacceptable that hard pressed forces in such a difficult operation as Helmand should have been denied the necessary support to carry out the mission from the outset, and that this shortage had not been brought to the attention of ministers."

Committee chairman James Arbuthnot MP told the BBC: "Communications between the military and the politicians were poor, the warnings were inadequate at best and weren't passed properly up the line.

"Some of the decisions that were made in 2006 - for example to go out to the forward operating bases in Sangin, and Musa Kala and Now Zad - were things which really should have been put to the cabinet for decision before they happened.

"But they weren't, they were put to the ministers after they'd happened in a way which should never be allowed to happen again."
'Mistakes made'

The MPs also said they are still not convinced that troops now in Afghanistan have enough helicopters after previous assurances from the government were later proved wrong.

David Cameron has said he wants British soldiers to end combat operations in the country by 2014.

Responding to the report, Dr Fox said it was clear that mistakes had been made in the lead-up to and during the deployment to Helmand in 2006.

He said troop levels had increased since 2009, as had the number of helicopters available to Isaf forces.

He added that Isaf was now ahead of targets to build and train the Afghan army and police.

"While there is much still to do, we are on track to achieve our target of ending UK combat operations in Afghanistan by 2015," he said.

"We will not abandon Afghanistan and as the prime minister has made clear the UK will work to further develop the ability of Afghans to look after their own affairs by leading the Afghan National Army Officer Academy amongst other things.

"My highest priority is ensuring that our service personnel are given all the support and equipment they need to do the job asked of them."

Robert Fox, from the Centre for Defence Studies at Kings College London, told the BBC that the greatest focus should be on the political mistakes rather than the actions of soldiers.

"The responsibility in the end is political. What worries me about this report and it's not generated by it at all - it's doing its job - is that now there's a feeding frenzy: let's blame the soldiers, let's push off, it's all over, it's their fault, they got it wrong.

"This is too simplistic and it's very dangerous."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Iran says it can block 'Internet in a suitcase'

Title: Iran says it can block 'Internet in a suitcase'

TheUnhivedMind - July 16, 2011 02:10 AM (GMT)

Iran says it can block 'Internet in a suitcase'

15 July 2011
http://www.google.com/hostednews/ap/articl...3b2f50f3d00767c

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Iran's intelligence minister said Friday that his country has found a way to block the so-called "Internet in a suitcase," a program reportedly developed by the U.S. to bring online access to dissidents around the world.

The minister, Heidar Moslehi, told Muslim worshippers that Iran was aware of the program from the start. "We prepared a solution for it," he said in a speech broadcast live on state radio. He did not elaborate.

Iran has alleged that the program, first reported by The New York Times last month, is largely aimed at the Islamic Republic.

Earlier this month, Iran's telecommunications minister, Reza Taqipour, said Iran is taking technical measures to combat the the program. Taqipour was quoted by state media as saying that the program is part of a "cultural invasion" by Iran's enemies aimed at promoting dissent and undermining Iran's ruling system.

During widespread anti-government protests following disputed June 2009 presidential elections, the government slowed Internet connections to a crawl and shut down cell phone services to stifle dissent.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Tehran ready to give Syria $5.8 billion: report

Title: Tehran ready to give Syria $5.8 billion: report

TheUnhivedMind - July 16, 2011 02:09 AM (GMT)

Tehran ready to give Syria $5.8 billion: report

PARIS | Fri Jul 15, 2011 1:50pm EDT
http://www.reuters.com/article/2011/07/15/...E76E3C720110715

(Reuters) - Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khameini backs offering $5.8 billion in aid to Syria to bolster its economy, a French newspaper said Friday, citing a report by a Tehran think-tank linked to Iran's leadership.

Damascus has long been Tehran's main ally among otherwise mainly hostile Arab states. After four months of popular unrest, Syria's economy is reeling under the weight of strikes, reduced oil exports, scaled-back trade and international sanctions.

Its troubles have prompted Iran's leadership to consider offering $5.8 billion in financial help, including a three-month loan worth $1.5 billion to be made available immediately, French business daily Les Echos said.

It added that Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei has backed the idea of the aid, which was outlined in a secret report by the Center for Strategic Research, a think tank linked to the Iranian leadership.

It was not possible to verify the report Friday.

Iran, Les Echos said, could also provide 290,000 barrels of oil to Syria each day over the next month while helping to boost border controls to stop Syrians from fleeing the country for Lebanon with cash.

After four months of civil uprising in Syria, human rights groups report that more than 1,400 civilian have been killed, drawing a chorus of condemnation from around the world.

International sanctions are only targeted at Syria's leaders, not its banks and companies. But France and the United States are pressing for tougher penalties and a U.N. Security Council resolution condemning the crackdown, after the embassies of both countries in Syria were attacked.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: PIIGS, Presstitutes And The Global Meltdown

Title: PIIGS, Presstitutes And The Global Meltdown

TheUnhivedMind - July 16, 2011 12:35 AM (GMT)

PIIGS, Presstitutes And The Global Meltdown

By Gerald Celente
7-13-11
http://rense.com/general94/piigs.htm

KINGSTON, NY - "Read All About It!" You couldn't not read all about it! The media was full of reports about how happy stock market days were here again. After a stormy start, June closed and July began with US benchmark indexes racking up their biggest weekly gains in two years on good news: the US manufacturing index had unexpectedly risen, and the beleaguered debt-burdened Greeks were bailed out yet again piling un-payable new debt on top of un-payable old debt.

Yes, there was some concern, but, as The New York Times reported on June 25th, "Two years into the official recovery, the economy is still behaving like a plane taxiing indefinitely on the runway. Few economists are predicting an out-and-out return to recession analysts generally expect the economy to pick up in the second half."

The economists were forecasting strong job growth for June. But two weeks later, when the numbers came in, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that only 18,000 jobs had been created not the 125,000 jobs projected by those same economists who were also not "predicting an out-and-out return to recession."

Accordingly, without missing a beat, the Times changed its tune writing new words to replace the old words they would never be forced to eat:

Feeble Job Numbers Show Recovery Starting to Stall

Defying Economists Forecast for Hiring, Unemployment Creeps Up to 9.2%

For the second consecutive month, employers added scarcely any jobs in June, startling evidence that the economic recovery is stumbling The government also revised downward the small gain for the previous month to 25,000 new jobs, less than half the original estimate. (The New York Times, 9 July 2011)

"Dismal Jobs Data Rock US Recovery" and "Worries Grow Over Jobs," read the respective headlines in the Financial Times and Wall Street Journal on July 9th, dissipating the air of optimism that had recently rallied equity markets.

"Employment!" More than factory orders, GDP, corporate profits, retail sales, durable goods employment was the one big number that counted. There was no way to spin the consequences of 18,000 mostly low paying health care and hospitality jobs into the hopeful message implied by the 125,000 jobs forecast by most economists.

The equation was simple; the more people out of work, the less they consume. And in the United States, where consumer spending accounts for an estimated 70 percent of the GDP, without increased consumer spending, the economy was again recession bound.

Virtually overnight, one dire employment report unraveled two years' worth of government spin and media complicity. In April 2010, Vice President Joseph Biden promised, "we're going to be creating between 250,000 jobs a month and 500,000 jobs a month." And in August 2010, Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner declared that the "actions we took at its height [of the crisis] to stimulate the economy helped arrest the freefall, preventing an even deeper collapse and putting the economy on the road to recovery."

But almost a year later, talking on "Meet the Press," two days after the devastating employment data was released, the new, revised Geithner forecast was, "Oh, I think it's [the recovery] going to take a long time still. This is a very tough economy. And I think for a lot of people it's going to be - it's going to feel very hard, harder than anything they've experienced in their lifetime now, for some time to come."

Like the Biden boast long-buried and un-exhumed, the Geithner statement, a direct contradiction of his former projection went unchallenged, given the usual free pass by the "Meet the Press" Presstitutes.

There was, and is, no "return to recession." As The Trends Research Institute had been forecasting since the onset of the Great Recession and the "Panic of '08," all those "bold actions" proudly cited by Geithner were no more than financial Prozac multi-trillion-dollar band aids, palliatives, placebos and cover-ups packaged as TARP, the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act, QE2, and so on. At best, the "bold actions" merely guided the Great Recession into a brief remission, and that is all.

Global Ponzi It was a cover-up, not a recovery. And while the US may have been the first, it was not the only nation to try to fraudulently finagle its way out of a crisis and into prosperity. Like the US bailouts, the Greek survival package praised as an important stopgap success only last week has neither guaranteed keeping the Greek banking system afloat nor guaranteed it won't default.

Now Italy has caught the contagion. Fattest of the PIIGS (acronym for Portugal, Ireland, Italy, Greece and Spain) the eurozone's third largest economy with its 120 percent public debt to GDP ratio, Italy is bleeding red ink all over its balance sheet. Borrowing more to service its debt load and imposing draconian austerity measures to reign in government spending will, at best, provide a respite from the financial crisis or, at worst, foment a revolution. (See, "Off With Their Heads, 2.0, Trends Journal, Autumn 2010)

Then there's China, who panicked when the "Panic of 08" blew out their export driven economy, and, like the West, used cheap credit and huge stimulus packages to prevent a major economic contraction. While China's crisis differs from the West's in that it has large currency reserves and its debt is homegrown and home-loaned, it's still debt and has to be repaid.

And unlike the West, which pumped trillions into just keeping its economies afloat, the Chinese multi-trillion yuan infusions have created an immense, ready-to-pop property bubble. But this time, like the West, there will be no available fiscal or monetary government policies to re-inflate their faltering economy.

And as goes the US, Europe and China so goes the rest of the world. From India to Israel, Brazil to Bangladesh, Chile to Russia, no nation will escape the economic fallout and few will escape the political consequences.

Yet, despite the widely available economic facts and the ample evidence of faulty forecasts and failed government policies, the mainstream media continues to sell the public the big lie. By providing cover for the politicians and financiers, the Presstitutes of the world with their stable of "well respected" pundits are accomplices in promoting the egregiously transparent cover-up as a "recovery."

Trendpost: After descending to $1,480 less than two weeks ago, as this is written, gold is flirting with $1,600. We see this surge as a recognition of the greater financial and socioeconomic collapse we have been forecasting since the onset of the "Panic of '08." We hold to our forecast of "Gold $2,000," and depending on how the coming crisis unfolds and the responses to it made by governments and central banks, $2,000 may prove but a temporary ceiling before climbing higher.

To schedule an interview with Gerald Celente, Trends Journal publisher, please contact: Zeke West, Media Relations, zwest@trendsresearch.com 845 331.3500 ext. 1

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: New Brown University Report Pegs The Real Cost Of Title: New Brown University Report Pegs The Real Cost Of Description: Current Wars At $4 Trillion

TheUnhivedMind - July 15, 2011 06:51 PM (GMT)

New Brown University Report Pegs The Real Cost Of Current Wars At $4 TRILLION

July 13, 2011
http://dailybail.com/home/cbo-and-the-pent...y-report-p.html

Here are the relevant links for this story:

The Watson Institute of Brown University Report

Business Insider Built An Excellent 1-Page Slideshow From The Report

And a summary from Yahoo:

Yahoo

A new report out of Brown University estimates that the U.S. wars in Afghanistan and Iraq--together with the counterinsurgency efforts in Pakistan--will, all told, cost $4 trillion and leave 225,000 dead, both civilians and soldiers.

The group of economists, anthropologists, lawyers, humanitarian personnel, and political scientists involved in the project estimated that the cost of caring for the veterans injured in the wars will reach $1 trillion in 30 or 40 years. In estimating the $4 trillion total, they did not take into account the $5.3 billion in reconstruction spending the government has promised Afghanistan, state and local contributions to veteran care, interest payments on war debt, or the costs of Medicare for veterans when they reach 65.

The Congressional Budget Office, meanwhile, has assessed the federal price tag for the wars at $1.8 trillion through 2021. The report says that is a gross underestimate, predicting that the government has already paid $2.3 trillion to $2.7 trillion.

More than 6,000 U.S. troops and 2,300 contractors have died since the wars began after Sept. 11. A staggering 550,000 disability claims have been filed with the VA as of 2010. Meanwhile, 137,000 civilians in Afghanistan and Iraq have died in the conflict. (Injuries among U.S. contractors have also not yet been made public, further complicating the calculations of cost.) Nearly 8 million people have been displaced. Check out Reuters' factbox breaking down the costs and casualties here.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: To improve relations, US must respect China's core

Title: To improve relations, US must respect China's core Description: interests

TheUnhivedMind - July 15, 2011 05:57 PM (GMT)

To improve relations, US must respect China's core interests

14:15, July 14, 2011
http://english.peopledaily.com.cn/90001/90...43/7440158.html

Admiral Mike Mullen, chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, recently visited China. This visit is a response to top Chinese General Chen Bingde's visit to the United States in May 2011. China-U.S. relations have rebounded thanks to joint efforts from both sides. Both sides should cherish this hard-won situation.

"China today is a different country than it was 10 years ago, and it certainly will continue to change over the next 10 years. It is no longer a rising power. It has, in fact, arrived as a world power," Mike Mullen said during his speed in the Renmin University, which aroused worldwide attention.

It is not a new topic to discuss whether China has become a world power. This issue has a very obvious implication regarding "China's responsibilities" in the world. It is not important what U.S. officials have said about China. What really matters is whether the United States can really treat China as an equal partner. This is especially important for the development of the military relations between the two countries.

Military exchanges often lag behind other aspects in the all-around and multi-level China-U.S. relations. The military relations between the two countries are also very weak, meaning they are often the first and the most affected when the China-U.S. relations experience ups and downs. In addition to the sensitivity of military exchanges, the fundamental reason is that military movements are often related to the core interests of both sides and have significant impact on the mentality of the people of both countries.

The United States should understand that the obstacles to exchanges between the Chinese and U.S. militaries over recent years are not the lack of transparency in China's military or the aggressive posture adopted by China. The root cause is the mentality of containment to which the United States has long clung, which lies behind its public statements. This has sometimes caused the nation to make moves threatening China's core interests. Only a country that respects other countries can win their respect.

The South China Sea issue has served as a mirror reflecting the complicated mentality and policies of the United States. When the South China Sea disputes escalated, the United States, which has the most powerful military presence in the region, just managed to show off its force and capitalize on the disputes instead of playing a role in cooling down them.

Some media agencies and scholars in the United States have publicly urged the U.S. military to intervene in the South China Sea issue. An editorial in the Washington Post even asked the Pentagon to provide the Philippines with military support. The United States, Vietnam and the Philippines held a joint drill before long, which the Philippines's media agencies interpreted as a "consolation" to the country. The moves made by the United States to artificially stir up trouble were terribly incorrect, making the situation in the South China Sea more complicated.

It is worth noting that another evil wind is brewing in Washington. Many Congress members are stepping up pressure on the Obama administration to sell more F-16C/D fighters to Taiwan. It is imaginable that if the United States continues arms sales to Taiwan, all the efforts that the United States and China have made to promote bilateral military ties will be wasted.

The issue of arms sales to Taiwan is a true test of whether the United States is able to keep pace with the times and manage its relations with China wisely. Unless the issue is completely solved, the two countries cannot develop stable military ties, which will inevitably affect their cooperation in other areas. Whether the United States has started to see China as a world power depends on its actions rather than on words. If the United States truly respects China, it should show some respect for China's core interests first.

In fact, the two countries are facing a rare opportunity to further their military ties, but it requires the joint efforts of both to turn the opportunity into reality. At present, the top priority for the United States is to show its respect for China through actions and develop bilateral relations on the basis of mutual trust, equality and mutual benefit. China deserves to be treated as such, no matter whether it is still a "rising power" or already a "world power."

By People's Daily Online

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Vietnam: Chinese soldiers attack fishermen

Title: Vietnam: Chinese soldiers attack fishermen

TheUnhivedMind - July 15, 2011 05:57 PM (GMT)

Vietnam: Chinese soldiers attack fishermen

14 Jul 2011
http://www.google.com/hostednews/ap/articl...2745c7a17220a06

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — Armed Chinese soldiers allegedly beat a Vietnamese fisherman and threatened other crew members before driving them out of waters near disputed South China Sea islands claimed by both countries, a Vietnamese official said Thursday.

A Chinese navy ship chased the fishermen before dispatching a speedboat with 10 soldiers armed with automatic rifles and batons, a border official in Vietnam's central Quang Ngai province said on condition of anonymity, citing policy. The soldiers boarded the fishing boat near the contested Paracel Islands.

The soldiers punched and kicked the Vietnamese captain and threatened nine other crew members in the July 5 incident, he said, adding the captain was not injured.

The Vietnamese official said the Chinese soldiers confiscated one ton of fish from the boat and drove it from the area. The fishermen continued working before coming to shore and reporting the incident to authorities Wednesday, he said.

The incident is the latest flare-up in an ongoing maritime spat between the communist neighbors that has increased regional tensions after both countries recently announced they had conducted live-fire naval drills in the South China Sea.

Twice since May, Vietnam has accused China of interfering in its oil and gas exploration efforts. China instead says Vietnam endangered its fishermen.

Vietnam and China both claim the resource-rich Paracels. China has stationed troops there since driving out South Vietnamese soldiers in 1974, one year before the end of the Vietnam War.

The recent blowup has sparked rare demonstrations near the Chinese Embassy in Hanoi for the past six weekends despite the detention of protesters and journalists covering the event Sunday.

Last month, a Vietnamese envoy traveled to Beijing for talks with Chinese officials where they agreed to negotiate a peaceful resolution.

China also has been sparring with the Philippines over the nearby Spratly Islands.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Federal Reserve Causes Middle East Unrest

Title: Federal Reserve Causes Middle East Unrest
Description: [Vd]

TheUnhivedMind - July 15, 2011 05:07 PM (GMT)

Federal Reserve Causes Middle East Unrest

[dohtml]<iframe width="560" height="349" src="http://www.youtube.com/embed/2pnx8_4PsOY" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>[/dohtml]

TheUnhivedMind - July 15, 2011 05:14 PM (GMT)

This isn't the Federal Reserve this is the Holy Roman Emperor, King Juan Carlos of Spain (The Protector of the Holy Sites of the Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem). Born in Rome, trained by Jesuits and boss of the House of Bourbon,• the Farnese continnum. Controlling the Middle East through the Union for the Mediterranean and the Knights of Malta covertly controlling since the 14th Century the Crown at the City of London controlling from St John's Wood, England and Via Condotti, Rome.

The Federal Reserve is nothing compared to the Exchange Stabilization Fund and the U.S. Treasury controlling the ESF.Then you have to look to the Universal Postal• Union in Berne, Switzerland one corner away from the Papal Nuncio.All tied with The Worshipful Company of International Bankers and the Crown covertly controlled by the Knights of Malta since the 14th Century after the destruction of the Knights Templar who ran it from 1215.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: CHINA MISSILE SALES

Title: CHINA MISSILE SALES

TheUnhivedMind - July 15, 2011 05:00 PM (GMT)

CHINA MISSILE SALES

13 July 2011
http://www.washingtontimes.com/topics/ellen-tauscher/

Newly released classified documents reveal China's continued violations of the Missile Technology Control Regime (MTCR) with sales of missiles and parts to Iran, Syria and Pakistan.

A Sept. 18, 2009, State Department cable on the issue was prepared for an international meeting of the MTCR that year in Rio de Janeiro. The MTCR is an informal association of 34 states that seeks to limit exports of missiles with ranges greater than 185 miles and warheads heavier than 1,000 pounds.

Sent under Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton's signature, the cable included a report on Chinese missile proliferation that on three occasions referred to a "lack of political will" by China to stop missile transfers.

"Chinese authorities and firms fail to conduct sufficient evaluations of missile-applicable transactions or to take steps to know their customers," the report said.

Several cables, labelled "secret," were made public on Monday by the anti-secrecy site WikiLeaks, showing Chinese violations or circumventions of the accord.

"Other firms that are aware of the vulnerabilities in China's export-control system take steps to conceal sensitive transactions and avoid detection, including by adopting new names and falsifying shipping documentation. Additionally, some firms may take advantage of government connections to skirt Chinese regulations," the cable said.

Among the violations were sales to Iran by China's Dalian Sunny Industries, also known as LIMMT; sales of ballistic-missile goods to Syria; and transfers by Shanghai Technical

By-Products International Corp. to Iran of ballistic-missile items.

Sanctions were imposed on two Chinese firms in 2009: LIMMT for sales of graphite, tungsten, gyroscopes and accelerometers; and Bellamax for steel alloys, gyroscopes and ball bearings.

Chinese authorities apparently do not control missile exports because of too much reliance on “foreign tips” and a reluctance to impose “catch-all” controls, the cable said.

One Chinese official was quoted as saying such controls are “not meant to catch everything.” Another Chinese official was quoted as warning U.S. officials to back off pressuring Beijing because “China’s business is its own business.”

John Tkacik, a former State Department intelligence specialist, said claims that Beijing lacked political will to halt missile proliferation is absurd.

“In fact, the Chinese government is aiding and abetting the proliferation,” he said.

Mr. Tkacik said the cables reveal that Chinese diplomats lied to U.S. Embassy officials in Beijing.

“They told the embassy that companies had been ‘closed down,’ yet our intelligence collection shows those companies continue to function unimpeded,” he said.

The report concluded that “until China addresses the persistent shortfalls in its export-control enforcement, ballistic-missile programs in countries of concern probably will continue to seek and receive MTCR-controlled … items from Chinese firms.”

A second cable from 2009 said Iran uses automotive factories as “a procurement cover for its missile programs,” something Mr. Tkacik said is highlighted by the 2007 deal between China’s Chery Automobile to set up a factory in Iran to make cars.

“Stating that commodities are intended for automobile manufacturing allows Iran a means of purchasing a variety of dual-use goods, particularly specialty metals and industrial machine tools, which could have utility in the automobile sector, but which also often are diverted to support its missile production and development efforts,” the second cable on missile trends stated.

A third cable said North Korea developed its missile industry with critically needed parts from foreign suppliers, “most-commonly China-based, given their proximity and access to technology that would be beneficial to North Korea’s missile program.”

China has been violating the MTCR for decades and first sold DF-11 short-range missiles to Pakistan, while claiming it followed MTCR guidelines. The DF-11 sales were covered up by U.S. intelligence agencies during the Clinton administration to prevent the imposition of sanctions under U.S. law. CIA arms-proliferation analyst Gordon Oehler exposed the cover-up after he was forced into retirement for refusing to go along.

PLA MISSILE DECEPTION

People's Liberation Army Gen. Chen Bingde, chief of the general staff, spoke publicly for the first time this week about China's new aircraft carrier-killing anti-ship ballistic missile, the DF-21D, and played down its development.

Gen. Chen said during a press conference Monday that the missile was discussed during talks with Joint Chiefs Chairman Adm. Mike Mullen. He claimed the missile is "still under research-and-development process. It is not equipped yet."

Gen. Chen then sought to minimize the significance of a missile the Pentagon has called a game-changing "area-denial" weapon designed to keep U.S. ships out of Asian waters. Hitting a ship at sea with a ballistic missile requires precise accuracy.

"Even though if, in the future, we are successful in research and development of this kind of weapons system, it will be a system for defense," he said.

His statements contradict those of Adm. Robert Willard, commander of U.S. forces in the Pacific, who said in December that the DF-21D was in the early stages of deployment after extensive testing.

Gen. Chen next criticized the Pentagon for "spending so much money on the military," asking if it wasn't "placing too much pressure on the taxpayers" during the recession.

"If U.S. could reduce a bit military spending to spend more on the improvement of livelihood of the American people and also do more good things for world people, wouldn't it be a better scenario?" Gen. Chen said, echoing similar calls from liberal-left congressional Democrats and other progressives.

To further play down China's military, Gen. Chen said: "We are aware of the fact that what we lack most is the capability of long-distance [power] projection."

A defense official said Gen. Chen is on the leading edge of a new PLA propaganda campaign, what the Pentagon calls "denial and deception."

Gen. Chen's comments were likely intended to prompt a re-evaluation of China's DF-21D by U.S. intelligence agencies that studies have shown were chronically wrong or had underestimated China's military for at least the past two decades, caused in part by accepting disinformation aimed at fooling analysts, according to the official.

FACT OR FICTION

Ellen Tauscher, undersecretary of state for arms control and international security, reacted harshly to a report in this space June 16 on the draft missile-defense agreement with the Russians that was rejected by the White House amid concerns it would limit U.S. missile defenses.

Ms. Tauscher was asked about the Inside the Ring report following a speech in London and told the questioner the report was “fiction.”

The draft Tauscher agreement the White House rejected included four elements, including two noncontroversial provisions on confidence-building and transparency. The two show-stoppers were provisions Moscow likely would view as legally binding limits on pointing interceptors at Russia, and other limits on numbers and capabilities of missile defenses.

Confirmation of the scrapped June agreement that was prepared for signing by President Obama at the Group of Eight summit in Deauville, France, came from an unlikely source: Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov, Ms. Tauscher’s main missile-defense interlocutor.

Mr. Lavrov told Russia’s state-run Rossiya 24 television on July 7 that during the Deauville summit, “We discussed, at the suggestion of the Americans, the possibility of adopting a statement in which instructions would be given regarding a number of important issues that need to be settled prior to practical cooperation [on missile defense], but then, at the request of Americans, their own initiative was recalled. Well, things like this do happen.”

Asked if she would like to revise and extend her remarks in light of the Russian minister’s statement, a State Department official said what Ms. Tauscher really meant by “fiction” were assertions that she was working on an agreement to limit missile defenses.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Karzai brother service hit by Kandahar suicide

Title: Karzai brother service hit by Kandahar suicide
Description: bomber

TheUnhivedMind - July 15, 2011 02:15 AM (GMT)

Karzai brother service hit by Kandahar suicide bomber

The BBC's Bilal Sarwary was a street away when the explosion happened

14 July 2011 Last updated at 19:48
http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-south-asia-14151048

A suicide bomber has killed four people at a memorial service in Kandahar for the assassinated half-brother of Afghan President Hamid Karzai.

Officials say the bomber apparently hid explosives in his turban and detonated them near the entrance of the mosque.

President Karzai was not present at the memorial. Four of his other brothers were but escaped unharmed.

Ahmad Wali Karzai, a controversial but key figure in Nato's battle against the Taliban, was killed by his bodyguard.

President Karzai flew into Kandahar for his brother's funeral on Wednesday, but left the city before Thursday's service.

No group has so far admitted carrying out the mosque attack.

The governor of Kandahar province, Toryalai Wesa, said 15 people were injured.

Another explosion later hit the Herat Bazaar in the centre of Kandahar, killing one person and injuring several others, said the city's police chief.
Chaos and panic

The explosion in the Red Mosque took place just after noon (0730 GMT) in the southern Afghan city, as the service for Ahmad Wali Karzai was coming to an end.

Officials say the attacker was stopped at the mosque's entrance, where he blew himself up.

Witnesses, including President Karzai's spokesman Waheed Omer, said he had hidden the explosives in his turban. Provincial intelligence chief Gen Mohammad Naeem Momin told the Associated Press that early investigations supported the reports.

The BBC's Bilal Sarwary in Kandahar said that security was not as tight as it could have been around the mosque.

Tradition dictates that mourners are not searched when attending memorials, says our correspondent, and several tribal elders told him they had not been searched.

The interior ministry and medical sources said four people and the bomber had been killed.

Among those killed was Hikmatullah Hikmat, the head of Kandahar's Ulema Council, said the ministry. The council is an influential body of clerics in charge of regulating religious issues in the province.

The ministry said a child was also among the dead.

"There was a prayer going on and after that prayer, the man came close to the director of the religious council and exploded," said Kandahar Governor Wesa.

Officials say the casualty figures could have been much higher had the attacker been able to get inside the mosque itself, says our correspondent.

Four of President Karzai's brothers, several other Karzai family members and Mr Wesa were in the mosque at the time. None were believed to have been hurt.
Appeal to Taliban

Ahmad Wali Karzai was shot twice by his family friend and long-time head of security, Sardar Mohammad, on Tuesday. The bodyguard was himself killed almost immediately.

The Taliban said the attack was one of their top achievements in 10 years of war. However, correspondents say the bodyguard's motives remain unclear and it seems unlikely that someone so close to the Karzai family was working for the insurgents.

Ahmad Wali Karzai was seen by many as a key anti-Taliban figure, someone who stood up to them, using his private army and vast network to fight the insurgents, our correspondent says.

But he adds that his critics accused him of undermining the central government in Kabul.

On Wednesday, President Karzai wept at the graveside, and kissed his dead half-brother's face as senior politicians looked on.

The president then appealed to the militants to stop the bloodshed.

"My message for the Taliban is, my countryman, my brother, stop killing your own people," said Mr Karzai. "It's easy to kill and everyone can do it, but the real man is the one who can save people's lives."

Tuesday's killing was the latest and most high-profile in a series of assassinations of senior politicians and security commanders across the country.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Israeli warplanes attack Rafah

Title: Israeli warplanes attack Rafah

TheUnhivedMind - July 14, 2011 03:29 AM (GMT)

Israeli warplanes attack Rafah

Wed Jul 13, 2011 9:14PM
http://www.presstv.ir/detail/188987.html

Israeli warplanes have once again launched a strike against the tunnels area in Rafah in the southern part of the Gaza Strip.

The attack took place late on Wednesday after a similar strike happened in the early hours of the day, a Press TV correspondent in Gaza reported.

Israeli fighter jets frequently bomb the tunnel network in Gaza, claiming that Palestinian resistance fighters use the tunnels to store and smuggle in weapons.

Palestinians, however, dismiss such allegations, insisting that they are forced to resort to the underground tunnels to bring in basic living supplies to the impoverished Gazans because the territory has been sealed off to the outside world by an Israeli blockade for over three years.

Some 1.5 million people are being denied their basic rights, including the freedom of movement and appropriate living conditions, in the coastal sliver.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Jordan: Egypt to fix pipeline in 10 days

Title: Jordan: Egypt to fix pipeline in 10 days

TheUnhivedMind - July 14, 2011 03:28 AM (GMT)

Jordan: Egypt to fix pipeline in 10 days

Wed Jul 13, 2011 9:27PM
http://www.presstv.ir/detail/188988.html

This file photo dated April 27 shows a previous bomb attack on the Egyptian pipeline in the northern Sinai Peninsula.

Egypt will repair its damaged gas pipeline in the Sinai Peninsula within seven to 10 days, Jordanian Energy Minister Khalid Tuqan says.

In an interview with the country's Petra news agency on Wednesday, Tuqan said the Egyptian side "is expected to fix the pipeline within seven to 10 days before resuming supplies to Jordan."

The gas pipeline, which was pumping natural gas to Israel and Jordan, was damaged in a bomb blast in the city of El Arish on Tuesday.

The explosion was the fourth such assault on the pipeline since an uprising toppled former Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak's regime on February 11.

The Jordanian minister also said his country currently has 245,000 tones of heavy oil and diesel, which are enough to cover the needs for 65 days if the gas supplies do not resume.

Jordan imports about 240 million cubic feet (6.8 million cubic meters) of Egyptian gas per day.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Over a Fifth of Navy Ships Aren't Ready to Fight

Title: Over a Fifth of Navy Ships Aren't Ready to Fight

TheUnhivedMind - July 14, 2011 03:26 AM (GMT)

Over a Fifth of Navy Ships Aren't Ready to Fight

By Spencer Ackerman July 13, 2011 http://www.wired.com/dangerroom/2011/07/ov...Top+Stories+2))

More than a fifth of the Navy isn't ready to sail or fight, at a time when demand on the fleet is off the charts. And the number of unready ships is likely to rise as Navy officers try to fix their chronic readiness woes.

According to statistics released by Rep. Randy Forbes, the Virginia Republican who chairs the House Armed Services Readiness Subcommittee, 22 percent of Navy ships didn't pass their inspections in 2011. In 2007, just 8 percent of ships were rated as carrying junk equipment or insufficient spare parts. And more than half the Navy's deployed aircraft — the F/A-18 Hornets, the jamming EA-18G Growlers, the P-3C Orion surveillance plane — aren't ready for combat.

The Navy's surface fleet goes into the water banged up. Its aircraft carriers, frigates, destroyers spend nearly 40 percent of their deployment time with "at least one major equipment or systems failure," according to a chart Forbes released at a hearing on Tuesday. That can include "anti-air defenses, radar, satellite communications, or engines." Let's not forget that even the new ships are disintegrating.

And the demand on the Navy is huge. Consider the last year at sea. U.S. Navy ships and aircraft performed support missions for Iraq and Afghanistan. They helped with disaster relief after Pakistani floods and a Japanese tsunami/earthquake. They fought Somali pirates and spearheaded an ongoing war in Libya.

At Forbes' hearing, two senior Navy officers, Vice Adm. William Burke and Vice Adm.

Kevin McCoy, signaled that the readiness problem's going to get worse before it gets better. As engineers perform more detailed inspections — the admirals' solution to the problem — they'll probably expose even deeper maintenance woes. And ship maintenance "came up short" in the current defense budget, Burke said, with $5 billion devoted to patching up the fleet.

Philip Ewing of DoD Buzz contends that today's Navy is paying the bill for short-sighted Pentagon decisions in the late '90s and early 2000s. As someone who documented "systemic, service-wide problems with preventive maintenance" at emerged at the end of the last decade, Ewing writes that the Navy cut back on maintenance crews, used computer programs instead of skilled chiefs for maintenance instruction, and "simple budget cuts meant ships didn't get the regular maintenance or spare parts they needed."

Now consider that the Navy's facing down three big trends. The Obama administration's $400 billion, 12-year defense budget cut means it has to juggle priorities if it wants to get its ships and planes ready to fight. (Bye-bye, super lasers.) The Pentagon sees the U.S.' most likely security showdowns occurring at sea and in the air, especially in the western Pacific — the Navy's wheelhouse. Finally, unless the Navy goes on a shipbuilding surge in the next decade, the fleet might shrink by about 70 ships as the Reagan-era subs and combatants meet the end of their service life in the 2020s.

The Navy, in other words, is staring down an era of doing more with less. And the decks it's looking out from appear increasingly creaky and junked.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Officials: NATO Kills 16 Civilians in Afghan Air

Title: Officials: NATO Kills 16 Civilians in Afghan Air
Description: Strike

TheUnhivedMind - July 14, 2011 03:07 AM (GMT)

Officials: NATO Kills 16 Civilians in Afghan Air Strike

NATO Confirms Strike But Not Deaths

by Jason Ditz, July 12, 2011
http://news.antiwar.com/2011/07/12/officia...han-air-strike/

The latest in a growing number of such incidents, Afghan officials today confirmed that NATO air strikes in the Logar Province killed some 16 civlians. NATO confirmed the strikes but provided no indication of civilian deaths.

The story is remarkably similar to those in the past, with NATO's official story reporting that "numerous" insurgents were slain in an air strike in a remote district with only nominal government control. Shortly thereafter, the bodies of the women and children dug from the rubble began to turn up.

The local MP claimed that four Taliban had also been killed in the strike, while provincial officials put that number at seven. The attacks apparently targeted a meeting at a house but also destroyed a neighboring house.

The attack is the deadliest civilian killings in the nation in weeks, and comes just days after a strike in Khost Province killed 14 civilians. The US has dramatically escalated the number of air strikes since the ouster of Gen. Stanley McChrystal last year, and civilian deaths have seen a commensorate rise.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Why the US won't leave Afghanistan

Title: Why the US won't leave Afghanistan

TheUnhivedMind - July 14, 2011 03:06 AM (GMT)

Why the US won't leave Afghanistan

Surge, bribe and run? Or surge, bribe and stay? How US military bases and the energy war play out in Afghanistan.

Pepe Escobar Last Modified: 12 Jul 2011 10:03
http://english.aljazeera.net/indepth/opini...1720939655.html

Among multiple layers of deception and newspeak, the official Washington spin on the strategic quagmire in Afghanistan simply does not hold.

No more than "50-75 'al-Qaeda types' in Afghanistan", according to the CIA, have been responsible for draining the US government by no less than US $10 billion a month, or $120 billion a year.

At the same time, outgoing US Defense Secretary Robert Gates has been adamant that withdrawing troops from Afghanistan is "premature". The Pentagon wants the White House to "hold off on ending the Afghanistan troop surge until the fall of 2012."

That of course shadows the fact that even if there were a full draw down, the final result would be the same number of US troops before the Obama administration-ordered AfPak surge.

And even if there is some sort of draw down, it will mostly impact troops in supporting roles - which can be easily replaced by "private contractors" (euphemism for mercenaries). There are already over 100,000 "private contractors" in Afghanistan.

It's raining trillions

A recent, detailed study by the Eisenhower Research Project at Brown University revealed that the war on terror has cost the US economy, so far, from $3.7 trillion (the most conservative estimate) to $4.4 trillion (the moderate estimate). Then there are interest payments on these costs - another $1 trillion.

That makes the total cost of the war on terror to be, at least, a staggering $5.4 trillion. And that does not include, as the report mentions, "additional macroeconomic consequences of war spending", or a promised (and undelivered) $5.3 billion reconstruction aid for Afghanistan.

Who's profiting from this bonanza? That's easy - US military contractors and a global banking/financial elite.

The notion that the US government would spend $10 billion a month just to chase a few "al-Qaeda types" in the Hindu Kush is nonsense.

The Pentagon itself has dismissed the notion - insisting that just capturing and killing Osama bin Laden does not change the equation; the Taliban are still a threat.

In numerous occasions Taliban leader Mullah Omar himself has characterised his struggle as a "nationalist movement". Apart from the historical record showing that Washington always fears and fights nationalist movements, Omar's comment also shows that the Taliban strategy has nothing to do with al-Qaeda's aim of establishing a Caliphate via global jihad.

So al-Qaeda is not the major enemy - not anymore, nor has it been for quite some time now. This is a war between a superpower and a fierce, nationalist, predominantly Pashtun movement - of which the Taliban are a major strand; regardless of their medieval ways, they are fighting a foreign occupation and doing what they can to undermine a puppet regime (Hamid Karzai's).

Look at my bankruptcy model

In the famous November 1, 2004 video that played a crucial part in assuring the reelection of George W. Bush, Osama bin Laden - or a clone of Osama bin Laden - once again expanded on how the "mujahedeen bled Russia for 10 years until it went bankrupt and was forced to withdraw in defeat."

That's the exact same strategy al-Qaeda has deployed against the US; according to Bin Laden at the time, "all that we have to do is to send two mujahedeen to the farthest point East to raise a piece of cloth on which is written al-Qaeda in order to make the generals race there to cause America to suffer human, economic, and political losses without their achieving for it anything of note, other than some benefits to their private companies."

The record since 9/11 shows that's exactly what's happening. The war on terror has totally depleted the US treasury - to the point that the White House and Congress are now immersed in a titanic battle over a $4 trillion debt ceiling.

What is never mentioned is that these trillions of dollars were ruthlessly subtracted from the wellbeing of average Americans - smashing the carefully constructed myth of the American dream.

So what's the endgame for these trillions of dollars?

The Pentagon's Full Spectrum Dominance doctrine implies a global network of military bases - with particular importance to those surrounding, bordering and keeping in check key competitors Russia and China.

This superpower projection - of which Afghanistan was, and remains, a key node, in the intersection of South and Central Asia - led, and may still lead, to other wars in Iraq, Iran and Syria.

The network of US military bases in the Pentagon-coined "arc of instability" that stretches from the Mediterranean to the Persian Gulf and South/Central Asia is a key reason for remaining in Afghanistan forever.

But it's not the only reason.

Surge, bribe and stay

It all comes back, once again, to Pipelineistan - and one of its outstanding chimeras; the Turkmenistan/Afghanistan/Pakistan (TAP) gas pipeline, also known once as the Trans-Afghan Pipeline, which might one day become TAPI if India decides to be on board.

The US corporate media simply refuses to cover what is one of the most important stories of the early 21st century.

Washington has badly wanted TAP since the mid-1990s, when the Clinton administration was negotiating with the Taliban; the talks broke down because of transit fees, even before 9/11, when the Bush administration decided to change the rhetoric from "a carpet of gold" to "a carpet of bombs".

TAP is a classic Pipelineistan gambit; the US supporting the flow of gas from Central Asia to global markets, bypassing both Iran and Russia. If it ever gets built, it will cost over $10 billion.

It needs a totally pacified Afghanistan - still another chimera - and a Pakistani government totally implicated in Afghanistan's security, still a no-no as long as Islamabad's policy is to have Afghanistan as its "strategic depth", a vassal state, in a long-term confrontation mindset against India.

It's no surprise the Pentagon and the Pakistani Army enjoy such a close working relationship. Both Washington and Islamabad regard Pashtun nationalism as an existential threat.

The 2,500-kilometer-long, porous, disputed border with Afghanistan is at the core of Pakistan's interference in its neighbour's affairs.

Washington is getting desperate because it knows the Pakistani military will always support the Taliban as much as they support hardcore Islamist groups fighting India. Washington also knows Pakistan's Afghan policy implies containing India's influence in Afghanistan at all costs.

Just ask General Ashfaq Parvez Kayani, Pakistan's army chief - and a Pentagon darling to boot; he always says his army is India-centric, and, therefore, entitled to "strategic depth" in Afghanistan.

It's mind-boggling that 10 years and $5.4 trillion dollars later, the situation is exactly the same. Washington still badly wants "its" pipeline - which will in fact be a winning game mostly for commodity traders, global finance majors and Western energy giants.

From the standpoint of these elites, the ideal endgame scenario is global Robocop NATO - helped by hundreds of thousands of mercenaries - "protecting" TAP (or TAPI) while taking a 24/7 peek on what's going on in neighbours Russia and China.

Sharp wits in India have described Washington's tortuous moves in Afghanistan as "surge, bribe and run". It's rather "surge, bribe and stay". This whole saga might have been accomplished without a superpower bankrupting itself, and without immense, atrocious, sustained loss of life, but hey - nobody's perfect.

Pepe Escobar is the roving correspondent for the Asia Times. His latest book is Obama Does Globalistan (Nimble Books, 2009). He may be reached at pepeasia@yahoo.com.

The views expressed in this article are the author's own and do not necessarily represent Al Jazeera's editorial policy.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Russia's Medvedev urges army to import weapons

Title: Russia's Medvedev urges army to import weapons

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 06:47 PM (GMT)

Russia's Medvedev urges army to import weapons

* Russia's defence industry has stagnated in recent years
* Moscow is world's second biggest arms exporter

By Alexei Anishchuk
Tue Jul 12, 2011 2:18pm EDT
http://www.reuters.com/article/2011/07/12/...E76B1FI20110712

GORKI, Russia, July 12 (Reuters) - President Dmitry Medvedev, leader of the world's second largest arms exporter, urged the Russian military on Tuesday to buy weapons from abroad in order to ensure its forces are properly armed.

The comments highlight increasing concern over Russia's decrepit arms industry and raise doubts that Moscow can complete an ambitious military modernisation programme.

"You shouldn't buy junk," Medvedev told Defence Minister Anatoly Serdyukov and Deputy Prime Minister Sergei Ivanov, who oversees the defence sector for the government, at his residence just outside of Moscow.

"If they (domestic arms makers) offer equipment which does not satisfy you, place your orders with other firms, or, ultimately, import them," Medvedev said.

Russia signed an agreement last month to buy two Mistral class helicopter carriers from France in a 1.2 billion euro ($1.72 billion) deal, the first major foreign arms purchase in the two decades since the fall of the Soviet Union.

Serdyukov was due to present the findings of a probe into arms contract failures after a top weapons designer said this year's contracts were doomed to fall short of targets .

Russia's once - proud defence industry that armed Soviet satellites and allies during the Cold War has stagnated due to lack of financing and corruption.

"I think Russia's defence industry doesn't have much of a future strategically. There are pockets of excellence or competance that will survive, but in general there is no energy there to sustain any steady growth or development," defence expert Pavel Podvig said .

Prime Minister Vladimir Putin has promised to spend nearly 20 trillion roubles to rearm Russia's army, suffering from years of lack of investment, low morale and outdated equipment.

Serdyukov said poor quality and overpricing of domestic arms were among the obstacles stopping the ministry from buying a remaining 230 billion roubles ($8.21 billion) worth of weapons out of a planned 750 billion in expenditures this year.

A top weapons designer said last week that procurement failures were due to a lack of cooperation with the Defence Ministry. Analysts say the row stems from unaccountable price rises for key armaments, which the ministry refuses to approve.

"You need to buy quality equipment at transparent prices, and not those put forward by certain companies," Medvedev said.

Medvedev has repeatedly warned Russia's notoriously corrupt defence sector to clean up its act and this year sacked several industry chiefs over what the Kremlin said were unfulfilled contracts. . (Writing by Thomas Grove; Editing by Diana Abdallah) ($1=28.02 Rouble) ($1=.6991 Euro) ($1=28.02 Rouble)

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: Lavrov: Missile defense remains the biggest Title: Lavrov: Missile defense remains the biggest Description: irritant in US-Russian relations

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 06:46 PM (GMT)

Lavrov: Missile defense remains the biggest irritant in US-Russian relations

By Associated Press, Published: July 12
http://www.washingtonpost.com/national/nat...JlAI_story.html

WASHINGTON — Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov says that missile defense remains the biggest irritant in Russian-American relations.

At an event at the Russian Embassy in Washington on Tuesday, Lavrov said that Russian military planners fear the Obama administration's European missile defense plans could undermine Russian security.

Lavrov said that missile defense will be the top issue in talks with Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton on Wednesday. He also expected to discuss Russia's bid to join the World Trade Organization. Lavrov said that progress had been made but he expressed some frustration that the process had taken so long.

He said: "We are nearing a moment of truth and it would be very unfortunate if the truth would be negative."

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: China rejects Manila offer to bring dispute to UN

Title: China rejects Manila offer to bring dispute to UN

TheUnhivedMind - July 13, 2011 06:45 PM (GMT)

China rejects Manila offer to bring dispute to UN

Jul 13 2011
http://www.google.com/hostednews/ap/articl...746200cdfa8b9b9

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The Philippines' top diplomat has criticized China's rejection of Manila's offer to bring their South China Sea territorial disputes to a U.N. tribunal.

Foreign Secretary Albert del Rosario said Wednesday that such a position will prevent Beijing from proving its South China Sea claim on the basis of internationally accepted law.

On Tuesday, China rejected a Philippine proposal to bring their dispute over the potentially oil-rich Spratly Islands to the International Tribunal on the Law of the Sea. It reiterated its long-held position to solve its disputes through bilateral negotiations with Manila and four other claimants.

The Spratlys are claimed in their entirety or partly by China, Taiwan, Malaysia, the Philippines, Vietnam and Brunei.

Hosted for free by InvisionFree

View Full Version: THE NORTH KOREA MAY 2009 INCIDENT ROOM!

Title: THE NORTH KOREA MAY 2009 INCIDENT ROOM!
Description: [NUCLEAR STRIKES ON NK? DEFCON 2?]

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 02:54 AM (GMT)

N Korea faces new UN resolution

North Korea's leader is notoriously unpredictable, correspondents say

Tuesday, 26 May 2009 02:10 UKE-mail this to a friend Printable version
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/world/asia-pacific/8067438.stm

The UN Security Council has agreed to begin work immediately on a new resolution on North Korea after its nuclear test, its chairman said.

Members voiced strong opposition to the test and condemned it, Russia's UN envoy, Vitaly Churkin, said after an emergency meeting of the Council.

North Korea announced the underground test as part of work to bolster what it called its nuclear deterrent.

The US ambassador to the UN said America wanted "strong measures".

Susan Rice said she expected the Security Council to start working on the resolution on Tuesday.

Churkin said the Security Council had agreed to begin work on a new resolution

"The US thinks that this is a grave violation of international law and a threat to regional and international peace and security," she said, speaking after Mr Churkin in New York.

"And therefore the United States will seek a strong resolution with strong measures."

More missile tests

North Korea had been warning for weeks that it would strengthen its "deterrent" and walked away from long-running negotiations on its nuclear programme after the US pressed it over the verification of previous agreements.

See map of test site

The blast, which was estimated by international seismologists to have the power of a 4.5 earthquake, appears to have been much more powerful than North Korea's first nuclear test, in October 2006.

Defence officials in neighbouring Russia say it was an explosion of up to 20 kilotons, making it comparable to the American bombs that flattened Hiroshima and Nagasaki in 1945.

Meanwhile, a South Korean report warned that the North was ready to fire another short-range missile off its west coast.

"North Korea declared a ban for ships in the sea off its South Pyongan province between the 25th to 27th [of May]. It looks like it will fire a short-range missile between today and tomorrow," Yonhap news agency quoted an unnamed South Korean official as saying.

Seoul has said it will join the Proliferation Security Initiative, a US-led body launched in 2003 which aims to prevent the spread of nuclear and chemical weapons.

Hitherto, South Korea has only been an observer.

Difficult task

Russia's UN envoy told reporters the nuclear test was a clear violation of UN Resolution 1718. That resolution imposed sanctions on North Korea after its first test.

"The members of the Security Council voiced their strong opposition to, and condemnation of, the nuclear test conducted by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea on May 25 2009, which constitutes a clear violation of resolution 1718," Mr Churkin said.

"The members of the Security Council demand that the DPRK [North Korea] comply fully with its obligations under resolutions 1695 and 1718, and other related Security Council resolutions and statements, and calls upon all member-states to uphold their obligations under these resolutions and statements.

"The members of the Security Council have decided to start work immediately on a Security Council resolution on this matter, in accordance with the Security Council's responsibilities under the Charter of the United Nations."

'Pre-emptive attack'

The UK's Ambassador to the UN, Sir John Sawers, explained that the Council had decided to act in two stages, first issuing a statement "strongly condemning and opposing what the North Koreans have done by carrying out this second nuclear test".

"And we decided to start work immediately on a further Security Council resolution in order to uphold the international peace and security in the region," he added.

But in a strongly-worded statement on Tuesday, North Korea said it was fully prepared for any "pre-emptive" attack by the United States.

"It is clear that nothing has changed in the US hostile policy against DPRK [North Korea]... even under the new US administration," the North's KCNA news agency said in an article criticising recent US moves to relocate its fighter jets.

"Our army and people are fully ready for battle... against any reckless US attempt for a pre-emptive attack."

The international community faces a difficult task, confronting what many view as a dangerously unpredictable regime, BBC world affairs correspondent David Loyn reports.

After the worst harvest for a decade, the World Food Programme says a quarter of the population of North Korea needs food aid.

To divert attention, the government has abruptly broken off talks, test-firing both long- and short-range missiles and then carrying out the underground test, a major escalation, our correspondent says.

It could be that this change of mind is part of an internal power struggle as hardliners seek to provoke the world to justify their own repressive rule, he adds.

'Self-defensive'

An official communique read out on North Korean state radio said another round of underground nuclear testing had been "successfully conducted... as part of measures to enhance the Republic's self-defensive nuclear deterrent in all directions".

Monitors detected the test at a depth of 10km (six miles), at 0954 (0054 GMT) on Monday.

The North did not report the test site but South Korean officials placed it in the north-eastern region around the town of Kilju, the site of North Korea's first nuclear test.

South Korean Defence Minister Lee Sang-hee said the North had also launched two short-range missiles, one at 1208 (0308 GMT), and one at 1703 (0803 GMT).

US President Barack Obama said North Korea was "not only deepening its own isolation it's also inviting stronger international pressure".

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 03:18 AM (GMT)

Report: North Korea test-fires short-range missile

May 25 12:07 AM US/Eastern http://www.breitbart.com/article.php?id=D9...&show_article=1

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) - A South Korean news agency has reported that North Korea test-fired a short-range missile.

The Yonhap news agency report Monday comes just hours after the communist nation declared that it successfully conducted a nuclear test.

Yonhap said North Korea fired a ground-to-air missile with a range of 80 miles (130 kilometers) from its northeastern Musudan-ri launch site. The regime also launched a long-range rocket from that site on April 5.

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 03:42 AM (GMT)

Exactly as Biden Predicted: Obama faces major crisis within first 6 months of Presidency

Monday, May 25, 2009
http://turnerradionetwork.blogspot.com/200...bama-faces.html

North Korea has detonated a nuclear bomb in an underground test according to that government. The test was not announced and comes after the North threatened to restart their rogue nuclear program.

This is the "test" that Joe Biden warned would happen within 6 months of an Obama Presidency. How convenient. Yes, folks, think back to October 19, 2008, just before the US election. Joe Biden told ABC News:

"ABC News' Matthew Jaffe Reports: Sen. Joe Biden, D-Del., on Sunday guaranteed that if elected, Sen. Barack Obama., D-Ill., will be tested by an international crisis within his first six months in power and he will need supporters to stand by him as he makes tough, and possibly unpopular, decisions.

"Mark my words," the Democratic vice presidential nominee warned at the second of his two Seattle fundraisers Sunday. "It will not be six months before the world tests Barack Obama like they did John Kennedy. The world is looking. We're about to elect a brilliant 47-year-old senator president of the United States of America. Remember I said it standing here if you don't remember anything else I said. Watch, we're gonna have an international crisis, a generated crisis, to test the mettle of this guy."

Here we are, less than 6 months into an Obama Presidency and. . . . . major crisis erupts. How convenient.

The US economy is still going bust. Bankers are stealing literally TRILLIONS of dollars and getting away with it. The public is becoming so furious that there is now open talk of real Revolution in the USA and. . . . out of nowhere. . . . North Korea pulls a stunt like this. Perfect timing to take the world's attention away from what's going on at home.

Watch, folks. Here comes a re-start of the Korean War and I suspect you will see the USA launch nuclear cruise missiles at North Korea to take them out fast, hard and permanently.

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 04:02 AM (GMT)

NKorea informed US of nuclear test: official

by Staff Writers
Washington (AFP) May 25, 2009

North Korea informed the United States of its nuclear test less than an hour before the widely condemned explosion, a US official confirmed Monday.

A senior administration official said on condition of anonymity that the North informed the US State Department of "its intention to conduct a nuclear test, without citing a specific timing."

The official did not say how Pyongyang informed Washington, but communication between the two countries -- which do not have diplomatic ties -- is generally conducted through their UN missions in New York.

North Korea's notice reached the State Department between 8:00 and 9:00 pm Sunday (0000 and 0100 GMT Monday), the official said. According to the US Geological Survey, a 4.7-magnitude tremor shook North Korea at 0054 GMT.

The official said Obama was informed of the seismic observation in North Korea at 11:15 pm (0315 GMT) and was on the telephone 45 minutes later with his national security adviser, Jim Jones, a retired general.

A South Korean official had earlier said the North had given prior notice of its nuclear test both to the United States and China, Pyongyang's main ally.

North Korea also gave prior notice last month of its defiant long-range missile launch in May.

Some analysts say the advance notice shows that forces in North Korea are determined to carry out the tests and hope to lessen the country's international opprobrium.

Full confirmation of NKorea blast will take time: scientists Confirmation that North Korea has carried out a full-throated nuclear blast - as opposed to a fizzler or a conventional explosion designed to fool its enemies - could take a number of days, say scientists.

Verification experts have a panoply of techniques to determine when and where underground detonations take place and how big they are.

But only one - detection of nuclear particles or rare gases vented into the atmosphere from deep beneath the ground - can "unambiguously" show a blast is nuclear in origin, says Vertic, an independent non-governmental organisation in London.

Confirmation of North Korea's second claimed nuclear test will depend on the weather for blowing such evidence towards monitoring stations, the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty Organisation (CTBTO) said in Vienna on Monday.

"It would take at least two days for closest stations to be reached, and the farther we go, the more time it takes," said CTBTO chief Tibor Toth.

The monitors' frontline tool is the seismological sensor, of the kind that also listens out for earthquakes.

The sensitivity of these instruments, and their expanding network around the world, has vastly improved surveillance over the past two decades.

Even so, the technology has flaws and this was demonstrated by North Korea's first nuclear test on October 9, 2006.

Writing in the journal Nature Physics in 2007, Paul Richards and Won-Young Kim of the Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory at New York's Columbia University reported how a seismic "event" was swiftly picked up by a station at Mudanjiang, northern China, 370 kilometres (230 miles) north of North Korea's test site.

Within five hours, other stations gave an excellent fix as to location and depth and estimated the "event" as a low 4.0 magnitude on the seismic scale.

But this was the easy part, said Richards and Kim: "Identifying the event as an explosion, not an earthquake - and as a nuclear explosion - was more difficult."

A signature from a typical 4.0-magnitude earthquake begins with a rumble of waves that amplifies into a thick squiggle on the seismogram, followed by another packet of waves that then tails away.

The North Korean signal, though, comprised two sharp, early bursts that swiftly faded to an angry buzz, and this showed it was man-made.

"When they are of comparable magnitude, an explosion has a more condensed signal than an earthquake," explained Bruno Seignier of France's Atomic Energy Commission (CEA).

"In an explosion, energy is released in an extremely violent fashion, signaled by a release in higher frequencies."

After determining that a bomb was indeed the cause, the scientists next had to estimate its yield and what kind of device made the blast.

On the first score, the estimates were at first wide-ranging, possibly confused by sensors' distance from the blast and the amplitude of signals carried through Earth's crust.

The 2006 blast was initially estimated by Russia at the equivalent of between 5,000 and 15,000 tonnes of TNT.

That would have potentially have put it in the same range as "Little Boy," the US atomic bomb that destroyed Hiroshima in August 1945, which was around 12.5 kilotonnes.

But other experts swiftly downgraded the test to a kilotonne or even less.

Monday's blast, measured at around 4.5 magnitude, was estimated by Russia at around 10 and 20 kilotonnes, but the CTBTO put it "in the low kilotonne range for this particular magnitude."

As for the type of bomb, seismograms may give little help at very low blast levels.

In fact, the seismic signature in 2006 "remarkably" mirrored that of a blast by 2,000 tonnes of conventional explosive, said Richards and Kim.

Confusion was such that experts speculated for several days that Pyongyang had simply detonated a huge pile of TNT to con the world into believing it had joined the nuclear club.

What weighed against this argument was that North Korea would have had to dig a big tunnel and truck in huge amounts of explosives, which would have been spotted by spy satellites.

The speculation was laid to rest several days later when radionuclide sensors proved the blast was nuclear.

But this evidence failed to still debate, continuing to this day, that the bomb may have been a dud - a big device that fizzled out after failing to achieve a sustained nuclear reaction.

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 04:04 AM (GMT)

Obama Pressed To Take Action As Fury Unites Security Council

by Staff Writers
Washington (AFP) May 25, 2009

North Korea's nuclear test put US President Barack Obama under pressure Monday to drop his push for direct diplomacy and instead seek tougher international action against the defiant Stalinist state.

The Obama team has suggested recent North Korean provocations amount to a bargaining ploy, but former Bush administration hardliner John Bolton and North Korea analyst Jim Walsh offer different, more ominous readings.

Obama himself is now hinting at a tougher stance than simply seeking the restart of six-party nuclear disarmament talks with North Korea.

"The United States and the international community must take action in response," the president said in hastily arranged remarks at the White House ahead of a Memorial Day ceremony for war dead.

Pyongyang's recent "reckless" actions, including an April 5 ballistic missile test, have defied UN resolutions, the Obama said. "As a result, North Korea is deepening its own isolation and inviting stronger international pressure."

In addition to the underground nuclear test, short-range missiles were reportedly launched on Monday.

US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton began telephone consultations on Monday with Washington's partners in the so-called six-party process in order to chart a course of action, a State Department spokesman said.

The UN Security Council was due to meet later Monday to take up the matter.

In the six-party talks involving the United States, China, Japan, South Korea and Russia, North Korea agreed in 2007 to scrap its nuclear programs for energy aid.

But the negotiations lapsed late last year over a dispute about disarmament verification steps, and after the United Nations tightened sanctions following the April missile launch the North vowed to conduct a second nuclear blast and more missile tests unless the world body apologized.

Bolton, a former US ambassador to the United Nations under president George W. Bush, said Obama's emphasis on diplomacy rather than confrontation with Pyongyang gave North Korea the excuse it needed to carry out the new nuclear test.

"This is a moment of truth for this administration," Bolton told AFP.

"They put all of their faith in the six-party talks. The North Koreans have thumbed their nose at the administration and now we have to see what kind of stuff they (the new administration) are made of," Bolton said.

He urged Obama's team to first put North Korea back on the list of state sponsors of terrorism following its removal in the waning months of the Bush administration.

Bolton also urged the UN Security Council to expel Pyongyang from the world body as a "persistent violator" of UN resolutions.

Ultimately, Bolton said, North Korea wants nuclear weapons because it is motivated by the desire to preserve its isolated dictatorship, adding it has no interest in nuclear diplomacy.

Walsh, an analyst at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, also questioned a standard view that North Korea was taking a hard line to win concessions in negotiations such as direct talks with the United States.

The Obama administration is open to such talks, but has been rebuffed so far by the communist regime.

The incident may have "nothing to do with bargaining," Walsh said on CNN.

It may reflect "internal dynamics... as it begins to grapple with the issue of succession and leadership change" following reports that leader Kim Jong-il suffered a stroke last August.

"If that's what is going on, we're in for more of this for quite some time," he said.

Another analyst, Bruze Klingner of the conservative Heritage Foundation, called on Obama to put more pressure on China, North Korea's closest ally, to back tough sanctions.

"Washington should cease the charade of praising Beijing's behavior in the six-party talks and instead criticize its obstructionism to carrying out the will of the international community as expressed in two UN resolutions," Klingner said.

Victor Cha, at the Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS), said North Korea may want to pursue negotiations in order to achieve the status as a nuclear weapons state in which it can keep "a residual nuclear deterrent" as part of an eventual deal with the international community.

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 04:06 AM (GMT)

China voices 'resolute opposition' to NKorean nuclear test: govt

by Staff Writers
Beijing (AFP) May 25, 2009

China on Monday voiced its "resolute opposition" to North Korea's nuclear test and urged its ally to cease actions that could further aggravate tensions over its atomic programme.

"Disregarding the common objections of the international community, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea has again tested a nuclear device," the foreign ministry said, referring to North Korea by its official name.

"The Chinese government expresses its resolute opposition to this," said the statement posted on the ministry's website.

North Korea announced Monday that it had carried out a second nuclear bomb test. Pyongyang staged its first one in 2006.

"China strongly demands that North Korea keep its promise of denuclearisation and cease all actions that could further worsen the situation," the foreign ministry also said.

It urged North Korea to return to six-nation talks aimed at dismantling its nuclear programme, held on and off since 2003.

"Maintaining peace and stability on the Korean peninsula conforms with the interests of all parties involved," the statement said.

"The Chinese government calls on all parties involved to respond in a calm and appropriate manner and persist in solving the problems through consultations and dialogue."

It added that "China will continue its efforts to this end unremittingly."

earlier related report
US calls for international action in response to NKorea
US President Barack Obama called North Korea's claimed nuclear and missile tests on Monday "a matter of grave concern" and urged international action against the isolated state.

"These actions, while not a surprise given its statements and actions to date, are a matter of grave concern to all nations," Obama said in a statement.

"North Korea's attempts to develop nuclear weapons, as well as its ballistic missile program, constitute a threat to international peace and security."

North Korea said it had carried out a nuclear test early Monday, despite international pressure to rein in its nuclear program after years of disarmament talks.

Obama said that "the danger posed by North Korea's threatening activities warrants action by the international community."

The communist state tested an atomic bomb for the first time in October 2006. It had threatened another test after the UN Security Council censured it following a long-range rocket launch in April.

The North Korean announcement came soon after the US Geological Survey reported a magnitude 4.7 seismic event in the proximity of the site of North Korea's first nuclear test.

It also coincided with the celebration in the United States of Memorial Day, which is dedicated to the memory of Americans who gave their lives in various conflicts, including the 1950-1953 Korean War.

South Korea's Yonhap news agency said the North also appears to have test-fired a short-range missile Monday from its launch site at Musudan-ri near Kilju. There was no immediate confirmation of that report.

The UN Security Council was to meet in emergency session on Monday to discuss North Korea.

Obama warned Pyongyang that its attempts to build a nuclear arsenal would only contribute to its further isolation.

"By acting in blatant defiance of the United Nations Security Council, North Korea is directly and recklessly challenging the international community," Obama said.

"North Korea's behavior increases tensions and undermines stability in Northeast Asia. Such provocations will only serve to deepen North Korea's isolation."

He said North Korea "will not find international acceptance unless it abandons its pursuit of weapons of mass destruction and their means of delivery."

A US State Department official said the United States has begun consultations with its allies about North Korea's claim and chart a course of action.

China, Japan, Russia, South Korea and the United States have been negotiating since 2003 to persuade the North to abandon nuclear weapons in exchange for energy and security guarantees.

The negotiations led to a 2007 agreement under which the North said it would dismantle its nuclear facilities. The deal bogged down last December over ways to verify the North's nuclear activities.

In April, the North outraged the international community with a long-range rocket launch, a move that many nations said was actually a ballistic missile test.

After the Security Council condemned the launch and tightened sanctions, the North vowed to conduct a second nuclear test as well as ballistic missile tests unless the world body apologized.

It also announced that it was quitting the six-way talks, which are hosted by its closest ally China, and would restart its plutonium-making programme.

However, Obama stressed that his administration will continue working with allies and partners in the six-party talks as well as other members of the UN Security Council to resolve the new nuclear crisis.

Meanwhile, The New York Times used Pyongyang's announcement to call for formal ratification by the United States and other nuclear powers of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty.

"A formal ban on testing would make it harder for nuclear-armed states to build new weapons, and place another hurdle in the way of any country -- Iran comes immediately to mind -- thinking of starting an arsenal," the newspaper said in an editorial.

"North Korea's announcement that it had tested a nuclear device on Monday is a stark reminder of the many dangers out there."

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 04:06 AM (GMT)

N Korean event near 2006 nuclear test site: UN-backed group

by Staff Writers
Vienna (AFP) May 25, 2009

The "event" North Korea says was a nuclear test Monday measured 4.5 on the Richter scale and was within a couple of kilometres of a previous test in October 2006, a UN-backed group said.

But the preparatory committee for the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty Organisation could not yet determine whether the event had "a nuclear background," the organisation's executive secretary, Tibor Toth, told a news briefing.

According to a network of monitoring stations set up by CTBTO -- called the International Monitoring System (IMS) -- "the event happened at 0054 GMT," Toth said.

CTBTO has some 340 facilities around the world as part of its verification regime to monitor any signs of nuclear explosions.

The data so far had indicated it was "very, very close to the 2006 event," he said. "We are locating the event a couple of kilometres away from the previous test site. The latitude is 41.289 North and the longitude is 129.048 East."

The event did not appear to be deep below the earth's surface.

"It's a very close-to-surface type of event. The magnitude of it is 4.5 on the Richter scale."

By comparison, the previous test in October 2006 had a magnitude of around 4.1, Toth said.

Asked what size of nuclear detonation would be needed to cause an event of that magnitude, Toth replied: "What we understand is, it's in the low kilo-tonne range, for this particular magnitude."

In all, 39 seismic stations around the world connected to the IMS had registered the event.

CTBTO was waiting for additional information on radionuclide noble gases to determine whether the event might be of nuclear origin and this would take more time because it depended on meteorological conditions, Toth said.

"It's dependent on how quickly noble gas stations are reached by any noble gas or radionuclide particles that may have been released," he said.

"It would take at least two days for closest stations to be reached and the farther we go, the more time it takes."

The radionuclide noble gas data were "relevant to identify whether an event has any nuclear origin or not, whether it has anything to do with the nuclear test explosions," he said.

It was not up to the CTBTO itself to judge whether an event was indeed of nuclear origin, but member states, Toth pointed out.

"What we are providing is the most up-to-date information" on which the member states could then make such a judgement.

Toth refused to speculate about Pyongyang's motivation for its latest move, but insisted it was "the wrong step in the wrong direction."

Earlier, Toth said the move "constitutes a threat to international peace and security and to the nuclear non-proliferation and disarmament regime" and should be "universally condemned".

"I am gravely concerned by this action ... (it) underlines the urgency of the entry into force of the CTBT and the necessity of putting an end to all nuclear explosions for all time."

The CTBT has been signed by 180 countries, but to come into effect it still needs ratification by nine key holdouts including China, North Korea, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Israel, Pakistan and the United States.

Earlier this year, US President Barack Obama said his administration "will immediately and aggressively pursue US ratification of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty" and supporters of the treaty, which was concluded in 1996, hope that will persuade other countries to follow suit.

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 04:07 AM (GMT)

NKorea, Myanmar loom large over Asia-Europe meet

by Staff Writers
Hanoi (AFP) May 25, 2009

Foreign ministers from Asia and Europe began two days of meetings Monday under the shadow of a North Korean nuclear test and the trial in Myanmar of opposition democracy leader Aung San Suu Kyi.

"The two hottest subjects on the agenda are these two problems," said Czech Foreign Minister Jan Kohout, whose country holds the rotating European Union (EU) presidency.

Both matters were expected to come up for discussion Monday evening when delegates to the ASEM (Asia-Europe) Foreign Ministers' Meeting held a working dinner, Japanese foreign ministry spokesman Kazuo Kodama told reporters.

"We need to condemn North Korea very strongly", said Alexander Stubb, the Finnish foreign affairs minister, calling the nuclear test provocative.

Ministers had just begun a series of bilateral meetings in Hanoi as news of North Korea's latest nuclear test emerged.

Japanese Foreign Minister Hirofumi Nakasone and his South Korean counterpart Yu Myung-Hwan, who met on the conference sidelines, agreed to work closely with the United States and China to forge a response to North Korea's test, Kodama told reporters.

"The foreign minister believes that this nuclear testing certainly will heighten the danger for security in Northeast Asia" and the entire world, he said.

British Junior Foreign Minister Bill Rammell called North Korea's announced nuclear test a "clear breach" of UN Security Council resolutions and urged the country to return to disarmament talks.

Japan's Kodama said there was "an emerging consensus" that the ASEM meeting, which placed the global financial crisis at the top of its agenda, should issue a separate statement on the North Korean issue.

Swedish Foreign Minister Carl Bild said the EU had asked for the issue to be mentioned in the ASEM communique while Indonesia's Foreign Minister Hassan Wirayuda said he understood ASEM would make a pronouncement on North Korea as either part of the general statement or perhaps separately.

On the Myanmar issue, a draft statement seen by AFP calls for Aung San Suu Kyi's release.

"In light of the concern about the recent development to Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, ministers... called for the early release of those under detention and the lifting of restriction placed on political parties," said the draft.

She faces up to five years in jail on charges of violating her house arrest after an incident in which an American man swam to her house.

During a meeting Monday with Myanmar Foreign Minister Nyan Win on the sidelines of the ASEM talks, the EU called for Aung San Suu Kyi's immediate release, the Czech foreign minister Kohout said.

In a rare move, the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) last week issued an expression of "grave concern" over the treatment of Aung San Suu Kyi.

Myanmar's Southeast Asian neighbours traditionally prefer not to be seen as intervening in the affairs of their members.

Myanmar belongs to both the 10-member ASEAN and ASEM, which also includes the European Union, China, South Korea, Japan, Mongolia, Pakistan and India.

In an opening address to the ASEM meeting, Vietnam's Prime Minister Nguyen Tan Dung said the world was dealing with not only a global financial crisis, but also climate change, the threat of pandemic disease, terrorism and other challenges.

"In this context we should coordinate our actions to overcome this difficult time," he said.

On Monday night ASEM inaugurated a Japanese-funded initiative, worth about 32 million dollars, to store medicines and protective gear in Asia to fight swine flu and other new strains of influenza.

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 04:08 AM (GMT)

NKorea test-fires three short-range missiles: military

by Staff Writers
Seoul (AFP) May 25, 2009

North Korea test-fired three short-range missiles on Monday, the same day it conducted an underground nuclear test, South Korea's military said.

"North Korea (test)fired a short-range missile from Musudan at around 12:00 pm (0300 GMT) and two more short-range missiles from Wonsan at around 5:00 pm," a spokesman for the Joint Chiefs of Staff told AFP.

He gave no more details.

Yonhap news agency quoted sources as saying the North fired three ground-to-air missiles with a range of 130 kilometres (81 miles).

Musudan-ri on the northeast coast is where the North fired a long-range Taepodong-2 rocket on April 5. Wonsan is a city on the southeast coast, where another missile base is located.

Yonhap quoted one official as saying the North may have been trying to deter US aerial surveillance efforts following the nuclear test.

Japan's coast guard said last week the communist state was warning ships not to pass through waters within a 130 kilometre radius of the town of Kimchaek on its northeast coast.

The North says its April 5 launch put a satellite into orbit but other nations said it staged a disguised missile test. The UN Security Council condemned the launch and tightened sanctions on Pyongyang firms.

In response the North threatened more nuclear and missile tests. It announced Monday it had conducted a second nuclear test, more powerful than the first in October 2006.

The test was conducted in the Kilju region not far from Musudan-ri.

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 04:09 AM (GMT)

NKorea announces 'successful' nuclear test, UN to meet

by Staff Writers
Seoul (AFP) May 25, 2009

North Korea on Monday tested a nuclear bomb many times more powerful than its first in 2006, angering enemies and allies alike and prompting UN Security Council members to call an emergency session.

The hardline communist state, which stunned the world with its first atomic bomb test in October 2006, made good on its threat to stage another test after the Security Council censured it for an April rocket launch.

The North "successfully conducted one more underground nuclear test on May 25 as part of the measures to bolster up its nuclear deterrent for self-defence in every way," the official Korean Central News Agency (KCNA) said.

"The current nuclear test was safely conducted on a new higher level in terms of its explosive power and technology," it said.

The foreign ministry in China, the North's most important ally, said it was "resolutely opposed" to the test.

"China strongly demands that North Korea keeps its promise of denuclearisation and ceases all actions that could further worsen the situation," it said a statement.

Russia's foreign ministry said the test threatened regional stability, violated the Security Council's will and impeded non-proliferation efforts.

China and Russia -- both part of a six-nation forum working to persuade the North to give up its nuclear programmes -- had in the past resisted efforts at the UN to punish the North harshly over its nuclear activities.

The force of Monday's blast was between 10 and 20 kilotons, according to Russia's defence ministry, vastly more than the estimated one-kiloton blast three years ago.

Japan's Meteorological Agency said that based on recorded seismic activity, the energy level of the test was four times bigger than the last one.

Baek Seung-Joo of the Korea Institute for Defence Analyses told AFP that if rough estimates by some private analysts are right, "the power of the second blast is comparable to the bombs which hit Hiroshima and Nagasaki."

The Security Council, which sanctioned the North for its previous test, planned to meet Monday afternoon in New York.

The North also test-fired three short-range missiles Monday, South Korea's military said.

"North Korea's attempts to develop nuclear weapons, as well as its ballistic missile programme, constitute a threat to international peace and security," US President Barack Obama said in a statement.

"The danger posed by North Korea's threatening activities warrants action by the international community.

"By acting in blatant defiance of the United Nations Security Council, North Korea is directly and recklessly challenging the international community," Obama said.

The North informed the United States and China in advance of the test, a South Korean official said on condition of anonymity.

South Korea, in mourning over the weekend suicide of former president Roh Moo-Hyun, called its neighbour's atomic test an "intolerable provocation" and a serious threat to regional peace.

It put its military on heightened alert.

Japan's Foreign Minister Hirofumi Nakasone, after meeting South Korean counterpart Yu Myung-Hwan in Hanoi, called the test "a challenge to the whole of the international community."

"We, as the only atomic-bombed nation, need to take stern action," he said.

Japan asked UN Security Council chair Russia to call an emergency meeting.

The KCNA report did not say where the nuclear test was conducted. South Korean officials said a tremor was detected around the northeastern town of Kilju, near where the first test was staged.

Japan, South Korea and the United States -- along with China and Russia -- have been negotiating since 2003 to persuade the North to abandon its nuclear programmes in exchange for energy aid and security guarantees.

In a 2007 pact the North agreed to dismantle its nuclear plants. The deal bogged down last December over ways to verify its declared nuclear activities.

In April the North fired a long-range rocket for what it called a satellite launch. Many nations saw it as a disguised ballistic missile test, while the Security Council condemned the launch and tightened sanctions.

A defiant North vowed to conduct a second nuclear test as well as more ballistic missile launches unless the world body apologised.

It also announced that it was quitting the six-way talks, which are hosted by China, and would restart its plutonium-making programme.

Analysts believe the North has currently stockpiled enough plutonium for six to 12 small nuclear bombs. The first test was seen as only partially successful.

KCNA said Monday's test had resolved "scientific and technological problems arising in further increasing the power of nuclear weapons and steadily developing nuclear technology."

North Korea has frequently said it needs a nuclear deterrent to prevent any attack. It said Monday's test would "contribute to defending the sovereignty of the country and the nation and socialism and ensuring peace and security on the Korean peninsula and the region."

The North has expressed disappointment at the Obama administration, calling it no better than its predecessor.

"The second test was earlier than expected and reflects the North's growing anger at Washington," said Kim Yong-Hyun of Seoul's Dongguk University.

"Or some internal problems may be forcing Pyongyang to take a strong attitude."

North Korean leader Kim Jong-Il, 67, was widely reported to have suffered a stroke last August, prompting speculation overseas about the succession. The North's position has noticeably hardened since then.

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 04:09 AM (GMT)

NKorea, land of hunger, made nukes priority

by Staff Writers
Seoul (AFP) May 25, 2009

North Korea, which said Monday it had tested both a nuclear device and a short-range missile, has defiantly pursued its atomic ambitions even though it is unable to feed its own people.

The country suffered famine for several years starting in 1995 which killed hundreds of thousands of people and left survivors subsisting on leaves, tree bark and whatever else they could find.

Floods, followed by drought and tidal waves, were partly responsible, but analysts mostly blame the collectivist agricultural system and inefficient distribution network.

In 2002 the regime introduced limited reforms to the centralised command economy, allowing some flexibility in state-set prices and granting incentives to workplaces and workers.

But in October 2005, apparently fearful of relaxing its grip, the regime banned private grain sales and announced a return to centralised food rationing.

Now again, following successive poor harvests, the World Food Programme (WFP) expects up to 40 percent of the population will urgently need food aid in the coming months.

Last September, the WFP made a worldwide appeal for up to 504 million dollars of food aid for North Korea, but so far only 11 percent of that has been received -- enough to feed about 1.8 million people.

Given this history of hardship in a nation of about 24 million, the regime's plans to test a nuclear weapon might not seem a likely priority.

But the North, with a half-century of unrelenting hostility to Washington, blames what it calls US threats to attack it and weaken it through sanctions for its need to have a nuclear deterrent.

North Korea staged a first atomic weapons test in October 2006.

Under a six-party agreement reached in February 2007 including the United States, the North made its nuclear disclosure and agreed to disable the ageing Yongbyon complex, the source of plutonium for nuclear weapons.

But after UN censure of the North's rocket launch on April 5, which the US and other nations said was a disguised ballistic missile test, Pyongyang said it was pulling out of the six-party deal and would resume plutonium production.

The regime's iron grip is being loosened to some extent by the smuggling of radios, DVD players and South Korean DVDs from China. This month, it launched a limited Internet service for mobile phone users.

But the regime still attempted to control all information and "subjected citizens to rigid controls over many aspects of their lives," according to a 2007 human rights report by the US State Department.

It noted continued reports of extrajudicial killings, disappearances and arbitrary detention, including of political prisoners.

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 04:10 AM (GMT)

Top US military officer says NKorea 'increasingly belligerent'

by Staff Writers
Washington (AFP) May 25, 2009

North Korea is "increasingly belligerent", the US top military officer, Admiral Mike Mullen, said Monday, adding there was no reason to disbelieve the Asian nation's claim it carried out a nuclear test.

"They grow increasingly belligerent," Mullen told CNN. "While it will take us a couple of days to verify this test, certainly there's no indication that it wasn't as they say.

"We weren't surprised because of recent statements by North Korean leadership they intend to do this," said Mullen, who is chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

North Korea on Monday said it tested a nuclear bomb many times more powerful than its first in 2006, prompting UN Security Council members to call an emergency session.

Mullen emphasized the role of diplomacy in resolving tensions on the Korean peninsula, but said recent developments were part of a pattern of worrying behavior.

"As you know, they also recently... unsuccessfully launched potentially an intercontinental ballistic missile," Mullen said.

"I believe they increasingly isolate themselves from the international community," he said, adding that reactions from Russia, China, South Korea and Japan would be vital.

"The countries involved in that are absolutely critical as we move forward to address this increasingly belligerent challenge from North Korea.

"Obviously we've got forces deployed to that part of the world, we have had for a significant period of time, we've got over 25,000 troops who are stationed in South Korea."

His comments follow a statement from US President Barack Obama who on Monday called North Korea's nuclear and missile tests "a matter of grave concern" and urged international action against the isolated state.

"These actions, while not a surprise given its statements and actions to date, are a matter of grave concern to all nations," Obama said in a statement.

Obama said that "the danger posed by North Korea's threatening activities warrants action by the international community."

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 04:11 AM (GMT)

SKorean press calls for all available carrots and sticks for NKorea

SEOUL, May 26 (AFP) May 26, 2009

A leading South Korean newspaper called Tuesday for all available "carrots and sticks" to be used on North Korea after the communist state conducted its second nuclear test.

JoongAng Ilbo urged President Barack Obama to renew the US commitment to providing a nuclear umbrella for South Korea when he meets President Lee Myung-Bak for a summit next month.

"With a second test carried out, the chances of the North abandoning nuclear weapons through persuasion have become slimmer than ever before," the conservative paper said.

"We have no choice but to rely on the US nuclear umbrella... (the government) must urge President Obama to reaffirm the US commitment to the provision of a nuclear umbrella at next month's summit."

The daily stressed, however, that efforts to disarm the North must not be ditched.

"All possible means to lead the North to give up its nuclear arsenal must be drawn up. Carrots and sticks that are applicable should be developed and stockpiled," its editorial said.

JoongAng urged the government to come up with "strong military steps" and take part in tough sanctions against the North. "At the same time, various options must be prepared to persuade the North if it returns to the dialogue table."

The independent Hankyoreh Daily said the second test added urgency to efforts to resume dialogue, adding the Obama administration is partly to blame.

"After deciding on a broad policy framework based on direct negotiations, the Obama administration was dragging its feet in working out concrete measures," Hankyoreh said.

The largest-circulation daily, Chosun Ilbo, said South Korea would soon face a North Korea armed with nuclear-tipped intercontinental ballistic missiles unless it is reined in.

Chosun said South Korea's hands are tied by international agreements such as the nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, the Missile Technology Control Regime and a US-South Korea memorandum that limits the range of Seoul's missiles.

"Now South Korea needs its own deterrence for self-defence under the nuclear and missile threats from the North," the conservative Chosun said.

Dong-A Ilbo forecast that the North's one-man rule would be unable to rely on nuclear missiles for its survival amid deepening hunger and poverty in the isolated nation.

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 04:11 AM (GMT)

NKorea, Iran throw roadblock for Obama

WASHINGTON, May 25 (AFP) May 26, 2009

North Korea and Iran have thrown cold water on President Barack Obama's vision of dialogue with US foes -- and experts warn there may be little he can do for now to change their minds.

North Korea on Monday detonated an atomic bomb as powerful as the one that ravaged Hiroshima, brazenly defying Obama's calls both for dialogue and for a global ban on nuclear tests.

On the same day, President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad ruled out talks with world powers on Iran's nuclear drive and instead proposed a debate with Obama -- who had sent an unprecedented video appeal to Iranians in March.

Obama has made reaching out to US adversaries a hallmark of his young presidency, saying in his inauguration speech in January that he would extend his hand to all leaders "if you are willing to unclench your fist."

Obama condemned North Korea and urged international action. But the famously calm leader also showed he was not in panic mode, playing golf on Monday -- the Memorial Day holiday -- for more than four hours.

Analysts said Obama was up against the stark reality that no matter what his overtures, US foes have their own internal dynamics at play.

L. Gordon Flake, executive director of the Mansfield Foundation think-tank who advised Obama on North Korea during his campaign, warned against conventional wisdom that the test was mostly a way to pressure Washington.

North Korea's main motivation, he argued, was domestic -- to shore up the regime's strength as leader Kim Jong-Il's health wanes following his stroke last year.

"To presume that this is a way to try to get the Obama administration's attention would be to presume that they want to start negotiations. And there has been zero indication of that," Flake said.

"It's pretty clear that in the waning days of the (George W.) Bush administration, they made a decision to abandon the six-party talks process and to go full-speed ahead with their own nuclear program," Flake said.

North Korea last month pulled out of a six-nation aid-for-disarmament deal reached in 2007 in protest at a UN Security Council statement condemning it for testing a long-range missile.

Victor Cha, who was Bush's top adviser on Korean affairs, also rebuffed the "standard answer" by experts that Pyongyang was trying to provoke Obama to agree to face-to-face negotiations.

"Pyongyang has rebuffed all serious efforts by the Obama administration thus far to engage in high-level talks," said Cha, now a scholar at the Center for Strategic and International Studies and Georgetown University.

Cha said North Korea may instead be seeking the status of a nuclear weapons state or security guarantees as the communist state transforms -- perhaps without Kim Jong-Il at the helm.

"These goals pose formidable challenges for the United States and other members of the six-party talks," Cha said.

Iran, for its part, goes to the polls on June 12 and analysts said that Ahmadinejad and other hardliners find it impossible to do an about-face and respond to Obama after campaigning for years on anti-Americanism.

Ahmadinejad has championed Iran's nuclear drive, which he says is for peaceful purposes despite widespread suspicion in the West that it aims to develop nuclear weapons.

Scott Snyder, a senior fellow at the Council on Foreign Relations, said that Iran would be watching closely to see how forcefully the UN Security Council acts against North Korea.

"Iran and North Korea are really connected at the hip on this issue. What happens with North Korea certainly must be viewed through the lens of Iran and vice versa," Snyder said.

"If the response is perceived as too weak, one effect could be to enhance criticisms of the Obama administration's handling of foreign policy."

Outspoken conservative John Bolton, a US ambassador to the United Nations under Bush, has gone on the offensive, saying Obama's emphasis on diplomacy allowed North Korea to carry out its second nuclear test.

"The North Koreans have thumbed their nose at the administration and now we have to see what kind of stuff they are made of," Bolton said.

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 04:12 AM (GMT)

Obama talks NKorea test with SKorea, Japan: WHouse

WASHINGTON, May 25 (AFP) May 26, 2009

US President Barack Obama spoke by phone late Monday with his South Korean counterpart Lee Myung-bak and Japanese Prime Minister Taro Aso to "coordinate" reaction to North Korea's nuclear test, the White House said.

Obama spoke with Lee "to consult and coordinate our reaction to the North Korean nuclear test," the White House said.

They "agreed to work closely together to seek and support a strong United Nations Security Council resolution with concrete measures to curtail North Korea's nuclear and missile activities."

In his talks with Aso, Obama reiterated his country's "unequivocal commitment to the defense of Japan and to maintaining peace and security in Northeast Asia."

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 04:12 AM (GMT)

Bomb size could offer key to North Korea's ambitions

by Staff Writers
Washington (AFP) May 25, 2009

North Korea made the world tremble Monday with a massive nuclear test that may have matched the Hiroshima A-bomb, but experts say the blast's size could paradoxically offer a glimmer of comfort.

"They might be making a political bomb," said Geoffrey Forden, an arms expert at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, explaining that a big, old-fashioned bang may present less of a strategic threat for the rest of the world.

Russia, which shares an 18-kilometer (11-mile) border with the Stalinist state, said the power of North Korea's latest nuclear explosion was the equivalent of between 10 and 20 kilotons of TNT.

That is in keeping with "Little Boy" -- the 4,000-kilogram (8,900-pound) bomb dropped from the B-29 Superfortress "Enola Gay" -- which leveled Hiroshima at the end of World War II, and the 4.7-magnitude seismic activity registered by the explosion.

"If they had gone with the 'fail safe' WWII design, it would probably mean it was too heavy to mount on a missile," Forden told AFP.

It could have been a public relations necessity. North Korea's first test, in October 2006, resulted in an explosion of around half a kiloton, much less than anticipated.

"The DPRK (North Korea) apparently told China before its 2006 test that they were aiming for a yield of about four kilotons and they definitely had a yield around half a kiloton, so there was a problem," said Forden.

"If they had gone with a test of 20 kilotons, as the Russians are saying, it means that they were changing designs to ensure they got a big bang and avoided the publicity problems they went through during 2006 of having their first test a failure."

So Pyongyang may have got more bang for the buck, but scientists and military intelligence are still scrambling to determine what actually happened Monday on an isolated stretch of the Korean Peninsula.

"It will take us a couple of days to verify this test," the US top military officer, Admiral Mike Mullen, said Monday.

"The four-kiloton bomb, however, might very well fit on a DPRK missile. If they have stayed with this design, it probably indicates that weaponizing it is even more important than ensuring a successful test."

The results of that probe could tell the world a great deal about North Korea's intentions.

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 04:12 AM (GMT)

SKorea to join anti-proliferation drill: foreign ministry

SEOUL, May 26 (AFP) May 26, 2009

South Korea will become a full member of a US-led initiative to curb trade in weapons of mass destruction, the foreign ministry said Tuesday, one day after North Korea's second nuclear test.

The North has previously said that Seoul's participation in the Proliferation Security Initiative (PSI) would be seen as a declaration of war.

South Korea was previously only an observer in the PSI for fear of offending its communist neighbour.

It decided in principle to become a full member after the North's April 5 rocket launch, but had delayed a formal announcement while trying to resume dialogue.

Government officials quoted by Yonhap news agency said there was no reason to wait any longer following Monday's nuclear test.

The government made its decision "to cope with the serious threat that the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and missiles poses to world peace and security," said ministry spokesman Moon Tae-Young.

"But maritime agreements agreed between South and North Korea will still remain valid," he said in a terse statement which did not mention the nuclear test.

The initiative, which includes military drills, was launched by then-US President George W. Bush in 2003 and now involves more than 90 countries. North Korea has been a leading exporter of missiles in recent years.

Insurgent - May 26, 2009 05:00 AM (GMT)

I've been thinking about something:

WWI and WWII we have a European Superior General - Ledochowski, who was a Pole, and also a German assistant from 1906-1915.

During 60's we have Pedro Arupe, who was a rector, vice-provincial and then provincial of Japan, we had Vietnam war of course during 60's and 70's.

80's we have Kolvenbach a vice-provincial of Lebanon, Egypt, Syria, during whose period we have Middle East rumblings, Lebanon, Syria, Iran, 2 Iraq wars.

Today we have Nicholas who was a Provincial of Japan and was dealing with Asian countries. "In 2004 he returned to the Philippines after he was named Moderator of the Jesuit Conference for Eastern Asia and Oceania. As Moderator, he was responsible for the Jesuits of several countries, including Australia, China, Japan, Korea, Micronesia, Myanmar, and East Timor."

http://www.reuters.com/article/latestCrisis/idUSSEO203830

N. Korea set to fire short-range missile-Yonhap

Mon May 25, 2009 8:25pm EDT

SEOUL, May 26 (Reuters) - North Korea is ready to fire another short-range missile off its west coast either on Tuesday or Wednesday, Yonhap news agency quoted a South Korean official as saying.

On Monday, the reclusive state tested its second nuclear device and fired off three short-range missiles, earning it international condemnation.

"North Korea declared a ban for ships in the sea off its South Pyongan province between the 25th to 27th (of May). It looks like it will fire a short-range missile between today and tomorrow," it quoted the unnamed official as saying.

(Reporting by Rhee So-eui, writing by Jonathan Thatcher)

craig-oxley - May 26, 2009 05:00 AM (GMT)

Remember in December: NK's Nuke Test

25 May 2009
http://urbansurvival.com/week.htm

Was that really a 4.7 earthquake in North Korea? Nope. Nuke test.

Remember the part in last week's report where I told you "Except, of course, someone who reads the data closely might infer "Gee, don't be in South Korea in December of this year...or in Isfahan in late October..."?

Well, the reason is pretty simple. In the predictive linguistics work from HalfPastHuman.com there's language around October 26th that goes to the idea of Israel attacking Iran and that, in turn, sets a clock of about 4-weeks, or so, to an attack by North Korea on South Korea using a nuke or two.

Until this morning, that sounded like a pretty far-out expectation - but there it is - and has been for a couple of months for ALTA report subscribers.

Now, it all fades into the ugly increasing likelihood of turning out pretty much that way since North Korea says today that it has conducted a second nuclear test; their first one being a little 1-kiloton test shot.

North Korea has also had another short-range missile test and that, in turn, means they have something that could be deployed on North Korean territory and still be in striking range of Seoul.

In case you're putting predictions up on the refrigerator, mark down this fall winter Big 3 as market collapse, Iran strike (and response) and NK lobbing stuff and you'll never have long fingernails again.

Not only did Asian markets decline, but if I were just guessing, I'd say that this might push some folks to put a little more money into gold.

craig-oxley - May 27, 2009 12:02 AM (GMT)

North Korea Test-Fires New Short-Range Missile, Yonhap Says

By Bomi Lim

May 27 (Bloomberg) -- North Korea fired another short-range missile off its eastern coast last night, South Korea's Yonhap News reported, after the communist regime carried out a nuclear test and launched missiles earlier in the week.

The latest firing of a land-to-ship missile occurred around 9:10 p.m. local time, the Korean-language report said, citing a South Korean government official it didn't identify. South Korea's Joint Chiefs of Staff are looking into the matter and can't confirm the new launch yet, a military official who requested anonymity said today in Seoul.

North Korea launched two missiles on May 25 and has now tested five short-range rockets this week, the report said.

Kim Jong Il's regime on May 25 conducted a nuclear test, drawing criticism from the international community. President Barack Obama has said the U.S. will work with its allies to "stand up" to North Korea.

The U.S., China, Japan and Russia have agreed that the United Nations Security Council should adopt a strong resolution censuring North Korea for its nuclear test and missile launches, U.S. Ambassador Susan Rice said in New York yesterday.

The countries are also involved in the so-called six-party talks aimed at ending North Korea's nuclear weapons development. The negotiations also involve North Korea and South Korea.

North Korea first detonated a nuclear device in October 2006.

To contact the reporter on this story: Bomi Lim in Seoul at blim30@bloomberg.net

Last Updated: May 26, 2009 19:18 EDT

craig-oxley - May 27, 2009 12:10 AM (GMT)

On IRIS Seismic Monitor, the Atomic Bomb Test of May 25 2009 at 00:54:43 Zulu was on the surface not underground as reported. The reading of 4.7 on the Richter scale is in the megaton yield range not the kiloton range as reported on the news.

The coordinates Latitude 41.33 North and Longitude 129.01 East places the explosion in the Hamgyong-Sanmack Mountains of North-eastern North Korea. The town of Hapsu may be gone.

A bomb in the megaton range. This is not a North Korean bomb.

The mushroom cloud would have been huge. Fallout will cover Japan.

This is a deliberate attempt to create a war involving most of Asia.

The first bomb North Korea was supposed to have detonated destroyed a train station and small town [Ryongchon, N. Korea] near the Chinese border a few years ago. Some internet articles broached the possibility that the explosion was caused by a Tomahawk cruise missile. This is a type of tactical nuke called a bunker buster used in Baghdad and in the mountains of Afghanistan.

Iran has sent six ships into international waters, the Gulf of Aden.

Something is happening, a trap is being set.

Zuerrnnovahh-Starr Livingstone

craig-oxley - May 27, 2009 12:51 AM (GMT)

Sanctions will only escalate tension: pro-Pyongyang daily

by Staff Writers
Seoul (AFP) May 26, 2009

A pro-Pyongyang newspaper said Tuesday that sanctions against the North for its second nuclear test would only escalate tensions and called for direct talks between the United States and North Korea.

"No matter how high the degree of pressure is raised against the DPRK (North Korea), the DPRK will never change its current course," Chosun Sinbo said on its website.

"Rather, it will only escalate the chain reaction of sanctions and self-defence measures. There is no other option but to start dialogue and negotiations to cut off the cycle of rising tension," it added.

The paper, published in Japan, often reflects the communist state's official thinking.

North Korea withdrew from six-party disarmament talks in protest at United Nations sanctions over its April rocket launch.

It staged its second nuclear test on Monday, sparking an emergency UN Security Council meeting.

The Council unanimously condemned the North and several western diplomats hinted they would seek fresh sanctions.

Now that the six party talks have collapsed, the paper said, shaping a new framework for talks is up to the United States.

"The only point of reference for the DPRK to consider dialogue is changes in the US attitude," it said.

"Other countries have no proper means" to bring North Korea back to the negotiating table, it said.

"The resolution of confrontation and tension depends on whether the new US administration can take a bold approach toward North Korea or not."

US President Barack Obama spoke by phone with his South Korean counterpart Lee Myung-Bak to coordinate reactions to the nuclear test.

They agreed to work closely together to seek and support a "strong United Nations Security Council resolution" with concrete measures to curtail North Korea's nuclear and missile activities, the White House said.

craig-oxley - May 27, 2009 12:52 AM (GMT)

SKorea joins anti-WMD drill in move set to anger NKorea

by Staff Writers
Seoul (AFP) May 26, 2009

South Korea Tuesday joined a US-led drive to curb trade in weapons of mass destruction after North Korea's second nuclear test -- a move Pyongyang has said would be tantamount to a declaration of war.

Seoul's full participation in the Proliferation Security Initiative (PSI) came as the UN Security Council condemned the North's test and began working on a resolution designed to punish the communist state.

The foreign ministry announcement made South Korea a full member of the anti-proliferation initiative. It had previously been only an observer, for fear of offending its neighbour.

Seoul decided in principle to join PSI after the North's April 5 long-range rocket launch, but delayed a formal announcement while trying to resume cross-border dialogue.

After the atomic test, which sparked international anger, it waited no longer.

"Our participation in the PSI is necessary in light of the very grave situation that North Korea has conducted a nuclear test," Foreign Minister Yu Myung-Hwan told parliament.

A ministry spokesman said inter-Korean agreements on the safe passage of cargo ships through each other's waters remains valid.

The initiative, which includes military drills aimed at stopping and searching ships and aircraft, was launched by then-US President George W. Bush in 2003 and now involves more than 90 countries.

North Korea has been an active exporter of missiles in recent years.

In addition to its underground nuclear test the North Monday fired three short-range ground-to-air missiles off its east coast, Seoul's military said.

Yonhap news agency said two more were fired Tuesday.

South Korea's top military commanders held an emergency meeting Tuesday as part of heightened vigilance against the North's "militarily provocative acts," a spokesman for the Joint Chiefs of Staff said.

President Lee Myung-Bak and US President Barack Obama, in a telephone conversation, agreed to press for a strong UN resolution against the North.

They had decided to "work closely together to seek and support a strong United Nations Security Council resolution with concrete measures to curtail North Korea's nuclear and missile activities," a White House statement said.

"The two presidents agreed that the test was a reckless violation of international law that compels action in response."

Obama also thanked Lee for the decision to join the PSI, it said.

South Korean Defence Minister Lee Sang-Hee left for China for talks with his counterpart at which the nuclear test was likely to be high on the agenda. He originally cancelled the trip in the aftermath of the test but changed his mind.

Seoul said it expects to formally verify the nuclear test, North Korea's second since 2006, within days by analysing air samples for radioactive material.

The Korea Institute of Nuclear Safety said sampling equipment was operational at 70 different places as well as on a ship and an aircraft off the Korean peninsula.

craig-oxley - May 27, 2009 12:52 AM (GMT)

NKorea, Iran throw roadblock for Obama

by Staff Writers
Washington (AFP) May 26, 2009

North Korea and Iran have thrown cold water on President Barack Obama's vision of dialogue with US foes -- and experts warn there may be little he can do for now to change their minds.

North Korea on Monday detonated an atomic bomb as powerful as the one that ravaged Hiroshima, brazenly defying Obama's calls both for dialogue and for a global ban on nuclear tests.

On the same day, President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad ruled out talks with world powers on Iran's nuclear drive and instead proposed a debate with Obama -- who had sent an unprecedented video appeal to Iranians in March.

Obama has made reaching out to US adversaries a hallmark of his young presidency, saying in his inauguration speech in January that he would extend his hand to all leaders "if you are willing to unclench your fist."

Obama condemned North Korea and urged international action. But the famously calm leader also showed he was not in panic mode, playing golf on Monday -- the Memorial Day holiday -- for more than four hours.

Analysts said Obama was up against the stark reality that no matter what his overtures, US foes have their own internal dynamics at play.

L. Gordon Flake, executive director of the Mansfield Foundation think-tank who advised Obama on North Korea during his campaign, warned against conventional wisdom that the test was mostly a way to pressure Washington.

North Korea's main motivation, he argued, was domestic -- to shore up the regime's strength as leader Kim Jong-Il's health wanes following his stroke last year.

"To presume that this is a way to try to get the Obama administration's attention would be to presume that they want to start negotiations. And there has been zero indication of that," Flake said.

"It's pretty clear that in the waning days of the (George W.) Bush administration, they made a decision to abandon the six-party talks process and to go full-speed ahead with their own nuclear program," Flake said.

North Korea last month pulled out of a six-nation aid-for-disarmament deal reached in 2007 in protest at a UN Security Council statement condemning it for testing a long-range missile. Monday's test drew a similar rebuke from the UN Security Council.

Victor Cha, who was Bush's top adviser on Korean affairs, also rebuffed the "standard answer" by experts that Pyongyang was trying to provoke Obama to agree to face-to-face negotiations.

"Pyongyang has rebuffed all serious efforts by the Obama administration thus far to engage in high-level talks," said Cha, now a scholar at the Center for Strategic and International Studies and Georgetown University.

Cha said North Korea may instead be seeking the status of a nuclear weapons state or security guarantees as the communist state transforms -- perhaps without Kim Jong-Il at the helm.

"These goals pose formidable challenges for the United States and other members of the six-party talks," Cha said.

Iran, for its part, goes to the polls on June 12 and analysts said that Ahmadinejad and other hardliners find it impossible to do an about-face and respond to Obama after campaigning for years on anti-Americanism.

Ahmadinejad has championed Iran's nuclear drive, which he says is for peaceful purposes despite widespread suspicion in the West that it aims to develop nuclear weapons.

Scott Snyder, a senior fellow at the Council on Foreign Relations, said that Iran would be watching closely to see how forcefully the UN Security Council acts against North Korea.

"Iran and North Korea are really connected at the hip on this issue. What happens with North Korea certainly must be viewed through the lens of Iran and vice versa," Snyder said.

"If the response is perceived as too weak, one effect could be to enhance criticisms of the Obama administration's handling of foreign policy."

Outspoken conservative John Bolton, a US ambassador to the United Nations under Bush, has gone on the offensive, saying Obama's emphasis on diplomacy allowed North Korea to carry out its second nuclear test.

"The North Koreans have thumbed their nose at the administration and now we have to see what kind of stuff they are made of," Bolton said.

craig-oxley - May 27, 2009 12:53 AM (GMT)

NKorea's Kim seeks to boost status with nuke test: analysts

by Staff Writers
Seoul (AFP) May 26, 2009

North Korea's ailing leader Kim Jong-Il tested another atomic bomb to shore up his authority at home and not to strengthen his hand in international nuclear disarmament negotiations, analysts say.

They believe the six-party talks which began in 2003 are dead in the water for the foreseeable future after the hardline communist state tested a bomb several times more powerful than the one in October 2006.

"The successful nuclear test is greatly inspiring the army and people," official media announced.

"The internal domestic dynamic is taking precedence over external factors," said Peter Beck, a Korea expert at the American University in Washington.

"This is part of Kim shoring up support for his regime among the inner circle and the public. The best evidence of this will be if they hold a large public rally in coming days, as they did in 2006."

Beck told AFP that 67-year-old Kim, widely believed to have suffered a stroke last August, "is not in good shape and he knows it."

He and other analysts said Kim feels pressed to settle the power transfer -- ultimately involving one of his sons -- before his health worsens.

Kim's influential brother-in-law Jang Song-Thaek, seen by some as a potential "regent" for one of the sons, was given a place on the powerful National Defence Commission in April.

"Kim is trying to impress the cadres and the elite in general that this (test) is a significant accomplishment, to convince powerholders that his family is the one that should be ruling the country," Beck said.

He said the fact that the North made no realistic demands before its second test meant "it is not unreasonable to conclude that they are no longer interested in nuclear diplomacy."

John Bolton, a hawkish former US ambassador to the United Nations, told AFP the North wants nuclear weapons because it is motivated by the desire to preserve its isolated dictatorship, and has no interest in nuclear diplomacy.

And Bruce Klingner said the North's eagerness to conduct a nuclear test so soon after its April 5 long-range missile launch "shows it has abandoned its previous facade of negotiations" and is striving to achieve a viable nuclear weapon and a long-range missile to deliver it.

"The rapid pace of Pyongyang's provocations since January indicates it has altered its objectives and is no longer responsive to diplomatic entreaties," he wrote on the website of the Heritage Foundation, a conservative US think tank.

The North, said Klingner, is now bent on achieving strategic technological achievements rather than gaining tactical negotiating leverage.

As such, there was likely to be more missile and nuclear activity during 2009.

Klingner said the change in objectives "may have been triggered by Kim Jong-Il's health crisis and a desire to achieve nuclear objectives prior to his death or a formal succession."

Some believe the North might eventually be willing to talk but only as a recognised nuclear power -- something which Seoul, Washington and Tokyo have always adamantly refused to accept.

"They are interested in nuclear arms control negotiations with the US where two established nuclear states negotiate mutual arms reductions, but never fully give up their weapons," said Victor Cha, who was President George W. Bush's top adviser on Korean affairs.

If so, the six-nation talks appear doomed. Their objective is the North's total nuclear disarmament in exchange for energy aid and major security and diplomatic benefits.

US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton acknowledged recently it "seems implausible if not impossible" at present that the North will return to the negotiations.

"The ball is in the North Korean court, and we are not concerned about chasing after North Korea, about offering concessions to North Korea," she said this month.

craig-oxley - May 27, 2009 01:00 AM (GMT)

Clinton asks Russia for a 'unified' response to North Korea

WASHINGTON, May 26 (AFP) May 26, 2009

US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton Tuesday called her Russian counterpart Sergei Lavrov to ask for a "unified" response from the world community to North Korea's nuclear tests, spokesman Ian Kelly said.

In the call, Clinton "reiterated the importance of a quick, unified response to North Korea's provocative action," Kelly told reporters.

He noted that Clinton had reached out to her counterparts from China, South Korea, Japan and Australia on Monday.

"She, of course, remained actively engaged in making sure that the international community conveys a strong message to North Korea that North Korea will pay a price for the path they are on if they don't reverse that particular course they are on now."

North Korea announced Monday it had carried out what it termed a successful nuclear test -- following a first one in October 2006 -- in defiance of international pressure to abandon its weapons-grade nuclear program.

The reclusive Stalinist resorted the same day to test firing three short-range missiles.

The international community and the UN Security Council on Monday condemned the nuclear test and decided to prepare a resolution which is likely to include new sanctions against Pyongyang.

But Kelly stopped short of using the word "sanctions," saying only that the United States sought a "strong" document.

"We are now involved with our partners up there on working on a resolution in accordance with the council's responsibilities," Kelly said.

"And we look forward to working with our colleagues on the council to craft a strong, unequivocal and unified response to North Korea's grave violation of international law," he added.

Kelly noted that Russia and China, two permanent veto-wielding members of the UN Security Council which usually oppose sanctions, had made "very strong statements" after the nuclear test.

A foreign ministry source in Russia, which this month chairs the Security Council, said his government would support firm UN action but ruled out isolating the Stalinist regime.

"Most likely, the adoption of a tough UN Security Council resolution is unavoidable. The reaction should be fairly serious, because the authority of the Security Council is at stake," the source told Interfax news agency.

But he also said that "a blockade, isolation, any sort of cordons sanitaires are not a subject of discussion.... The door to negotiations should always remain open."

China, North Korea's closest and most powerful ally, Monday voiced "resolute opposition" to the secretive regime's nuclear test in a rare instance of open criticism between the two communist neighbors.

The Chinese foreign ministry also said in a statement that North Korea, one of the world's most isolated regimes, should halt actions that could aggravate tensions in the region.

craig-oxley - May 27, 2009 01:03 AM (GMT)

US still lacks China, Russia support on NKorea: analysts

WASHINGTON, May 26 (AFP) May 26, 2009

US President Barack Obama's administration faces an uphill battle to win enough support from China and Russia to press an increasingly bellicose North Korea to change tack, analysts said Tuesday.

State Department spokesman Ian Kelly on Tuesday welcomed "very strong statements" from China and Russia over Pyongyang's nuclear test as he looked "forward to working" with them on drafting a UN Security Council resolution.

He stopped short of saying whether the resolution would lead to some form of sanctions.

Several analysts said chances are slim to none for Russia and China -- both veto-wielding permanent council members along with the United States, Britain and France -- to go with punitive sanctions.

"It's clear that the Chinese are moving closer to the US position, but I don't know if this means close enough," Korea analyst Scott Snyder told AFP.

He said that after North Korea test fired a ballistic missile on April 5, the Chinese signed on to sanctions against three North Korean firms implicated in missile production.

"That does send a signal that the Chinese may be willing to engage with the international community in a broader sanctioning effort," said the analyst with the Asia Foundation think tank.

"But I think it's probably going to fall short of what would be considered necessary to be decisive in changing North Korea's current course," he added.

He said China may agree to financial sanctions against regime members -- as it did after the first nuclear test in 2006 -- but not to oil and trade sanctions that could send refugees across the Chinese-North Korean border.

The problem, Snyder said, is that the United States and China have yet to settle on a "strategic framework" in which they have a common vision for the future of North Korea.

For example, he added, China dreads the idea of North Korea reuniting with a more powerful US-allied South Korea.

Dan Blumenthal, an analyst with the neo-Conservative American Enterprise Institute, and Robert Kagan, a Washington Post columnist, see no hope at all of China and Russia agreeing to sanctions.

They asked what will dissuade Kim Jong-Il and his regime from acquiring nuclear weapons.

"Isolation and more punitive sanctions would make sense if China and Russia would go along. But they haven't and they won't," the writers said in a column in Tuesday's Washington Post.

"Beijing is content to live with a nuclear and anti-Western North Korea," the pair wrote.

"While China fears a collapsed North that would flood its struggling northeast with refugees, it also fears a united, democratic, prosperous Korea allied with the United States," they added.

Washington has little choice but to wait until Kim, who reportedly suffered a stroke last August, is succeeded by a leader who "can make the strategic decision to abandon the nuclear weapons program," the analysts said.

They also recommended in the short run that Washington bolster US and allied missile defense and deterrent capabilities, increase multilateral efforts to stop North Korean proliferation, and bolt the six-party nuclear talks.

Kelly said the Obama administration still aimed to return to the nuclear disarmament talks that involve the two Koreas, China, the United States, Russia and Japan, even if the prospect appeared remote.

Apart from the North Korean, Clinton has spoken with all her counterparts in the six-way talks, including Yang Jiechi of China and Sergei Lavrov of Russia, Kelly said.

In her conversation with Lavrov, Clinton "reiterated the importance of a quick, unified response to North Korea's provocative action," Kelly told reporters.

A foreign ministry source in Russia, which this month chairs the Security Council, said his government would support firm UN action but ruled out what he called a blockade or isolation.

craig-oxley - May 27, 2009 01:03 AM (GMT)

Obama backs South Korea non-proliferation move

WASHINGTON, May 26 (AFP) May 27, 2009

President Barack Obama lauded South Korea's decision to join a US-backed non-proliferation program on Tuesday, as both nations managed the fallout from a North Korean nuclear test.

"The president welcomes the Republic of Korea's decision today to join the Proliferation Security Initiative," the White House said in a statement -- referring to a program that aims to interdict banned weapons.

The announcement was pregnant with political symbolism, coming after Seoul's Stalinist northern neighbor tested a large nuclear weapon and launched a battery of missiles, stoking international indignation.

South Korea is the 95th country to join the US-led voluntary initiative, which encourages signatories to seize material that could be used for nuclear, chemical or biological weapons.

The program was spear-headed by the administration of former president George W. Bush in 2003, part of efforts to ensure weapons of mass destruction do not fall into the hands of terrorists.

"We look forward to working with the South Korean Government to stop the proliferation of WMD-related materials worldwide and to strengthening the initiative for the future," the statement said.

craig-oxley - May 27, 2009 01:23 AM (GMT)

Japan panel wants 'first strikes' against enemies

Sunday, May 24, 2009; 9:31 PM
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/conte...9052402995.html

TOKYO (Reuters) - A Japanese ruling party panel is to propose that pre-emptive strikes against enemy bases be allowed despite the country's pacifist constitution, Kyodo news agency said on Monday, weeks after a North Korean missile launch.

North Korea fired a ballistic missile in April that flew over northern Japan after warning that it planned to launch a satellite, prompting the government to deploy missile interceptors to the area .

"Japan should have the ability to strike enemy bases within the scope of its defense-oriented policy, in order not to sit and wait for death," Kyodo quoted the Liberal Democratic Party (LDP) committee as saying in its proposal.

The committee also plans to call for Japan to develop early-warning satellites to detect the launch of missiles toward the country, Kyodo said. Japan currently depends on information from a U.S. early-warning satellite, the agency said.

While some lawmakers have called for strike capability, Defense Minister Yasukazu Hamada is among those are cautious about the prospect, though the government's stance is that such strikes should be allowed if an attack were certain to take place.

The panel's plans are set to be submitted for consideration ahead of the compilation of a five-year government Defense program by the end of the year, Kyodo said.

(Reporting by Isabel Reynolds; Editing by David Fox)

craig-oxley - May 27, 2009 01:41 AM (GMT)

World powerless to stop North Korea

By Santaro Rey
27 May 2009
http://www.atimes.com/atimes/Korea/KE27Dg01.html

North Korea's decision to carry out its second nuclear test on Monday could have far-reaching consequences, if South Korea and Japan conclude that nothing can be done to persuade Pyongyang to denuclearize. Under such circumstances, developing their own nuclear weapons might become increasingly desirable for Seoul and Tokyo.

North Korea shook the world - literally - in the early hours of May 25, carrying out its second nuclear test, at a site in the northeast of the country. Significantly, the latest detonation was much more powerful than its first nuclear test, carried out on October 9, 2006, which was widely believed to have fizzled. The Russian military and the South's Defense Ministry estimated Monday's blast to have yielded 20 kilotons, or roughly the same as the American atomic bomb that destroyed the Japanese city of Nagasaki at the end of World War II in 1945.

That North Korea decided to conduct a second nuclear test was not surprising. Pyongyang's official media had been warning since April 29 that it might conduct a test, as an expression of its displeasure at the United Nations Security Council's criticism of its failed satellite launch (in reality a test of its long-range Taepodong 2 missile) on April 5. Nonetheless, the test came sooner than expected, and unlike its predecessor, Pyongyang did not provide official advance notice in its state-controlled media.

Factors driving the test
North Korea's decision to test the bomb likely had several motivations. Firstly, given that the October 2006 test was widely considered to have fizzled, yielding less than 1 kiloton, Pyongyang needed its own reassurances that it had a fully functioning nuclear weapon. The North's official Korean Central News Agency (KCNA) confirmed as much, when it stated, "The test helped satisfactorily settle the scientific and technological problems arising in further increasing the power of nuclear weapons."

In the absence of such confirmation, the regime of Kim Jong-il could not be certain that it had sufficient deterrent to repel any external aggression. In addition, the North also needed to make a credible demonstration of its nuclear arsenal to the major powers in the region that it considers hostile, namely the United States, South Korea and Japan. Just to reinforce the message, Pyongyang also test-fired several short-range missiles off its east coast, facing Japan. Nonetheless, international observers still doubt that North Korea has the means to attach nuclear warheads to its array of missiles.

The second reason for North Korea's nuclear test was to put the country at the top of the US's international agenda, at a time when the global economic recession and the war in Afghanistan have emerged as its most pressing challenges. Pyongyang had sought to do this with its April 5 Taepodong 2 missile test, but the world's reaction was somewhat muted. As to why the North craves the US's attention, the main reason is to extract economic and diplomatic concessions. Ultimately, there are reasons to believe that Pyongyang seeks a grand bargain with Washington in which it would be granted diplomatic relations and economic assistance while receiving official acceptance of its nuclear status.

However unrealistic that may sound, North Korea has seen how nuclear tests conducted by India and Pakistan in 1998, initially condemned by the international community, were later overlooked as the West came to see those two countries as too important to ignore. Pakistan became the West's frontline ally in the "war on terror" after September 11, 2001, and received billions of dollars in aid, while India's rising economic power made it unrealistic to marginalize it. Unfortunately for Pyongyang, it has nothing to offer the rest of the world. Thus, its brinkmanship if anything makes it harder for the US to offer North Korea meaningful rewards.

The third reason for the nuclear test - albeit somewhat more speculative - is that Kim Jong-il is seeking to reassert his authority after months of illness since last summer. This may also have been a motivation for the Taepodong 2 test in April. Kim's illness has raised heightened uncertainty about his succession, with most observers anticipating his third son, Kim Jong-un, will eventually succeed him.

However, it is more likely that a military-dominated collective leadership centered around the National Defense Commission (NDC) - the highest decision-making body in North Korea - would fill the vacuum if Kim senior exited the scene. The NDC was expanded to 13 members in early April at the first session of the North's new parliament, and all its members' photos were published in the North's official media, underscoring their rising prominence. In light of this, Pyongyang may well be signaling that there will be no let-up in its hardline policy in the event of a leadership transition.

US and allies have no levers
Rhetoric aside, the US and its allies have no realistic means with which to punish North Korea. Military action is widely considered unthinkable. This is not merely because the US is militarily stretched in Afghanistan and Iraq, nor is it because the North could retaliate using its nuclear weapons. It is also because Pyongyang has massive conventional weaponry, including a 1.1 million-strong army (the world's fifth-largest), 180,000-strong special forces (the world's largest such force), and thousands of artillery pieces and short- and medium-range missiles capable of raining destruction on South Korea and Japan.

Moreover, North Korea has always insisted that its nuclear arsenal is for deterrence purposes. Unless Pyongyang is caught red-handed selling nuclear weapons to terrorists groups or anti-Western states such as Iran, the US, South Korea and Japan would struggle to find a casus belli against the North.

Tighter sanctions are often cited as a potential lever against North Korea. Yet the truth is that the communist state is already subject to so many sanctions that any new ones would largely be meaningless. In any case, Pyongyang has chosen a course of isolation for itself and has willingly moved to cut off joint projects with South Korea, such as the Kaesong Industrial Park, where southern companies manufacture goods using low-cost northern labor.

With the US, South Korea and Japan largely powerless, attention has naturally turned to China to punish the North. Since Beijing is Pyongyang's biggest source of aid and investment, it has the ability to strangle its neighbor into submission. Yet China would never do this, since doing so would risk triggering the very collapse of the North which it so fears.

A putative collapse there would result in millions of North Koreans fleeing into China, thus boosting the strength of the ethnic Korean population already there, and adding to local unemployment problems. Furthermore, Beijing does not wish to see instability in the North that could lead to US military intervention so close to its border.

Thus, despite China's official criticism of North Korea's nuclear test, and its apparent desire to play a more responsible role in the international arena, punitive measures are unlikely. Indeed, there were unconfirmed rumors on May 25 that Pyongyang had given Beijing advance notice of the nuclear test. If true, this means at best that China was unable to stop North Korea. At worst, China might have secretly welcomed the test, for it makes the US and its allies look powerless.

While the major powers may have run out of options for dealing with North Korea, the same is also true for Pyongyang. Its policy of testing missiles and/or nuclear weapons is now becoming familiar fare to international policymakers. A nuclear test is arguably the regime's strongest card, and it has already been played twice.

Moreover, since its nuclear arsenal is limited, Pyongyang cannot test nuclear weapons too often without exhausting its supply. Furthermore, while detonating nuclear bombs clearly ups the ante, the world has long learned to live with a nuclear North Korea. This works in Pyongyang's favor in that it represents de facto acceptance of its nuclear arsenal. But it also means that Pyongyang is less able to orchestrate a crisis by threatening nuclear tests, or even by carrying them out.

The bigger issue: Nuclear dominoes
The bigger question is whether North Korea's nuclear test will lead to growing calls for South Korea and Japan to develop their own nuclear weapons. South Korea had a nuclear weapons program in the 1970s, during the administration of military strongman Park Chung-hee, but was forced to abandon it under US pressure.

However, in the early 2000s, South Korea admitted that its scientists had carried out experiments with nuclear materials. For its part, Japan recently reaffirmed its long-held three non-nuclear principles of not producing, possessing or allowing the introduction to its territory of nuclear weapons, after former finance minister Shoichi Nakagawa stated that Japan should at least debate whether to go nuclear.

Nonetheless, in recent years it has become less taboo for Japanese politicians to raise the nuclear debate, with figures as high-ranking as former opposition Democratic Party of Japan (DPJ) leader Ichiro Ozawa warning in April 2002 that Japan could build thousands of nuclear weapons.

Significantly, Ozawa was speaking in reference to counterbalancing China, not North Korea. Moreover, although Ozawa was recently forced to resign as head of the DPJ owing to a corruption scandal, his influence in the party will linger. Ozawa is an advocate of a more independent and assertive Japan, and if the DPJ wins general elections that must be held by October, it could introduce subtle changes to Japan's defense policy. Although a nuclear Japan is not imminent, it has the nuclear technology and a space program, which could be combined into a long-range nuclear arsenal.

For more than 60 years, South Korea and Japan have been protected from either the Soviet Union, China or North Korea by a US nuclear umbrella. However, if Seoul or Tokyo were to ever experience doubts about the reliability of this deterrent, they could eventually embark on a nuclear weapons build-up. Although US presidents have warned North Korea that using nuclear weapons would lead to their own destruction, Seoul and Tokyo cannot guarantee that Washington would be willing to use nuclear weapons to avenge the loss of any Korean or Japanese cities if the North had the means to attempt a nuclear strike on the US itself.

Ultimately, a nuclear South Korea and Japan could transform the geostrategic landscape of East Asia, and possibly the world. It could hasten the end of US hegemony in Asia, since the two would become less dependent on the US to guarantee their security.

There would be less need for US bases in the region, and Seoul and Tokyo might become a lot more assertive. Meanwhile, China would at the very least be uncomfortable with a nuclear South Korea. One reason is that Seoul could become more assertive about future territorial disputes concerning the ancient kingdom of Koguryo (Goguryeo), which incorporated large tracts of China and Korea.

But the bigger reason is that a nuclear South Korea might encourage Taiwan to develop nuclear weapons for fear of being left behind in the nuclear race. For China, a nuclear Taiwan would be intolerable, for it would make it easier for the island to declare independence from the mainland without fear of retribution if the Taiwanese people's desire arose. Finally, China would be especially concerned about a nuclear Japan, since Tokyo is Beijing's most formidable geopolitical rival in East Asia and a potential check on its self-proclaimed peaceful rise.

craig-oxley - May 27, 2009 10:42 AM (GMT)

N Korea threatens military action

North Korea's military celebrated the controversial nuclear and missile tests

Wednesday, 27 May 2009 09:36 UKE-mail this to a friend Printable version
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/world/asia-pacific/8069457.stm

North Korea says it has abandoned the truce that ended the Korean war, amid rising tension in the region.

It blamed its decision on South Korea joining a US-led initiative to search ships for nuclear weapons.

It said the South's actions were a "declaration of war", and pledged to attack if its ships were stopped.

The move is part of an increasingly hard line being taken by North Korea, and comes two days after it conducted an underground nuclear test.

Meanwhile, South Korean news reports say that steam has been seen coming from a plant at the North's main nuclear facility, a sign that it has made good on its threat to restart efforts to make weapons-grade plutonium.

The United Nations Security Council is working on a strong resolution condemning North Korea's actions, including possible punitive measures.

Anti-proliferation

In a statement to the North's official news agency, KCNA, the military warned that it no longer considered itself bound by the terms of a truce which ended the war between the two Koreas.

That agreement has preserved a tense peace between for more than five decades.

Factfile: Underground testing
Your views: Should world worry?
Reaction from around the region
Media condemn nuclear test
The Korean war

The immediate cause of North Korea's actions, it said, was South Korea's announcement on Tuesday that it would definitely join the Proliferation Security Initiative (PSI) - a US-led campaign to search ships carrying suspicious cargoes to prevent trafficking of weapons of mass destruction.

Joining the PSI "is a natural obligation", South Korean Foreign Minister Yu Myung-hwan told reporters. "It will help control North Korea's development of dangerous material."

But North Korea's response has been unequivocal.

"Any hostile act against our peaceful vessels, including search and seizure, will be considered an unpardonable infringement on our sovereignty," a spokesman for the North's army told KCNA.

"We will immediately respond with a powerful military strike."

Tensions have already risen significantly across the Korean peninsula in recent weeks.

Provocation

Last month North Korea launched a long-range rocket over Japanese airspace, angering the international community.

Pyongyang said the rocket carried a satellite, but several nations viewed it as cover for a missile test.

UN moves towards N Korea resolution

The UN Security Council condemned the rocket launch, and in retaliation North Korea announced it was quitting long-running six-nation negotiations on its nuclear disarmament.

It also said it would reopen its main nuclear plant at Yongbyon, which was closed in July 2007 as part of a disarmament deal. According to South Korean media reports, the plant may now be reactivated, as spy satellites have seen steam coming out of it.

On Monday North Korea increased tensions still further, by conducting a powerful underground nuclear test.

It has also fired six short-range missiles in recent days.

International response

NUCLEAR CRISIS
Oct 2006 - North Korea conducts an underground nuclear test
Feb 2007 - North Korea agrees to close its main nuclear reactor in exchange for fuel aid
June 2008 - North Korea makes its long-awaited declaration of nuclear assets
Oct 2008 - The US removes North Korea from its list of countries which sponsor terrorism
Dec 2008 - Pyongyang slows work to dismantle reactor after a US decision to suspend energy aid
Jan 2009 - The North says it is scrapping all deals with the South, accusing it of "hostile intent"
April 2009 - Pyongyang launches a rocket carrying what it says is a communications satellite
25 May 2009 - North Korea conducts a second nuclear test

Q&A: North Korea nuclear test
What is N Korea's game plan?

Diplomats from the five permanent Security Council member countries - plus Japan and South Korea - have been meeting behind closed doors to discuss a new resolution against North Korea.

Washington is calling for a quick and unified response that will make it clear to Pyongyang that there are consequences for its actions.

But US State Department spokesman Ian Kelly said the door was still open to resume long-running six-party talks and that the US was looking at a "whole range of options".

"We are thinking through complicated issues that require very careful consideration," said the US ambassador to the UN, Susan Rice.

While the US and Japan are likely to favour a hard line against North Korea, Russia and China are more wary about pushing Pyongyang too far, analysts say.

A few years ago there was real hope of reaching a settlement, when North Korea agreed in February 2007 to abandon its nuclear ambitions in return for aid and diplomatic concessions.

But the negotiations stalled as it accused its negotiating partners - the US, South Korea, Japan, China and Russia - of failing to meet agreed obligations.

outsider - May 27, 2009 11:55 AM (GMT)

Quote: Stewart Swerdlow

QUOTE

May 25, 2009

The Next Diversion
North Korea detonated another powerful nuclear weapon as a test underground earlier today. They also launched a short-range missile, prompting Japan to call an emergency session at the UN.

We all know that North Korea cannot even feed its population, let alone become a threat to anyone. This activity and the media hype is another diversion from events taking place in the Middle East, as Israel trains for war with Iran.

We should be more concerned about the artificial gasoline hikes and the seismic conditions in California and Washington State.

craig-oxley - May 28, 2009 12:16 AM (GMT)

Clinton gives North Korea warning

Wednesday, 27 May 2009 23:56 UKE-mail this to a friend Printable version
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/world/asia-pacific/8071175.stm

Mrs Clinton:

US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton says North Korea will face consequences for its "provocative and belligerent" actions towards its neighbours.

As the UN Security Council discusses a response to North Korea's nuclear test, Mrs Clinton reaffirmed US commitments to allies Japan and South Korea.

Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov said that while world powers should be firm, they should not inflame tensions.

He said they needed to avoid punishment "for the sake of punishment" alone.

On Wednesday, North Korea said it had abandoned the truce that ended the Korean war, two days after it conducted an underground nuclear test.

It blamed its decision on South Korea joining a US-led initiative to search ships for nuclear weapons, calling it a "declaration of war".

The United Nations Security Council is working on a strong resolution condemning North Korea's actions, including possible punitive measures.

'Sabre-rattling'

The White House accused North Korea of seeking attention.

Factfile: Underground testing
Your views: Should world worry?
Reaction from around the region
Media condemn nuclear test
The Korean war
N Korea's missile programme

"We're certainly concerned and take any threat seriously, but my sense is they're trying to get renewed attention through sabre-rattling and bluster and threats," White House spokesman Robert Gibbs said.

Mrs Clinton condemned the North's violation of UN Security Council resolutions and commitments made during six-nation nuclear disarmament talks.

"North Korea has made a choice... There are consequences to such actions," she said, but also held out hope that North Korea would return to talks.

"There will be an opportunity for North Korea to come back into a framework of discussion within the six-party process and that we can begin once again to see results from working with the North Koreans toward denuclearisation," she told reporters in Washington.

Mrs Clinton said she was pleased by a unified international condemnation of North Korea that included Russia and China, North Korea's only major ally.

Earlier Russia's foreign minister called for a strong UN resolution to condemn Monday's nuclear test, but said the stand-off could only be solved through talks.

"I repeat again, we must stand up for the non-proliferation regime and at the same time we must not forget that problems can be resolved only through talks," Mr Lavrov said.

Diplomats from the five permanent Security Council member countries - plus Japan and South Korea - have been meeting behind closed doors to agree a new resolution against North Korea.

'War declaration'

On Monday, North Korea fanned tensions in the Korean peninsula by conducting a powerful underground nuclear test.
NUCLEAR CRISIS

Oct 2006 - North Korea conducts an underground nuclear test
Feb 2007 - North Korea agrees to close its main nuclear reactor in exchange for fuel aid
June 2008 - North Korea makes its long-awaited declaration of nuclear assets
Oct 2008 - The US removes North Korea from its list of countries which sponsor terrorism
Dec 2008 - Pyongyang slows work to dismantle reactor after a US decision to suspend energy aid
Jan 2009 - The North says it is scrapping all deals with the South, accusing it of "hostile intent"
April 2009 - Pyongyang launches a rocket carrying what it says is a communications satellite
25 May 2009 - North Korea conducts a second nuclear test

Q&A: North Korea nuclear test
What is N Korea's game plan?

It has also fired six short-range missiles in recent days.

Then on Wednesday, it said that it no longer considered itself bound by the terms of a truce which ended the war between the two Koreas.

That agreement has preserved a tense peace for more than five decades.

In a statement to the North's official news agency, KCNA, the military said its actions followed South Korea's announcement on Tuesday that it would definitely join the Proliferation Security Initiative (PSI) - a US-led campaign to search ships carrying suspicious cargoes to prevent trafficking of weapons of mass destruction.

"Any hostile act against our peaceful vessels, including search and seizure, will be considered an unpardonable infringement on our sovereignty," a spokesman for the North's army told KCNA.

"We will immediately respond with a powerful military strike."

Last month North Korea launched a long-range rocket over Japanese airspace, angering the international community. Pyongyang said the rocket carried a satellite, but several nations viewed it as cover for a missile test.

The UN Security Council condemned the rocket launch, and in retaliation, North Korea announced it was quitting long-running six-nation negotiations on its nuclear disarmament.

It also said it would reopen its main nuclear plant at Yongbyon, which was closed in July 2007 as part of a disarmament deal.

A few years ago there was real hope of reaching a settlement, when North Korea agreed in February 2007 to abandon its nuclear ambitions in return for aid and diplomatic concessions.

But the negotiations stalled as it accused its negotiating partners - the US, South Korea, Japan, China and Russia - of failing to meet agreed obligations.

craig-oxley - May 28, 2009 12:25 AM (GMT)

China May Test North Korea Leverage After Kim's Nuclear Blast

By Michael Forsythe
http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...2T3g&refer=home

May 28 (Bloomberg) -- China has the ability to cripple North Korea by cutting off shipments of food, fuel, and luxury goods that Kim Jong Il doles out to loyalists. Kim's nuclear detonation may put that leverage in play and test its impact on the leadership.

China is increasingly frustrated by North Korea's defiance of United Nations resolutions designed to curb its atomic and missile programs and is worried that a nuclear-armed government in Pyongyang could spark a new arms race in Asia, analysts and a person familiar with the Obama administration's policy said.

Until now, China has rebuffed U.S. and Japanese calls for tougher economic penalties against North Korean leader Kim, agreeing only on narrow UN sanctions aimed at regime-run companies and arms imports.

"China may be reaching a point of understanding that Kim is going too far," said Dennis Wilder, a former Asia director for the White House National Security Council.

Should the Chinese leadership shift against North Korea, it isn't clear what levers would be used or whether economic clout would translate into political influence over a regime in a possible succession battle, according to the person familiar with administration policy and experts on China and North Korea.

By normal measures of economic influence, China has overwhelming and growing power over North Korea. China accounted for 73 percent of North Korea's international trade last year, up from less than a third in 2003, according to the Seoul-based Korea Trade & Investment Promotion Agency.

Oil, Food

China supplies 90 percent of North Korea's oil demand, 80 percent of consumer goods and 45 percent of its food, Dong Yong Seung, a researcher on North Korean issues at the Samsung Economic Research Institute in Seoul, said.

China didn't want to use stronger measures in the past out of fear of alienating possible successors to Kim or even sparking the collapse of North Korea, its ally of 60 years, and fomenting a refugee crisis along their 800-mile border.

An April 5 rocket launch, the May 25 nuclear detonation and subsequent short-range missile tests may lead China to work more closely with the U.S., the person familiar with U.S. policy said.

China's foreign ministry said the country "resolutely opposes" North Korea's nuclear test. On May 25 China agreed with the U.S., Japan and Russia to work toward a UN resolution censuring North Korea for its nuclear test and missile launches.

'Strong' Words

White House press secretary Robert Gibbs said China's reaction suggests there will be unanimity in the UN Security Council for efforts to punish North Korea. "The Chinese government has been exceptionally strong in their words of condemnation," Gibbs said yesterday.

Possible Chinese actions would include implementing a UN ban on luxury imports such as cognac, caviar and high-end sedans, many of which pass through the Chinese border city of Dandong into North Korea.

"North Korea runs like a Mafia family," Wilder said. "If Kim can't deliver the luxuries to his elite, they might begin to question his loyalties."

China could also curtail access to Chinese banks. In 2005, the U.S. Treasury labeled Banco Delta Asia SARL in Macao a money-laundering "concern," prompting authorities there to freeze North Korean funds. In 2007 North Korea agreed to begin implementing an accord to scrap its nuclear program after the U.S. agreed to release the funds.

And in February 2003, China either threatened or carried out a halt in oil flows to North Korea for a few days. Soon after North Korea agreed to take part in what became the six- party talks on denuclearization, Wilder said.

Famine in 1990s

A reduction in food and fuel subsidies from China and the former Soviet Union in the early 1990s helped bring on a famine that may have killed 2 million people from 1994 to 1998, according to a 1999 study by the Washington-based U.S. Institute of Peace. Reducing subsidies isn't a likely option now, Wilder said.

"If China was really serious it could probably bring the country to its knees," said Richard Bush, an expert on North Korea and China at Washington's Brookings Institution.

So far that economic leverage hasn't been brought to bear, and China has seen its diplomatic efforts to curb Kim's nuclear program repeatedly foiled by North Korea. One reason: North Korea's actions stem in part from an internal struggle to succeed the ailing Kim, according to Wilder and Bush.

The nuclear and missile tests are a show of strength by Kim and a bid to gain the support of the military and aren't driven by international developments, they say.

China may have been trying to get "in good stead" with Kim's likely successors, said Bonnie Glaser of the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington.

Now the Chinese may be reassessing their stance.

'Macho Acts'

The Chinese may consider "that the cost-benefit analysis of allowing him room to consolidate his succession by macho acts against the U.S., Japan and South Korea is causing too much instability in Northeast Asia," said Wilder, now a visiting fellow at Brookings.

The danger is that a nuclear North Korea could prompt South Korea and Japan to pursue atomic weapons and longer-range missiles, and the spread of nuclear arms across Asia could make China less safe.

For its part, China's government says it isn't leveraging its economic and political power over North Korea.

"The question of influence over another country's policies, internal matters is inappropriate and irrelevant," Foreign Ministry Spokesman Ma Zhaoxutold reporters in Beijing on May 26.

To contact the reporter on this story: Michael Forsythe in Washington at mforsythe@bloomberg.net.
Last Updated: May 27, 2009 19:09 EDT

craig-oxley - May 28, 2009 12:26 AM (GMT)

North Korean Threat Shapes Gates Talks at Asia Defense Summit

By Viola Gienger
http://www.bloomberg.com/apps/news?pid=206...A1Fs&refer=home

May 28 (Bloomberg) -- North Korea's nuclear test and bellicose rhetoric are raising the stakes for the U.S. and its Asian allies as defense officials head to Singapore for an annual security conference this week, Pentagon officials said.

U.S. Defense Secretary Robert Gates will consult on potential responses to North Korea in a meeting with counterparts from Japan and South Korea, his spokesman Geoff Morrell told reporters in Washington. Gates is also set to confer with China's deputy chief of the general staff for the People's Liberation Army, Lieutenant General Ma Xiaotian.

The North Korea crisis might change military conditions in the region, a U.S. official briefing reporters on the trip said on the condition of anonymity.

